THE text of this edition of Cicero's orations against Verres approaches nearest to that of Zumpt's edition of 1831, which is entitled, "M. Tullii Ciceronis Verrinarum Libri Septem. Ad fidem codicum manu scriptorum recensuit et explicavit Car. Timoth. Zumptius." The variations from the text of Zumpt are indicated in the notes. I have not intentionally omitted to notice any important variation; but I have omitted to notice some which are of no importance at all, or matters perfectly indifferent.

I used for printing from, after I had corrected it to suit my purpose, the English reprint of Zumpt, third edition, 1847. I supposed that the third edition of a work, printed in 1847, would not be a reprint of Zumpt's first and minor edition, but that it would contain all the improvements of the larger edition of 1831. I soon discovered, however, that this was not so; and I merely mention the circumstance because there are a few readings in Zumpt's larger edition, in the Divinatio, which I prefer to those which I have retained. They are, however, of very little importance. The most important differences between the English reprint of Zumpt and his larger edition, occur in the orations which come after the Divinatio. The whole amount of difference between the English reprint and Zumpt's larger edition is considerable; and nearly all the variations of the larger edition are improvements. The English reprint is very correct in the typography, and very bad in the punctuation, which fault, however, may be perhaps mainly chargeable on the German original, which I never saw.

The history of the text of the Verrine orations is given in Zumpt's Preface. Readers of Cicero are greatly indebted to him for what he has done. Indeed, we who can now read these orations with comparative ease, are apt to forget how much we owe to a long series of scholars. Zumpt's edition is what is commonly called a critical edition, the main object of which is the establishment of the text. For this purpose Zumpt collated two of the Wolfenbüttel MSS., which he calls Guelff. 1, 2. But he derived most advantage from the "Lagomarsinianae novem codicum Florentinorum collationes." The fragments of the Verrine orations, which were published by A. Mai, 1828, from a Vatican Palimpsest, did not reach Germany early enough for Zumpt to use them, except for the fifth and last of the Verrine orations. Zumpt has given in an Appendix (Appendix variantium lectionum et supplementa annotationis) the readings of the Vatican MS. "This Appendix," he says, "contains 'farrago variantium lectionum e codicibus MSS. et editionibus petitarum, quibus in annotatione usi non sumus, aut uti noluimus.'" The Vatican fragments contain parts of the following books:—Act. ii. Lib. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. The MS. to which these fragments belong is of high antiquity and undoubted value. Zumpt considers the Cod. Vat. as the parent of Par. B. and Lag. 29, which he further considers to be the parents of the inferior MSS. There are many gross blunders in the Cod. Vat., which prove that it must be, in parts, at least, a carelessly made copy from a good original. All the other MSS. Zumpt considers as the progeny of a "Cod. antiquus deperditus," a respectable ancestor who lives only in his descendants. As to Guelf. 1, Madvig is of opinion that Zumpt rates it too high.

As I have often referred to the MSS., the following extract from Zumpt may be useful. His conclusion is this:

Sic hoc fere stemma codicum MSS. nascitur Cod. Antiquus deperditus.		Cod. Vatican. rescriptus.
Nann. Fabric. (Metell.) libr. ii. et iii. Par. 7774 A s. Regius (coll. Havn.) libr. iv. et v.
Lag. 42. pr. m. in illis libr.
Par. A.	Erfurt	Par. B. Lag. 29.
	Par. D (Steph.) Cuiac.
	Guelf. 2. Leid.
	(Memmiani Lamb.) Guelf. 1.	Vulgares.

Fabric. and Metell. are the same MS. Par. 7774 A is the same as Regius. I am not sure that Zumpt always agrees with himself about the value of Lag. 29. In a note on Lib. 3. c. 76, he calls Lag. 29. 42. Paris A. B. "quatuor meliores nostri." In another place (Lib. 5. c. 46), he calls Lag. 29, "minime fidelis;" and again (Lib. 4. c. 37), he calls it "infidelis quamvis ex fidelissimo ductus."

The edition of Cicero's orations by Klotz, to which I have often referred, is in three vols. 8vo, with notes in German. At the foot of the page he has given the variations of Orelli's edition. In his Preface to the second volume (Leipzig, 1837), which contains the Verrine orations, the editor explains what he has done for the text. He states that he owes much to a careful examination of the Vatican fragments published by Mai. I have noted some of the chief variations in the text of Klotz, except in the fifth book of the Verrines, where I have noticed very few.

For the second book of the Verrines, I made use of the notes to the edition by F. Creuzer and G. H. Moser, Göttingen, 1847. The occasional references in the notes to this edition will show how far I am indebted to Creuzer and Moser. Their commentary is copious, and sometimes useful.

For the fifth book I used the separate edition of this oration by J. C. Orelli, Leipzig, 1831. The text of this oration has been carefully and judiciously revised by the editor. Orelli used for this edition two collations of the Codex Regius of the ninth century, N. 7774. A. 1.; one collation is the "Havniensis," or Copenhagen collatio, which is contained in the Epistola Critica of Madvig; the other was made for Orelli, at Paris, by a learned youth (eruditus juvenis) of Basle, named Hanhart. Orelli also used a new and accurate collation of the Cod. Leidensis, presented to him by Bake; the fragments of the Vatican Palimpsest of Mai; and a MS. of St. Gallen. These MSS. are referred to by Orelli under the following abbreviations:—R., Codex Regius; L., Leidensis; V., Palimpsestus Vaticanus; G., Codex Sangallensis. The labours of Zumpt, Orelli, and Madvig, have probably settled the text of this oration as well as it can be settled.

The Opuscula Academica of J. N. Madvig, Copenhagen, 1834, contain an essay, entitled "De locis aliquot Ciceronis orationum Verrinarum dissertatio critica." It is referred to several times in these notes.

With respect to the commentary of Asconius on part of these orations, which I have often cited, I have used the text of Orelli's edition of Cicero. This commentary contains both good and bad matter; and in its present shape it is not the genuine commentary of Asconius. This subject has been well examined by Madvig in his essay, "De Q. Asconii Pediani et aliorum veterum interpretum in Ciceronis orationes Commentariis Disputatio Critica, Copenhagen, 1828."

It was my intention, conformably to the plan of this series of editions, to take a text such as Zumpt's, and merely to make notes on it. But a careful study of these orations convinced me that I could not adopt any one text. Though this has no pretensions to be a critical edition, the text has cost me a great deal of labour; and that kind of labour which is not seen. In many passages, I have no doubt that the text which I have given may be improved, for I do not consider that the text of these orations is yet finally settled.

In the matter of orthography I have done nothing. The orthography of Latin texts still remains to be settled; and there is a prospect that, in a few years, when the Latin language has been more studied, and is better understood, our printed texts will differ considerably in orthography from what they now are. Though I have not followed Zumpt in the mode of writing some words, which he undoubtedly writes correctly, I have still refrained from writing "concio" for "contio," as the English reprint of Zumpt does.

The notes are intended to explain the text. I have passed over no passage where I found a difficulty myself, and very few where others have found a difficulty. If I have often made notes where some readers may not think them necessary, I have done so because I know by experience that many students will require such assistance. I have not intentionally concealed any obligations that I owe to other editors or commentators. Indeed, in the matter of acknowledgment, I have gone further than is necessary; for the modern commentators, whom I often cite, have derived much of their materials from the earlier commentators.

The Excursus may be unsuitable for younger students; and, indeed, they were not designed for them. If some of them are in parts obscure, I believe the fault is chiefly in the matter; and I can't help that. Any person may see that the subjects discussed in them are necessary to the understanding of Cicero's text; and those who are competent to form an opinion will look with indulgence on any errors that I have committed in treating such subjects for the first time in an edition of Cicero for the use of Englishmen.

In the matter of orthography I have done nothing. The orthography of Latin texts still remains to be settled, and there is a prospect that in a few years when the Latin language has been more studied and is better understood, our printed texts will differ considerably in orthography from what they now are. Though I have not followed Xampi in the matter of writing some words which he undoubtedly writes correctly, I have still retained from writing "conio" for "conio," as the English report of Xampi does.

The notes are intended to explain the text. I have passed over no passage where I found a difficulty myself, and very few where others have found a difficulty. Indeed in the matter of acknowledgment I have gone further than is necessary; for the modest commentators whom I often cite have derived much of their materials from the earlier commentators.

The Explanatory may be a suitable for younger students; and indeed, they were not designed for them. It comes of this and in part of course, I believe the fault is chiefly in the matter, but I can't help that. Any person may see that the subjects discussed in them are necessary to the understanding of Latin text; and those who are competent to form an opinion will look with indulgence on any errors that I have committed in connection with such subjects for the first time in the edition of Cicero for the use of Englishmen.

INTRODUCTION.

IN the year B.C. 70, in the consulship of Cn. Pompeius Magnus and M. Licinius Crassus, M. Tullius Cicero was a candidate for the curule aedileship, and in the same year the Sicilians selected him for their patronus in the prosecution of C. Verres for mal-administration during his three years' government of Sicily. C. Verres was the son of C. Verres, a Roman senator, who was still living at the time when his son was governor of Sicily. The gentile name of C. Verres is never mentioned, and he probably had none. It is merely a conjecture, supported by no evidence, that his gentile name was Cornelius. His assumed relationship to the Caecilii Metelli is rather disproved by the passages usually cited to prove it. (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 26, 56.) Verres had a wife, Vettia, who bore him a daughter and a son. The son, though he had not attained the age to assume the 'toga virilis,' accompanied his father to Sicily, and was a witness of his scandalous conduct. (Lib. 3. c. 9, 68, 71.)

In the Verrine Orations Cicero represents Verres as an ignorant, brutal, and licentious man. He even gives him no credit for taste, though he had a passion for works of art; but here the orator has perhaps gone too far, for that Verres had some taste is proved by Cicero himself. Of the earlier part of his life Cicero says little: he professes to pass over the sins of his youth as things notorious.

Cicero says that Verres was the quaestor of the consul Cn. Papirius Carbo, in Cisalpine Gaul, fourteen years before the trial (B.C. 70), and he declares that all the acts of Verres from that day should furnish matter for the accusation. (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 12.) Accordingly the orator distributes his charges under four heads: the quaestorship of Verres; his legatio in Asia; his praetura urbana; and his government of Sicily. If Verres was quaestor to Carbo in B.C. 84, this was in the second consulship of Carbo; but Cicero appears to have made a mistake as to the fourteen years. For, as Drumann observes, it was in B.C. 82 that Carbo, then consul for the third time, was in Cisalpine Gaul, and this must be the year in which Verres was his quaestor. In his capacity of quaestor Verres was treacherous to the consul, and also embezzled the public money. (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 13—16.) After the defeat and death of Carbo, whom Cn. Pompeius caught in Sicily (B.C. 82) and put to death, Verres joined Sulla's party. Sulla sent him to Beneventum, probably to be out of the way, and he gave him certain estates which had belonged to the proscribed of Beneventum. He paid Verres, says Cicero, for his treachery, but he would not trust him. Verres soon found fresh employment. Cn. Cornelius Dolabella, praetor of Cilicia (B.C. 80, 79), an unprincipled, greedy fellow, made Verres one of his legati; and, after the death of the quaestor C. Malleolus, he appointed him proquaestor. The governor and his quaestor were a worthy pair, who kept one another in countenance. Cicero (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 17, &c.) has given a lively sketch of this period of the administration of Verres. He betrayed Dolabella as he had betrayed Carbo. When Dolabella was prosecuted (B.C. 78) by M. Aemilius Scaurus for repetundae, his former companion in knavery bargained with the accuser for his safety on the terms of giving evidence against his old master. (Lib. 1. c. 38.) Hortensius defended Dolabella, but he was convicted, and went into exile.

Verres had enriched himself in Asia, and he is said to have used his wealth in buying votes when he was a candidate for the praetorship. He was praetor in B.C. 74, and had the urbana jurisdictio. Under his praetorship (Lib. 1. c. 40, &c.) justice was sold, and the praetor's interest was purchased by applying to his mistress Chelidon. Cicero gives many instances of the praetor's greediness and unscrupulous ways of getting money. In B.C. 73 Verres obtained the proprætorship of Sicily, one of the most fertile of the Roman provinces, and the most abundant in works of art. The governor did not neglect this opportunity of filling his pockets with Sicilian gold, and his house with the choicest works of the Greek artists. Verres held the government of Sicily for three years, owing to the praetor Q. Arrius, who ought to have taken his place at the close of the year B.C. 73, being engaged in the war against Spartacus. (Lib. 4. c. 20.) He went to Sicily, says Cicero, with the settled purpose of plundering it, and neither the contest between the Romans and the Carthaginians for the possession of Sicily, nor the two servile wars, had caused so much misery in the island as the misgovernment of a Roman praetor. Verres ruined the corn-growers, beggared the farmers-general (publicani), and robbed both temples and private houses of the works of art, which the Greeks of Sicily prized even more than their money. Cicero has treated of the Sicilian government of Verres under three heads: his administration of justice (Lib. 2); his administration with respect to the corn (frumentum) of Sicily (Lib. 3); his plunder of works of art (Lib. 4); and his cruelty (Lib. 5).

Verres was succeeded in his government of Sicily by L. Caecilius Metellus (B.C. 70). He carried most of his plunder to Rome in a vessel which the people of Messana built for him; for this city had received some favours from Verres, and had been a depôt for part of his ill-gotten property. The Sicilians, having determined to prosecute their late praetor for his mal-administration, chose Cicero to conduct the prosecution. Cicero had been quaestor B.C. 75 in the Lilybaean or western district of the island, and he had gained the good-will of the people by his upright conduct. On taking leave of the Sicilians in B.C. 74, he promised them his assistance, if ever they should want it, and all the cities of the island called upon him to redeem his promise, Syracuse and Messana excepted. This was a great opportunity for Cicero, and he eagerly seized it, as the whole tenor of these speeches shows, notwithstanding certain rhetorical flourishes about his unwillingness to change his practice of defending the accused, to become a public accuser. Verres had the support of Q. and M. Metelli, the brethren of L. Metellus, now the proprætor of Sicily. The great orator Hortensius was to defend Verres, who had many friends among the optimates or senatorian party, and contrived also to gain the support of L. Metellus, who, as governor of Sicily, did what he could for him. The senators generally disliked such a prosecution as that with which Verres was threatened: many of them had enriched themselves at the expense of the provinces; and others, who had not, hoped to have the opportunity. The reforms of the Dictator Sulla had deprived the equites of the power of sitting as judices, and made the senators only eligible; but the senators had often abused their power, and acquitted great criminals of their own body. At the time when the prosecution of Verres was preparing, there was a loud outcry against the judicial body, and a demand for its reformation. Cicero saw, and he told the judices who sat on the trial of Verres, that the result would be the condemnation or absolution of their own body. If they convicted Verres, it was a triumph for Cicero to have brought to punishment the plunderer of Sicily, to have vindicated the purity of the Judicia, and to have humbled the arrogance of Hortensius, the tyrant of the courts. If Verres was acquitted, it would not be for want of industry or ability in the patron of the Sicilians, but through the corruption of the senatorial body, out of whom the judices were chosen. In either way Cicero could not fail to gain the favour of the equites, the class to which he belonged, and the class from which, from the time of the Gracchi to the legislation of Sulla, the judices had been chosen. The mass of the people, too, would be on his side, if for no other reasons, from hatred to those who possessed the political power. It was a safer policy for an ambitious Roman, who was not yet ennobled, to gain the good-will of those whose votes might raise him to the highest honours of the state, than to serve the senatorial party. When Cicero had taken his place among the nobles, by having filled a curule magistracy, it would be easy for him to gain the good-will of the optimates; for such a class, however proud and exclusive, has a secret pleasure in seeing its ranks recruited by men who can infuse fresh vigour into an effete body.

Q. Caecilius Niger claimed to be the prosecutor of Verres, or at least to be one of the prosecutors (Div. 15), probably prompted by Hortensius. The prosecution in the hands of Caecilius would either have failed for want of being properly conducted, or through the bad faith of the prosecutor. Caecilius was a Sicilian by birth, and had been quaestor under Verres for the district of Lilybaeum. He urged that Verres had done him wrong, that he was therefore his enemy, that he was well acquainted with the facts of the governor's misconduct, and, for all these reasons, he was the fittest person to conduct the prosecution. The first question which the judices had to decide was, whether Cicero or Caecilius should conduct the prosecution. The first of Cicero's Verrine Orations, entitled 'De Divinatione,' was therefore in defence of himself and against Caecilius. He had to support his own claims as the chosen of the Sicilians, and to destroy those of Caecilius, whom the Sicilians rejected; to show his opponent's unfitness, without urging his own qualifications beyond the limits of a modest confidence: and he did all this well. The judices decided in favour of Cicero, who conducted the prosecution alone.

Cicero asked and obtained from the praetor Glabrio one hundred and ten days for a voyage to Sicily to collect evidence against Verres; but a new device was resorted to by his opponents. At the instigation of Verres (Act. i. c. 2, 3), a person proposed to institute a prosecution which concerned Achaea, and a senator was selected as the man to be prosecuted; but Cicero does not mention his name. This person asked for only one hundred and eight days for going to Achaea and returning to Rome. If he returned within the hundred and eight days, and commenced his prosecution, Cicero's attack on Verres must be deferred, and perhaps it might be put off until the next year. But this trick failed. The false prosecutor never got as far as Brundisium, while Cicero hurried to Sicily, and made the best use of his time, with the assistance of L. Cicero, the son of his father's brother. He traversed Sicily from west to east, and was every where joyfully received, except at Syracuse, where, however, he collected some important evidence, and at Messana, where the city did not receive him with the hospitality to which a Roman senator was entitled. (Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 11.) Cicero travelled through Sicily and collected his evidence in fifty days. (Act. i. c. 2.) He was back again at Rome long before Verres and his friends expected him,

The trial was conducted under the presidency of M'. Acilius Glabrio, the praetor urbanus, a man of integrity. In settling the list of judices for the trial, Verres, being a senator, had the power, according to the Cornelia Lex, of challenging more than three judices; those who were not senators could only challenge three. The advocates of Verres availed themselves of this privilege, and Cicero mentions the names of six persons whom Verres rejected. Cicero also rejected some of the judices. But the result was, that the list, as finally settled, left Verres no hope of acquittal, for his guilt was notorious, and the judices were too honest to be bribed.

Q. Metellus and Hortensius were elected consuls for the following year, B.C. 69, with the aid of the Sicilian gold of Verres, as Cicero insinuates. M. Metellus was elected a praetor for the following year, and the lot gave him the duty of presiding at trials for the offence of repetundae. The object of the friends of Verres was to get the trial deferred to the next year, and to exclude Cicero from the curule aedileship, by bribing the voters. Cicero had now a personal motive for pushing the prosecution vigorously against a man whose stolen money was to deprive him of the object of his ambition. The friends of Verres had still hopes that the trial might be thrown over to the next year, when Q. Metellus and Hortensius would be consuls. M. Metellus would be sitting in the place of M'. Acilius Glabrio, and a dishonest set of judices could be packed. Cicero was elected curule aedile after the delivery of the Divinatio, as appears from the speech itself. (Div. c. 22.) The Pseudo-Asconius, in the argument of the Divinatio, incorrectly calls him 'designatus aedilis.'

The trial began on the 5th of Sextilis (August), according to the unreformed Calendar. The games of Cn. Pompeius were to be celebrated about the middle of August, and these would be followed by the Romani Ludi. The opponents of Cicero expected that they should not have to begin the defence until both the games were over. They would easily occupy all the time up to the celebration of the games of Victory, which followed the Romani Ludi, with talking and legal quibbles. The Plebeii Ludi would next follow, very little time would be left for business during the current year, and finally the trial, as they expected, would be postponed to the next, when M. Metellus would be praetor. (Act. i. c. 10.) But instead of delivering an elaborate speech, which he had prepared, Cicero opened his case briefly in the first Verrine oration (Actio Prima), and then stated the chief charges against Verres, confirming each statement as he went on by an examination of witnesses, and the production of documentary evidence. Hortensius occasionally interrupted the witnesses to make some objections, but the evidence was too strong for him, and he saw that a defence was impossible. He did not cross-examine any of Cicero's witnesses. (Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 59.) Cicero only took nine days for the prosecution; and before the nine days were over, Verres left Rome for Marseille, and the judices condemned him to exile, and to make full compensation in damages.

The oration entitled 'Divinatio,' and the 'Actio Prima,' were the only Verrine Orations which were spoken. Cicero wrote the other five after the trial. He has handled his matter so skilfully that, if we were unacquainted with this fact, we should never suspect that we were reading a rhetorical exercise; for such the five last Verrine Orations are, though the orator doubtless wished to leave to posterity not only a sample of his art, but a merciless exposure of the plunderer of Sicily, of his eloquent advocate, and of the senatorian body who had attempted to save him. At the time when Cicero wrote these Orations the Lex Aurelia, which made the judices eligible from the senate, the equites, and the tribuni aerarii, was promulgated. It is also possible, as Drumann observes, that the Lex was even enacted, though Cicero in direct terms speaks only of its promulgation (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 71; Lib. 3. c. 96; Lib. 5. c. 69); for, if it were not so, he would hardly have ventured to threaten that Aurelius Cotta would carry his Lex if Verres was acquitted. Now Verres, as we know, was actually convicted at the time when Cicero used these words; and as he represents him as still on his trial, in order to give to his Orations the air of being really delivered, so he would consistently represent the Aurelia Lex as not enacted, but only promulgated.

Verres lived in banishment until the proscription of the Triumviri, B.C. 43. He carried with him some of the works of art which he had collected during his official career, if the story is true that M. Antonius put his name in the proscription-lists because he would not give up to him his Corinthian vessels. (Plin. Hist. Nat. 34. c. 2; Seneca, Suasor. 6.) It seems unlikely that this was the only cause of his being proscribed; and yet it is not easy to suggest a good reason why such a man shared the fate of many who were better than himself, or why Antonius was his enemy. The same story adds that he died with courage, and not before he heard of the death of Cicero, the most illustrious victim of the vengeance of Antonius.

Drumann (Geschichte Roms, V. p. 263—328) has included in his Life of M. Cicero an Abstract of the Verrine Orations, and a History of the Prosecution of Verres.

M. TULLII CICERONIS
Q. CAECILIUM ORATIO
ACCUSATORE IN C. VERREM CONSTITUENDO, QUAE
DICITUR.

The Sicilians, with the exception of the Syracusans and the Mamertini, had asked Cicero to conduct their case against Verres; and, after he had consented, he applied to the praetor M'. Acilius Glabrio, who during this year presided in the Quaestiones perpetuae de pecuniis repetundis, for permission to be the accuser. Q. Caecilius Niger also put in his claim, though the Sicilians had not asked him, and did not want him. There were sufficient reasons why injured parties should not have the power of naming the person who should conduct their case, when the prosecution was a matter that concerned the public interest. There had sometimes been collusion between the guilty persons and those who came to demand satisfaction of them, or to bring them to punishment. The accused would secretly compound with their prosecutors for a sum of money, and the trial would be so managed as to result in an acquittal, and so the criminal would be secured against further risk. To prevent such an impudent fraud, the Lex, which defined each particular offence for which a man might be brought to a Judicium Publicum, provided that the Judices should choose the accuser, at least in cases where more than one person claimed the office. The practice was maintained under the Empire, as we see from a passage of Ulpian (Dig. 48. 2. 16): "Si plures exsistant qui eundem publicis judiciis accusare volunt, judex eligere debet eum qui accuset; causa scilicet cognita, aestimatis accusatorum personis vel de dignitate vel ex eo quod interest, vel aetate, vel moribus, vel alia justa de causa."

The Judices, who were chosen for the trial of Verres, accordingly met first to determine whether Caecilius or Cicero should be the accuser. The decision in such cases was not founded on any evidence, but on the speeches of the rival claimants, each of whom supported his own case by argument, and endeavoured to weaken the claim of his opponent. The Judices had to form their judgment, as well as they could, on what they thus heard. This 'actio de accusatore constituendo' was called 'Divinatio,' or divining; apparently because the Judices could do no more than make a kind of guess or probable conclusion as to the fitness of the opposing claimants. Asconius in his argument gives some other reasons. Quintilian (Inst. Or. vii. 4. § 33) says that such 'judicia' were called 'Divinationes.' The term 'Divinatio' is also explained in the same way by the grammarian Gabius Bassus (Gellius, ii. 4): "Divinatio iudicium appellatur, quoniam divinet quodammodo iudex oportet quam sententiam sese ferre par sit:" the Judges must guess, as Gellius explains the meaning of Bassus, because they had little to found their judgment upon. The name 'Divinatio' expressed the whole proceeding, the result of which was the selection of an accuser; and it was also used to signify the speech made on the occasion by the opposing claimants. C. Julius Caesar, the dictator, composed a 'Divinatio' (Sueton. Julius Caesar, c. 55).

The Actio Prima against Verres was delivered on the 5th of August, A.U.C. 684, or B.C. 70 (c. 10). An accuser, as already observed, had asked and obtained a period of 108 days in order to go to Achaea to collect materials for a prosecution (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 11); and, though he never went to Achaea, we may perhaps conclude that Cicero could not commence his attack until the 108 days had expired. He himself had 110 days allowed for his journey to Sicily to collect evidence, and, though he was back again at Rome before the expiration of the time, the accuser who had only asked for 108 days had the priority over him, and Cicero must wait to see whether he really meant to avail himself of this advantage. If these conclusions are right, the period of 108 days reckoned back from the 5th of August will fix the time of the delivery of the 'Divinatio' somewhere in the latter part of April.

I. Si quis vestrum, iudices, aut eorum qui adsunt, forte miratur me, qui tot annos in causis iudiciisque publicis ita sim versatus ut defenderim multos laeserim neminem, subito nunc mutata voluntate ad accusandum descenderim, is si mei consilii causam rationemque cognoverit, una et id quod facio probabit, et in hac causa profecto neminem praeponendum esse mihi actorem putabit. Quum quaestor in Sicilia fuisset, iudices, itaque ex ea provincia decessissem ut Siculis omnibus jucundam diuturnamque memoriam quaesturae nominisque mei relinquerem, factum est uti quum summum in veteribus patronis multis tum nonnullum etiam in me praesidium

1. miratur me,—descenderim] Asconius, now commonly called Pseudo-Asconius, mentions a reading 'descendere,' which is the reading of some MSS., and has been adopted by Zumpt. Asconius observes that the expression is a kind of solecism, unless we prefix 'et' or 'idem' to 'subito.' But the text is right, and it would be spoiled by this interpolation, as well as by the change of 'descenderim' into 'descendere.' For Cicero does not mean to say 'if any of you are surprised—that I have all at once descended to be an accuser;' but he says, 'if any of you are surprised at me, that I who for so many years, &c., now all at once have descended, &c.'

actorem] 'Actor' is a general term for one who is a plaintiff. In a 'causa publica' the 'actor' was usually called 'accusator.' Here it means no more than the manager of the prosecution: as in c. 4. "Siculos omnes actorem suae causae." According to some, 'actor' is properly the plaintiff in actions 'in personam,' and 'petitor' the plaintiff in actions 'in rem.' But the general sense of the verb 'agere' is in favour of the supposition that 'actor' is the most general term that can be used.

decessissem] 'Decedere' is the word applied to a governor of a province, who leaves it when his term of office is expired; and it appears that it was also applicable to a quaestor leaving his province. There is a reading 'discessissem,' which Klotz has adopted; and yet he has the reading 'quum tu decederes,' c. 9.

veteribus—patronis] These old patroni, or protectors of the Sicilians, were the Marcelli, the Scipiones, and the Metelli. M. Marcellus, the conqueror of Syracuse, preserved the captured city. The younger Scipio Africanus restored to the Sicilians the works of art which the Carthaginians suis fortunis constitutum esse arbitrarentur. Qui nunc populati atque vexati cuncti ad me publice saepe venerunt, ut suarum fortunarum omnium causam defensionemque susciperem; me saepe esse pollicitum, saepe ostendisse dicebant, si quod tempus accidisset quo tempore aliquid a me requirerent, commodis eorum me non defuturum. Venisse tempus, aiebant, non jam ut commoda sua sed ut vitam salutemque totius provinciae defenderem; sese jam ne deos quidem in suis urbibus ad quos confugerent habere, quod eorum simulacra sanctissima C. Verres ex delubris religiosissimis sustulisset; quas res luxuries in flagitiis, crudelitas in suppliciis, avaritia in rapinis, superbia in contumeliis efficere potuisset, eas omnes sese hoc uno praetore per triennium pertulisse; rogare et orare ne illos supplices aspernarer, quos me incolumi nemini supplices esse oporteret.

II. Tuli graviter et acerbe, iudices, in eum me locum adduci ut aut eos homines spes falleret qui opem a me atque auxilium petissent, aut ego qui me ad defendendos homines ab ineunte adolescentia dedissem, tempore atque officio coactus ad accusandum traducerer. Dicebam habere eos actorem Q. Caecilium, qui praesertim quaestor in eadem provincia post me quaestorem fuisset. Quo ego adjumento sperabam hanc a me molestiam posse dimoveri, id mihi erat adversarium maxime. Nam illi multo mihi hoc facilius remisissent, si istum non nossent, aut si iste apud eos quaestor non had carried away; and Metellus Celer and Nepos had on a former occasion given the Sicilians their protection in the prosecution of the praetor M. Lepidus (Asconius). It was usual for a province or for particular provincial cities to choose protectors (patroni) among the great families of Rome.

cuncti] 'Simul omnes, quasi conjuncti' (Asconius). The commentator has indicated the etymology of the word; for 'cunctus' is 'coniunctus' or 'coiunctus.' It is accordingly equivalent to 'universi' (c. 4). Compare 'universa provincia' (c. 5). In place of 'Qui nunc' Klotz has 'Qua re nunc.'

publice] 'Publice' means sent on a 'public mission,' deputed by the inhabitants of the island, or the cities of the island. This is a common usage of the word; and like the Greek κοινῇ.

pollicitum] Cicero says 'saepe;' that he had often declared his readiness to serve the Sicilians; but Asconius refers this observation particularly to the address which he made to the Sicilians at Lilybaeum on retiring from the quaestorship of that division of the island. Klotz observes that Arusianus Messus has preserved some fragments of this speech (ed. Lindem. p. 226). The word 'polliceor' is a word of 'proffering,' 'voluntary proposing' (c. 6), and differs from 'promitto,' which implies an answer to an offer which had been made.

2. qui praesertim] 'Praesertim' is a word of emphasis, and often put in clauses with 'quum' and 'si;' and its place is generally after the word to which it gives emphasis. (See De Am. c. 4, and Seyffert's note.) But in c. 11 we have 'praesertim tanta.' Cicero says in substance, 'I told them that they might take Q. Caecilius to manage their case, especially as he had been,' &c.—'Posse demoveri,' Zumpt.

istum—iste] Cicero in this oration generally refers to Caecilius by the use of this pronoun; and in like manner in the following orations he uses 'iste' when he refers to Verres. It is not exactly a word of contempt in these cases, though, if he had been speaking of persons whom he respected, he might and would have used 'ille.' The fuisset. Adductus sum, iudices, officio, fide, misericordia, multorum bonorum exemplo, veteri consuetudine institutoque majorum, ut onus hoc laboris atque officii non ex meo sed ex meorum necessariorum tempore mihi suscipiendum putarem. Quo in negotio tamen illa me res, iudices, consolatur, quod haec quae videtur esse accusatio mea non potius accusatio quam defensio est existimanda. Defendo enim multos mortales, multas civitates, provinciam Siciliam totam. Quamobrem si mihi unus est accusandus, propemodum manere in instituto meo videor, et non omnino a defendendis hominibus sublevandisque discedere. Quod si hanc causam tam idoneam, tam illustrem, tam gravem non haberem; si aut hoc a me Siculi non petissent, aut mihi cum Siculis causa tantae necessitudinis non intercederet, et hoc quod facio me rei publicae causa facere profiterer, ut homo singulari cupiditate, audacia, scelere praeditus, cujus furta atque flagitia non in Sicilia solum sed in Achaia, Asia, Cilicia, Pamphylia, Romae denique ante oculos omnium maxima turpissimaeque nossemus, me agente in iudicium vocaretur; quis tandem esset qui meum factum aut consilium posset reprehendere?

III. Quid est, pro deum hominumque fidem, in quo ego rei publicae plus hoc tempore prodesse possim? Quid est quod aut populo Romano gratius esse debeat, aut sociis exterisque nationibus optatius esse possit, aut saluti fortunisque omnium magis accommodatum sit? Populatae, vexatae, funditus eversae provinciae: socii stipendiariiique populi Romani afflicti, miseri, jam non salutis spem ex meo—tempore] 'Not out of regard to my interests, but to those of my friends.'

'iste' is the man whom I have mentioned to you, he whom you know.

sublevandis] A like use of 'sublevare,' 'to raise up,' occurs in c. 3 and 4. In conformity with the great generality of Roman expressions, the word means either to 'raise up for the purpose of supporting,' or 'to raise up for the purpose of taking away, or removing,' as in Cicero De Am. c. 24. See note in Seyffert's edition, who compares the double use of 'sublevare' with that of the German verb 'heben.'

3. pro deum hominumque fidem] What did the Romans understand by this expression, which we find so difficult to translate? We must accept the Roman notion of 'fides,' which Cicero (De Off. i. 7) defines to be the 'foundation of justice,' that is, of just conduct or of the discharge of duty (Or. Part. 22), for so he explains 'justitia,' considered with reference to the conduct of individuals. Further, in the same passage of the De Officiis, he defines 'fides' to be 'dictorum conventorumque constantia et veritas,' or steadfastness and truth in all that we say and all that we promise. It is opposed to 'fraus,' one of the forms of 'injustitia.' The sense of the passage then is this: 'What is there, in the name of all that is truthful in the sight of gods and men,' &c. 'Fides et religio' often go together. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 8. 'fidem vestram ac religionem.' That the phrase should be used on less solemn occasions, with little or no regard to its meaning, is not surprising.

socii stipendiariiique] The term 'socii' is often used in conjunction with 'Latini' or 'Nomen Latinum' (De Am. c. 3), to denote the free inhabitants of Italy who were in some sense under the dominion of Rome. The full enumeration of the inhabitants of Italy who were within the Roman dominion before the Social War, B.C. 90, was 'Cives Romani, Latini, et Socii.' The 'Cives Romani' were the citizens of Rome, the citizens of Roman colonies, and the inhabitants of Municipia, without any respect to their particular nationality. The Latini were the citizens of the old towns of the Latin nation, with the exception of those which had become Municipia; the numerous Coloniae Latinae were also comprehended under the term Latini. The Socii were the rest of the inhabitants of Italy, all of whom before the Social War became subject to Rome, and belonged to various tribes or nations. The term Socii would seem to imply something of a 'foedus,' by which they were connected with the Roman state. The Provinciales were the free subjects of Rome beyond the limits of Italy, and of course the term comprehended the Sicilians, among others. Before the Social War there were only two classes of people within the Roman dominions, marked by a distinct political name, and these were Cives and Peregrini, for the term Peregrini comprised Latini, Socii, and Provinciales. After the Social War the Civitas was extended to all Italy, and even comprehended Gallia Cispadana, which, as is known, was not at that time included in the term Italia. Finally, even Gallia Transpadana obtained the Civitas, in Cicero's life-time. The class of Latini and Socii, as above defined, had now disappeared: they were Cives Romani. But a new class of Latini was formed—a class which, except in name, had no relationship to the former Latini: they had the Commercium, but not the Connubium. Henceforward we find three political classes in the Roman state—Cives, who had the Commercium and Connubium; Latini, who had only the Commercium; and Peregrini, who had neither. The Sicilians were Peregrini after the Social War, and at the time when Cicero was delivering this oration. When Cicero calls the Sicilians Socii, he uses the word just in the same sense as he does when he speaks of the Socii of the province of Asia (Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 1); but not in the same sense in which he uses the word in another place (De Am. c. 3), when he is speaking of the Populus Romanus, Socii et Latini, of the time of Scipio Africanus the younger. He says that the inhabitants of Asia, of that province, consist of Socii, that is natives, and Cives, who were either Publicani or Negotiatores residing in the province. He calls the Romans resident in Asia, in one passage, Provinciales (Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 5), but he only means men who are residing in a province, and not in Italy. The term Socii may have been applied to Peregrini out of Italy before the Social War; but, if that was the case, the Socii of Italy must have been distinguished from other Socii by the term Italici, which term, indeed, designates Italian Socii, without the addition of the word Socii. Cicero here speaks of Socii in the provinces as opposed to Stipendiarii, and he probably means those who had a 'foedus' or treaty with Rome. The Stipendiarii were those who were designated simply by a term which expressed their liability to make certain fixed payments, arbitrarily imposed, without any 'foedus' or terms of compact. The Socii might either be subject to fixed payments, or might be free from them; but the circumstance of their having a 'foedus' with Rome distinguished them from those who had not, and gave them a higher rank. This subject is discussed by Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, Vol. i. Jus Italicum.

aeque—atque] This form is common enough; it signifies 'so much as.' The position of 'nihil' shows how it is to be understood: "Nothing that you can name and that former energy and dignity of the judicia are called for in an equal degree." Cicero (Brutus, 71) says: "qui tibi sunt aeque noti ac mihi." Compare Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 19: "aequam partem tibi ac Populo Romano."

tribunicia potestas] L. Cornelius Sulla, during his dictatorship (B.C. 82—79), among other constitutional changes, got a law passed which deprived the tribuni plebis of the power of proposing a lex in the Comitia Tributa, and left them only their 'jus intercessionis.' This law was repealed (B.C. 70) in the consulship of Cn. Pompeius Nunc quoniam quibus rebus adductus ad causam accesserim demonstravi, dicendum necessario est de contentione nostra, ut in constituendo accusatore quid sequi possitis habeatis. Ego sic intelligo, iudices: quum de pecuniis repetundis nomen cujuspian deferatur, si certamen inter aliquos sit cui potissimum delatio detur, haec duo in primis spectari oportere; quem maxime velint actorem esse ii quibus factae esse dicantur injuriae, et quem minime velit is qui eas injurias fecisse arguatur.

IV. In hac causa, iudices, tametsi utrumque esse arbitror perspicuum, tamen de utroque dicam, et de eo prius quod apud vos plurimum debet valere, hoc est, de voluntate eorum quibus injuriae factae sunt, quorum causa iudicium de pecuniis repetundis est constitutum. Siciliam provinciam C. Verres per triennium depopulatus esse, Siculorum civitates vastasse, domos exinanisse, fana spoliasset dicitur. Magnus and M. Licinius Crassus, a measure which Cicero, in another place, says that he could not commend (De Leg. iii. 9). The 'incommoda,' just before mentioned, are the various measures of Sulla, and the enactment as to the Tribuni plebis among the rest. Asconius explains the 'difficultates' to be the consequences of Sulla's proscriptions, the loss of property, and the other sufferings that he inflicted on his opponents.

censorium nomen] According to the Schol. Gronov., p. 384, ed. Orelli, Sulla abolished the censorship. However this may be, there were no censors from B.C. 82, the dictatorship of Sulla, to B.C. 70, the first consulship of Cn. Pompeius Magnus.

plausibile] That which merits 'plaudite,' the word with which the Roman comedian generally concluded his plays, and by which he solicited the applause of the spectators. We have no equivalent word; for 'plausible' is a different thing.

offensio] In Act. i. c. 12, there occurs, 'in odium offensionemque populi Romani irruere,' where 'offensio' is the feeling, the aversion, and disgust of the subject which is expressed by the genitive case. The expression 'pedis offensio,' the striking of the foot against an obstacle, shows the primary sense of the word. The 'totius ordinis offensio' is the stumbling of the Senatorian ordo, their impinging on something, their false, unsteady step. See 'offensione,' c. 7 and 13.

nomen cujuspian deferatur,] 'Nomen deferre,' or simply 'deferre,' in one of its senses, means to accuse, but only by virtue of its implication with the context; for 'deferre' also means to hand in or give in a man's name with the view of doing him a service, as in Cicero (Pro Balbo, c. 28); 'Caesar in praetura, in consulatu praefectum fabrum detulit.' In the sense of bringing a charge we have the words 'delatio,' 'delator.'

per me a vobis atque a populi Romani legibus petunt; me defensorem calamitatum suarum, me ultorem injuriarum, me cognitorem juris sui, me actorem causae totius esse voluerunt. Utrum, Q. Hoc si tu inimicus ejus factum negabis, quod ipse cui maxime haec res obstat negare non audet, videto ne nimium familiariter inimicitias exercere videare. 4. cognitorem juris sui.] One man could represent another, as the plaintiff or defendant, in a suit, and act for him. If such an agent or attorney was appointed by a party to a suit for a particular case in the presence of the opposing party, he was called 'cognitor.' It was not necessary that the 'cognitor' must be present when he was appointed (Gaius, iv. 83, &c.). The 'cognitor' in all respects represented the person who had appointed him. A 'procurator' was an agent who was appointed by an absent party (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 24), and he was bound to give security that his principal would ratify all that he did (Gaius, iv. 98; Dig. 46. tit. 8; Puchta, Instit. ii. § 156). The term 'cognitor' is only applied to private or civil suits. Cicero here intends to show that he represented the Sicilians in every respect, for every demand; he was their 'representative for the recovery of their just claims.' Asconius has a note on 'patronus,' 'advocatus,' 'cognitor,' 'procurator,' which is short, but quite correct. The writer of this particular note was not Pseudo-Asconius.

Si id audebis, &c.] "If you shall dare to say what C. Verres, whose enemy you pretend to be, would have people above all things believe, that the Sicilians have not requested me to undertake their prosecution, in the first place you will be helping the cause of your own enemy, as to whom it is not a 'praejudicium,' but really a 'iudicium' that is now considered to have taken place, inasmuch as it is the universal belief that all the Sicilians have looked out for a manager of their case to prosecute Verres for his unlawful acts." Orelli has 'actorem me suae causae,' but 'me' is not in the MSS., and Klotz gives good reasons for rejecting it. Caecilius might deny that Cicero was selected as the advocate of the Sicilians; but that would not disprove the truth of the general opinion that the Sicilians had sought an advocate, for every body believed that they had, and the advocate was not Caecilius, at least. The bare fact of all Sicily agreeing to choose some one to prosecute their case, Cicero says further, must be considered a condemnation of Verres. The word 'praejudicium' is not translateable. The name of the Roman form of action called 'praejudicium,' or 'actio praejudicialis,' is derived from the circumstance that it had no 'condemnatio' as a consequence, but its end was to establish the existence of a fact, or facts, which might serve as the foundation of further proceedings (Gaius, iv. 44, 94; Dig. 25. tit. 3. s. 1, 3). Cicero's use of the word may be hardly exact, but he means this: "the fact of the Sicilians having all agreed to choose some manager or other of their case, a fact which may be considered as certain, is no mere preliminary to the trial; it is the condemnation of Verres."—The form 'percerebuit' is probably correct, though 'percerebruit' may be the true etymological form. The reason for the omission of the last 'r' is plain (Lib. 2. c. 3. note).

videto ne] "You must take care that you be not considered to be a friend, while you are merely pretending to be an enemy." The 'videto' is more emphatic and imperative than 'vide,' and it may be appropriately called the imperative mood, as opposed to the weaker form 'jube,' which may be called the jussive mood.—Key's Latin Grammar, 424.

labo ; quos, si mentirer, testes esse impudentiae meae minime vellem. Scit is qui est in consilio C. Marcellus ; scit is quem adesse video Cn. Lentulus Marcellinus ; quorum fide atque praesidio Siculi maxime nituntur, quod omnino Marcellorum nomini tota illa provincia adjuncta est. Hi sciunt hoc non modo a me petatum esse, sed ita saepe et ita vehementer esse petatum ut aut causa mihi suscipienda fuerit, aut officium necessitudinis repudiandum. Sed quid ego his testibus utor, quasi res dubia aut obscura sit ? Adsunt homines ex tota provincia nobilissimi qui praesentes vos orant atque obsecrant, iudices, ut in actore causae suae deligendo vestrum iudicium ab suo iudicio ne discrepet. Omnium civitatum totius Siciliae legationes adsunt praeter duas civitates, quarum duarum, si adessent, duo crimina vel maxima minuerentur quae cum his civitatibus C. Verri communicata sunt. At enim cur a me potissimum hoc praesidium petiverunt ? Si esset dubium petissent a me praesidium necne, dicerem cur petissent. Nunc vero quum id ita perspicuum sit ut oculis iudicare possitis, nescio cur hoc mihi detrimento esse debeat, si id mihi objiciatur me potissimum esse delectum. Verum id mihi non sumo, iudices, et hoc non modo in oratione mea non pono, sed ne in opinione quidem cuiusquam relinquo, me omnibus patronis esse praepositum. Non ita est : sed uniuscujusque temporis, valetudinis, facultatis ad agendum ducta ratio est. Mea fuit semper haec in hac re voluntas et sententia, quemvis ut hoc mallet de iis qui essent idonei suscipere quam me, me ut mallet quam neminem.

qui est in consilio] C. Marcellus was one of the 'judices,' whom Cicero was addressing. The body of the 'judices' was called a 'consilium ;' 'Cum consilio causam Mamertinorum cognoscit, et de consilii sententia . . . pronuntiat' (Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 21). Cn. Lentulus Marcellinus was originally a Marcellus, and he had passed by adoption into the family of the Lentuli ; but the form Marcellinus added to his name indicated his original family. Of Marcellinus he says, 'quem adesse video :' he was one of the 'corona populi circum subsellia stans,' as Asconius explains the expression 'eorum qui adsunt,' c. 1.

praeter duas civitates,] The two states were the Syracusani (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 14, &c.) and the Mamertini (Lib. 5. c. 17).

These passages will explain why these two cities did not take a part in the prosecution of Verres.

necne] This is one of the rarer forms of expressing a disjunctive proposition by 'necne' only ; the most common form is 'utrum—an.' Comp. the form c. 14, 'utrum velis, factum esse necne,' &c.

patronis] Here Cicero by implication calls himself a 'patronus,' which is equivalent to 'orator,' the person who managed a cause before the 'judices' and delivered the speech. The 'advocatus' of Cicero's time was a person who gave his legal advice and was present at a trial, without taking any further part.

neminem] As Asconius remarks, Caecilius is comprehended under 'nemo.' Caecilius was a nobody.

5. ecquid] Klotz reads, 'a me petisse id, valere oporteat, ecquid auctoritatis apud vos in suo jure repetundo socii populi Romani, supplices vestri, habere debeant. De quo quid ego plura commemorem? quasi vero dubium sit quin tota lex de pecuniis repetundis sociorum causa constituta sit. Nam civibus quum sunt ereptae pecuniae, civili fere actione et privato jure repetuntur: haec lex socialis est; hoc jus nationum exterarum est; hanc habent arcem minus aliquanto nunc quidem munitam quam antea, veruntamen, si qua reliqua spes est quae sociorum animos consolari possit, ea tota in hac lege posita est, cujus legis non modo a populo Romano sed etiam ab ultimis nationibus jampridem severi custodes requiruntur. Quis igitur est qui neget oportere eorum arbitrato lege agi quorum causa lex sit constituta? Sicilia tota, si una voce loqueretur, hoc diceret: Quod auri, quod argenti, quod ornamentorum in meis urbibus, sedibus, delubris fuit; quod in unaquaque re beneficio senatus populi Romani juris habui, id mihi tu, C. Verres, eripuisti atque abstulisti; quo nomine abs te sestertium millies ex lege repeto. Si universa, ut dixi, provincia loqui posset, ecquid,' &c. This 'ec' prefixed to 'quis,' 'quid,' seems to vary the sense somewhat. It is used both in direct and in indirect forms. Compare 'ecquis umquam,' c. 17. The translation is, "whether this matter ought to have any influence with you," &c.

in suo jure repetundo] "In recovering their rights," that is, in getting their rights acknowledged by a competent jurisdiction, and in obtaining satisfaction or compensation for their wrongs. Conformably to this meaning is the title of the 'Lex de pecuniis repetundis,' which Cicero affirms to have been enacted entirely for the benefit of the 'Socii;' though the fact is that a Roman citizen also might avail himself of it. See the Excursus on the 'Leges de pecuniis repetundis.'

civili fere actione, &c.] Generally a Roman citizen would sue to recover damages or compensation under the 'Jus civile,' that is, the peculiar law of the Romans; for, though every 'Lex' was a part of the 'Jus Civile Romanorum' in its wider sense, Cicero means to call this 'Lex de repetundis' rather a 'Lex' enacted for the benefit of the 'Socii' (lex socialis), than as properly a part of the 'Jus Civile Romanorum.' He adds, 'privato jure;' that is, the injured Roman would sue simply as an individual for damages and satisfaction. The nature of the Roman division of law into 'Publicum' and 'Privatum' is explained in the Excursus on the 'Judicia Publica.'

beneficio senatus, &c.] The Romans allowed the Sicilians to retain the 'Leges Hieronicae,' and gave them also rules for the general administration of the island, which were made by Rutilius and ten commissioners. Verres violated all these rules that the Roman state gave the Sicilians for their benefit and protection (see Lib. 2).

sestertium millies] Or milliens, a thousand times a hundred thousand 'sesterces.' Asconius remarks that Cicero has been blamed (by critics) for claiming a thousand here, and only four hundred in other places (Act. i. c. 18; Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 10). Without adopting all or any of the old commentators' explanations, it is enough to observe that Cicero says here, that the amount of damages which he claimed was one thousand. In the two other passages, he says that Verres had wrongfully taken four hundred. All that can be inferred then is, that he here claims higher damages than the actual damages; as to which, see the Excursus 'De pecuniis repetundis.'

Si universa . . loqui posset—uteretur: quoniam . . non poterat] If any person is in danger of misunderstanding 'posset' and 'uteretur,' the word 'poterat' may help to save him from it. "If, as I said, the province could have spoken with one voice (for this is the meaning), it would have spoken as I have just done: since it could not, it has chosen," &c. Compare 'dicerent' in the next chapter. This form of the imhac voce uteretur: quoniam id non poterat, harum rerum actorem quem idoneum esse arbitrata est ipsa delegit. In hujusmodi re quisquam tam impudens reperietur qui ad alienam causam, invitis iis quorum negotium est, accedere aut adspirare audeat?

VI. Si tibi, Q. Caecili, hoc Siculi dicerent: Te non novimus; nescimus qui sis; numquam te antea vidimus; sine nos per eum nostras fortunas defendere cujus fides est nobis cognita; nonne id dicerent quod cuivis probare deberent? Nunc hoc dicunt: utrumque se nosse; alterum se cupere defensorem esse fortunarum suarum, alterum plane nolle. Cur nolint, etiamsi tacerent, satis dicunt. Verum non tacent. Tamen his invitissimis te offeres? tamen in aliena causa loquere? tamen eos defendes qui se ab omnibus desertos potius quam abs te defensos esse malunt? tamen his operam tuam pollicebere qui te neque velle sua causa, nec, si cupias, posse arbitrantur? Cur eorum spem exiguam reliquarum fortunarum, quam habent in legis et iudicii severitate positam, vi extorquere conaris? cur te interponis invitissimis iis quibus maxime lex consultum esse vult? cur de quibus in provincia non optime es meritis, eos nunc plane fortunis omnibus conaris evertere? cur his non modo persequendi juris sui sed etiam deplorandae calamitatis adimis potestatem? Nam te actore quem eorum adfuturum putas, quos intelligis non ut per te alium sed ut per aliquem te ipsum ulciscantur laborare?

VII. At enim solidum id est ut me Siculi maxime velint: alterum perfect is often used to express an impossible hypothesis.

6. Cur nolint, etiamsi tacerent, satis dicunt.] "Why they don't wish to have you, they tell you plain enough, even if they had been silent." 'Tacerent' is the reading of most MSS., and the true reading. See Orelli's note. Zumpt and Klotz have 'taceant.'

lex consultum esse vult?] 'Vult' expresses the design or purpose of the law, conformably to the general sense of 'velle,' which is not the 'wish,' but the 'will.' 'Cupio' is the 'desire,' 'volo' is the 'resolve,' 'opto' is the 'choice' or 'selection' out of various things presented of one that seems the best. See c. 14, 'potestatem optionemque.' The distinction of 'cupiditas' and 'voluntas' is clear.

cur his?] 'Cur iis,' Orelli; a matter of indifference here: the words 'ii' and 'hi' are constantly confounded or interchanged in the MSS. A little further on Orelli has 'Num te actore,' &c., which is the reading of some MSS., and 'nunc' of others. But 'nam,' the reading of Klotz and Zumpt, appears to be the true reading; and 'nam' is easily confounded with 'num,' and 'num' with 'nunc.' If we read 'num,' the word 'quem' has the force of an enclitic without having its place, which should be next to 'num;' for the interrogation lies in the 'num.' But the interrogation ought to be in the 'quem,' and that can only be by reading 'nam.' This use of 'nam,' not to express an inference, but a transition to a thing on which the speaker does not intend to dwell, is very common. Com. De Am. c. 27, 'Nam quid de studiis,' &c., and c. 13, 'nam quibusdam,' &c., and Seyffert's note.—'Per aliquem:' Zumpt and Klotz have 'per alium aliquem.'

7. At enim solidum, &c.] Comp. c. 4, 'At enim cur,' which means, "well, but it may be said why," &c. Here it means, "well, suppose this be established that," &c. "The other thing, I suppose, is not clear," &c., which is said ironically, 'credo' being often thus employed. Most or perhaps all the MSS. have 'solum,' which may have arisen from an abbreviation of 'solidum.' It is curious to see how the com-illud, credo, obscurum est, a quo Verres minime se accusari velit. Ecquis umquam tam palam de honore, tam vehementer de salute sua contendit quam ille atque illius amici ut ne haec mihi delatio detur? Sunt multa quae Verres in me esse arbitratur, quae scit in te, Q. Caecili, non esse: quae cujusmodi in utroque nostrum sint paullo post commemorabo. Nunc tantum id dicam quod tacitus tu mihi assentiare; nullam rem in me esse quam ille contemnat; nullam in te quam pertimescat. Itaque magnus ille defensor et amicus ejus tibi suffragatur, me oppugnat; aperte ab judicibus petit ut tu mihi anteponare; et ait hoc se honeste sine ulla invidia ac sine ulla offensione contendere. Non enim, inquit, illud peto, quod soleo quum vehementius contendere impetrare, reus ut absolvatur non peto; sed ut ab hoc potius quam ab illo accusetur, id peto. Da mihi hoc; concede, quod facile est, quod honestum, quod non invidiosum; quod quum dederis, sine ullo tuo periculo, sine infamia illud dederis, ut is absolvatur cujus ego causa laboro. Et ait idem, ut aliquis metus mentators have handled this matter in the Variorum edition. 'Solidum' means 'whole,' 'entire,' or, if we choose, 'clear,' as opposed to 'obscurum.' But its true sense is this: "well, you grant me all this that," &c., "you acknowledge that this admission is completely due to me;" in which sense it is very near akin to the legal sense of 'solidum' in an 'obligatio,' where there may be several debtors, and each bound in the whole sum to the creditor (Dig. 45. 2. 3). Klotz and Zumpt have 'solum,' which I don't understand.

amicus ejus tibi] Hortensius is meant, and the word Hortensius is inserted after 'tibi' by some editors, though it is said to be omitted in the best MSS. Klotz's reasons for inserting it do not seem to me to have any weight.

quum vehementius contendere] Asconius explains these words to mean 'quum pecuniam judicibus dedi,' and adds, that Cicero does not say this in direct terms, because he introduces Hortensius as speaking. Klotz thinks that the false Asconius is right—I do not.

aliquis metus, &c.] This sentence is not very clear, though the general meaning is plain. The 'gratia' is the bribery; but it was not enough to bribe, it was necessary to secure the rogue's voting as he had promised. The 'judices' voted by ballot; and Hortensius is supposed to say that he has persons among the 'judices' who will look at the 'tabellae,' or voting-tablets, of the doubtful men, and see that they vote as they have promised. The words 'id esse perfacile' are not clear, and 'non enim,' &c. cannot refer to them. He says that the 'judices' do not severally place their tablets in the box (cista), but put them in altogether; which is no reason why it would be easier to see how they voted. The words 'non enim' must refer to 'ostendi tabellas velit.' He would have the 'tabellae' shown to certain trustworthy rogues among the 'judices,' and this could easily be managed; and the reason for its being necessary is, that the 'judices' put their tablets in all in a lump; they must, therefore, show them first. Another reason is added why they must show them, in order that their votes may be known. They had all got tablets of 'cera legitima,' all of one colour, all alike, so that a man's vote could not be known from the colour of the tablets, which had been given him, and on which he must write the sentence of condemnation C, or of acquittal A, or NL (non liquet). The fact that this infamous coloured tablet (see Act. i. c. 13) was not used, or going to be used, on this occasion, has nothing to do with the 'perfacile,' but with the 'ostendi tabellas velit,' which was 'perfacile.' Klotz has a note on this passage, which to me is obscurer than the text, about the meaning of which there is no doubt, though it is oddly expressed. On the words 'non illa infami,' &c., Asconius remarks, 'mire ex ipsius Hortensii persona hoc dicitur: quae saepe virtus maxima Ciceronis in hujusmodi allocutionibus invenitur;' a remark which is more wonderful than the text, being much more unintelligible. "You have got your adjunctus sit ad gratiam, certos esse in consilio quibus ostendi tabellas velit (id esse perfacile), non enim singulos ferre sententias, sed universos constituere; ceratam unicuique tabellam dari cera legitima, non illa infami ac nefaria. Atque is non tam propter Verrem laborat quam quod eum minime res tota delectat. Videt enim, si a pueris nobilibus quos adhuc elusit, si a quadruplatoribus quos non sine causa contempsit semper ac pro nihilo putavit, accusandi voluntas ad viros fortes spectatosque homines translata sit, se in judiciis diutius dominari non posse.

VIII. Huic ego homini jam ante denuntio, si a me causam hanc vos agi volueritis, rationem illi defendendi totam esse mutandam; et ita tamen mutandam ut meliore et honestiore conditione sit quam qua ipse esse vult; ut imitetur homines eos quos ipse vidit amplissimos, L. Crassum et M. Antonium, qui nihil se arbitrabantur ad judicia causasque amicorum praeter fidem et ingenium afferre oportere. Nihil erit quod me agente arbitretur iudicium sine magno multorum periculo posse corrumpi. Ego in hoc iudicio mihi Siculorum causam receptam, populi Romani susceptam esse arbitror, ut mihi non unus homo improbus opprimendus sit, id quod Siculi petiverunt, sed omnino omnis improbitas, id quod populus Romanus jamdiu flagitat, extinguenda atque delenda sit. In quo ego quid eniti aut quid efficere possim, malo in aliorum spe relinquere quam ‘cera legitima,’” says Hortensius with a sneer, “you have the uniform tablets, which the ‘lex’ (for that is the meaning of ‘legitima’) requires; you have not got that infamous and wicked tablet of divers colours,” he adds sarcastically, “but yet I will find out how you vote. I have men among you, who will look after you.”

pueri nobiles] Youngsters who belonged to the nobility, sons of men who had filled curule offices. The old commentator mentions the case of Appius Claudius Pulcher, a noble youth, who accused Terentius Varro (B.C. 75) of ‘repetundae,’ and failed, owing to the management of Hortensius, who employed these tablets of different colours. See Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer, p. 653.

quadruplatoribus] Klotz’s explanation, founded on Festus (v. quadruplatores), and the confused note of Asconius, is hardly exact. ‘Quadruplatores’ were probably those who undertook prosecutions in those cases in which some ‘lex’ gave them a portion, a fourth, of the penalty or damages; as in ‘qui tam’ actions in England, where a man sues for a penalty, part for the crown, and part for himself. See Tacit. Ann. iv. 20; and Rein, Das Röm. Criminalrecht, p. 809.

8. denuntio] A word that Cicero often uses. It means ‘to give a person notice.’ It has not a technical meaning here, but is used in a general sense. It has, however, often the signification of giving legal notice. Pro Caecina, c. 7 and 32. Compare the use of ‘denuntio’ in De Sen. c. 6.

L. Crassum, &c.] L. Licinius Crassus, and M. Antonius, the two great orators whom Cicero introduces in his treatise De Oratore.

receptam—susceptam] Quite misexplained by Asconius, who here well deserves his new name of an impostor. ‘Recipere’ is to undertake what a man is asked to undertake, or it signifies the undertaking of that which he is by some antecedent or other bound to undertake; so that the re, according to this explanation, has its proper force. ‘Suscipere’ denotes a voluntary act. Zumpt refers to the like use of ‘recipere’ and ‘suscipere’ in Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 1; and Klotz to the De Oratore, ii. 24: “in quo est illa quidem magna offensio vel negligentiae susceptis rebus vel perfidiae receptis.”

in oratione mea ponere. Tu vero, Caecili, quid potes? quo tempore aut qua in re non modo ceteris specimen aliquod dedisti, sed tute tui periculum fecisti? In mentem tibi non venit quid negotii sit causam publicam sustinere? vitam alterius totam explicare? atque eam non modo in animis iudicum sed etiam in oculis conspectuque omnium exponere? sociorum salutem, commoda provinciarum, vim legum, gravitatem iudiciorum defendere?

IX. Cognosce ex me, quoniam hoc primum tempus discendi nactus es, quam multa esse oporteat in eo qui alterum accuset; ex quibus si unum aliquod in te cognoveris, ego jam tibi ipse istuc quod expetis mea voluntate concedam. Primum integritatem atque innocentiam singularem. Nihil est enim quod minus ferendum sit quam rationem ab altero vitae reposcere eum qui non possit suae reddere. Hic ego de te plura non dicam: unum illud credo omnes animadvertere, te adhuc ab nullis nisi ab Siculis potuisse cognosci; Siculos hoc dicere, quum eidem sint irati cui tu te inimicum esse dicis, sese tamen te actore ad iudicium non adfuturos. Quare negent ex me non audies: hos patere id suspicari quod necesse est. Illi quidem, ut est hominum genus nimis acutum et suspiciosum, non te ex Sicilia litteras in Verrem deportare velle arbitrantur, sed quod iisdem litteris illius praetura et tua quaestura consignata sit, asportare te velle ex Sicilia litteras suspicantur. Deinde accusatorem firmum verumque esse oportet. Eum ego si te putem cupere esse, facile intelligo esse non posse. Nec ea dico quae, si dicam, tamen infirmare non possis: te antequam de Sicilia decesseris in gratiam redisse cum Verre; Potamonem scribam et familiarem tuum retentum esse a Verre in provincia, quum tu decederes; M. Caecilium, fratrem tuum, lectissimum atque ornatissimum adolescentem, non deportare—asportare] The false Asconius explains 'deportare' correctly enough, as far as he goes, 'ut mutet locum;' as to 'asportare' he says, 'ut intereat.' 'Deportare,' or 'deferre,' means to bring the documents to Rome, or such other place as the person was ordered to bring them to, who received a commission for that purpose. (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 26.) 'Asportare,' says Klotz, is 'to carry off,' not for any par-

9. ut est hominum genus] Klotz remarks that Cicero casts a slight censure on the sharpness and jealousy of the Sicilians, to let Caecilius know what he may expect, if he obtrudes himself on them as their 'patronus.' As to the use of 'ut,' compare De Sen. c. 4: 'ut in homine Romano;' and De Or. iii. 18.

scribam] A 'scriba' is a public clerk or writer, such as were employed in keeping the public accounts and copying. See what Cicero says of them, Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 78, 79. The body of 'Scribae' was numerous, and had considerable influence at Rome, as they were employed in all branches of administration. They were divided into Decuriae, a kind of associations or corporations. The various functionaries had scribae attached to them, such as quaestors, aediles, and so forth.

modo non adesse neque tecum tuas injurias persequi, sed esse cum Verre, cum illo familiarissime atque amicissime vivere. Sunt haec et alia in te falsi accusatoris signa permulta, quibus ego nunc non utor: hoc dico, te, si maxime cupias, tamen verum accusatorem esse non posse. Video enim permulta esse crimina quorum tibi societas cum Verre ejusmodi est ut ea in accusando attingere non audeas.

X. Queritur Sicilia tota C. Verrem ab aratoribus, quum frumentum sibi in cellam imperavisset, et quum esset tritici modius HS. II, pro frumento in modios singulos duodenos sestertios exegisse. Magnum crimen, ingens pecunia, furtum impudens, injuria non ferenda. Ego hoc uno crimine illum condemnem necesse est: tu, Caecili, quid facies? Utrum hoc tantum crimen praetermittes an objicies? Si objicies, idne alteri crimini dabis quod eodem tempore in eadem provincia tu ipse fecisti? Audebis ita accusare alterum ut quo minus tute condemnere recusare non possis? Sin praetermittes, qualis erit ista tua accusatio, quae domestici periculi metu certissimi et maximi criminis non modo suspicionem verum etiam mentionem ipsam pertimescat? Emptum est ex S. C. frumentum ab Siculis praetore Verre, pro quo frumento pecunia omnis soluta

10. Queritur, &c.] The cultivators (aratores) were required to furnish a certain quantity of grain for the praetor's use, for his 'cella' or store-house (see De Sen. c. 16, for the general use of 'cella'); but he took money instead, and when wheat was two sestertii the modius, he made them pay him twelve. (See Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 81.) Cicero has already urged several reasons against the fitness of Caecilius to be the accuser, which have not much weight, and this is weaker than the rest. It is true that he charges Caecilius with doing the same thing that Verres did, but he does not come to particulars.

'Frumentum imperare' means to impose on them a requisition. See Caesar, Bell. Gall. vi. 4. As to Aratores, see Lib. iii.

Emptum est, &c.] A quantity of corn had been purchased in Sicily by an order of the Senate, probably for the victualling of Rome, after the fashion of the time; and it was not all paid for; and Caecilius, as the quaestor, had the handling of the money. Klotz remarks that this charge, also, is a feeble one; for the quaestor was bound to obey the praetor's orders. He had the care of the money, and must account for it to the Aerarium; but he must obey the orders of the praetor as to payment or non-payment. He quotes, in support of this, a passage of Polybius (vi. 12), to prove that the quaestor at Rome must make the payments which the consul ordered him to make. But this is not quite decisive. It might be, that in the case of corn purchased for Rome he was absolutely bound to pay, and that he was provided with money for the purpose. However this may be, it is true, as Klotz remarks, that Cicero's expression, "magna ex parte tua potestas erat," is but a feeble way of affirming the quaestor's responsibility in the matter. But Klotz, in his zeal to defend Caecilius, goes a little too far. He argues, from what Cicero says at the end of the next chapter, that the authority of the praetor over the quaestor was supreme. It does not follow, that if Verres could prevent Caecilius from doing wrong, he could prevent him from doing right: if he could prevent him from paying money when he ought not, or from mis-applying it, it does not follow that he could prevent him from paying it when he ought, or from applying it properly. Again, in the matter of the Mancipes at the end of this chapter, Cicero says that Caecilius could have prevented the fraud. Whether this is true or not, it makes Cicero consistent.

non est. Grave est hoc crimen in Verrem; grave me agente; te accusante nullum. Eras enim tu quaestor; pecuniam publicam tu tractabas; ex qua, etiamsi cuperet praetor, tamen ne qua deductio fieret magna ex parte tua potestas erat. Hujus quoque igitur criminis te accusante mentio nulla fiet. Silebitur toto judicio de maximis et notissimis illius furtis et injuriis. Mihi crede, Caecili, non potest in accusando socios vere defendere is qui cum reo criminum societate conjunctus est. Mancipes a civitatibus pro frumento pecuniam exegerunt. Quid hoc Verre praetore factum est solum? Non; sed etiam quaestore Caecilio. Quid igitur daturus es huic crimini quod et potuisti prohibere ne fieret, et debuisti? an totum id relinques? Ergo id omnino Verres in judicio suo non audiet, quod quum faciebat quemadmodum defensurus esset non reperiebat.

XI. Atque ego haec quae in medio posita sunt commemoro. Sunt alia magis occulta furta, quae ille ut istius, credo, animos atque impetus retardaret cum quaestore suo benignissime communicavit. Haec tu scis ad me esse delata, quae si velim proferre, facile omnes intelligent vobis inter vos non modo voluntatem fuisse conjunctam, sed ne praedam quidem adhuc esse divisam. Quapropter si tibi indicium postulas dari quod tecum una fecerit, con-

Mancipes] Here they are the farmers (fermiers généraux), who paid a sum of money to the state for the right of levying certain imposts. 'Manceps' means generally a person who purchases any thing from the state, or agrees to pay a certain sum by way of farm or the like (Festus v. Manceps; and Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 54). These Sicilian Mancipes paid a certain sum for the right of collecting certain imposts in kind, but not to take money instead (Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 74). "Praesertim quum ex iisdem agris ejusdem anni frumentum ex decumis Romam mancipes advexissent." See Cicero, Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 26, ed. Wunder.

Quid igitur daturus es] The omission of the ? after 'Quid' in 'Quid hoc,' and its omission here after 'igitur,' will probably cause a difficulty to some readers; but when they are accustomed to it they will find it clear enough. See Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 55. note.

11. in medio posita] here means 'that which is plain,' as appears from the words which follow. The various senses of 'in medio' are collected in Forcellini.

magis occulta] The note of Asconius is not a bad one: 'inepte a quibusdam quaeritur quae sint: nulla enim sunt.' It is said oratorically, that is, falsely. 'Ille,' si velim—intelligent] No various reading is given, but the general usage of the language requires 'intelligent' in such cases; but I am not, for that reason, convinced that 'intelligent' is wrong. There are many similar examples, if the MSS. may be trusted; for in such a matter their authority is not great. See Heindorf's note on Horace, 1 Sat. i. 15: "Si quis deus, En ego, dicat," &c.

&c., is Verres, at present the more remote person. 'Istius' is the man whom you have before you.

non modo—sed ne quidem] This is not a case in which 'non modo' is equivalent to 'non modo non,' if it ever is. This means: 'all will see that between you two there was not, in a manner (that is, I will not say there was, merely), a union of will, but that even the booty is not yet divided: you have still accounts between you to settle.' But this use of 'non modo' requires a particular investigation.

indicium] 'Index' is an informer, a witness, and one who was privy to the act of which he is a witness, as Asconius explains it; but Caecilius could not be an 'index,' as Cicero says; at least he adds, he will accept him, if the law (lex) permits it. "Vettius reus quum esset damnatus erat indicium postulaturus." Ad Att. ii. 24.

cedo, si id lege permittitur; sin autem de accusatione dicimus, concedas oportet iis qui nullo suo peccato impediuntur quo minus alterius peccata demonstrare possint. Ac vide quantum interfuturum sit inter meam et tuam accusationem. Ego etiam quae tu sine Verre commisisti Verri crimini daturus sum quod te non prohibuerit, quum summam ipse haberet potestatem: tu contra ne quae ille quidem fecit objicies, ne qua ex parte conjunctus cum eo reperiare. Quid illa, Caecili, contemnendane tibi videntur esse sine quibus causa sustineri, praesertim tanta, nullo modo potest? aliqua facultas agendi? aliqua dicendi consuetudo? aliqua in foro, judiciis, legibus, aut ratio aut exercitatio? Intellego quam scopuloso difficilique in loco verser. Nam quum omnis arrogantia odiosa est, tum illa ingenii atque eloquentiae multo molestissima. Quamobrem nihil dico de meo ingenio; neque est quod possim dicere; neque, si esset, dicerem. Aut enim id mihi satis est quod est de me opinionis, quidquid est; aut si id parum est, ego majus id commemorando facere non possum.

XII. De te, Caecili, jam mehercule hoc extra hanc contentionem certamenque nostrum familiariter tecum loquar. Tu ipse quemadmodum existimes vide etiam atque etiam; et tu te collige, et quis et quid facere possis considera. Putasne te posse de maximis acerbissimisque rebus, quum causam sociorum fortunasque provinciae, jus populi Romani, gravitatem judicii legumque susceperis, tot res, tam graves, tam varias, voce, memoria, consilio, ingenio, sustinere? Putasne te posse quae C. Verres in quaestura, quae in legatione, quae in praetura, quae Romae, quae in Italia, quae in Achaia, Asia, Pamphyliaque peccarit, ea quemadmodum locis temporibusque divisa sint, sic criminibus et oratione distinguere? Putasne posse id quod in ejusmodi reo maxime necessarium est facere, ut quae ille libidinose, quae nefarie, quae crudeliter fecerit, ea aeque concedas oportet] 'Oportet' is thus used with the subjunctive, as well as with the infinitive. Generally without 'ut' when with the subjunctive. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 83.

Quid illa, &c.] The usual absurd pointing is 'Quid? illa,' &c. The reader may pause after 'Quid,' if he likes; but the interrogation is 'Quid illa,' and it is resumed by 'contemnendane.'

scopuloso—loco] A reading 'scrupuloso' is cited by Zumpt from one MS. I think that it is the true reading. 'Scopulosus' and 'scrupulosus' seem to have been occasionally confounded in the MSS. Ausonius has the expression 'scrupulosus locus;' and Festus (v. Scrupi) says: 'scrupulosam rem dicimus quae aliquid habet in se asperi,' 'rough, as a place with gravel.'

Cicero (De Or. iii. 19) speaks of 'mare scopulosum;' but a 'locus scopulosus' is not so easy to understand.

12. quemadmodum—sic] These are two of the terms of a comparison which Cicero often uses, and he places 'quemadmodum' first, I believe; and this is its place, for it occupies the position that the relative clause often does with respect to the corresponding clause which follows.

Pamphyliaque peccarit,] 'Patrarit,' Orelli. But 'peccarit' has the authority of the MSS.; and 'patrarit' is not used thus by Cicero (Zumpt).

acerba et indigna videantur esse iis qui audient atque illis visa sunt qui senserunt? Magna sunt ea quae dico, mihi crede; noli haec contemnere. Dicenda, demonstranda, explicanda sunt omnia: causa non solum exponenda, sed etiam graviter copioseque agenda est: perficiendum est, si quid agere aut perficere vis, ut homines te non solum audiant, verum etiam libenter studioseque audiant. In quo si te multum natura adjuvaret, si optimis a pueritia disciplinis atque artibus studuisses et in his elaborasses, si litteras Graecas Athenis non Lilybaei, Latinas Romae non in Sicilia didicisses, tamen esset magnum, tantam causam, tam expectatam, et diligentia consequi, et memoria complecti, et oratione exponere, et voce et viribus sustinere. Fortasse dices, Quid ergo haec in te sunt omnia? Utinam quidem essent: verumtamen ut esse possent magno studio mihi a pueritia est elaboratum. Quod si ego haec propter magnitudinem rerum ac difficultatem assequi non potui, qui in omni vita nihil aliud egi; quam longe tu te ab his rebus abesse arbitrare, quas non modo antea nunquam cogitasti, sed ne nunc quidem quum in eas ingrederis quae et quantae sint suspicari potes?

XIII. Ego qui, sicut omnes sciunt, in foro judiciisque ita verser ut ejusdem aetatis aut nemo aut pauci plures causas defenderint; et qui omne tempus quod mihi ab amicorum negotiis datur in his studiis laboribusque consumam, quo paratior ad usum forensem promptiorque esse possim; tamen, ita deos mihi velim propitios ut quum illius temporis mihi venit in mentem quo die citato reo mihi demonstranda,] "Every thing must be mentioned, precisely stated, fully unfolded." 'Demonstrare' does not correspond to the English word to 'demonstrate.' See c. 14; and Act. i. c. 8: "demonstrat qua iste oratione usus esset."

perficere vis,] This is Orelli's reading. Zumpt and Klotz have 'proficere.' This and like words have been frequently confounded, owing to the MS. abbreviations for 'pro,' 'per,' 'prae,' being nearly the same. See the Index Siglarum in Goeschen's Gaius. It must be left to the taste of the reader to choose which he will have in this passage.

litteras Graecas, &c.] Cicero exults over his poor opponent, whose Greek and Latin were equally bad. His Greek was the dialect of Lilybaeum, not the pure language of Athens; and his Latin was picked up in Sicily, not learned in Rome. Plautus (Persa, iii. 1. 66) has a sneer on the Greek dialect of Sicily.—'exponere:' 'expromere,' Zumpt.

13. Ego qui . . . verser . . . consumam,] There is a reading 'versor,' but Zumpt gives no various reading 'consumo.' It is not very easy to explain the use of the subjunctive here, and reconcile it with the indicative 'qui nihil aliud egi,' which occurs at the end of the preceding chapter. But the two cases are different; and I observe, by way of suggestion, that the use of the indicative or subjunctive seems to depend, in such cases, in some degree on the position which the 'qui' has in the sentence. But the use of the 'qui' in these orations is matter for a special discussion.

ita deos mihi velim, &c.] This is a usual form of solemn asseveration: 'so may the gods help me, as what I say is true.' But in this formula the 'ut' may be omitted, 'ita me dii bene ament, non nihil timeo.' Ter. Eun. 4, 1, 1.—'ita mihi d.,' Zumpt.

quum illius temporis mihi venit, &c.] There are other examples of 'mihi venit in mentem' with a genitive, which is probably an elliptical expression, the nominative, on which the genitive should depend, being omitted. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 18, 'non dubito quin . . tuorum tibi scelerum veniat in dicendum sit, non solum commoveor animo, sed etiam toto corpore perhorresco. Jam nunc mente et cogitatione prospicio quae tum studia hominum, qui concursus futuri sint; quantam expectationem magnitudo judicii sit allatura; quantam auditorum multitudinem C. Verris infamia concitatura; quantam denique audientiam orationi meae improbitas illius factura sit. Quae quum cogito, jam nunc timeo quidnam pro offensione hominum, qui illi inimici infensique sunt, et expectatione omnium et magnitudine rerum dignum eloqui possim. Tu horum nihil metuis, nihil cogitas, nihil laboras? et si quid ex vetere aliqua oratione, JOVEM EGO OPTIMUM MAXIMUM, aut, VELLEM, SI FIERI POTUISSET, JUDICES, aut aliquid ejusmodi ediscere potueris, praeclare te paratum in judicium venturum arbitraris? Ac si tibi nemo responsurus esset, tamen ipsam causam, ut ego arbitror, demonstrare non posses. Nunc ne illud quidem cogitas, tibi cum homine disertissimo et ad dicendum para-mentem.' It is also a form of expression that Terence uses; and Cicero, as we all know, was a great reader of Terence.

citare reum] 'Citare' is the word used to signify a person being called upon to appear in court by a 'praeco,' after he has been summoned in due form, as by the praetor's 'edictum,' for instance. Klotz refers to Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 38, 40.

non solum commoveor animo, sed etiam] 'Sed etiam' stands in this position with respect to 'solus' not only when it is used as an adverb, but also when it is used as an adjective; 'nec mihi soli versatur ante oculos—sed etiam posteris,' &c. (De Am. c. 27). 'Verum' is also used after 'non solum,' as 'sed' is. As 'solus' means 'single,' 'whole,' 'entire,' it is used with 'non' in those forms in which the writer intends not only to affirm something, but to add that this is not all; there is still something more. 'Non solum' is properly enough rendered 'not solely,' 'singly,' or 'not only;' but it leads to great confusion when 'non modo' is also translated 'not only,' though it is sometimes used like 'non solum;' 'non modo praesentia verum etiam futura bella delevit' (De Am. c. 3).

Cicero's admission of the feeling that he had when a case was called on, is evidence of his sincere devotion to his profession of an orator, and his consciousness of the duty that he undertook. Such feelings are, with very few exceptions, shared by all men of real merit, especially at the commencement of their career as an advocate or public speaker. Those who begin any arduous duties with perfect self-confidence and no misgivings of themselves, are not the men who ultimately obtain the highest and best deserved distinctions. Klotz refers to the following passages in which Cicero speaks of himself to the same effect as in this passage: De Orat. i. 26; Pro Cluentio, c. 18; Pro Rege Deiotaro, c. 1; Pro Sex. Roscio Amerino, c. 4.

factura sit.] Orelli, Zumpt, &c., have simply 'factura.' Klotz observes, 'factura, errore opinor typographi inde a D. Lambino propagato.'

quae quum cogito, jam nunc timeo] This is a good example of 'quum' being used with the indicative, when the object is to denote an event contemporaneous with another connected circumstance, which is also expressed by the present tense.

'Quidnam' is one of the forms of 'qui' to which 'nam' is added, and it appears to give emphasis to the expression, whether it is used interrogatively or not, as in this instance. The words 'ubinam,' 'utinam,' are other examples of the addition of 'nam' to the forms of 'qui;' for such 'ubi' and 'uti' are. The meaning of this passage is: "as soon as I think of all this, I begin to fear that I shall hardly be able to utter any thing commensurate with (pro)," &c.

ex vetere aliqua, &c.] Cicero supposes his adversary so barren in invention as to be compelled to resort to some trite form of commencing his address, which might be well enough as it was originally used, but is ridiculous when it is a mere imitation.

nunc ne illud quidem cogitas,] When a proposition is going to be laid down, it is Cicero's fashion to introduce it in this manner tissimo futurum esse certamen, quicum modo disserendum, modo omni ratione pugnandum certandumque sit? Cujus ego ingenium ita laudo ut non pertimescam, ita probo ut me ab eo delectari facilius quam decipi putem posse.

XIV. Nunquam ille me opprimet consilio; nunquam ullo artificio pervertet; nunquam ingenio me suo labefactare atque infirmare conabitur. Novi omnes hominis petitiones rationesque dicendi: saepe in iisdem, saepe in contrariis causis versati sumus. Ita contra me ille dicet, quamvis sit ingeniosus, ut nonnullum etiam de suo ingenio iudicium fieri arbitretur. Te vero, Caecili, quemadmodum sit elusus, quam omni ratione jactaturus, videre jam videor: quoties ille tibi potestatem optionemque facturus sit ut eligas utrum velis, factum esse necne, verum esse an falsum; utrum dixeris, id contra te futurum. Qui tibi aestus, qui error, quae tenebrae, dii immortales! erunt, homini minime malo? Quid quum accusationis tuae membra dividere coeperit, et in digitis suis singulas partes causae constituere? Quid quum unumquodque transigere, expedire, absolvere? Ipse profecto metuere incipies ne innocenti periculum faceris. Quid quum commiserari, conqueri, et ex illius invidia deonerare aliquid et in te trajicere coeperit? commemorare quaestoris cum praetore necessitudinem constitutam, morem majorum, sortis religionem? Poterisne ejus orationis subire by the word 'illud.' Examples are abundant.

14. accusationis tuae membra dividere] Klotz refers to the following passages in which the skill of Hortensius in anatomizing a cause is mentioned: Quintil. Inst. Or. iv. 5; Cicero's Hortensius, quoted by Nonius, p. 364; and Brutus, c. 88, "duas quidem res (adtulerat Q. Hortensius) quas nemo alius: partitiones, quibus de rebus dicturus esset, et collectiones, memor et quae essent dicta contra quaeque ipse dixisset."

transigere, expedire, absolvere?] The best service that a commentator can render is to explain, when he can, such words as these, in which lies the great difficulty of the Latin language. Asconius has attempted it, and perhaps he has come near to the sense of the passage. "What, when he shall begin with each several head (of your charge), summarily settling one, explaining away another, clearing away a third." 'Transigere' in this passage seems to mean to 'settle or dispose of' promptly, at once, by directly denying or admitting, or in some way; as in Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 16, 'quod verbo transigere possum.' The Latin language has a mode of dealing with generalities which the English has not. It reaches the understanding, but it refuses all expression in another tongue, at least in ours.

quaestoris cum praetore] Cicero uses a climax, as it is called: "the intimate relationship that has been established between a 'quaestor' and his 'praetor,' the usage of our ancestors, the sanctity of the lot." The intimate relationship is first mentioned as a well-known thing; then ancient usage, which gave it strength; and, finally, the sanctity of the lot, for that which in form was submitted to the decision of chance was, in effect, the will of the gods. Comp. c. 20, 'quicum me sors . . . quicum me deorum iudicium . . . conjunxerat.' As to the 'quaestor' being chosen by lot, see Cicero, Ad Q. Fr. i. 1.—'constitutam more maj.' J. Gronov.

poterisne ejus orationis, &c.] Klotz has altered the passage thus; 'poterisne ejus orationi subire? Invidiam vide, &c.:' and he says that he has been the first to correct this passage in conformity with infallible critical evidence. The grounds of his correction are stated in his preface. The text of Orelli and Zumpt is the same as this. Asconius read 'orationi,' and perhaps omitted 'invidiam.'

invidiam? Vide modo; etiam atque etiam considera. Mihi enim videtur periculum fore ne ille non modo verbis te obruat, sed gestu ipso ac motu corporis praestringat aciem ingenii tui, teque ab institutis tuis cogitationibusque abducat. Atque hujusce rei judicium jam continuo video futurum. Si enim mihi hodie respondere ad haec quae dico potueris, si ab isto libro quem tibi magister ludi nescio qui ex alienis orationibus compositum dedit verbo uno disceseris, posse te et illi quoque judicio non deesse et causae atque officio tuo satisfacere arbitrabor: sin mecum in hac prolusione nihil fueris, quem te in ipsa pugna cum acerrimo adversario fore putemus?

XV. Esto: ipse nihil est, nihil potest. At venit paratus cum subscriptoribus exercitatis et disertis. Est tamen hoc aliquid; tametsi non est satis. Omnibus enim rebus is qui princeps in agendo est ornatissimus et paratissimus esse debet. Verumtamen L. Apuleium esse video proximum subscriptorem, hominem non aetate sed usu forensi atque exercitatione tironem. Deinde, ut opinor, habet Allienum, hunc tamen ab subselliis, qui quid in dicendo posset nunquam satis attendi; in clamando quidem video eum esse bene robustum atque exercitatum. In hoc spes tuae sunt omnes: hic, si tu eris actor constitutus, totum judicium sustinebit. At ne is quidem tantum contendet in dicendo quantum potest, sed consulet praestringat] Probably the true reading may be 'perstringat' (see c. 12); and Forcellini (praestringo, perstringo). The primary notion of 'stringo' (stric) seems to be 'to hold fast or tight'; and the compound, 'perstringo,' is accordingly used to signify the deadening of the active energies of the body or the mind, as through fear, or by the rapid motion of weapons used in assault, which is the metaphor employed by Cicero. Asconius quotes a passage of Plautus, Miles Gloriosus, i. 1, 3:

Praestringat oculorum aciem in acie hostibus."

The metaphor is resumed a little further on, where Cicero speaks of the matter in dispute between him and Caecilius as a 'prolusio,' a mere playing or skirmishing compared with the real battle (pugna) that he would have to fight with Hortensius. Comp. De Or. ii. 80.

15. At venit] "Suppose it to be admitted that Caecilius is nobody. But, it will be urged, he comes prepared with practised and eloquent supporters." 'At' in this, as in most cases, adds something, the effect of which is to diminish or destroy the force of what has been admitted. 'At' occurs again at the beginning of c. 17. The distinction between 'at' and 'sed' will easily be made out by a careful reader of these speeches.

A 'subscriptor' (qui subscribit) is he who joins the first or principal prosecutor, and writes his name at the end of the charge under that of the principal prosecutor. "Gabinium de ambitu reum fecit P. Sulla, subscribente privigno Memmio" (Ad Q. Fr. iii. 3). See 'subscribo,' Forcellini.

ab subselliis] This expression is explained to signify 'a man practised in the courts: 'subsellium,' from 'sella,' means apparently a continuity of seats, a bench, called 'subsellium' with reference to something higher. 'Subsellia,' the seats of the 'judices,' are sometimes opposed to the tribunal of the presiding judge (In Vatin. c. 14). Cicero says that Allienus had no other knowledge of conducting a cause than what he got by sitting on the 'subsellia;' but in this passage it cannot mean the 'subsellia' of the 'judices.' It is used, in its more general sense, for any seats occupied by witnesses and others, as in Pro Q. Rosc. Amer. c. 6, "Quorum alterum sedere in accusatorum subselliis vides." See also De Or. i. 62.

laudi et existimationi tuae, et ex eo quod ipse potest in dicendo aliquantum remittet ut tu tamen aliquid esse videare. Ut in actoribus Graecis fieri videmus, saepe illum qui est secundarum aut tertiarum partium, quum possit aliquanto clarius dicere quam ipse primarum, multum summittere, ut ille princeps quam maxime excellat; sic faciet Allienus; tibi serviet, tibi lenocinabitur; minus aliquanto contendet quam potest. Jam hoc considerate cujusmodi accusatores in tanto judicio simus habituri, quum et ipse Allienus ex ea facultate si quam habet aliquantum detracturus sit, et Caecilius tum denique se aliquid futurum putet, si Allienus minus vehemens fuerit et sibi primas in dicendo partes concesserit. Quartum quem sit habiturus non video, nisi quem forte ex illo grege moratorum qui subscriptionem sibi postularunt cuicunque vos delationem dedissetis. Ex quibus alienissimis hominibus ita paratus venis ut tibi hospes aliquis sit recipiendus. Quibus ego non sum tantum honorem habiturus ut ad ea quae dixerint certo loco aut singulatim unicuique respondeam. Sic breviter, quoniam non consulto sed casu in eorum mentionem incidi, quasi praeteriens satisfaciam universis.

XVI. Tantane vobis inopia videor esse amicorum ut mihi non ex ut in actoribus Graecis] The allusion is to Greek plays and Greek actors; and to the πρωταγωνιστής, δευτεραγωνιστής, and τριταγωνιστής, who took the first, second, and third parts. See Heindorf's note on Horace, 'posset qui ferre secundas' (1 Sat. ix. 46). Cicero explains his own meaning. In the preceding sentence, in place of 'At ne is quidem,' Orelli has 'Ac,' &c. 'At' and 'ac' are frequently confounded.

summittere,] 'Lower the voice,' or, generally, 'put a restraint on their powers.' Comp. De Am. c. 20, 'ut ii qui superiores sunt submittere se debent in amicitia, sic quodam modo inferiores extollere;' a passage which has sometimes been misunderstood. See Seyffert's note on it.—'Lenocinabitur.' Cicero uses an odious word, somewhat difficult to render. A 'leno' is one who gets his living by the prostitution of slaves, or by assisting in illicit cohabitation. Terence in his Phormio has a 'leno.' "Allienus," says Cicero, "will act like one who plays a second part; he will be your slave, your pimp." See Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 12.

et sibi primas] Nearly all MSS. seem to have 'tibi,' which is evidently a mistake.

Quartum] Zumpt, quoted by Klotz, remarks that it was usual to have four 'accusatores;' and we might almost safely make the inference from this passage.—'Moratorum' is an emendation of Cujacius; the MSS. have 'oratorum' or 'meatorum.' The correctness of the emendation is supposed to be confirmed by the context and the words of Asconius, "obturbatores quosdam sordidosque causidicos significat, qui adhibebantur ad moram faciendam dum meliores advocati recrearentur." Manutius thinks that there is no reason to alter 'oratorum.'

alienissimis] Cicero after his fashion is playing on the name of Allienus, (which Zumpt writes Alienus,) and he is speaking sarcastically when he says 'paratus.' The sense of the passage is this: "You come prepared to accept any of these men, who are perfect strangers to you, just as if you had to receive some strange guest into your house." 'Ex quibus' does not depend on 'paratus.' The sense does not admit it, and I doubt if any example of this construction can be found. The apparent difficulty arises from the use of the relative, which means no more here than if we were to say 'ex eo numero.' A man would choose his 'subscriptores' among his friends, but Caecilius must get whom he can, just as if he opened his door to receive the first stranger who presented himself.

his quos mecum adduxerim sed de populo subscriptor addatur? vobis autem tanta inopia reorum est ut mihi causam praeripere conemini potius quam aliquos a columna Maenia vestri ordinis reos reperiatis? Custodem, inquit, Tullio me apponite. Quid mihi quam multis custodibus opus erit, si te semel ad meas capsas admisero, qui non solum ne quid enunties sed etiam ne quid auferas custodiendus sis? Sed de isto custode toto sic vobis brevissime respondebo: non esse hos tales viros commissuros ut ad causam tantam a me susceptam, mihi creditam, quisquam subscriptor me invito adspirare possit. Etenim fides mea custodem repudiat, diligentia speculatorem reformidat. Verum ut ad te, Caecili, redeam, quam multa te deficiant vides; quam multa sint in te quae reus nocens in accusatore suo cupiat esse profecto jam intelligis. Quid ad haec dici potest? non enim quaero quid tu dicturus sis; video mihi non te sed hunc librum esse responsurum quem monitor tuus hic tenet, qui si te recte monere volet, suadebit tibi ut hinc discedas neque mihi verbum ullum respondeas. Quid enim dices? an id quod dictitas injuriam tibi fecisse Verrem? Arbitror: neque enim esset verisimile, quum omnibus Siculis faceret injurias, te illi unum eximium cui consuleret fuisse. Sed ceteri Siculi ultorem suarum injuriarum invenerunt; tu dum tuas injurias per te, id quod non potes, persequi conaris, id agis ut ceterorum quoque injuriae sint impunitae atque inultae: et hoc te praeterit non id solum spectari solere columna Maenia] "Rather than seek for some criminal of your class (slaves and the like) at the column of Maenius." As to Maenius, see Heindorf, Horace, 1 Sat. i. 101. The tradition was that he was a spendthrift, who sold his house on the Forum to the censors Cato the Elder and Flaccus, for the purpose of a basilica being built there, but reserved one column, on the summit of which he might build or place a balcony to secure a view of the gladiatorial games. Compare Asconius and the Scholium of Porphyrio on Horace, 1 Sat. iii. 21. At this column, the 'triumviri capitales,' it is said, used to punish thieves and slaves. (Pro Cluentio, c. 13.) Klotz reads, 'ad columnam Maeniam,' which may be the better reading.

inquit] This word, thus placed without a nominative, means 'they say.'

capsas] These were vessels of cylindrical form, of wood or other material, with a spherical top or covering, used for the keeping of rolls and documents, of which reus nocens] A 'reus' might be 'nocens' or 'innocens,' for 'reus' is merely the accused. He is opposed to 'accusator.' But 'reus' may mean the defendant in a civil action; and, indeed, both parties, plaintiff and defendant, may be called 'rei.' Cic. De Or. ii. 43. If several persons respectively were entitled to enforce an 'obligatio,' or liable to perform it, they were 'rei:' "et stipulandi et promittendi duo pluresve rei fieri possunt." Inst. iii. 16. See Unterholzner, Lehre des Römischen Rechts von Schuldverhältnissen, i. 174. There seems to be no explanation of the word 'reus,' except by referring it to 'res.'

eximium] 'Eximius' means 'selected,' 'excepted,' as the context shows, and its relationship to 'exim-o,' which must be compared with 'adim-o,' 'subim-o,' that is, 'sum-o.'

non id . . . sed etiam illud] See the note on c. 13, as to 'illud.' The proper demonqui debeat, sed etiam illud, qui possit ulcisci; in quo utrumque sit, eum superiorem esse; in quo alterum, in eo non quid is velit sed quid facere possit quaeri solere. Quod si ei potissimum censes permitti oportere accusandi potestatem cui maximam C. Verres injuriam fecerit, utrum tandem censes hos judices gravius ferre oportere te ab illo esse laesum, an provinciam Siciliam esse vexatam ac perditam? Opinor, concedis multo hoc et esse gravius et ab omnibus ferri gravius oportere. Concede igitur ut tibi anteponatur in accusando provincia. Nam provincia accusat, quum is agit causam quem sibi illa defensorem sui juris, ultorem injuriarum, actorem causae totius adoptavit.

XVII. At eam tibi C. Verres fecit injuriam quae ceterorum quoque animos posset alieno incommodo commovere. Minime: nam id quoque ad rem pertinere arbitror, qualis injuria dicatur, quae causa inimicitiarum proferatur. Cognoscite ex me; nam iste eam profecto, nisi plane nihil sapit, nunquam proferet. Agonis est quaedam Lilybaetana, liberta Veneris Erycinae; quae mulier strative opposed to 'ille' is 'hic.' 'Is' and 'ille' are often used in contrast by Cicero, when his object is simply to denote two things in some way opposed or contrasted. See the end of c. 21.

hos judices] Orelli has 'hoc judices.' Klotz says that 'hoc judices' is a typographical error, originating with Ernesti and Beck. 'Opinor, concedes,' &c.: Zumpt.

17. liberta Veneris] This Agonis had been a slave attached to the Temple of Venus at Mount Eryx, in Sicily, one of the class whom the Greeks called ιερόδουλοι; of which Strabo speaks (p. 272, ed. Casaub.). See Polybius (i. 55). Slaves were possessed both by individuals, and by the state, and other bodies, as municipal towns and temples. Klotz refers to Cicero, Pro Cluentio, c. 15, for similar instances. This woman had been manumitted, and had herself become a slave-holder; and, to save her property, she pretended that she and all that she had belonged to the goddess, that is, were dedicated to the service of religion, and so were of the class of sacred things. Strabo's account of the great temple at Comana (ed. Casaub. 535, 536, 558) is instructive. The priest occupied a good piece of land, which was attached to the temple, and he enjoyed the revenue of it. He was next in rank to the king, and generally a member of the royal family. At the time of Strabo's visit this opulent priest had six thousand slaves, men and women, all working for him. The people all about the temple were the subjects of the king, but also owed obedience in sacred matters, we may suppose, to the priest. When Cn. Pompeius made Archelaus priest of Comana, he deprived him of the power of selling the slaves, who thus became 'adscripti glebæ.' There was another place in this happy country, held by another priest, who ranked next to him of Comana, but he had only three thousand slaves. His land was good, and the labour of his people brought him in fifteen talents clear by the year. Both these good places were for life. The Temple of Venus at Corinth possessed above a thousand female slaves, courtezans, whom both men and women dedicated to the goddess; "and it was by reason of them," adds the grave philosopher, with the utmost simplicity (p. 378), "that the city was much frequented and enriched, for the seafaring folks readily eased themselves of their money." We may now understand what the temple at Eryx was, and the 'Venerei,' or slaves of Venus.

In the year 1776, there still existed on the flanks of the Jura an abbey of Bernardines, who held in servitude a large number of peasants. The men were not slaves, but they were serfs of the abbot and his convent, and in a worse condition than real slaves. The number of these serfs attached to religious houses in France was very considerable; some say more than fifty thousand. The revolution broke their chains.

ante hunc quaestorem copiosa plane et locuples fuit. Ab hac praefectus Antonii quidam symphoniacos servos abducebat per injuriam, quibus se in classe uti velle dicebat. Tum illa, ut mos in Sicilia est omnium Venereorum, et eorum qui a Venere se liberaverunt, ut praefecto illi religionem Veneris nomenque objiceret, dixit et se et omnia sua Veneris esse. Ubi hoc quaestori Caecilio viro optimo et homini aequissimo nuntiatum est, vocari ad se Agonidem jubet; judicium dat statim, SI PARET EAM SE ET SUA VENERIS ESSE DIXISSE. Judicant recuperatores id quod necesse erat; neque enim erat cuiquam dubium quin illa dixisset. Iste in possessionem bonorum mulieris mittit; ipsam Veneri in servitutem adjudicat; deinde has 'Agonis quaedam est.' The matter seems a trifle; but Orelli is perhaps right. As to the form, compare Cic. Ad Div. xiii. 30, 'L. Manlius est Sosis;' 'C. Sulpicius Olympus fuit' (Act. ii. Lib. c. 48; but also Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 22).

symphoniacos servos] Asconius states that they were slaves who gave the signal, the 'celeusma,' to the rowers; and also sounded the trumpets in a naval fight. See Pro Milone, c. 21. This Antonius was M. Antonius Creticus, who, in B.C. 75, during his praetorship, had almost unlimited authority over the sea and the coast region. See Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 3, and Lib. 3. c. 81.

si paret eam] As soon as Caecilius was informed of the statement of Agonis, he appointed a judicial inquiry, that is, he named judices (judicium dat) to inquire about the fact, 'si paret,' if it should appear that Agonis had said so. 'Si paret' refers to that part of the formula called the 'intentio,' that is, that part of the formal instructions which the magistrate gave to the 'judices,' in which part the claim of a plaintiff was expressed. But in some cases, as in this of Agonis, the 'judex' was not required to examine whether a certain thing belonged to the plaintiff, or a certain demand was due from the defendant; but he had simply to ascertain a fact, and thereupon to condemn or absolve. In such a case the formula was said to be 'in factum concepta;' and it was in this shape—'Judex esto: si paret A. A. apud N. N. mensam argenteam deposuisse eamque dolo malo Numerii Negidii Aulo Agerio redditam non esse, quanti ea res erit tantam pecuniam N. N. Ao Ao condemnato.' The passages which explain this matter are Gaius, iv. 45—47. Klotz and Zumpt read 'si paret,' which is the legal formula. 'Paret,' being misunderstood by the copyists, was corrupted. The old editions have 'pateret.'

recuperatores] The 'recuperatores' belonged to the 'judices privati.' It is said that 'recuperatores' were originally appointed in cases of dispute between Romans and Peregrini, and were appointed for each occasion as it arose. But this distinction disappeared in course of time, for we read of 'recuperatores' in cases where Roman citizens only were concerned, and of 'judices' in cases where Peregrini only were concerned. After the Lex Aebutia, of uncertain date, the 'judices' generally were called either 'judices' or 'recuperatores;' and as to the 'recuperatores,' properly so called, we collect from various passages that they were appointed in certain particular kinds of cases. In the later period, at least in the time of Gaius, there was generally only one 'judex' appointed, but the 'recuperatores' were always several, sometimes three (Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 12); and thus Gaius (iv. 105) opposes the 'recuperatoria judicia' to those 'sub uno iudice.' Much has been written on the 'recuperatores,' and more than is worth repeating. The reader may consult Puchta, Instit.; and, for various references as to 'recuperatores,' Rein, Das Römische Privatrecht, p. 420; and Klotz, in his notes on Cicero, Pro Caecina, Vol. i. p. 464, who appears to have collected nearly all that can be said. Consistently with the etymology of the word, 'recuperatores,' or 'reciperatores' (recoverers), were employed in cases where a fact, easy to be established, was the only matter in question, or where a very speedy decision was required, as in the 'Interdictum de vi hominibus armatis,' and in the 'Actio Injuriarum' (Gellius, xx. 1). The mode of proceeding before them was the same as before a 'judex.'

bona vendit ; pecuniam redigit. Ita dum pauca mancipia Veneris nomine Agonis ac religione retinere vult, fortunas omnes libertatemque suam istius injuria perdidit. Lilybaeum Verres venit postea ; rem cognoscit ; factum improbat ; cogit quaestorem suum pecuniam quam ex Agonidis bonis redeget, eam mulieri omnem adnumerare et reddere. Est adhuc, id quod vos omnes admirari video, non Verres sed Q. Mucius. Quid enim facere potuit elegantius ad hominum existimationem, aequius ad levandam mulieris calamitatem, vehementius ad quaestoris libidinem coercendam ? Summe haec omnia mihi videntur esse laudanda. Sed [repente] e vestigio ex homine tamquam aliquo Circae poculo factus est Verres. Redit ad se atque ad mores suos. Nam ex illa pecunia magnam partem ad se vertit ; mulieri reddidit quantum visum est.

XVIII. Hic tu si laesum te a Verre esse dicis, patiar et concedam : si injuriam tibi factam quereris, defendam et negabo. Deinde de injuria quae tibi facta sit neminem nostrum graviorem judicem esse oportet quam te ipsum cui facta dicitur. Si tu cum illo postea in gratiam redisti, si domi illius aliquoties fuisti, si ille apud te postea coenavit, utrum te perfidiosum an praevaricatorem pecuniam redigit] This term is applied to getting in money, as when a man got in all his debts, and to converting property into money by sale (Livy, v. c. 16 ; Hor. Epod. 2. 69). Caecilius proceeded harshly against Agonis, in taking her at her word, and adjudicating her to Venus. As to her property, it does not appear that Caecilius had appropriated it to himself, for Cicero says 'redigit;' and if he had said all that he ought to have said, perhaps he ought to have added 'in publicum.' However, 'redigo,' in itself, does not imply misappropriation. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 36. Orelli cites no authority for the reading 'in possessionem . . mittit,' which is, however, probably the true reading. Zumpt and Klotz have 'intrat,' for which Zumpt cites two MSS.

Q. Mucius] This is Q. Mucius Scaevola, Pontifex Maximus, one of the most illustrious among the great names of Rome. As proconsul of Asia, he left behind him an eternal remembrance of his wise and equitable administration. 'Verres,' says Cicero, 'all at once became a Q. Mucius.' There is another allusion to Q. Mucius, Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 13 ; and also c. 10, 21.

'Elegantius' means more fit, or better adapted, to satisfy men's opinion.

e vestigio] 'On the track, immediately.' Servius Sulpicius uses the same expression in a letter to Cicero (Ad Fam. iv. 12) : 'e vestigio eo sum profectus.' The word 'repente' looks like the gloss of 'e vestigio,' as Manutius and others have suggested.

Circae poculo] The name of 'Verres,' which signifies a 'boar pig,' furnished Cicero with the opportunity of making this allusion to the story of Circe, whose magic drink changed men into hogs (Od. x. 137).

ad se vertit] Zumpt reads 'partem avertit,' which may be right. Orelli and Klotz have 'ad se vertit;' but in Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 4, in a like case, 'avertisse.' Lambinus suspects that the true reading is 'averrit.' He would make Cicero guilty of another insipid joke.

18. laesum] 'Injuria semper injusta est : laedi etiam aliquis juste potest, nam et qui jure damnantur, laeduntur,' says Asconius ; that is, 'laedo' implies no legal wrong.—'Graviorem vindicem,' Orelli, instead of 'graviorem judicem.' It is easy to see that 'vindicem' (uindicem), and 'judicem' (iudicem), may easily be confounded in the MSS.—'Hic . . dices,' Orelli.

perfidiosum, &c.] Either 'treacherous,' or a 'praevaricator;' that is, one who wished to undertake the prosecution of Verres only for the purpose of securing his acquittal. Cicero (Or. Part. c. 36) gives a definition of 'praevaricator;' and Marcianus (Dig. 48. 16. 1) says 'praevaricatorem eum esse osten-existimari mavis? Video esse necesse alterutrum: sed ego tecum in eo non pugnabo quo minus utrum velis eligas. Quod si ne injuriae quidem quae tibi ab illo facta sit causa remanet, quid habes quod possis dicere quamobrem non modo mihi sed cuiquam antepondere? nisi forte illud quod dicturum te esse audio, quaestorem illius fuisse. Quae causa gravis esset, si certares mecum uter nostrum illi amicior esse deberet; in contentione suscipiendarum inimicitiarum ridiculum est putare causam necessitudinis ad inferendum periculum justam videri oportere. Etenim si plurimas a tuo praetore injurias accepisses, tamen eas ferendo majorem laudem quam ulciscendo mererere: quum vero nullum illius in vita rectius factum sit quam id quod tu injuriam appellas, hi statuent hanc causam, quam ne in alio quidem probarent, in te justam ad necessitudinem violandam videri? qui si summam injuriam ab illo accepisti, tamen, quoniam quaestor ejus fuisti, non potes eum sine ulla vituperatione accusare; si vero non ulla tibi facta est injuria, sine scelere eum accusare non potes. Quare quum incertum sit de injuria, quemquam esse horum putas qui non malit te sine vituperatione quam cum scelere discedere?

XIX. Ac vide quid differat inter meam opinionem ac tuam. Tu quum omnibus rebus inferior sis, hac una in re te mihi anteferri putas oportere, quod quaestor illius fueris: ego, si superior ceteris rebus esses, hanc unam ob causam te accusatorem repudiari putarem oportere. Sic enim a majoribus nostris accepimus, praetorem quaestori suo parentis loco esse oportere; nullam neque justiore neque graviores causam necessitudinis posse reperiri quam condimus qui colludit cum reo,' &c. 'Praevaricor' is properly said of one who goes shuffling along, and not in a straight line; who is 'varus'; 'which,' says Heindorf (Hor. 1 Sat. iii. 47), 'expresses a divergence like the letter V; for he is 'varus,' as Celsus says, whose foot 'intus inclinatur.'

Quod si ne, &c.] 'Quid? si ne &c., remanet? quid habes' &c. Orelli.

causam necessitudinis] 'It is ridiculous to suppose that the ground or reason of your close intimacy, as praetor and quaestor, is a sufficient (justam) ground for your bringing him into peril.' 'Justus,' though formed from 'jus,' has a wide meaning, and signifies any thing that is complete or sufficient in its kind. Thus: 'In amicitia parum justus' (De Am. c. 20), 'one who does not fulfil all the conditions of a perfect friend.' Compare what follows in this chapter: 'justam ad necessitudinem

discedere?] This word is often used to express the getting out of an affair, coming off, as we say, in a certain way, and generally badly. Cicero has just said that a quaestor could not avoid some blame in prosecuting his praetor, even if he had sustained the greatest wrongs from him: if he had received none, to prosecute him was a crime. He concludes thus: "Do you think that there is any of these judges who would not rather that you should come off in this contest with me without any blame at all, by being rejected as the prosecutor, than with the criminality which you would bear if you are appointed the prosecutor?" Cicero says of M. Antonius, after he had been addressing the people, 'turpissime . . discessit' (Ad Div. xii. 3). Comp. c. 22, 'ut turpissime . . discedat.'

junctionem sortis, quam provinciae, quam officii, quam publici muneris societatem. Quamobrem si jure eum posses accusare, tamen, quum is tibi parentis numero fuisset, id pie facere non posses: quum vero neque injuriam acceperis et praetori tuo periculum crees, fatearis necesse est te illi injustum impiumque bellum inferre conari. Etenim ista quaestura ad eam rem valet ut elaborandum tibi in ratione reddenda sit quamobrem eum quaestor cui fueris accuses; non ut ob eam ipsam causam postulandum sit ut tibi potissimum accusatio detur. Neque fere unquam venit in contentionem de accusando qui quaestor fuisset quin repudiaretur. Itaque neque L. Philoni in C. Servilium nominis deferendi potestas est data, neque M. Aurelio Scauro in L. Flaccum, neque Cn. Pompeio in T. Albucium; quorum nemo propter indignitatem repudiatus est, sed ne libido violandae necessitudinis auctoritate judicum comprobaretur. Atque ille Cn. Pompeius ita cum C. Julio contendit ut tu mecum. Quaestor enim Albucii fuerat, ut tu Verris. Julius hoc secum auctoritatis ad accusandum afferebat, quod ut hoc tempore nos ab Siculis, sic tum ille ab Sardis rogatus ad causam accesserat. Semper haec causa plurimum valuit, semper haec ratio accusandi fuit honestissima, pro sociis, pro salute provinciae, pro exterarum nationum commodis inimicitias suscipere, ad periculum accedere, operam, studium, laborem interponere.

XX. Etenim si probabilis est eorum causa qui injurias suas 19. conjunctionem sortis,] Cicero, Ad Q. Fr. 1, 1, c. 3, 'quaestorem habes non tuo judicio delectum sed eum quem sors dedit.' Compare Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 13.

publici] Klotz and Zumpt have 'publici.' 'Publicam:' Orelli.

pie] 'As he had been to you in the place of a father, you could not do it consistently with filial duty (pie).' Cicero says (Orat. Part. 22): 'justitia erga deos religio, erga parentes pietas nominatur.' Justitia is the performance of a man's duty. 'Numero' is often used thus, in a sense like 'locus.'

injustum impiumque bellum] Klotz refers to Hotmann's note, who remarks that the allusion is to the Roman law of war, according to which no war was 'justum et pium' unless declared according to the Jus Feciale, with certain solemnities. Caecilius is represented as a quaestor declaring an 'injustum et impium bellum' against his praetor.

eum quaestor cui] 'For that quaestorship of yours is a sufficient reason so far as this, that you will have to use all diligence in showing on what ground you bring a charge against a man whose quaestor you have been; it is not a sufficient reason why you should demand the prosecution to be entrusted to you of all others.'—My object in making these attempts at translation, is to show the difficulty of it, rather than to offer a model. The difficulty lies in such forms as 'ad eam rem valet,' which have a meaning most comprehensive, and yet exact. I believe that our language is often totally inadequate to render Roman expressions; and it is losing daily, instead of gaining, in comprehensiveness and precision. Klotz and Zumpt have 'quamobrem, qui quaestor ejus fueris.'

Cn. Pompeio] This Cn. Pompeius is the father of Magnus. Pompeius had been the quaestor of T. Albucius in Sardinia, and he was not allowed to be his prosecutor. The prosecutor who was preferred to Pompeius was C. Julius Caesar Strabo (B.C. 103).

20. probabilis] Cicero (De Invent. c. 29) says: "probabile est id quod fere solet fieri, aut quod in opinione positum est, aut quod habet in se ad haec quandam similipersequi volunt, qua in re dolori suo non rei publicae commodis serviunt; quanto illa causa honestior quae non solum probabilis videri sed etiam grata esse debet, nulla privatim accepta injuria, sociorum atque amicorum populi Romani dolore atque injuriis commoveri? Nuper quum in P. Gabinium vir fortissimus et innocentissimus L. Piso delationem nominis postularet, et contra Q. Caecilius peteret isque se veteres inimicitias jam diu susceptas persequi diceret, quum auctoritas et dignitas Pisonis valebat plurimum, tum illa erat causa justissima, quod eum sibi Achaei patronum adoptarant. Etenim quum lex ipsa de pecuniis repetundis sociorum atque amicorum populi Romani patrona sit, iniquum est non eum legis judiciiue actorem idoneum maxime putari quem actorem causae suae socii defensoremque fortunarum suarum potissimum esse voluerunt. An quod ad commemorandum est honestius, id ad probandum non multo videri debet aequius? Utra igitur est splendidior, utra illustrior commemoratio? Accusavi eum cui quaestor fueram, quicum me sors consuetudoque majorum, quicum me deorum hominumque judicium conjunxerat? an, Accusavi rogatu sociorum atque amicorum; delectus sum ab universa provincia qui ejus jura fortunasque defenderem? Dubitare quisquam potest quin honestius sit eorum causa apud quos quaestor fueris quam eum cujus quaestor fueris accusare? Clarissimi viri nostrae civitatis temporibus optimis hoc sibi amplissimum pulcherrimumque ducebant, ab hospitibus clientibusque suis, ab exteris nationibus, quae in amicitiam populi Romani ditionemque essent, injurias propulsare eorumque fortunas defendere. M. Catonem illum Sapientem, clatudinem, sive id falsum est sive verum." When Livy (40. c. 29) speaks of a 'probabile mendacium,' he means a lie that has the semblance of truth. When it refers to opinion, it is that which opinion gives its approval to. Klotz and Zumpt have 'quanto illa honestior causa est.'

P. Gabinium] P. Gabinius Capito had been praetor in Achaëa. He was prosecuted for Repetundae B.C. 88, and condemned. This Piso is mentioned in Lib. i. c. 46.

patrona] The feminine form of 'patronus.' A woman might be the 'patrona' of a 'libertus' in the same sense in which a man might be 'patronus.' Cicero calls the Lex de Repetundis by a kind of personification the 'patrona of the socii,' and he argues that it would be unfair not to allow the 'socii' to choose their agent to maintain the cause of their 'patrona,' the Lex de Repetundis. As to the reading, see Zumpt.

jura fortunasque] 'Rights and interests,' as we might say. 'Jus,' besides its sense of 'law' generally, has the sense of 'a right,' or 'legal faculty.' The plural number, 'jura,' is used also to signify rules of law generally, even legal provisions contained within a 'lex.' And it also means 'rights' generally, as 'jus' means a particular right. 'Fortunas' is often used by the Latin writers in the plural number, but in a sense different from the singular, 'fortuna,' which very seldom means 'goods' or 'property,' though 'fortuna' does. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 1, 44, 'bona fortunasque.' Horace (1 Ep. 5) says: 'Quo mihi fortunam, si non conceditur uti?' See Bentley's note.

in amicitiam . . essent] The readings 'issent' and 'venissent' have been proposed. No variation of the MSS. is noted in any edition that I have seen.

M. Catonem illum Sapientem] M. Porcius Cato, the censor, of whom he says in the De Amicitia, c. 2, "propterea quasi rissimum virum et prudentissimum, cum multis graves inimicitias gessisse accepimus propter Hispanorum apud quos consul fuerat injurias. Nuper Cn. Domitium scimus M. Silano diem dixisse propter unius hominis Aegritomari paterni amici atque hospitis injurias.

XXI. Neque enim magis animos hominum nocentium res unquam ulla commovit quam haec majorum consuetudo longo intervallo repetita ac relata, sociorum querimoniae delatae ad hominem non inertissimum, susceptae ab eo qui videbatur eorum fortunas fide diligentiaque sua posse defendere. Hoc timent homines; hoc laborant; hoc institui atque adeo institutum referri ac renovari moleste ferunt: putant fore uti, si paulatim haec consuetudo serpere ac prodire coeperit, per homines honestissimos virosque fortissimos, non imperitos adolescentulos aut illiusmodi quadruplatores, leges judiciumque administrentur. Cujus consuetudinis atque instituti patres majoresque nostros non poenitebat tum quum P. Lentulus, is qui princeps senatus fuit, accusabat M' Aquillium, subscriptore C. Rutilio Rufo; aut cum P. Africanus, homo virtute, fortuna, cognomen jam habebat in senectute sapientis." Asconius says that Cato prosecuted Ser. Galba and P. Furius for maladministration among the Lusitani.

M. Silano] This is the true reading, not D. which the MSS. have. Compare Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 47. M. Junius Silanus was consul B.C. 109, and therefore the trial must have taken place a long time before the trial of Verres. But 'nuper' appears to be said by comparison with the remoter instance of Cato.—'Diem dicere' is the ordinary expression to signify the commencement of a criminal prosecution against a man, to appoint a day for his appearance in court. It seems to be equivalent to 'in judicium vocare,' c. 21.

21. adeo institutum] 'They are troubled at the establishment of a fashion, and more than this (adeo), that an established fashion should be revived.' 'Instituo' is a word of grounding and fixing, applied to education, for instance (bene institui), the establishment of a practice: altogether a different word in its use from 'constituo.' 'Adeo,' that is, 'ad eo,' is often a word of emphasis, of which numerous examples occur in these orations.

serpere] Said of an unperceived progress rather than of a slow progress. See Seyffert's note on De Am. c. 12: 'serpit deinde res.' Compare Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 76: 'ita serpit illud insitum natura malum:' and Lib. 2. c. 22.

non imperitos adoloscentulos] Plutarch

(Life of Lucullus, c. 1): "Lucullus, while he was still a youth, before he was a candidate for a magistracy and engaged in public life, made it his first business to bring to trial his father's accuser, Servilius the Augur, as a public offender; and the matter appeared to the Romans to be creditable to Lucullus, and they used to speak of that trial as a memorable thing. It was indeed the popular notion, that to prefer an accusation was a reputable measure, even when there was no foundation for it, and they were glad to see the young men fastening on old offenders, like well-bred whelps laying hold of wild beasts."

tum quum] These words are used emphatically to denote a coincidence of events, and 'quum' in such case has the indicative. "Expertus igitur es istius perfidiam tum quum se ad inimicos tuos contulit." Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 30.

P. Lentulus] M' Aquillius, the consul of the year B.C. 129, was prosecuted for Reptundae, on his return from Asia after the defeat of Aristonicus. He was acquitted, by bribing the 'judices,' it is said (Appian, Bell. Civ. i. 22). This P. Lentulus was the grandfather of Lentulus Sura, who was strangled in prison in Cicero's consulship, B.C. 63. Asconius says that he was the father, but he is mistaken.

P. Africanus,] Africanus, the younger, prosecuted L. Cotta in B.C. 131, at least not earlier (for Scipio triumphed over the Nu-gloria, rebus gestis amplissimus, posteaquam bis consul et censor fuerat, L. Cottam in iudicium vocabat. Jure tum florebat populi Romani nomen; jure auctoritas hujus imperii civitatisque majestas gravis habebatur. Nemo mirabatur in Africano illo, quod in me nunc homine parvis opibus ac facultatibus praedito simulant sese mirari, quum moleste ferant. Quid sibi iste vult? accusatoremne se existimari qui antea defendere consueverat? nunc praesertim ea jam aetate quum aedilitatem petat? Ego vero aetatis non modo meae sed multo etiam superioris et honoris amplissimi puto esse, et accusare improbos et miseros calamitososque defendere. Et profecto aut hoc remedium est aegrotae ac prope desperatae rei publicae, judiciisque corruptis ac contaminatis paucorum vitio ac turpitudine, homines ad legum defensionem judiciorumque auctoritatem quam honestissimos et integerrimos diligentissimosque accedere; aut, si ne hoc quidem prodesse poterit, profecto nulla unquam medicina his tot incommodis reperietur. Nulla salus rei publicae major est quam eos qui alterum accusant non minus de laude, de honore, de fama sua, quam illos qui accusantur de capite ac fortunis suis pertimescere. Itaque semper ii diligentissime laboriosissimeque accusarunt, qui seipsos in discrimen existimationis venire arbitrati sunt.

mantini B.C. 132). This L. Aurelius Cotta also escaped, and by the same means as M' Aquillius (Appian, Bell. Civ. i. 22). Cicero (Pro Murena, c. 28) attributes his acquittal to the unwillingness of the 'judices' to allow a man to be destroyed by so terrible an opponent as Scipio; a kind of feeling of pity at the disproportion between the power of the accuser and the weakness of the accused. L. Cotta, the son, who was consul B.C. 119, is supposed to be the Cotta who is meant, and not the father of the same name, who was consul B.C. 144. (Meyer, Orat. Roman. Fragm. p. 186, sec. ed.)

Jure, &c.] 'Jure' means 'justly,' 'rightly,' in the sense of 'there was good or sufficient cause.' 'Jure,' in its largest sense, is right, (τὸ δίκαιον); and in its limited sense of 'law,' that is, positive institution, it is implied that positive law is conformable to a higher standard.

'Auctoritas' and 'majestas' are two untranslatable words, which are generally disposed of in a summary, and a slovenly way. They must both be explained by reference to the political notions of the Romans. The 'auctoritas' of a thing or a person, is the weight that is attached to the idea or constitution of the thing, or to the character or office of the person. 'Majestas,' literally, the magnitude of a thing, is its fulness and completeness; and the 'majestas Romani Imperii' or 'Populi Romani,' is all that composes that Imperium or Populus. A public functionary was said to impair the 'majestas' of the 'imperium,' by misconducting any business of the state. The term 'imperium' is derived from the oldest institutions of Rome, and has no connexion with 'empire' in the modern sense. Rome was an 'Imperium,' under the Republic. A praetor in his province exercised 'imperium.' Act. i. c. 5, 'imperio istius.' With this explanation, the reader is left to find appropriate words, if he can.

defendere consueverat?] It ought perhaps to be 'consueverit;' but I find no notice of any various reading, except 'consueverat.'

honoris amplissimi] 'even of the highest office,' a higher office than the 'aedileship.' The high offices (magistratus) of the Roman state were called 'honores.' In c. 22, 'habet honorem quem petimus.' In Act. i. c. 4, 'quaestura, primus gradus honoris.'

aut—aut] Either this is the remedy, or there is none. This is the force of the disjunctive, 'aut,' which proposes two things, of which both are not true, or both not possible, or the like.

XXII. Quamobrem hoc statuere, judices, debetis, Q. Caecilium, de quo nulla unquam opinio fuerit nullaque in hoc ipso iudicio expectatio futura sit, qui neque ut ante collectam famam conservet neque uti reliqui temporis spem confirmet laborat, non nimis hanc causam severe, non nimis accurate, non nimis diligenter acturum. Habet enim nihil quod in offensione deperdat; ut turpissime flagitiosissimeque discedat, nihil de suis veteribus ornamentis requirit. A nobis multos obsides habet populus Romanus, quos ut incolumes conservare, tueri, confirmare ac recuperare possimus omni ratione erit dimicandum. Habet honorem quem petimus; habet spem quam propositam nobis habemus; habet existimationem multo sudore, labore, vigiliisque collectam; ut, si in hac causa nostrum officium ac diligentiam probaverimus, haec quae dixi retinere per populum Romanum incolumia ac salva possimus; si tantulum offensum titubatumque sit, ut ea quae singulatim ac diu collecta sunt, uno tempore universa perdamus. Quapropter, judices, vestrum est deligere quem existimetis facillime posse magnitudinem causae ac iudicii sustinere fide, diligentia, consilio, auctoritate. Vos si mihi Q. Caecilium anteposueritis, ego me dignitate superatum non arbitrabor: populus Romanus ne tam honestam, tam severam, diligentemque accusationem neque vobis placuisse neque ordini vestro placere arbitretur, providete.

22. severe] The notion of 'severus' is strict or severe in the sense of 'serious'; but 'severus' is not 'tristis.' 'Accurate' means 'with care, painstakingly, laboriously.' 'Accurata oratio' is elaborate, laboured, like the Greek ἀκριβής (De Am. c. 7).

in offensione] 'if he fails,' a metaphor derived from stumbling. He says, shortly after, 'si tantulum offensum titubatumque sit.' 'Nihil requirit,' 'he will miss nothing,' or, as Asconius says, 'he won't feel the want of that which he never had.' 'Ita bonis esse viribus extremo tempore aetatis ut adolescentiam non requireret' (De Sen. c. 9; and requiras, c. 10).

honorem quem petimus;] Compare c. 21, 'quum aedilitatem petat.' Cicero was therefore a 'petitor' or candidate, when he delivered this speech; and yet the argument

singulatim] This word is contrasted with 'universa,' things taken singly, contrasted with things viewed as one.

Quapropter,] This is 'quam (rem) propter,' not 'quae propter;' as 'propterea,' its correlative, is 'propter eam.' We have the forms 'postquam,' 'praeterquam,' 'tamquam,' 'quamquam,' all of one family. It is not surprising that the Romans made so much use of this form 'quam,' which we may assume to have originally implied 'rem,' for 'res' itself is a word that they use on all occasions when they wish to express themselves with the utmost generality. When words get into common use, their origin is forgotten, and they serve many purposes for which their strict original meaning would seem to render them ill suited.

I. REPETUNDAE.

THE Crimen Repetundarum Pecuniarum in Cicero's time comprehended, among other things, the offence committed by a Roman provincial governor in getting money or other valuable things by illegal means from the subjects and Socii of Rome. The direct object of the prosecution to which such a governor was liable, was the recovery of the money which he had taken; and hence the term Repetundae (res repetere). But the word 'Repetundae' is also used to express the illegal act for which compensation was sought. In the earlier periods of the Roman State the legal offence of Repetundae did not exist, for the Roman magistrates were seldom long absent from Rome; and when they did leave Rome for a time, it was only to carry on war against their near neighbours. It was during the first Punic war that the first instances occur of complaints made against the behaviour of Roman commanders in distant parts. An instance of this is mentioned by Livy (xxix. 8—16, &c.) when the Locri of Italy complained to the Roman Senate of the misconduct of the legatus Q. Pleminius. The Senate sent commissioners to inquire into the affair on the spot, and they brought Pleminius, and others who were as guilty as himself, in chains to Rome. Pleminius died in prison before the Populus had pronounced judgment (prius—quam iudicium de eo populi perficeretur). The Lex Porcia, probably proposed by M. Porcius Cato about B.C. 198, was the first legislative act on the abuse of their power by provincial governors. The terms of this Lex are supposed to be referred to by Livy (xxxii. 27); but this is hardly a correct interpretation of the passage. There was however a Lex Porcia, which is cited in the Plebiscitum De Thermensibus, which limited the amount of what governors could demand of the provincials: and it is possible that the prohibition mentioned by Cicero (Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 5) may have been contained in the Lex Porcia; or, as some critics say, in the Lex Calpurnia. The Lex Porcia however appears to have done little towards checking or preventing exorbitant demands on the subjects and allies of Rome.

There were however means of punishing magistrates who were guilty of mal-administration. The Senate, as the chief administrative body in the State, could itself examine into any case of mal-administration and punish a criminal; or the Senate could empower persons to examine into complaints and do justice (Liv. xxxix. 3; xliii. 2). The Senate also could give authority to the Tribuni Plebis to prosecute a guilty person before the Comitia Tributa (judicium Publicum); as in the case of C. Lucretius, whom two of the Tribuni Plebis prosecuted (ad populum accusarunt: Liv. xliii. 10). Livy adds: "comitiis habitis, omnes quinque et triginta tribus eum condemnarunt." In the case mentioned by Livy (xliii. 2) the Senate empowered L. Canuleius, a Praetor, to appoint Recuperatores from the Senate, who should determine, on hearing the evidence, what amount was to be recovered from the accused. This was an instance in which Recuperatores were employed in conformity, as it appears, with their original functions of deciding in cases where Peregrini had a pecuniary demand against Romans, or Romans against Peregrini. (Div. c. 17.)

All these modes of procedure being found insufficient, a permanent court was formed for the trial of those Provincial magistrates who had been guilty of illegal acts which came under the denomination of Repetundae; and thus originated the Quaestio Perpetua de Pecuniis Repetundis. The Lex Calpurnia, which established this court, was proposed and carried by the Tribunus Plebis, L. Calpurnius Piso Frugi B.C. 149. This Lex empowered Peregrini only to maintain an Actio of Repetundae. Roman citizens in the like case could recover by the usual form of proceedings (civili fere actione, Cic. Div. c. 5). As to the form of procedure, the court consisted of the Praetor Peregrinus as president, and of a certain, but not an ascertained, number of Senators who sat as Judices during a year, whence the name Quaestio Perpetua. These Judices must not be confounded with Recuperatores, who were appointed only for each particular case. Yet we read of Recuperatores being sometimes employed in the case of Repetundae, as for instance under the Lex Acilia. There was a Lex Junia de Repetundis, passed after the Calpurnia; but neither the time when it was enacted, nor the matter of it, is known. Some fix the date at B.C. 126.

The Lex Servilia (B.C. 106, or 105, as some suppose) proposed by C. Servilius Glaucia, a Tribunus Plebis, made material additions to the Quaestio de Repetundis. It made not only provincial Magistratus, but all Magistratus and even Judices liable to prosecution for misconduct in the administration of justice. The chapters of the Lex contained many particular provisions; the chief of which was the following (c. 1): "quantum—ablatum captum coactum conciliatum aversumve sit, de ea re eius petitio nominisque delatio esto." The time fixed for the trial of matters which concerned the provincials was the summer months before the Kalends of September, in order that the proceedings might not be interrupted by the numerous holidays, if they were commenced later (Cic. Act. i. c. 10). After the 'nominis delatio,' or formal commencement of the proceedings, the Praetor named the persons (patroni, actores) who were to conduct the prosecution on the part of the complainants; but Peregrini might conduct their own case if they liked. Klenze is of opinion, that kings and free peoples, who were complainants, had the choice of conducting their case either by their Legati or by Patroni; but individual Peregrini and subject peoples were required to have Patroni. The Judices, the whole number of whom was 450 (the numerals CDL occur several times in the fragment of the Servilia Lex), were annually appointed by the Praetor, whose duty it was to preside in this court; and their names with the addition of the designation of their tribe were put on a tablet (album) in a public place. The accuser and the accused selected each 100 Judices from the list; and each had to challenge 50, so that 100 remained. This took place twenty days after the 'nominis delatio,' and the names of the 100 Judices were placed on a tablet. The accused had to give 'vadimonium' or security for his appearance, and if he went into exile before the verdict was given, he was condemned to pay the amount of damages mentioned in the declaration. The Judices were required to give their votes in writing. One of the chapters related to the reward for the accusers, which in the case of a Peregrinus was the conferring of the 'civitas' on one at whose instance a Roman was convicted of Repetundæ (Cic. Pro Balbo, c. 24). The Lex also provided for a second hearing by means of a 'comperendinatio' (Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 9). It also provided, like the Lex Calpurnia, that a Roman citizen might have his civil action (legis actio sacramento) to recover damages, or might proceed criminally. Peregrini were not allowed to have this 'legis actio,' which was a mode of proceeding strictly Roman, that is, peculiar to Roman citizens. The Servilia Lex expresses the difference between these two modes of proceeding by the words: "de ea re petitio nominisve delatio esto."

The penalty of the Lex was double the amount of what the accused was convicted of having wrongfully taken. There is nothing in the Lex which shows that exile was added as a penalty, though it appears that after the passing of this Lex some persons were condemned to exile. This was the case with T. Albucius B.C. 103, and P. Rutilius Rufus. But there is a difference of opinion among scholars on this matter of exile. That any criminal might leave Rome before sentence was pronounced, and that this was followed by the 'aquæ et ignis interdictio,' is well ascertained; but this is a different thing from a formal sentence of exile. After the judgment followed the 'litis aestimatio' or the assessing of the amount of damages, whether the accused had gone into exile or not.

The Lex Acilia, proposed by the Tribunus Plebis M' Acilius Glabrio, was enacted B.C. 101. Some writers make the Lex Acilia precede the Servilia in the order of time, to which there is this objection, that the Acilia is not mentioned in the fragments of the Servilia, while the Calpurnia and Junia are mentioned. Besides this, it would not have been necessary for the Cornelia to restore the second 'actio,' if the Acilia had preceded the Servilia.

The Acilia did not allow either 'comperendinatio' or 'ampliatio.' Cicero says (Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 9): 'ego tibi illam Aciliam legem restituo, qua lege multi semel accusati, semel dicta causa, semel auditis testibus, condemnati sunt.'

During the Dictatorship of Sulla (B.C. 81) was enacted the Lex Cornelia, the basis of which was the Servilia. This Lex contained the provision, that if a provincial governor got or received money for the purpose of having statues erected to him, he should be liable to a prosecution, if the statues were not set up within five years. The aediles were also forbidden to borrow statues from the provinces for the decorations of their spectacles at Rome, or to take money for this purpose. These and other regulations are stated to have been contained in the Cornelia Lex. The penalty of exile was still retained, as it is inferred from Cicero's expression (Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 31): "retinete hominem in civitate," &c., and as it is stated by Asconius (Act. i. c. 13). The pecuniary damages, which were assessed in the 'litis aestimatio,' after the condemnation of the accused, were increased to four times the actual amount of what the accused had wrongfully taken, and payment could be demanded even from those to whose hands it could be proved that any part of the ill-gotten money or valuables had come, or as the Romans expressed it, "ad quos ea pecunia pervenit" (Cic. Ad Div. viii. 8). The Lex empowered the Praetor to allow a second Actio, if the Judices could not come to a decision on the first hearing; and the Judices were not to be chosen by the prosecutor and the accused, but were determined by lot. The Judices were taken from the Senators. An alteration was also made as to the challenge of the Judices, as we may collect from Cicero (Verr. Act. i. c. 7).

The Lex Julia de Repetundis was enacted in the first consulship of C. Julius Caesar B.C. 59; and consequently after the trial of Verres.

The provisions of some of these Leges, the Cornelia for instance, appear to be very doubtful, and the conclusions of writers, from scattered passages, seem to be very uncertain. (Rein, Das Römische Criminalrecht, p. 604, &c. Dict. of Greek and Roman Antiquities, art. Repetundae; Orelli's Cicero, Index Legum).

II. JUDICIA.

THE terms Jus Publicum and Jus Privatum were used by the Romans to express the whole body of law which exists in a state. The opposition between Jus Publicum and Jus Privatum is shown by the words of Ulpian (Dig. 1. 1. 1. § 2): "Publicum jus est quod ad statum Rei Romanae spectat, privatum quod ad singulorum utilitatem" (Comp. Justin. Inst. 1. 1. 1). The Jus Publicum has the State for its object, the political organization of a people. The Jus Privatum comprehends the whole of the legal relations in which individuals stand to one another. The two divisions are distinct enough and intelligible, whatever objections may be made to the terms by which they are designated. The notion of a State is not indeed limited to the department of Law; but one of the purposes of the existence of a State is to give reality to the idea of Law. And this is effected in two ways. If an individual's rights are invaded, the State protects him and gives him redress; and the mode by which this is accomplished comprehends the rules of Civil Procedure. The State also exercises its activity without respect to the interests of individuals by inflicting punishment for the violation of positive Law: and the rules according to which this is done comprehend Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure. The Romans comprehended under Jus Publicum, both Civil Procedure, Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure. The activity of the State, by means of those to whom power is delegated, is as manifest in Civil Procedure as it is in Criminal Procedure. But the direct object in Civil Procedure is to establish the right of an individual or to give him compensation for a wrong: in Criminal Procedure the direct object is the punishment of an individual for the general interest.

Publicum Jus comprehended the Law that concerned religion (Jus Sacrum); and if ever Jus Publicum and Sacrum are opposed to one another, it is only for the purpose of marking the distinction between the rules of Law that relate to things which concern religion, and to things which do not concern religion.

One of the Leges Valeriae declared that no Roman Magistratus should have the power of putting to death or whipping a Roman citizen without an appeal (provocatio) to the popular assembly (comitia centuriata). Thus the supreme jurisdiction in criminal matters was secured to the people. Afterwards the Tributa Comitia in some way got the power of judging high offences against the State. The distinction between Public crimes (publica crimina) and Private injuries (privata delicta), corresponds to the distinction in the mode of procedure. The State as such, that is the people in their 'comitia,' judged all such offences as were directly opposed to the interests of the State. The Publica Crimina ultimately comprehended numerous offences, the complete list of which belongs to a later period than that which we are considering (Dig. 48. tit. 1). Among them were Perduellio or treason (in a sense), murder and Parricidium, Repetundae, Ambitus, and many others. 'Delicta' were the subjects of actions, and belonged to the competence of the Ordo Judiciorum Privatorum. 'Delicta' comprehended 'furtum,' 'rapina,' 'injuria,' and 'damnum injuria' (Gaius, iii. 182; Justin. Inst. 4. 1).

The administration of criminal justice was thus in the hands of the people and exercised in the Comitia. The offences which were thus cognizable, were chiefly determined and defined by custom. As to the Leges which preceded the Twelve Tables we know little, and the Twelve Tables themselves, if they were sufficient for the time, soon required to have their deficiencies supplied. They did not comprise every offence which the moral and religious notions of the people considered as worthy of punishment; and this defect was not made up by direct legislation. The power of the people, who were the judges in their Comitia, was not limited as that of the Judices in the time of Cicero by particular Leges. The Magistratus, who prosecuted before the Comitia, prepared a bill of indictment, in which the offence and the penalty were comprised; and the judges, that is, the people, might accept or reject his Rogatio. The offence might be one which opinion considered deserving of punishment, according to a just interpretation or extension of the provisions of the Twelve Tables, or it might be something new, which opinion declared to be deserving of punishment. Such instances of punishment served as precedents, both as to the crime and the punishment. This development of the criminal law is precisely what might be expected in a State, where the assembled people gave judgment, and when legislation was still very imperfect. A code which minutely defines crimes and fixes punishments never can exist in the early period of a nation's history. The trials before the Comitia would gradually lead to the establishment of forms of procedure and the more exact definition of crimes; and though the early criminal law of Rome had no systematic character, it does not follow that it was not practically good for the time.

The legislation of Rome in the department of Criminal Law is very scanty for the period that precedes the Lex Calpurnia. Leges were enacted to prevent Ambitus, or the improper means of obtaining the votes of the people at elections, and on some few other matters. The difficulty of a trial before a public body would increase when the guilt or innocence of a man did not depend on a single fact, but on many facts and many witnesses; and the impartiality of the popular vote would often be disturbed by the spirit of faction. The Senate, as the administrative body, had or assumed the power of appointing special commissioners to inquire into offences, which belonged to the cognizance of the Comitia; and these special commissions may have suggested the establishment of a permanent court for the trial of offences. A Quaestio Perpetua was first established by the Lex Calpurnia (B.C. 149). The term Perpetua in the Quaestio Perpetua is to be understood in the same way as Perpetuum in the Edictum Perpetuum. The Quaestio Perpetua was a court which had permanence during the term of office of the Magistratus who was the president of it. Perpetua accordingly is the same as Annua, and the court thus established was so called in opposition to those which were established for a special occasion and with a special president, Quaesitor or Quaestor. These Quaestiones perpetuae, or permanent courts, were afterwards extended to other offences besides that of Repetundae; and this was fully effected by the legislation of Sulla. His legislation established or confirmed nine Quaestiones. The Quaestio Perpetua was an improvement on the courts of the Comitia; but though the people lost most of their judicial power, the Comitia were still considered the supreme judges, and they still exercised the judicial functions in some cases, as in that of Perduellio.

The criminal trials at Rome were now conducted pursuant to the several Leges, which were applicable to them. Each Lex defined the crime, determined the punishment, and contained provisions as to the constitution of the court before which an accused person was to be tried. There was no code which comprehended all the matters that came under the denomination of Publica Crimina; but certain Leges, commonly called Leges Judiciariae contained certain general regulations as to the mode of procedure.

The establishment of a Quaestio Perpetua by the Lex Calpurnia, gave the Senatorius Ordo a power which they had before only exercised occasionally. Before the enactment of the Lex Calpurnia, the Senate possessed a concurrent jurisdiction with the Comitia, as we have already seen; for crimes were tried either by the assembled people, or by a Consilium of Senators under the presidency of one or more magistrates who were empowered to act as a special commission. The appointment of such special commissions by the Senate was apparently an encroachment on the popular power, and the establishment of a Quaestio Perpetua was nothing more than the giving of a regular form to what was done occasionally. As the higher personages of the State were chiefly the objects of criminal prosecutions, the Senate would feel inclined to secure as far as possible the jurisdiction over those who were either members of their own body or connected with those who were. In a Quaestio Perpetua the Judices were still the Senators, a certain number of whom were annually selected by the Praetor, as it appears, and their names were entered on a list, the Album Judicum Selectorum. Out of this body were taken by lot the requisite number of Judices for each trial. The Senators were often partial judges in the case of members of their own body; and the Populares or popular leaders attempted to wrest from them their judicial power. The Lex Sempronia, B.C. 122, of C. Gracchus, took away the judicial power from the Senators and gave it to the Equites, from which body the Praetor was required to take the Judices. According to Cicero the people were satisfied with the Equites. But in trials for Repetundae nothing was gained by the change, for the governors in the provinces winked at the exactions of the Publicani, who belonged to the equestrian order, to secure the favour of that body from whom their Judices must be chosen, if they were ever prosecuted for mal-administration (Cic. Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 41). The Lex Servilia Caepionis, B.C. 106, repealed the Lex Sempronia; but the Lex Servilia Glaucia Repetundarum again excluded the Senators from the *Judicia*¹. This Lex did not give the Judicia to the Equites in express terms, but it accomplished this object by excluding others. The Praetor had the power of naming 450 Judices, but he could not name any person who was or had been Tribunus Plebis, Quaestor, Triumvir Capitalis, Tribunus Militum in one of the first four legions, or Triumvir agris dandis assignandis, or any one who had been or was in the Senate, any person who was Infamis, any person who was under thirty or above sixty years of age, any person who did not reside in Rome or in the immediate neighbourhood, any father, brother, or son of any person who was or had been a member of the Senate, or any person who was absent beyond seas. M. Livius Drusus, Tribunus Plebis, proposed and carried a Lex Judiciaria, B.C. 91, which distributed the judicial power between the Senate and the Equites; but the Senate declared this and all the other Leges Liviae invalid on the ground of not having been enacted in due form. The Lex Plautia, B.C. 89, enacted that fifteen Judices should be elected from each tribe, without any respect to the class of persons. When the party of the Optimates under Sulla had got all the power in their hands, a Lex Cornelia (B.C. 80) again gave the Judicia to the Senate. This Lex Cornelia was repealed by the Aurelia, B.C. 70, the agitation for which was going on at the time of the prosecution of Verres. The Aurelia made the Judices eligible from the Senators, Equites, and Tribuni Aerarii. A Lex Julia subsequently deprived the Tribuni Aerarii of the judicial functions, and gave them to the Senators and Equites.

It is plain from this sketch that the disputes as to the constitution of the Judicia and the class of persons from whom the Judices were to be chosen, did not relate to the Judicia Privata, a term which we find used by Cicero (Top. 17). The Romans had a permanent court for the decision of many civil actions, called the court of the Centumviri, the origin and constitution of which are very uncertain. At the time when we are best acquainted with it, this court had a very extensive jurisdiction, especially in matters relating to an Hereditas. Cicero in a passage of the De Oratore (i. 38) enumerates some of the many questions which belonged to the jurisdiction of this court; and from this passage we may conclude that at one time at least, this court decided on all matters in dispute with respect to property in land. At an earlier period, however, private persons, who held no official situation, were appointed by a magistrate for the hearing and determining of civil actions; and such Judices were called Privati, as being opposed to those who acted as Judices by virtue of any office. There might be various reasons for the appointment of such Judices. The permanent courts might not be adapted for the investigation of all questions; or they might not have time; or cases might arise in which some particular kind of knowledge was necessary in order to enable a Judex to come to a just decision; and finally the intercourse between Romans and Peregrini might render this form of procedure necessary in many cases. A Lex Pinaria of early date (Gaius, iv. 15), in the case of a Legis Actio Sacramento, allowed the parties to apply for a Judex, whom the Praetor named within thirty days after the application; and this appears to be the earliest notice that we have of the appointment of a Judex, though it does not follow that this Lex established the practice. It is certain that the practice of appointing a Judex for the hearing and determining of matters between individuals, was well adapted to the wants of the Romans, and that the practice gradually was extended, and the permanent courts for the decision of civil matters were much less employed. This change may have originated in the circumstance of the permanent courts retaining their old practice and their original constitution, without being capable of adapting themselves to the alterations in the social state and to the changes in the habits of the Romans. People, if left alone, can find out what they want better than any legislator; and there are few countries at the present day in which the old courts would not be soon superseded by something better suited to the wants of the people, if the free development of a nation's activity was not fettered by those who hold power, and particularly by those who are interested in maintaining existing forms of procedure. In Rome the notion of justice, which is implanted in all people, and developed by their social progress, finally led the Romans to the transferring of the Officium Judicis to private persons, named for the occasion, and generally in each case to a single person. In certain cases, several Judices were appointed, under the name of Recuperatores, whose functions appear to have been limited to particular kinds of actions. It does not belong to the present inquiry to explain, how the Magistratus controlled and directed a Judex in the hearing and determining of a case. The references at the end will give the necessary information on this matter to those who will take the pains to look for it.

Many persons would naturally (natura) be excluded from the Officium Judicis, as idiots, deaf people, and Impuberes; or by custom, that is, opinion in a persistent form (moribus), as women, slaves; or by special rule, as Infames (Dig. 5. 1. 12). It does not follow that all who were not specially excluded had the capacity of acting as Judex; and the Praetor might by virtue of the power of his office extend the exceptions. Yet the nature of the institution of a Judex seems to require that there should be the freest possible selection of persons; and this was particularly so in the case of that class of Judices who were called Arbitri (see Cicero Pro Rosc. Com. c. 4 and Top. 17); and apparently in the case of Recuperatores also. There were two classes of Arbitri; and one class were those who by the Formula were empowered to decide what one party should do or make good to another 'ex fide bona,' or 'quantum aequius melius id dari,' or 'ut inter bonos agier oportet.' This class of actions was finally comprehended under the name of 'bonae fidei judicia.' The Romans had a tact for legal precision; but they had likewise a nice sense of what is just. They knew that many of the transactions of life cannot be bound down to the rigid formulae of a legal rule. Our legal formalists can see nothing beyond the narrow circle within which they intrench themselves. If the case in hand does not fit their formula, no legal redress for a wrong which the common understanding (communis sensus) of mankind pronounces to be wrong, no legal establishment of a right, which the like sense pronounces to be one. By means of their

'bonae fidei judicia,' the Romans kept a mean between the refusal of justice and the laxity of no legal rule. Their law existed less in the written text than in the understanding of the people, the true depository of a large part of law, and that mainly which relates to the multifarious concerns of life which come under the legal denomination of Contracts, or the popular and wider term of Agreements.

It has been observed that the Leges Judiciariae did not relate to civil actions, but to Criminal procedure. We cannot suppose that the Senators who originally were the Judges in the Publica Judicia were excluded from being Judges in civil actions. Polybius (vi.17) says that from the body of the Senate were appointed judges (κριταί) of most both public and private matters (συναλλαγμάτων), which involved any magnitude of charge (έγκλημάτων); a statement too vague to build any thing upon. It is at least certain that the Leges Judiciariae had nothing to do with civil cases or actions. Besides these it would be absurd to suppose that the Senatorian body would have maintained such a vigorous contest about the Judicia, in order to maintain their right to act as Judges in matters that concerned the ordinary transactions of a Roman plebeian, such as buying and selling, pledging, and the like. Augustus certainly, or perhaps Caesar, extended the institution of the Judges Selecti to the Judicia Privata; and the Judges for these matters also were from that time taken from the Album Judicum Selectorum. This arrangement made the Officium Judicis a duty incumbent upon all who were included in the Album. It was not simply a distinction: it was also a burden; yet of course the office would be viewed by the citizens generally as honourable (1 Horat. Sat. iv. 123).

Though so many offences against the State were brought under the cognizance of the Quaestiones Perpetuae, the Judicia Populi, or trials before the Comitia, still existed in Cicero's time for the offence of Perduellio (Populus Romanus judicabit, &c. In Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 69). If Verres should escape the prosecution for Repetundae, and prosecutions for other offences also before the permanent courts, Cicero threatens to bring him before the Populus Romanus, before the thirty-five Tribes (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 5). In Cicero's consulship, B.C. 63, C. Rabirius was prosecuted for Perduellio; and when C. Julius Caesar and L. Julius Caesar were appointed Duumviri Perduellionis by the Praetor instead of by the Populus, Rabirius, on being condemned, appealed to the Populus in the Comitia Centuriata, and Cicero made a speech in his defence, part of which is extant. An instance of an appeal of this kind is in the story of M. Horatius in Livy (i. 26).

The object of these remarks was to explain the nature of the court before which Verres was tried; but it seemed also necessary to show that the Judices Privati were distinct from the Judices in the Quaestiones Perpetuae. There are several matters relating to the Publica Judicia which have been either briefly treated here, or omitted, the object not being to say all that could be said, but as much as will serve to explain these orations. There is a dissertation by Ph. Invernizius, intitled 'De Publicis et Criminalibus Judiciis' (reprinted at Leipzig, 1846), but it is not a critical performance.—(Savigny, System des Heut. Röm. Rechts, Vol. i.; Puchta, Instit.; Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer; the article JUDex in Smith's Dict. of Antiquities, by G. L. As to the Publica Judicia, see also the last Title of the Institutions of Justinian, De Publicis Judiciis).

IN
ACTIO PRIMA.

I. Quod erat optandum maxime, judices, et quod unum ad invidiam vestri ordinis infamiamque judiciorum sedendam maxime pertinebat, id non humano consilio sed prope divinitus datum atque oblatum vobis, summo rei publicae tempore, videtur. Inveteravit enim jam opinio perniciosa rei publicae nobisque periculosa, quae non modo Romae sed et apud exterarum nationum omnium sermone percrebuit, his judiciis quae nunc sunt pecuniosum hominem, quamvis sit nocens, neminem posse damnari. Nunc in ipso discrimine ordinis judiciorumque vestrorum, quum sint parati qui contionibus et legibus hanc invidiam senatus inflammare conentur, reus in iudicium adductus est C. Verres, homo vita atque factis omnium jam opinione damnatus, pecuniae magnitudine, sua spe et praedicatione absolutus. Huic ego causae, judices, cum summa voluntate

1. vestri ordinis] Klotz has 'nostri.' Cicero had been Quaestor, and he was now 'aedilis designatus;' he could, therefore, say 'nostri.' In c. 13 (note) Orelli has 'nostrum,' and Klotz has 'vestrum.'

his . . quae nunc sunt] Orelli and Zumpt have 'sint.' There is no doubt that the Romans could use either form of expression in such a clause, though the two forms have not exactly the same meaning. If the emphasis is placed on the verb, it should be 'sunt,' and the word 'nunc' shows that 'sunt' is emphatical. When Cicero does not intend to dwell particularly on the fact, expressed by a clause 'qui' and a verb, he seems generally to use the subjunctive. There is no other explanation of his reason for using the indicative or subjunctive in many of the sentences in these orations.

contionibus et legibus] Klotz adopts in his text, like Orelli, the false form 'concionibus,' but the true one, 'contionibus,' in his note on this passage. Zumpt has 'contionibus.' Besides the evidence of the Bacchanalian inscription, where we have the form 'coventio,' of which 'contio' is a shortened form, there is the evidence of the MSS. in many cases, though Orelli and others take no notice of it. See Seyffert's note on the De Am. c. 25, where he has the true form 'contio.' The 'invidia senatus' is the bad repute of the senate, which was increased by the speeches made on the occasion of proposing the Lex Aurelia; for this was the year in which this measure was proposed and carried by L. Aurelius Cotta, supported by Cn. Pompeius. Compare Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 96, where he alludes to Cotta's agitation about his 'lex.' The 'lex' was not promulgated, in the Roman sense, till after the 'Actio Prima' against Verres (Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 69).

De quo si vos severe religioseque judicaveritis, auctoritas ea quae in vobis remanere debet haerebit; sin istius ingentes divitiae judiciorum religionem veritatemque perfregerint, ego hoc tamen assequar ut iudicium potius rei publicae quam aut reus iudicibus aut accusator reo defuisse videatur.

Neque tantum me exspectatio accusationis meae concursusque tantae multitudinis, quibus ego rebus vehementissime perturbor, commovet, quantum istius insidiae nefariae quas uno tempore mihi, vobis, M' Glabrioni praetori, sociis, exteris nationibus, ordini, nomini denique senatorio facere conatur; qui ita dictitat, iis esse metuendum qui quod ipsis solis satis esset surripuissent, se tantum rapuisse ut id multis satis esse possit; nihil esse tam sanctum quod non violari, nihil tam munitum quod non expugnari pecunia possit. Quod si quam audax est ad conandum, tam esset obscurus in agendo, fortasse aliqua in re nos aliquando fefellisset. Verum hoc adhuc percommode cadit, quod cum incredibili ejus audacia singularis stultitia conjuncta est. Nam ut apertus in corripiendis pecuniis fuit, sic in spe corrumpendi reconciliare] 'Conciliare' is to bring together, and 'reconciliare' has the same relation to it that 'reducere' has to 'ducere.' Here it means to 'recover' or 'restore.' 'In quo' belongs to the examples of 'in pueris,' 'in perfecto viro' (De Am. c. 2). The English language here requires some change in the form of expression: 'for I have brought before you a man who will give you the opportunity of recovering the character of the Judicia, which is lost.' As to the primary sense of 'reconciliare,' see Plautus, Capt. Prol. 32.

praedonem juris urbani,] A poorish kind of play on the word 'praetor,' for he is alluding to the misconduct of Verres as Praetor Urbanus.

labem] The primary meaning of this word, as its etymology indicates (lab-or), is a sinking or falling; as, for instance, the sinking of the earth, 'labes agri Privernatis' (De Divin. 1, 43). Comp. De Am. c. 12. The use of the word by the Roman law writers confirms this explanation (Dig. 19. 2. 62).

2. insidiae terra marique] Asconius, the false one, takes all this literally, and explains it by some amplification, after the manner of many of the scholiasts, who treat us with the text over again in another shape. Cicero has the same rhetorical flourish in Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 40.

obscurus] Zumpt has 'astutus,' on the authority of only one MS., but there is something to say in favour of 'astutus.'

judicii perspicua sua consilia conatusque omnibus fecit. Semel, ait, se in vita pertimuisse tum quum primum reus a me factus sit; quod quum e provincia recens esset invidiaque et infamia non recenti sed vetere ac diuturna flagraret, tum ad judicium corrumpendum tempus alienum offenderet. Itaque quum ego diem in Sicilia inquirendi perexiguam postulavissem, invenit iste qui sibi in Achaïam biduo brevior diem postularet, non ut is idem conficeret diligentia et industria sua, quod ego meo labore et vigiliis consecutus sum; etenim ille Achaicus inquisitor ne Brundisium quidem pervenit; ego Siciliam totam quinquaginta diebus sic obii ut omnium populorum privatorumque literas injuriasque cognoscerem; ut perspicuum cuivis esse posset hominem ab isto quaesitum esse non qui reum suum adduceret, sed qui meum tempus obsideret.

III. Nunc homo audacissimus atque amentissimus hoc cogitat. Intelligit me ita paratum atque instructum in judicium venire ut non modo in auribus vestris sed in oculis omnium sua furta atque flagitia defixurus sim. Videt senatores multos esse testes audaciae suae; videt multos equites Romanos, frequentes praeterea cives atque socios, quibus ipse insignes injurias fecerit: videt etiam tot, tam graves ab amicissimis civitatibus legationes cum publicis auctoritatibus ac testimoniis convenisse. Quae quum ita sint, usque eo de omnibus bonis male existimat, usque eo senatoria judicia perditâ profligataque esse arbitratur ut hoc palam dictitet, non sine causa se cupidum pecuniae fuisse, quoniam tantum in pecunia praesidium experiatur esse; sese, id quod difficillimum fuerit, tempus ipsum emisse judicii sui quo cetera facilius emere posset, ut, quoniam criminum vim subterfugere nullo modo poterat, procellam temporis devitaret. Quod si non modo in causa, verum in aliquo honesto praesidio, aut in alicujus eloquentia aut gratia spem aliquam collodiem—perexiguam] ‘Dies feminino genere tempus,’ says Asconius; that is, it is used in the feminine gender to signify many days, or a long time. Klotz reads ‘diem inquirendi in Siciliam.’

invenit iste qui] Asconius, our only guide here, gives the various opinions as to the names of the prosecutor and accused to whom Cicero alludes; but the names are immaterial. It appears that a prosecution was got up against another senator, and the prosecutor undertook to go to Achaëa to collect evidence in two days less than the time that Cicero asked for his visit to Sicily for a similar purpose. The object was, that this prosecutor, by returning before Cicero,

populorum . . . cognoscerem;] Cicero, in this short time, made himself acquainted with the written statements, and with the wrongs, of every community and every private person. ‘Cognosco’ is a word of examination and investigation, for the purpose of knowing. ‘Agnosco’ is a word of recognition, of knowledge declared upon sight or inspection. ‘Verres cognoscebat, Verres judicabat’ (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 10). The distinction, though not always made, is substantially true. See Forcellini ‘Agnosco,’ and Seyffert, De Am. c. 2; and ‘cognoscere’ and ‘recognoscere,’ Act. i. c. 5.

casset, profecto non haec omnia colligeret atque aucuparetur; non usque eo despiceret contemneretque ordinem senatorium ut arbitrato ejus deligeretur ex senatu qui reus fieret, qui, dum hic quae opus essent compararet, causam interea ante eum diceret. Quibus ego rebus quid iste speret et quo animum intendat facile perspicio. Quamobrem vero se confidat aliquid perficere posse hoc praetore et hoc consilio intelligere non possum. Unum illud intelligo, quod populus Romanus in rejectione judicum judicavit, ea spe istum fuisse praeditum ut omnem rationem salutis in pecunia poneret; hoc erepto praesidio ut nullam sibi rem adjumento fore arbitraretur.

IV. Etenim quod est ingenium tantum, quae tanta facultas dicendi et copia quae istius vitam, tot vitiis flagitiisque convictam, jam pridem omnium voluntate iudicioque damnatam, aliqua ex parte possit defendere? Cujus ut adolescentiae maculas ignominiasque praeteream, quaestura, primus gradus honoris, quid aliud habet in se nisi Cn. Carbonem spoliatum a quaestore suo pecunia publica? nudatum et proditum consulem? desertum exercitum? relictam provinciam? sortis necessitudinem religionemque violatam? cujus legatio exitium fuit Asiae totius et Pamphylicae, quibus in provinciis multas domos, plurimas urbes, omnia fana depopulatus est, quum in Cn. Dolabellam scelus suum illud pristinum renovavit et instauravit quaestorium; quum eum cui legatus et pro quaestore dum hic quae opus essent] 'Hic' is Verres, who is represented as contriving that another accused should be engaged in defending himself, that he might have time to prepare his own defence, by bribery and so forth.

3. arbitratu ejus] 'At his pleasure,' according to his own choice and will. Comp. De Am. c. 1. The words 'ex senatu qui reus fieret' are explained by the last part of c. 2.

perficere posse] 'Proficere posse:' Zumpt, Klotz; which may be the true word here. See note, p. 23.

in rejectione judicum] In making his challenge of the 'judices,' Verres showed that he relied on bribery, for he left those unchallenged whom he, and apparently others also, considered most likely to be purchased. 'Rejicere,' 'to throw back or out,' is the word which the Romans used to express the removal of a 'judex' by the right of challenge. See (Ad Att. i. 16) Cicero's account of the trial of Clodius. Zumpt and Klotz have 'in pecunia constitueret.'

4. convictam,] Zumpt has 'conjunctam.' The MSS. are of little authority here, for 'convictam' and 'coniunctam' are easily confounded. The sense is 'a life against which there is the evidence of so many crimes and abominations.' The use of 'convinco' and 'condemno' in Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 9, shows that 'convictam' may be the true reading here. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 1: 'tam multis testibus convictus.' 'In convictos maleficii servos' (Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 53) is a different thing. Zumpt shows that 'convictum testimonio, iudicio,' &c., is Cicero's language; but he maintains that 'vita' cannot be 'convicta vitiis,' but must be 'convicta vitiorum,' by something else, which is expressed in the ablative.

sortis necessitudinem, &c.] See the note on c. 19. p. 33.

depopulatus] 'Depeculatus:' Orelli. A little further on we have 'depopulatio,' which Orelli has.

legatus et pro quaestore] Here two functions are mentioned, that of 'legatus,' and that of 'pro quaestore,' or the office of 'quaestor' filled by one who was not 'quaestor.' Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 15. It seems that a man who had been quaestor fuisset, et in invidiam suis maleficiis adduxit, et in ipsis periculis non solum deseruit, sed etiam oppugnavit ac prodidit. Cujus praetura urbana aedium sacrarum fuit publicorumque operum depopulatio, simul in jure dicundo bonorum possessionumque contra omnium instituta addictio et condonatio. Jam vero omnium vitiorum suorum plurima et maxima constituit monumenta et indicia in provincia Sicilia, quam iste per triennium ita vastavit, vexavit, ac perdidit, ut ea restitui in antiquum statum nullo modo possit, vix autem per multos annos innocentesque praetores aliqua ex parte recreari aliquando posse videatur. Hoc praetore Siculi neque suas leges, neque nostra senatusconsulta, neque communia jura tenuerunt. Tantum quisque habet in Sicilia quantum hominis avarissimi et libidinosissimi aut imprudentiam subterfugit aut satietati superfuit.

V. Nulla res per triennium nisi ad nutum istius judicata est; nulla res tam patria cujusquam atque avita fuit quae non ab eo imperio istius abjudicaretur. Innumerabiles pecuniae ex aratorum bonis novo nefarioque instituto coactae; socii fidelissimi in hostium numero existimati; cives Romani servilem in modum cruciati et necati; homines nocentissimi propter pecuniam judicio liberati; honestissimi atque integerrimi absentes rei facti, indicta causa damnati et ejecti; portus munitissimi, maximae tutissimaeque urbes piratis praedonibusque patefactae; nautae militesque Sicumight be appointed, without the election of the people, when from any cause the office of quaestor became vacant in a province.

oppugnavit] Cn. Dolabella was prosecuted on a charge of Repetundae by M. Aemilius Scaurus, and Verres, who was as guilty as Dolabella, was compelled to be a witness against him, in order to save himself; for Scaurus let Verres know that he had plenty of evidence against him also. It was no part of Cicero's purpose to state this, but to make it appear that Verres was a voluntary witness against Dolabella (Klotz).

in jure dicundo] These words express the Praetor's office, which was 'jus dicere.' Excursus iv. 'Addictio' (see 'Addico,' Forcellini, for examples) is the term which expresses the praetor's adjudication, that is, his sentence, by which he gave effect to the right that he declared. 'Condonatio' means the remitting of the adjudication, not making it, when he ought to make it; for, when a right is established, it is the duty of him who declares the law to make such order as shall give it effect. 'Bona' is the most comprehensive Roman term to express property, to express every thing to which a man has any right (Dig. 50, 16, 49); a term which in this sense has passed into languages derived from the Roman, and in a limited legal sense into our own. See Biens, Comyns, Digest. The Germans have a better term, 'vermögen.'

vastavit,] Orelli and Klotz omit 'vastavit.' Comp. Divin. c. 3: 'populatae, vexatae, funditus eversae provinciae,' which passage Asconius quotes in his note on 'vexavit.'

5. abjudicaretur.] 'Abjudico' is opposed to 'adjudico,' which occurs in the Divin. c. 17. As to the use of 'tam' with 'patria' and 'avita,' comp. Act. ii. Lib. i. c. 37. The sense of the passage is this: 'there was nothing to which a man had all the title that he could have from father or remoter ancestor, of which he was not deprived, under the form of legal proceeding, during this man's administration.' 'Ab eo' refers to 'cujusquam.' Comp. Cic. 2. Agr. c. 16: 'a Populo Romano abjudicabit.' Instead of 'patria,' Klotz reads 'patrita.' See Forcellini, 'Patritus.'

lorum, socii nostri atque amici, fame necati; classes optimae atque opportunissimae cum magna ignominia populi Romani amissae et perditae. Idem iste praetor monumenta antiquissima partim regum locupletissimorum, quae illi ornamento urbibus esse voluerunt, partim etiam nostrorum imperatorum, quae victores civitatibus Siculis aut dederunt aut reddiderunt, spoliavit nudavitque omnia. Neque hoc solum in statuis ornamentisque publicis fecit, sed etiam delubra omnia sanctissimis religionibus consecrata depopulatus est; deum denique nullum Siculis qui ei paulo magis affabre atque antiquo artificio factus videretur reliquit. In stupris vero et flagitiis nefarias ejus libidines commemorare pudore deterreor, simul illorum calamitatem commemorando augere nolo, quibus liberos conjugesque suas integras ab istius petulantia conservare non licitum est. At enim haec ita commissa sunt ab isto ut non cognita sint ab omnibus. Hominem esse arbitror neminem qui nomen istius audierit quin facta quoque ejus nefaria commemorare possit, ut mihi magis timendum sit ne multa crimina praetermittere quam ne qua in istum fingere existimer. Neque enim mihi videtur haec multitudo quae ad audiendum convenit cognoscere ex me causam voluisse, sed ea quae scit mecum recognoscere.

VI. Quae quum ita sint, iste homo amens ac perditus alia mecum ratione pugnat. Non id agit ut alicujus eloquentiam mihi opponat; non gratia, non auctoritate cujusquam, non potentia nititur. Simulat his se rebus confidere; sed video quid agat, neque enim agit occultissime; proponit inania mihi nobilitatis, hoc est hominum arrogantium nomina, qui non tam me impediunt quod nobiles sunt

liberos] This comprehensive term must be here limited to 'daughters,' as Klotz remarks, for Verres is nowhere charged with unnatural passions.

At enim] 'But, it may be said, all this he has done in such wise as not to be known to every body.' Cicero has given, in general terms, a catalogue of the enormities of Verres, enough, if true, to cover him with infamy. To anticipate an objection, that he ought to be more particular in his statements, for all these crimes could not be known to every body, he adds what follows, 'Hominem esse,' &c.

6. Quae quum ita sint,] One of Cicero's usual formulae, and hardly worth notice, except to show that 'ita' is generally a word of reference, like 'is,' to what has preceded. Nobody would think of placing the demonstrative 'sic' here.

proponit inania . . nobilitatis,] The ge-nerality of Roman terms is one of the great difficulties of the language, which sometimes makes it almost impossible to translate. 'While he is really doing one thing,' says Cicero, 'he attempts to deceive me by the show of another thing.' 'To divert my attention, he puts before me the unsubstantialities of nobility, that is, the names of arrogant men.' He appears not to mean by 'inania,' that 'nobilitas,' or the condition of being 'nobilis,' was a 'res inanis;' but these names of his noble defenders were unsubstantial things, the real substance of his defence being his command of money to bribe with. A 'nobilis,' in the time of Cicero, was a man whose ancestors had enjoyed a Curule office. A plebeian, who was the first member of his family who attained a Curule office, became 'nobilis,' and was the founder of the 'nobilitas' of his family. See the Art. 'Nobilis' in Smith's Dict. of Antiqu.

quam adjuvant quod noti sunt. Simulat se eorum praesidio confidere, quum interea aliud quiddam jam diu machinetur. Quam spem nunc habeat in manibus et quid moliatur breviter jam, iudices, exponam. Sed prius ut ab initio res ab eo constituta sit, quaeso, cognoscite. Ut primum e provincia rediit, redemptio est hujus iudicii facta grandi pecunia. Ea mansit in conditione atque pacto usque ad eum finem dum iudices rejecti sunt. Posteaquam rejectio iudicum facta est, quod et in sortitione istius spem fortuna populi Romani et in rejiciendis iudicibus mea diligentia istorum impudentiam vicerat, renuntiata est tota conductio. Praeclare se res habebat. Libelli nominum vestrorum consiliique hujus in manibus erant omnium. Nulla nota, nullus color, nullae sordes videbantur his sententiis allini posse; quum iste repente ex alacri atque laeto sic erat humilis atque demissus ut non modo populo Romano sed redemptio] 'Redimere,' like 'conducere,' is applied to one who undertakes to do something for a sum of money. 'Conductio' and 'locatio' are the correlatives, which express the contract by which a sum of money (merces) is agreed to be paid for the use of a thing, or to be received for the doing of something (Gaius, iii. 142, &c.; Dig. 19. tit. 2). 'Some one,' says Cicero, 'made an agreement with Verres, by which he undertook to see him through his difficulties for a sum of money.' This is called the 'redemptio hujus iudicii,' the 'bargain to save him harmless in the trial.' But the bargain was not made complete; 'it remained subject to a condition, and in the form of a pact, or bare agreement, until the Iudices were challenged.' A 'conditio' is an uncertain future event, upon which something else is made to depend. Here the 'conditio' was the constitution of the Consilium; for, if such a body of Iudices was finally selected for the trial as the 'redemptor' could have no hope of corrupting, the bargain would be useless. 'Pactum' is the most general Roman term for any agreement, but it applied particularly to those agreements for which the Romans had no special name, and which were not classed under any head of contracts. The agreement, being for an illegal purpose, could not be a contract: it could not be a case of 'locatio et conductio,' though Cicero treats it as if it could, without troubling himself about the strict propriety of his language.

Ut primum . . . rediit,] 'Ut,' with 'primum' and without, and 'ubi' also, are used with the indicative perfect, to indicate 'as soon as.' Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 6: 'Romam ut ex Sicilia redii.'

Klotz, who writes 'condicio,' takes it to contain the root of 'condicere,' the 'i' being shortened, as in 'maledicus.' There is a great dispute about the writing of this word, but analogy is in favour of 'conditio,' and it contains the word 'da,' as 'traditio' does. All the MSS. have 'ea mansit in ditione,' or 'dictione,' which is a manifest blunder; and 'conditione' is the true reading, which Asconius has preserved. After the Consilium was determined by the Sortitio or choosing by lot of a certain number, followed by the challenges, 'it was apparent,' says Cicero, 'that nothing could be done with the iudices; and the Conductio, or undertaking, was given up (renuntiata) by the man or men who had undertaken it.'

Libelli nominum, &c.] Lists of the names of all the Iudices, of whom the Consilium, as finally constituted, consisted, were circulated in some way; at least, as Cicero says, every body had them. Asconius has a note here, which is one of the better kind. The words 'nulla nota,' &c., are explained by reference to Divin. c. 7. 'cera legitima:' and 'his sententiis,' means the 'tabellae' on which these Iudices were to give their vote.

sic erat humilis, &c.] 'Sic' often appears in the place which 'ita' may occupy, followed by 'ut.' The difference appears to be that 'sic' is an emphatic, or, so to speak, a demonstrative adverb, whereas 'ita,' conformably to its meaning, is either less emphatic, or indicates the mode or manner of which 'ut,' and what follows, is the exposition; as we observe where 'id' is used, followed by 'ut,' as in c. 6:

etiam sibi ipse condemnatus videretur. Ecce autem repente his diebus paucis comitiis consularibus factis, eadem illa vetera consilia pecunia majore repetuntur, eaedemque vestrae famae fortunisque omnium insidiae per eosdem homines comparantur. Quae res primo, iudices, pertenui nobis argumento indicioque patefacta est; post aperto suspicionis introitu ad omnia intima istorum consilia sine ullo errore pervenimus.

VII. Nam ut Hortensius consul designatus domum reducebatur e campo cum maxima frequentia ac multitudine, fit obviam casu ei multitudini C. Curio, quem ego hominem honoris potius quam contumeliae causa nominatum volo. Etenim ea dicam quae ille, si commemorari nolisset, non tanto in conventu tam aperte palamque dixisset; quae tamen a me pedetentim cauteque dicentur ut et amicitiae nostrae et dignitatis illius habita ratio esse intelligatur. Videt ad ipsum fornicem Fabianum in turba Verrem. Appellat hominem et ei voce maxima victoriam gratulatur. Ipsi Hortensio qui consul erat factus, propinquis necessariisque ejus qui tum aderant, verbum nullum facit; cum hoc consistit, hunc amplexatur, hunc jubet sine cura esse. Renuntio, inquit, tibi, te hodiernis comitiis esse absolutum. Quod quum tam multi homines honestissimi audissent, statim ad me defertur; immo vero, ut quisque me viderat, narrabat. Aliis illud indignum, aliis ridiculum videbatur; ridiculum iis qui istius causam in testium fide, in criminum ratione, in iudicum potestate, non in comitiis consularibus, positam arbitrabantur; indignum iis qui altius perspiciebant et hanc gratulationem ad iudicium corrumpendum spectare arbitrabantur. Etenim sic ratiocinabantur, sic honestissimi homines inter se et mecum loquebantur: Aperte jam ac perspicue nulla esse judicia: qui reus pridie jam ipse se condemnatum putabat, is, posteaquam defensor ejus consul est factus, absolvitur. Quid igitur quod tota Sicilia, quod omnes Siculi, omnes negotiatores, omnes publicae privataeque

'non id agit ut . . . opponat.' However, though the distinction between 'sic' and 'ita' is clear enough, perhaps it is not always strictly observed. A passage in Cicero (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1, 1), 'qui . . . ita negotiantur ut locupletes sint,' will explain what is here said as to 'ita.' 'Sic' in this passage would hardly do. In c. 8 of this speech we have 'itâ loquebatur;' and yet we have 'sic' in a like sense in the next chapter: 'sic ratiocinabantur,' c. 7.

7. C. Curio,] C. Scribonius Curio, consul B.C. 76, and an orator. Cicero mentions him in the Brutus, c. 59. (Meyer, Fragment. Orat. Rom. p. 347, 2nd ed.) He was the father of the Curio who perished in Africa B.C. 49.

ad fornicem Fabianum] Near the arch of Fabius, which stood in the Via Sacra (Comp. Pro Plancio, c. 7; De Or. ii. 66), and was erected by Fabius, the censor, who conquered the Allobroges. Fabius was consul B.C. 121, and censor, B.C. 108.

negotiatores,] These men were Romans, who carried on a money-lending and a literae Romae sunt, nihilne id valebit? Nihil, invito consule designato. Quid iudices non crimina, non testes, non existimationem populi Romani sequentur? Non: omnia in unius potestate ac moderatione vertentur.

VIII. Vere loquar, iudices: vehementer me haec res commovebat. Optimus enim quisque ita loquebatur: Iste quidem tibi eripietur; sed nos non tenebimus iudicia diutius. Etenim quis poterit Verre absoluto de transferendis iudiciis recusare? Erat omnibus molestum: neque eos tam istius hominis perditī subita laetitia quam hominis amplissimi nova gratulatio commovebat. Cupiebam dissimulare me id moleste ferre; cupiebam animi dolorem vultu tegere et taciturnitate celare. Ecce autem illis ipsis diebus, quum praetores designati sortirentur, et M. Metello obtigisset ut is de pecuniis repetundis quaereret, nuntiatur mihi tantam isti gratulationem esse factam ut is quoque domum mitteret qui uxori suae nuntiarent. Sane ne haec quidem res mihi placebat; neque tamen quid tanto opere in hac sorte metuendum mihi esset intelligebam. Unum illud ex hominibus certis, ex quibus omnia comperi, reperiēbam: fiscos complures cum pecunia Siciliensi a quodam senatore banking business in the provinces, and had also mercantile transactions there. They are different from 'mercatores,' who travelled or sailed with their wares. Cicero (Ad Q. Frat. i. 1, 1) enumerates, among the classes of men who composed the population of the province of Asia, 'socii' or native inhabitants, 'publicani' or farmers of the revenue, and those who 'ita negotiantur ut locupletes sint.' 'Negotia habere' (Cic. Ad Fam. xiii. 30) applies to a 'negotiator.'

8. illis ipsis diebus,] Asconius reads 'his diebus paucis.' He observes that the consular 'comitia' took place on the 27th of July, and the trial began on the nones or 5th of August. He adds that the 'sortitio' of the praetors took place shortly after the 'comitia consularia,' the 'comitia praetoria' having, of course, preceded the 'sortitio.' The use of the ablative 'his diebus' expresses a measure of time by which two events are separated, 'within these few days;' and, if the reading 'illis ipsis diebus' is right, it means 'within those very few days that are there alluded to.' The praetors, who were at this period eight in number, determined by lot what functions they should severally exercise; and the lot had given to M. Metellus, one of the praetors elect (designati) for the next year, the office of holding the 'quaestiones de rebus repe-tundis;' and, if the trial of Verres could have been put off to the next year, M. Metellus would have presided instead of M' Acilius Glabrio. Klotz has: 'ut is domum quoque pueros mitteret.' Zumpt has the same, with the omission of 'pueros.'

fiscos complures cum pecunia] 'Several baskets with Sicilian money;' filled with some of the Sicilian plunder of Verres. 'Fiscus' signified a basket or receptacle of wicker-work, which the Romans used for the holding and conveying large sums of money, particularly for the purposes of the 'aerarium' or treasury. Mai, quoted by Klotz, says that in the Vatican Museum such a Fiscus full of money is represented cut on a stone, with a vessel near it to take out the pieces of money with, and the inscription VIATOR AD AERARIUM. (See the passages Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 85; and c. 79, 'qui fiscum sustulit.') In the Republican period the State, considered as possessing property, was indicated by the term 'aerarium', for all the functions of the State with respect to property were resolvable into receiving money into the 'aerarium' and paying it out. Under the Empire, that which the emperor was entitled to, as emperor, from the provinces under his administration, got the name of Fiscus; and that to which the Senate was entitled in respect of those provinces which they administered retained the name of 'aerarium.' The name 'fiscus' appears ad equitem Romanum esse translato; ex his quasi x fiscos ad senatorem illum relictos esse comitiorum meorum nomine; divisores omnium tribuum noctu ad istum vocatos. Ex quibus quidam, qui se omnia mea causa debere arbitrabatur, eadem illa nocte ad me venit; demonstrat qua iste oratione usus esset; commemorasse istum quam liberaliter eos tractasset etiam antea quum ipse praetura petisset, et proximis consularibus praetoriisque comitiis; deinde continuo esse pollicitum quantam vellent pecuniam, si me aedilitate deiecissent. Hic alios negasse audere, alios respondisse non putare id perfici posse; inventum tamen esse fortem amicum ex eadem familia, Q. Verrem Romilia, ex optima divisorum disciplina, patris istius discipulum atque amicum, qui HS. quingentis millibus depositis id se perfecturum polliceretur; et fuisse tamen nonnullos qui se una facturos esse dicerent. Quae quum ita essent, sane benevolo animo me ut magno opere caverem praemonebat.

IX. Sollicitabar rebus maximis uno atque eo perexiguo tempore. Urgebant comitia, et in his ipsis oppugnabar grandi pecunia. Instabat iudicium; ei quoque negotio fisci Sicilienses minabantur. Agere quae ad iudicium pertinebant libere comitiorum metu deterrebar: petitioni toto animo servire propter iudicium non licebat. Minari denique divisoribus ratio non erat, propterea quod eos intelligere videbam me hoc iudicio districtum atque obligatum to have been applied to the emperor's treasury, because his 'fisci' were more spoken of than those of the Senate; and finally, when all power was concentrated in the emperor, the term 'fiscus' was used to denote the whole property of the State; and it then signified what 'aerarium' did in the Republican period. (Savigny, System des Heut. Röm. Rechts, ii. p. 272; and Smith's Dict. of Antiquis. Fiscus).

a quodam senatore, &c.] Asconius observes that some foolishly ask about the names of the persons to whom Cicero alludes, as if all this were true.

ex his—relictos] Zumpt has a note to explain this. Several 'fisci' were sent by a senator to an 'eques.' Out of these 'several' about ten were left with the senator; not a very exact way of speaking. All of them seem to have been deposited with the senator, who kept about ten of them and sent the rest away.

comitiorum, &c.] 'For the purpose of preventing my being elected curule aedile.'

divisores] Asconius asks if these 'divisores' are legitimi such as all the tribes had, and are referred to by Plautus (Aul. i. 1, 20), or criminal 'divisores,' and he adds that, if Cicero meant criminal 'divisores,' he would not have said that one of them was dear to him. This is a sample of the trifling which is mixed up with better matter. The 'divisores' were the men who managed the distribution of bribery money, of whom we read in the oration Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 18, 19.

Q. Verrem Romilia] Or 'Romulea,' as Zumpt has it. The note of Asconius on this passage is good: 'Q. Verrem is a proper name, Romilia is the name of a tribe, in the ablative case, ut sit ex Romilia,' &c. This mode of referring a man to his tribe was usual, when the object was to designate him very particularly. When Cicero (Phil. ix. 7) moved that a monument should be erected to the memory of Servius Sulpicius, he commenced in the following terms: "Quum Ser. Sulpicius, Q. F., Lemonia, Rufus." Sulpicius was of the Tribus Lemonia.

9. districtum, &c.] 'Districtus' is explained by Asconius, "in diversum manu ducentium ferri." The notion of 'stringo' is 'to hold fast or grasp;' and he is said to be 'districtus' (distracted), who is so held by several things as to be unable to turn one way or the other. 'Obligatum' must be taken in its literal sense of 'bound,' or the futurum. Atque hoc ipso tempore Siculis denuntiatus esse audio, primum ab Hortensio, domum ad illum ut venirent: Siculos sane in eo liberos fuisse, qui quamobrem arcesserentur quum intelligerent, non venisse. Interea comitia nostra, quorum iste se ut ceterorum hoc anno comitiorum dominum esse arbitrabatur, haberi coepta sunt. Cursare iste, homo potens, cum filio blando et gratioso circum tribus; paternos amicos, hoc est divisores, appellare omnes et convenire. Quod quum esset intellectum et animadversum, fecit animo libentissimo populus Romanus ut, cujus divitiae me de fide deducere non potuissent, ne ejusdem pecunia de honore deiceretur. Posteaquam illa petitionis magna cura liberatus sum, animo coepi multo magis vacuo ac soluto nihil aliud nisi de judicio agere et cogitare. Reperio, judices, haec ab istis consilia inita et constituta, ut quacunque opus esset ratione res ita duceretur ut apud M. Metellum praetorem causa diceretur. In eo esse haec comoda; primum M. Metellum amicissimum; deinde Hortensium consulem non solum sed etiam Q. Metellum, qui quam isti sit amicus attendite. Dedit enim praerogativam suae voluntatis ejusnearly related sense of 'altogether engaged and occupied.' Shortly after he says, 'animo . . . vacuo et soluto.' Now as 'solvo' is the correlative of 'obligo,' 'vacuus' appears to be the correlative of 'districtus.' An 'obligatio,' in the legal sense, is terminated by 'solutio,' 'performance or payment.'

Siculos sane . . . non venisse] This passage caused a difficulty to Asconius, who proposes to read 'venissent;' and, if we observe that the next word begins with 'int,' it seems not improbable that the 'nt' of 'venissent' might have dropped out by accident. But the text is right, and we can hardly omit the 'qui,' as some critics propose. Cicero says: "I hear, or I admit, that the Sicilians were left to do as they liked in that matter, and that when they knew why they were sent for, they did not go." 'Qui' is the nominative to 'intelligent.'

'Arcesso' is compounded of the preposition 'ar' (ad), which occurs in the Bacchanalian inscription, in the verb 'arfuisse' (adfuisse), and 'cesso' which is formed from ci-eo, as 'facesso' from 'fac-io,' and 'laccio' from 'lac-io.'

convenire.] 'Quasi de promissorum debito,' says Asconius; and correctly. For 'convenire,' in one of its senses, is 'in jus vocare,' 'agere cum aliquo,' or to sue, as the passages cited from the Digest by Forcellini show. But, when Asconius says that 'appellare' means 'quasi familiares,' this is hardly consistent. If 'convenire' is to have this technical meaning, 'appellare' may also mean to call on a debtor to pay what he owes. Cic. Ad Att. i. 8. 'Tulliola tuum munusculum flagitat et me ut sponsorem appellat.'—'Pecuniae . . . deicerent.' Orell.

praerogativam, &c.] The figure is 'dilogia' according to the pedantic expression of the old commentator, 'quum ambiguum dictum duas res significat.' 'For Metellus gave such an intimation of his disposition (towards Verres) that he may be considered to have made it a return for the first votes which Verres secured for him.' Orelli reads 'eam' for 'jam' (iam), and it may be the true reading. The tribe, which by lot obtained the right of voting first at the Comitia, was called 'praerogativa,' because 'prima rogaretur,' it was first called on to vote; (comp. Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 20, and Livy, x. 22;) and the Centuriae, which were contained in the 'tribus praerogativa,' and voted first, were also called 'praerogativae' (Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 33). As the vote of the first 'centuriae' in a manner determined the election, or gave some indication of the turn which the voting would take, it was a matter of importance to secure these votes, in order that the 'centuriae,' which voted after them (to which the term 'jure vocatae' was applied), might be thus influenced. Hence 'praerogativa' came to be used in the sense of a sign or probable modi ut isti pro praerogativis jam reddidisse videatur. An me taciturnum tantis de rebus existimavistis, et in tanto rei publicae existimationisque meae periculo cuiquam consulturum potius quam officio et dignitati meae? Arcessit alter consul designatus Siculos: veniunt nonnulli propterea quod L. Metellus esset praetor in Sicilia. Cum his ita loquitur: se consulem esse; fratrem suum alterum Siciliam provinciam obtinere, alterum esse quaesiturum de pecuniis repetundis: Verri ne noceri possit multis rationibus esse provisum.

X. Quid est, quaeso, Metelle, iudicium corrumpere, si hoc non est? testes, praesertim Siculos, timidos homines et afflictos, non solum auctoritate detertere sed etiam consulari metu et duorum praetorum potestate? Quid faceres pro homine innocente et propinquo, quum propter hominem perditissimum atque alienissimum de officio ac dignitate decedis, et committis ut quod ille dictitat alicui qui te ignorat verum esse videatur? Nam hoc Verrem dicere aiebant, te non fato ut ceteros ex vestra familia sed opera sua consulem factum. Duo igitur consules et quaesitor erunt ex illius voluntate. indication of the future, as in a letter of Cato to Cicero (Ad Fam. xv. 5), and in Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 20.

provinciam obtinere,] 'To hold the government of a province:' 'to obtain' is not the meaning. 'Quaesiturum de pecuniis repetundis,' that is, 'would preside in the Quaestio de pecuniis repetundis.' See Excursus i. 'Quaesitor' occurs in the next chapter, and is correctly explained by Asconius, 'praetor de pecuniis repetundis quaestionem exercens;' and he quotes Virgil, Aen. vi. 432: 'Quaesitor Minos urnam movet.'—'Cum iis ita, &c.,' Orelli.

10. qui te ignorat] This is the reading of Orelli. Zumpt and Klotz have 'ignoret.' It is one of those cases in which, as far as we can judge, usage was somewhat unsettled.

te non fato] According to Asconius, the old poet Naevius said of the Metelli, "Fato Metelli Romae fiunt consules;"

to which Metellus, the then consul, replied,

"Dabunt malum Metelli Naevio poetae."

It is said that Q. Metellus, consul B.C. 206, a contemporary of Cn. Naevius, was one of those who were the cause of Naevius being banished from Italy. It is, however, argued, that this verse, 'Fato,' &c., could hardly be by Naevius, the author of the poem on the Punic War, as it was in his lifetime that two of the Metelli were the first of their family who attained the highest honours of the state. It is concluded, then, that the verse, 'Fato Metelli,' &c., was a saying current among the people, and that Cicero alludes to it.

M. Caesonius,] Caesonius was now one of the 'judices;' but, as he was elected 'aedilis' with Cicero for the following year, he could not, during his office, act as 'iudex,' if the trial should be deferred to the next year, which was the great object of Verres, as Cicero says. It appears from what follows, that the 'aediles,' as well as the 'consuls' and 'praetors,' at this time entered on their office on the 1st of January. C. Junius was the 'quaesitor' under a 'Lex Cornelia,' on the occasion of A. Cluentius prosecuting his step-father Oppianicus, who was convicted of an attempt to poison, as it was believed, through some of the 'judices' being bribed by Cluentius. Caesonius, however, was innocent, and, according to Cicero, helped to expose the villany (Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer, p. 429, 654).

collega nostri accusatoris, homo in rebus judicandis spectatus et cognitus; quem minime expediat esse in eo consilio quod conemur aliqua ratione corrumpere, propterea quod jam antea, quum judex in Juniano consilio fuisset, turpissimum illud facinus non solum graviter tulit, sed etiam in medium protulit. Hunc judicem ex Kal. Januar. non habebimus. Q. Manlium et Q. Cornificium, duos severissimos atque integerrimos judices, quod tribuni plebis tum erunt, judices non habebimus. P. Sulpicius, judex tristis et integer, magistratum ineat necesse est Nonis Decembr. M. Crepereius ex acerrima illa equestri familia et disciplina, L. Cassius ex familia tum ad ceteras res tum ad judicandum severissima, Cn. Tremellius homo summa religione et diligentia, tres hi homines veteres tribuni militares sunt designati; ex Kal. Januar. non judicabunt. Subsortiemur etiam in M. Metelli locum, quoniam is huic ipsi quaestioni praefuturus est. Ita secundum Kalendas Januar. et praetore et prope toto consilio commutato, magnas accusatoris minas magnamque judicii expectationem ad nostrum arbitrium libidinemque eludemus. Nonae sunt hodie Sextiles. Hora nona convenire coepistis. Hunc diem jam ne numerant quidem. Decem dies sunt ante ludos votivos quos Cn. Pompeius factururus est. Hi ludi dies quindecim auferent; deinde continuo Romani consequentur. Ita prope xl diebus interpositis, tum denique se ad ea

Q. Manlium et Q. Cornificium,] It is not said here when the 'tribuni plebis' entered on their office, nor can we assume that it was the nones of December, for Asconius, who observes that P. Sulpicius would enter on his office of 'tribunus plebis' on that day, has drawn a false conclusion, or barely asserted what is not true. If P. Sulpicius had been a 'tribune,' he would have been mentioned with L. Manlius and Q. Cornificius. Klotz is inclined to the opinion of the scholiast of Gronovius, that P. Sulpicius may have been a 'quaestor.' It appears that the 'tribunes' entered on their office before the 'consuls' (De Leg. Agr. ii. 5). Cicero was on terms of intimacy with the son of this Cornificius, to whom he addressed several letters (Ad Fam. xii. 17, 18, 19).

tribuni militares] Those chief officers of a legion, 'tribuni militum,' or 'militares,' who were elected by the people, were called, says Asconius, 'Comitiati;' and those who were appointed in the army, by the commander, were called 'Rufuli.' The exact meaning of the word 'veteres' does not seem clear. Zumpt supposes that it means 'exercitati, rerum judiciorumque gnari.'

subsortiemur] 'Subsortiri' is the word used to express the choosing of 'judices' to take the place of those who were challenged (rejecti), or became incapable of acting as 'judices,' in consequence of holding a 'magistratus.' See Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 19, 61.

secundum] Here the meaning of the word 'secundus' (sequendus) is clearly shown, and in a passage which shortly after follows, 'secundum quos,' 'after which;' from which notion of 'following' are derived the various senses of 'secundum.'—'Hora octava:' Klotz, Zumpt.

Cn. Pompeius] The games which Cn. Pompeius had vowed, as Asconius says, if he should conquer Sertorius. Sertorius was now dead. The war in Spain ended in B.C. 72.

deinde continuo] Then, 'without any interruption,' for this is the meaning of 'continuus.' The 'Ludi Romani,' or 'Circenses Magni,' were celebrated in the Circus Maximus, between the first and the nineteenth of September, it is said. From the 16th of August to the 19th of September makes thirty-five days, which Cicero in round numbers calls nearly forty.

quae a nobis dicta erunt responsuros esse arbitrantur: deinde se ducturos et dicendo et excusando facile ad ludos Victoriae. Cum his plebeios esse conjunctos; secundum quos aut nulli aut perpauca dies ad agendum futuri sunt. Ita defessa ac refrigerata accusatione rem integram ad M. Metellum praetorem esse venturam. Quem ego hominem, si ejus fidei diffisus essem judicem non retinuissem; nunc tamen hoc animo sum ut eo judice quam praetore hanc rem transigi malim, et jurato suam quam injurato aliorum tabellas committere.

Si utar ad dicendum meo legitimo tempore, mei laboris industriae diligentiaeque capiam fructum; et ex accusatione perficiam ut nemo unquam post hominum memoriam paratior, vigilantior, compositior ad judicium venisse videatur. Sed in hac laude industriae meae reus ne elabatur summum periculum est. Quid est igitur quod fieri possit? non obscurum, opinor, neque absconditum. Fructum istum laudis, qui ex perpetua oratione percipi potuit, in alia tempora reservemus: nunc excusando—Victoriae.] These 'Ludi Victoriae' were instituted by L. Cornelius Sulla after his victory over the Samnites (Vell. Pat. ii. 27); and they began on the 27th of October. By talking, and availing themselves of legal technical grounds for delay, they would push on the matter to the end of October. 'Excusare' and 'excusatio' are the terms for legal grounds of excuse, which, in this instance, mean legal causes of delay in answering. In the Fragmenta Vaticana there is a long chapter, 'De Excusatione,' the matter of which, though not applicable to this case, shows what the meaning of the term is.

plebeios] These games began on the 4th and lasted to the 17th of November; and thus the year would be near an end.

jurato] Metellus, as a 'judex,' was sworn, but he would not be required to take an oath when presiding as 'praetor' in the following year. As a 'judex,' he would only have his own 'tabella' or 'voting tablet' to look after, which Cicero says he would rather trust him with on his oath, than have him as 'praetor' unsworn, and with the influence over the votes which his office would give him. Though the 'praetor' did not take an oath, a 'quaesitor,' or 'judex quaestionis,' who acted for the 'praetor,' took an oath (Pro Cluent. c. 33), as Klotz observes. 'Hoc animo:' Orelli has 'eo

II. legitimo tempore,] 'All the time which the law (lex) allowed;' that is, the 'lex de repetundis.' 'Legitimus' must not be translated 'legal,' for 'legal' is a more comprehensive term than 'legitimus,' which means, according to some 'lex,' that is, some special enactment. The following passage from Gaius will explain this term (i. § 155): "quibus testamento quidem tutor datus non sit, iis ex lege xii agnati sunt tutores, qui vocantur legitimi." They were called 'legitimi,' because they derived their office from the 'Lex Duodecim Tabularum.' See also Gaius, iv. § 103. The term 'pactum' has already been explained. When an agreement was concluded in some form that did not belong to the head either of 'res,' 'verba,' 'litterae,' or 'consensus' (Gaius, iii. 80), it was simply a 'pactum,' and could not be the foundation of an action, though it might be an answer or plea (exceptio) to an action. But some 'pacta' were, by particular 'leges' or enactments, made the ground of actions, which is expressed thus (Dig. 2. 14. 6): "Legitima conventio est quae lege aliqua confirmatur," &c. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 9: 'de meis legitimis horis—: nisi omni tempore quod mihi lege concessum est,' &c.

hominem tabulis, testibus, privatis publicisque literis auctoritatibusque accusemus. Res omnis mihi tecum erit, Hortensi. Dicam aperte. Si te mecum dicendo ac diluendis criminibus in hac causa contendere putarem, ego quoque in accusando atque in explicandis criminibus operam consumerem: nunc quoniam pugnare contra me instituisti, non tam ex tua natura quam ex istius tempore et causa, malitiose, necesse est istiusmodi rationi aliquo consilio obsistere. Tua ratio est ut secundum binos ludos mihi respondere incipias; mea ut ante primos ludos comperendinem. Ita fiet ut tua ista ratio existimetur astuta, meum hoc consilium necessarium.

XII. Verum illud quod institueram dicere, mihi rem tecum esse, huiusmodi est. Ego quum hanc causam Siculorum rogatu recepissem, idque mihi amplum et praeclarum existimassem, eos velle is a continuous oration, uninterrupted by the reading of evidence or the examination of witnesses. The notion of 'perpetuus' is uninterrupted, and has no reference to 'perpetual' in the English sense. 'Perpetuus' is equivalent to 'continuus,' and so it appears in the funeral inscriptions, when it is used to denote the number of 'ollae' in a continuous row which were appropriated to a person in a monumentum (Fabretti, Inscript. Antiq. p. 11):

L . ABVCCIVS . HERA . OLLAS
SINGVLARES . PERPETVAS
V . SIBI . ET . SVIS

where Fabretti shows that Reinesius misunderstood the sense of 'perpetuas,' which Fabretti proves by other examples to be synonymous with 'continuas,' 'continentes,' and 'ex ordine.' See Excursus iv. Edicta magistratuum.

auctoritatibusque] Cicero intends to establish his case by 'tabulae,' documentary evidence; 'testibus,' by witnesses; and by the letters and other confirmatory evidence of private persons and public bodies. The word 'auctoritas' must be explained by reference to its general sense of that which gives credibility to a thing, or confirms a thing, or gives it the completeness which is required for any purposes. Thus, the 'auctoritas' of a tutor; that is, his sanction, his approbation, gives to the act of the 'pupillus,' which would be insufficient without it, its full legal effect. Cicero accordingly seems to intend here every kind of confirmatory testimony which does not exactly come within the meaning of the terms which he has already used. See c. 3. malitiose,] Klotz has a useful note on the technical sense of 'malitia' (Pro Cae-cina, c. 1). Its literal signification of 'badness' does not express its meaning here. It is that badness in the purpose which consists in availing oneself of a legal right, or of legal forms, in a manner which morality condemns; for nothing is clearer than that a man may make an immoral use of a legal right. Klotz refers to the following passages, which will assist the reader in ascertaining the notion of 'malitia': Tuscul. Disput. iv. 15: 'nam malitia certe cujusdam,' &c.; and De Off. iii. 17: 'eaeque malitia quae vult illa quidem videri se esse prudentiam, sed abest ab ea distatque plurimum.' The character of the word is shown by the company which it keeps: its companions are 'calliditas, fraus, et calumnia.' Cicero (De Nat. Deorum, iii. 30) calls the 'judicium de dolo malo,' which C. Aquilius introduced, the broom or besom (everriculum) for sweeping away all 'malitiae.' Ulpian, Ad Edictum (Dig. 4. 3. 1), uses 'malitia' in this technical sense: "hoc edicto Praetor adversus varios et dolosos qui aliis obfuerunt calliditate quadam subvenit, ne vel illis malitia sua sit lucrosa vel istis simplicitas damnosa."

comperendinem.] 'Comperendinare' is to put off a thing to the third day (perendie); and, according to Festus, "Res comperendinata significat iudicium in tertium diem constitutum." Cicero tells his adversary that his design was to defer his answer until after the two first 'ludi' were over; while his own plan was to have his own speech, and his adversary's too, over before the commencement of the first 'ludi,' and so to come to the 'comperendinatio.' What this means is explained in a note to Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 9.

meae fidei diligentiaeque periculum facere qui innocentiae abstinentiaeque fecissent; tum suscepto negotio majus mihi quiddam proposui, in quo meam in rem publicam voluntatem populus Romanus perspicere posset. Nam illud mihi nequaquam dignum industria conatuque meo videbatur, istum a me in iudicium jam omnium iudicio condemnatum vocari, nisi ista tua intolerabilis potentia et ea cupiditas, qua per hosce annos in quibusdam iudiciis usus es, etiam in istius hominis desperati causa interponeretur. Nunc vero quoniam haec te omnis dominatio regnumque iudiciorum tanto opere delectat, et sunt homines quos libidinis infamiaeque suae neque pudeat neque taedeat, qui quasi de industria in odium offensionemque populi Romani irruere videantur, hoc me profiteor suscepisse, magnum fortasse onus et mihi periculosum, verumtamen dignum in quo omnes nervos aetatis industriaeque meae contenderem. Quoniam totus ordo paucorum improbitate et audacia premitur et urgetur infamia iudiciorum, profiteor huic generi hominum me inimicum, accusatorem odiosum, assiduum, acerbum adversarium. Hoc mihi sumo, hoc mihi depono quod agam in magistratu, quod agam ex eo loco ex quo me populus Romanus ex Kal. Januar. secum agere de re publica ac de hominibus improbis voluit; hoc munus aedilitatis meae populo Romano amplissimum pulcherrimumque polliceor. Moneo, praedico, ante denuntio, qui munus aedilitatis] Asconius sees here some allusion to the name of Verres, which signifies a boar pig, but it is difficult for other people to see it. Part of the 'munus' of the curule aedileship consisted in the exhibition of shows to the people; but Cicero says that the best thing that he can show the people will be the prosecution of the 'improbi.' 'Munus' is a word which implies a duty or obligation to discharge certain functions, in consequence of holding a certain office, or sustaining a certain character (persona). The sense in which 'munus' is used in the Digest (50. tit. 4. 'De Muneribus et Honoribus') helps to explain the general meaning of the term. It is often used in the plural number to express the plays, fights of gladiators, and other spectacles with which the Roman people were amused. Cicero (Phil. ii. 45) says: "muneribus, monumentis, congiariis, epulis multitudinem imperitam delenierat."

12. ex eo loco . . . secum agere] 'De Rostris scilicet,' says Asconius. Cicero threatens to bring any persons who should be guilty of bribery on this occasion before the 'Populus,' that is, before a 'Iudicium Populi,' after entering on his office of Curule Aedile. It is a matter of doubt with some of the commentators whether he could do it. 'Agere cum populo' means to propose a measure to the 'populus' (Gellius, xiii. 15). Niebuhr (Roman Hist. Vol. iii. Engl. Transl.) has some remarks on the powers of the curule aediles as public prosecutors. Zumpt refers to Liv. xxv. c. 2; xxxiii. c. 42; xxxv. c. 10.

Moneo, &c.] Klotz considers these words to be formal words of threatening a judicial prosecution, and also of declaring war; and he refers to Terence, Andria, Prolog. 22: 'Dehinc ut quiescant porro moneo et desinant Maledicere.' But 'moneo' and 'praedico' are words of common use; and so is 'denuntio,' as in Cicero (Ad Fam. xi. 25). The words 'deponere,' and the rest, have a technical sense, which appears to be rightly indicated by Asconius, and expounded by Klotz. Cicero comprehends in these words all the means and all the persons employed in corruption. 'Deponere' is to deposit a sum of money in the hands of a person, which money is to be paid to the bribed, if they do their work.

aut deponere, aut recipere, aut accipere, aut polliceri, aut sequestres, aut interpretes corrumpendi iudicii solent esse, quique ad hanc rem aut potentiam aut impudentiam suam professi sunt, abstineant in hoc iudicio manus animosque ab hoc scelere nefario.

XIII. Erit tum consul Hortensius cum summo imperio et potestate, ego autem aedilis, hoc est, paulo amplius quam privatus; tamen haec hujusmodi res est, quam me acturum esse polliceor, ita populo Romano grata atque jucunda ut ipse consul in hac causa prae me minus etiam, si fieri possit, quam privatus esse videatur. Omnia non modo commemorabuntur, sed etiam expositis certis rebus agentur, quae inter decem annos, posteaquam iudicia ad senatum translata sunt, in rebus judicandis nefarie flagitioseque facta sunt. Cognoscet ex me populus Romanus quid sit quamobrem, quum equester ordo iudicaret annos prope quinquaginta continuos, nullo iudice equite Romano iudicante ne tenuissima quidem suspicio acceptae pecuniae ob rem iudicandam constituta sit; quid sit quod iudiciis ad senatorium ordinem translatis sub-

'Recipere,' a word that implies engagement or undertaking, may refer to him who undertakes to pay the 'judices' a certain sum for their votes; and he would be not the accused himself, but the agent of the accused. Zumpt says: 'mihi quidem recipere videtur sequester ab eo qui deponit pecuniam;' which I do not assent to. 'Accipere' clearly applies to him who is bribed, to the 'iudex.' 'Polliceri' is not so clear. It is mis-explained by Klotz, who makes it signify the promise of the 'iudex' to him who proposes the bribe to him; but this is not the meaning of 'polliceri' (note on Divin. c. 1). Cicero's words are general, and yet particular enough, without descending to a minute examination of them. 'Polliceri' here means, as usual, to make a proffer, and it may mean either a proffer of the 'judices' to sell their votes, or a proffer of the corrupter to buy the votes. 'Sequestres' are the persons in whose hands money is deposited, to be afterwards distributed among the bribed; and 'interpretes' were the managers and brokers of the bargain.

13. cum summo imperio, &c.] The consuls had both 'imperium' and 'potestas'; and they had the 'summum imperium.' Some 'magistratus,' the tribunes, for instance, had only 'potestas.' We can say 'consularis potestas,' or 'tribunicia potestas' (c. 15), and 'imperium consulare,' but not 'imperium tribunicium.' 'Summo cum imperio' could be applied to a 'propraetor' in his provincial administration, for he had full power, both civil and military (Cic. Ad Q. Fr. i. 1, 2). The 'summum imperium' included the highest judicial authority, in the Roman sense (Dig. 2. tit. 1. De Jurisdictione). The two words, 'imperium' and 'potestas,' are explained in Smith's Dict. of Antiqs. See also Excursus iv.

sed etiam—agentur,] This is one of those Roman expressions which are very difficult to translate, owing to their having a generality, for which we have nothing corresponding. The orator says, 'every thing shall be, I don't say simply told, but, after certain matters are set forth, every thing shall, in every possible way, be brought before you, which,' &c. Comp. Div. c. 12: "causa non solum exponenda sed etiam graviter copioseque agenda est," &c.

decem annos,] Ten years, in round numbers, since Sulla transferred the 'iudicia' to the senate. The real time was somewhat above eleven years. The 'prope quinquaginta annos' is also an exaggeration, for the real time was about forty-one years.

nullo iudice, &c.] This is the reading of all the old MSS. Zumpt has 'in nullo iudice.' 'Locus corruptus,' says Orelli. Klotz points it thus: 'nullo iudice, equite Romano iudicante,' and explains it, in his own way, in his preface. The simplest change would be to write 'nulla.' Madvig proposes: 'in nullo iudice ne tenuissima,' &c.

sublataque . . potestate] As Asconius explains it, the appeal to the 'populus,' lataque populi Romani in unumquemque nostrum potestate Q. Calidius damnatus dixerit, minoris HS tricies praetorium hominem honeste non posse damnari; quid sit quod, P. Septimio senatore damnato, Q. Hortensio praetore, de pecuniis repetundis, lis aestimata sit eo nomine quod ille ob rem judicandam pecuniam accepisset; quod in C. Herennio, quod in C. Popillio, senatoribus, qui ambo peculatus damnati sunt; quod in M. Atilio, qui de maiestate damnatus est, hoc planum factum est, eos pecuniam ob rem judicandam accepisse; quod inventi sunt senatores qui, C. Verre praetore urbano sortiente, exirent in eum reum quem incognita causa condemnarent; quod inventus est senator, qui quum iudex esset, in eodem iudicio et ab reo pecuniam acciperet quam iudicibus divideret, et ab accusatore ut reum damnaret? Jam vero quomodo illam labem, ignominiam, calamitatemque totius ordinis conquerar, hoc factum esse in hac civitate, quum senatorius ordo iudicaret, ut discoloribus signis juratorum hominum sententiae notarentur? Haec omnia me diligenter severeque acturum esse polliceor.

XIV. Quo me tandem animo fore putetis, si quid in hoc ipso that is, to the 'tribuni plebis.' Klotz reads here: 'unum quemque vestrum.' See note on c. 1: 'vestri ordinis.'

Q. Calidius] He had been praetor in Spain, B.C. 78, and was tried on a charge of Repetundae, and condemned. His 'judices,' it appeared, were bribed to convict him at a moderate sum; and the accused said that a man of his rank could not be convicted honourably to the 'judices' for less than 'tricies,' which was as much as to say that, if they sold themselves, they ought to get a good price. Zumpt reads 'HS xxx;' and adds, 'mihi nunc xxx, i. e. quae singuli iudices acceperint satis videtur, siquidem in causa Cluentiana, c. 26, quadragena dabantur.'

lis aestimata sit] The 'litis aestimatio,' in criminal matters, was this: if a person was condemned in a criminal trial, it might be necessary in some cases, as in trials for Repetundae, and for receiving a bribe as a 'iudex' (ob judicandum), to ascertain and assess the damages or amount which the condemned person had to pay; and this was the 'litis aestimatio.' This man, P. Septimius Scaevola, was tried B.C. 72, but it does not appear on what charge. In the 'litis aestimatio,' account was taken, it is said, of his having received a bribe in his capacity of 'iudex' (ob rem judicandam). Cicero alludes to him in the Pro Cluentio, c. 41.

peculatus] 'Peculatus' is the offence of a man appropriating public money (pecunia publica) to his own use. Atilius was convicted on a charge of Majestas, as Cicero observes; and it further appears that he and the others, who are mentioned, had also been guilty of receiving bribes as 'judices.'

sortiente,] This word expresses the praetor's activity in his office as presiding at a trial. The case alluded to in the words 'exirent in eum reum,' is that of Oppianicus, whom one of the 'judices' was charged with voting against, though he had not heard the evidence. Though Cicero uses the plural 'exirent,' there was only one person to whom the charge did apply, and even he (C. Fidiculanus Falcus) was acquitted of the charge, as Cicero tells us (Pro Cluentio, c. 37). Though he was generally suspected to have been guilty, it suited Cicero's purpose, when speaking for Cluentius, to consider him innocent.

qui quum iudex esset, in eodem iudicio] This man, who was charged with taking money in the Judicium Junianum from both sides, was C. Aelius Stalenus, or Staienus, who is mentioned in the oration Pro Cluentio, c. 24, &c.

discoloribus signis] See Divin. c. 7. These 'signa' are the 'cerae' of different colours.

judicio intellexero simili aliqua ratione esse violatum atque commissum? quum praesertim planum facere multis testibus possim, C. Verrem in Sicilia multis audientibus saepe dixisse, se habere hominem potentem cujus fiducia provinciam spoliaret; neque sibi soli pecuniam quaerere, sed ita triennium illud praeturae Siciliensis distributum habere, ut secum praeclare agi diceret, si unius anni quaestum in rem suam converteret, alterum patronis et defensoribus suis traderet, tertium illum uberrimum quaestuosissimumque annum totum iudiciis reservaret. Ex quo mihi venit in mentem illud dicere quod apud M' Glabrimonem nuper quum in rejiciendis iudiciis commemorassem, intellexi vehementer populum Romanum commoveri, me arbitrari fore uti nationes exterae legatos ad populum Romanum mitterent, ut lex de pecuniis repetundis iudiciumque tolleretur. Si enim iudicia nulla sint, tantum unumquemque ablaturum putant quantum sibi ac liberis suis satis esse arbitretur: nunc quod ejusmodi iudicia sint, tantum unumquemque auferre quantum sibi, patronis, advocatis, praetori, iudiciis satis futurum sit; hoc profecto infinitum esse: se avarissimi hominis cupiditati satisfacere posse, nocentissimae victoriae non posse. O commemoranda iudicia praeclaramque existimationem nostri ordinis! quum socii populi Romani iudicia de pecuniis repetundis fieri nolunt, quae a majoribus nostris sociorum causa comparata sunt. An iste unquam de se bonam spem habuisset, nisi de vobis malam opinionem animo imbibisset? Quo majore etiam, si fieri potest, apud vos odio esse debet quam est apud populum Romanum, quum in avaritia, scelere, perjurio vos sui similes esse arbitretur.

XV. Cui loco, per deos immortales, iudices, consulite ac pro-

14. ut secum praeclare agi, &c.] This is one of the uses of this almost universal term 'agere.' Verres said 'that he should think that he came off very well.' The same expression occurs in another place (De Am. c. 3), where the gravity of the subject requires a somewhat different rendering. See also Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 4: 'praeclare nobiscum actum iri.'

quod apud M' Glabrimonem] The word 'quod' depends directly on 'commemorassem,' though the word 'commoveri' also must be connected with it; but its grammatical case is determined by 'commemorassem.' The ordinary placing of a comma after 'nuper,' and another after 'commemorassem,' is very absurd.

Si—sint,—putant] This is not an exception to the rule that 'si' is used with a subjunctive to suppose a non-existing case, and that the corresponding clause must have the subjunctive also, as in 'Tu si hic sis, aliter sentias.' In this case, 'putant' is a positive opinion. 'They think that, if there were no iudicia, every man would take only what he thought to be sufficient,' &c. See Key's Latin Gram. § 1213, &c. Orelli has 'arbitrentur.'

nocentissimae] Klotz has 'nocentissumi:' but he does not say on what authority. The reading at first sight appears specious, as 'nocentissumi' would correspond to 'avarissumi.' But 'avarissimus' is sufficient, and the word 'cupiditas,' 'greediness,' has for its counterpart not 'victoriae,' but 'nocentissimae victoriae.'

15. Cui loco,] This is another of these general words, which here signifies a 'matter' or 'part of the subject of discourse.' The reference is to the words at the end of the videte. Moneo praedicoque id quod intelligo, tempus opportunissimum vobis hoc divinitus datum esse, ut odio, invidia, infamia, turpitudine totum ordinem liberetis. Nulla in judiciis severitas, nulla religio, nulla denique jam existimantur esse judicia. Itaque a populo Romano contemnimur, despicihur: gravi diuturnaue jam flagramus infamia. Neque enim ullam aliam ob causam populus Romanus tribuniciam potestatem tanto studio requisivit, quam quum poscebat, verbo illam poscere videbatur, re vera judicia poscebat. Neque hoc Q. Catulum, hominem sapientissimum atque amplissimum, fugit, qui Cn. Pompeio, viro fortissimo et clarissimo, de tribunicia potestate referente, quum esset sententiam rogatus, hoc initio est summa cum auctoritate usus: Patres conscriptos judicia male et flagitiose tueri, quod si in rebus judicandis populi Romani existimationi satisfacere voluissent, non tanto opere homines fuisse tribuniciam potestatem desideraturos. Ipse denique Cn. Pompeius, quum primum contionem ad urbem consul designatus habuit, ubi id quod maxime exspectari videbatur ostendit, se tribuniciam potestatem restitutum, factus est in eo strepitus et grata contionis admurmuratio. Idem in eadem contione quum dixisset, populas vexatasque esse provincias; judicia autem turpia ac flagitiosa fieri; ei rei se providere ac consulere velle; tum vero non strepitu sed maximo clamore suam populus Romanus significavit voluntatem.

preceding chapter. He thinks that you are as bad as he is. 'Now I entreat you to find an answer to this assumption of his.'—Klotz and Zumpt read: 'tempus hoc vobis divinitus datum esse.'

contemnimur, &c.] Klotz observes that Cicero could say 'contemnimur' since his quaestorship, by which he obtained admission to the Senate; and he refers to Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 11: "qui honos non homini solum habetur, sed primum populo Romano cujus beneficio nos in hunc ordinem venimus."

referente,] This is the word used to signify the proposing of a matter to the Senate. Ad Fam. xvi. 11.: 'Sed Lentulus consul . . . dixit se relaturum.' 'Sententiam rogare' is said of the consul or other magistrate who called on a senator for his opinion. Klotz refers to Vell. Pater. ii. 30, and Suetonius, Caesar. 5, as to the restoration of the 'Tribunicia Potestas' in the first consulship of Cn. Pompeius, in B.C. 70, the same year in which Cicero delivered this oration. 'Patres conscripti' as equivalent to 'Senatores,' oc-

ad urbem] On which Asconius falsely remarks 'in urbe.' Cn. Pompeius after returning from the war against Sertorius in Spain, where he had proconsular power, waited outside of the city, because he was expecting the honour of a triumph, and he could not enter the city while he held this 'imperium' until the Senate had granted him a triumph. As 'consul designatus' he therefore addressed the people (contio) outside of the walls. Cicero, who was expecting a triumph after his Cilician victories, says in a letter to Tiro (Ad Fam. xvi. 11): "ego ad urbem accessi, pridie Nonas Januarias." The phrases are: 'ad urbem accedere, venire, esse.' Klotz refers to Cort, Sallust. Catilin. 30. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 6. Klotz observes that 'Romae' is a more general expression, and is not the same as 'in urbe.' (Paulus, Dig. 50. 16. 2): "Urbis appellatio muris, Romae autem continentibus aedificiis finitur, quod latius patet."

XVI. Nunc autem homines in speculis sunt: observant quemadmodum sese unusquisque vestrum gerat in retinenda religione conservandisque legibus. Vident adhuc post legem tribuniciam unum senatorem vel tenuissimum esse damnatum; quod tametsi non reprehendunt, tamen magno opere quod laudent non habent. Nulla est enim laus ibi esse integrum ubi nemo est qui aut possit aut conetur corrumpere. Hoc est iudicium in quo vos de reo, populus Romanus de vobis iudicabit. In hoc homine statuatur, possitne senatoribus iudicantibus homo nocentissimus pecuniosissimusque damnari. Deinde est ejusmodi reus, in quo homine nihil sit praeter summa peccata maximamque pecuniam, ut, si liberatus sit, nulla alia suspicio nisi ea quae turpissima est residere possit: non gratia, non cognatione, non aliis recte factis, non denique aliquo mediocri vitio tot tantaque ejus vitia sublevata esse existimabuntur. Postremo ego causam sic agam, iudices: ejusmodi res ita notas, ita testatas, ita magnas, ita manifestas proferam ut nemo a vobis ut istum absolvatis per gratiam conetur contendere. Habeo autem certam viam atque rationem qua omnes illorum conatus investigare et consequi possim: ita res a me agetur ut in eorum consiliis omnibus non modo aures hominum sed etiam oculi Populi Romani interesse videantur. Vos aliquot jam per annos conceptam huic ordini turpitudinem atque infamiam delere ac tollere potestis. Constat inter omnes, post haec constituta iudicia quibus nunc utimur, nullum hoc splendore atque hac dignitate consilium fuisse. Hic si quid erit offensum, omnes homines non jam ex eodem ordine alios magis idoneos, quod fieri non potest, sed alium omnino ordinem ad res iudicandas quaerendum arbitrabuntur.

XVII. Quapropter primum ab diis immortalibus, quod sperare mihi videor, hoc idem, iudices, peto ut in hoc iudicio nemo improbus praeter eum, qui jampridem inventus est, reperiatur: deinde, si plures improbi fuerint, hoc vobis, hoc populo Romano, iudices, confirmo, vitam mehercule mihi prius quam vim perseverantiamque ad illorum improbitatem persequendam defuturam. Verum quod ego unum senatorem] Asconius says it was Dolabella. Manutius observes that the old commentator was mistaken.

16. in speculis sunt:] 'They are on the look-out.' A 'specula' (σκοπία) is a tower or any lofty place, from which we command a view. Cicero calls Narbo Martius (Narbonne), a Roman colony in Gallia, a specula (Pro Fonteio, c. 1). Strabo describes a specula on the summit of Tmolus: ὁ Τμῶλος εὐδαιμον ὄρος ἐν τῇ ἀκρωρείᾳ σκοπήν ἔχον λευκοῦ λίθου Περσῶν ἔργον ἀφ' οὗ κατοπτρεύεται τὰ κύκλῳ πέδια (ed. Cas. 625).

vitia sublevata] 'People will not suppose that so many and such monstrous crimes have been cleared away by any small crime.' See Divin. c. 2; and as to the different senses of the word 'tollere' also, see Heindorf, Hor. 1 Sat. iv. 11.

laboribus, periculis, inimicitiisque meis tum quum admissum erit dedecus, severe me persecuturum esse polliceor, id ne accadat tu tua sapientia, auctoritate, diligentia, M' Glabrio, potes providere. Suscipe causam judiciorum; suscipe causam severitatis, integritatis, fidei, religionis; suscipe causam senatus, ut is hoc judicio probatus cum populo Romano et in laude et in gratia esse possit. Cogita [qui sis], quo loco sis, quid dare populo Romano, quid reddere majoribus tuis debeas; fac tibi paternae legis Aciliae veniat in mentem, qua lege populus Romanus de pecuniis repetundis optimis judiciis severissimisque iudiciis usus est. Circumstant te summae auctoritates quae te oblivisci laudis domesticae non sinant, quae te dies noctesque commoneant fortissimum tibi patrem, sapientissimum avum, gravissimum socerum fuisse. Quare si Glabrionis patris vim et acrimoniam ceperis ad resistendum hominibus audacissimis; si avi Scaevolae prudentiam ad prospiciendas insidias quae tuae atque horum famae comparantur; si soceri Scauri constantiam ut ne quis te de vera et certa possit sententia demovere; intelliget populus Romanus integerrimo atque honestissimo praetore delectoque consilio nocenti reo magnitudinem pecuniae plus habuisse momenti ad suspicionem criminis quam ad rationem salutis.

XVIII. Mihi certum est non committere ut in hac causa praetor nobis consiliumque mutetur. Non patiar rem in id tempus adduci, ut Siculi, quos adhuc servi designatorum consulum non moverunt, quum eos novo exemplo universos arcesserent, eos tum lictores consulum vocent; ut homines miseri, antea socii atque amici populi Romani, nunc servi ac supplices, non modo jus suum fortunasque omnes eorum imperio amittant, verum etiam deplorandi juris sui avi Scaevolae] Glabrio the father married a daughter of P. Scaevola, who was therefore the grandfather of this Glabrio. Asconius says that this was Scaevola, the learned jurist, who was consul with Cn. Piso (B.C. 133), the year in which Tiberius Gracchus was killed. But Piso's name was Lucius. Klotz says that the false Asconius takes this Scaevola to be Quintus; but the falsity is not on the side of Asconius, for he means the Scaevola who was consul B.C. 133, the same that Klotz means. M. Aemilius Scaurus was 'Princeps Senatus,' and this M' Glabrio married his daughter Aemilia; but Sulla, who married the widow of Scaurus, took away Aemilia the daughter from Glabrio and gave her to wife to Cn. Pompeius Magnus, as Plutarch tells us in the life of Sulla, c. 33. Klotz observes that Scaurus is still called the father-in-law of Glabrio, because Glabrio's son by Aemilia was still living, and consequently the affinity according to Roman notions still subsisted. He observes, in a note on the Pro P. Quintio, c. 6, that the Romans considered affinity only to exist so long as either the woman whom a man had married was alive, or at least the children of the marriage: and he refers to the Pro Sestio, c. 3.

17. legis Aciliae] The 'Lex Acilia de repetundis' which was proposed and carried by M' Acilius Glabrio, 'tribunus plebis,' the father of the Glabrio who presided as praetor at this trial of Verres. See Excursus i.

18. eorum] That is the 'consules.' Orelli remarks 'sine causa suspectum Ern.' Cicero might have repeated 'consulum.' If he did not, he must use 'eorum.' Klotz remarks that Ernesti would refer 'eorum' to 'lictors,' which seems hardly credible.

potestatem non habeant. Non sinam profecto, causa a me perorata, quadraginta diebus interpositis, tum nobis denique responderi quum accusatio nostra in oblivionem diuturnitatis adducta sit: non committam ut tum res judicetur quum haec frequentia totius Italiae Roma discesserit, quae convenit uno tempore undique, comitiorum, ludorum, censendique causa. Hujus judicii et laudis fructum et offensionis periculum, vestrum; laborem sollicitudinemque, nostram; scientiam quid agatur memoriamque quid a quoque dictum sit, omnium puto esse oportere. Faciam hoc non novum sed ab iis qui nunc principes nostrae civitatis sunt ante factum, ut testibus utar statim: illud a me novum, judices, cognoscetis, quod ita testes constituam ut crimen totum explicem; ubi id interrogando, arguresponderi] Klotz has 'respondere,' which he says is the reading of the best MSS. Orelli has 'respondeant.' Klotz rightly understood the words in a general sense, and applies them generally to the answer or defence, and not to any particular person: but for that 'responderi' seems to be the true reading. It corresponds in its generalizing form to 'causa perorata.' Zumpt says that 'responderi' is a correction of Lambinus. He also reads, 'ut tum haec res judicetur,' &c. comitiorum, &c.] Asconius, as usual, has a kind of paraphrase, which contains little more than the original; but he adds that the censors were Gellius and Lentulus. A census was held in this year, B.C. 70, by the censors L. Gellius Poplicola and Cn. Cornelius Lentulus Clodianus. As to the censorship see Divin. c. 3. The preceding censorship was in B.C. 86. After the enactment of the 'Lex Julia' (B.C. 90), by which the 'Civitas' was given to the 'Socii' and 'Latini,' all the inhabitants of Italy were not required to come to Rome to the census, but the census was taken in the remoter places at least, and the results were forwarded to Rome. This is the opinion of Mazocchi, no great authority indeed, but it seems probable enough (Mazocchi, Tab. Herac. p. 455).

censendique causa.] The verb 'censeo' is applied to the office of the censors in making registers of the citizens and of their property. It is also applied to the citizens giving in their names, the names of their 'familia,' and the particulars of their property, as in the oration Pro Flacco, c. 32: 'in qua tribu denique ista praedia censuisti?' 'Censendi causa' here means for

scientiam quod agatur, &c.] This resembles a Greek form of expression, so far as this, that in Greek the noun sometimes has the same effect on the construction as if it were a verb.

principes] Asconius says that Cicero alludes to the prosecution of L. Cotta by the brothers M. and L. Lucullus who "non usi sunt perpetua oratione, sed interrogatione testium causam peregerunt" (comp. Cicero, De Off. ii. 14; Acad. Pr. ii. at the beginning). Zumpt thinks that Asconius is mistaken as to Cotta being prosecuted, and that we must follow the authority of Plutarch (Lucullus, c. 1), who speaks of the prosecution of Servilius. But Plutarch mentions only one prosecutor, L. Lucullus, in the case of Servilius. Asconius speaks of two prosecutors.

ut testibus utar statim:] 'I will examine my witnesses at once, from the very commencement.' It is easy to perceive that the position of words in Latin sentences is determined by their relative value in the sentence, and that such a word as 'statim' may stand as it does here, when the orator terminates with it as the emphatic word. Thus in the De Am. c. 26 'eaque ipsa concludamus aliquando.'

ubi id interrogando,] Klotz reads: 'ut ubi id,' &c. Hotmann saw the difficulty of this passage, but he has not removed it by suggesting the transposition of 'interrogando' so that it shall stand between 'ut' and 'crimen' in the preceding line; for the words 'eadem interrogandi facultas, argumentandi dicendique' at the end of the sentence appear to correspond to 'interrogando, argumentis atque oratione.' The difficulty lies in the words 'tum testes ad crimen accom-mentis atque oratione firmavero, tum testes ad crimen accommodem; ut nihil inter illam usitatam accusationem atque hanc novam intersit, nisi quod in illa tunc quum omnia dicta sunt testes dantur, hic in singulas res dabuntur; ut illis quoque eadem interrogandi facultas, argumentandi dicendique sit. Si quis erit qui perpetuam orationem accusationemque desideret, altera actione audiet: nunc id quod facimus, ea ratione facimus ut malitiae illorum consilio nostro occurramus, necessario fieri intelligat. Haec primae actionis erit accusatio. Dicimus, C. Verrem, quum multa libidinose, multa crudeliter in cives Romanos atque socios, multa in deos hominesque nefarie fecerit, tum praeterea quadringenties sestertiûm ex Sicilia contra leges abstulisse. Hoc testibus, hoc tabulis privatis publicisque auctoritatibus ita vobis planum faciemus, ut hoc statuatis, etiamsi spatium ad dicendum nostro com-

modem.' Cicero says, that there will be something new in his mode of proceeding, which novelty will not consist in examining the witnesses from the first, for this had been done before. The novelty is this. "I will so arrange my witnesses as to unfold the nature of the charge in general." He then adds, "and when by my examination, my arguments, and my discourse, I have established it, I will then apply my witnesses to the (particular) charge," that of 'Repetundae.' He says, shortly afterwards: "Haec primae actionis," &c.: "The charge in the first Actio will be as follows;" and then, after stating the general charge against Verres, he adds, "and besides I charge him with illegally carrying off from Sicily 'quadringenties sestertiûm.'" He seems, therefore, to say that he will first establish the general character of his misconduct (totum crimen), which he afterwards expresses by 'multa libidinose, multa crudeliter,' &c.; and then he will apply his witnesses to the proof, the 'crimen,' which was 'Repetundae;' or, as he otherwise expresses it, 'quadringenties sestertiûm ex Sicilia contra leges abstulisse.' This may be the meaning of the passage; and the interpretation is consistent with the facts, for in this trial Verres was prosecuted for 'Repetundae' and not for other offences; though Cicero, in order to aggravate the odium against him, exposed all his public life, and even that part of it which had no relation at all to the conduct of Verres in Sicily or to the particular charge, which was a demand of so much money against him as illegally gotten in Sicily. In another passage (Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 11), he reminds his (supposed) hearers of the way in which he had proceeded in the 'prior actio:': "Etenim sic me ipsum egisse memoria tenetis, ut in testibus interrogandis omnia crimina proponerem et explicarem, ut quum rem totam in medio posuissem tum denique testem interrogarem." Zumpt maintains the correctness of this passage against Hotmann and those who have followed him. But his explanation is not quite the same as mine. Madvig omits 'interrogando.'

nunc id quod facimus,] Asconius found this passage as obscure as 'illa in fine orationis pro Ligario;' and he adds 'nisi forte facimus semel ponitur.' Camerarius reads 'ea enim ratione.' Klotz thinks that he does the best service to this passage by pointing it thus: 'nunc id, quod facimus, ea ratione facimus, ut malitiae illorum consilio nostro occurramus: necessario fieri intelligat.' He explains the 'asyndeton,' 'necessario . . intelligat,' by supposing that the 'ut' extends its force to it, so that 'intelligat' depends upon 'ut' as well as 'occurramus' does. I have no hesitation in rejecting this explanation. It is plain that 'necessario fieri intelligat' is connected with 'nunc id quod facimus;' and if the intermediate words are omitted, the sense is 'now let him understand that what we are doing is done of necessity.' Now there is no great difficulty in understanding the words 'ea ratione . . occurramus,' as being interposed as a rapidly delivered parenthesis between the two extremes, the connexion of which seems to me very clear. Zumpt points it thus: 'nunc id, quod facimus (ea ratione facimus, ut malitiae illorum consilio nostro occurramus) necessario fieri intelligat.'

Dixi.] It was the practice, says Asconius, of the ancient orators to say 'Dixi' when they had done speaking; and for the praetor to pronounce the words 'dixerunt' when both parties had finished. Perhaps Asconius meant to say 'praeco' for praetor, as he ought to have done (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 30); and it is printed 'praeco' in the corrected text of Asconius (ed. Orelli). The old commentator thinks that 'Dixi' is appropriately said here by the orator, who wished to impress his opponents with the brevity of his speech, which was to be immediately followed by the examination of the witnesses, and the production of the documentary evidence.

ACTIONIS SECUNDAE
IN C. VERREM

LIBER PRIMUS.

DE PRAETURA URBANA.

I. Neminem vestrum ignorare arbitror, iudices, hunc per hosce dies sermonem vulgi atque hanc opinionem populi Romani fuisse, C. Verrem altera actione responsurum non esse neque ad iudicium adfuturum. Quae fama non idcirco solum emanarat quod iste certe statuerat ac deliberaverat non adesse, verum etiam quod nemo quemquam tam audacem, tam amentem, tam impudentem fore arbitrabatur qui tam nefariis criminibus, tam multis testibus convictus, ora iudicum adspicere aut os suum populo Romano ostendere auderet. Est idem Verres qui fuit semper, ut ad audendum projectus, sic paratus ad audiendum. Praesto est, respondet, defenditur. Ne hoc quidem sibi reliqui facit ut in rebus turpissimis quum manifesto teneatur, si reticeat et absit, tamen impudentiae suae pudentem exitum quaesisse videatur. Patior, iudices, et non moleste fero me laboris mei, vos virtutis vestrae fructum esse laturus. Nam si iste id fecisset quod primo statuerat, ut non adesset, minus aliquanto quam mihi opus esset cognosceretur quid ego in hac accusatione comparanda constituendaque elaborassem; vestra vero laus tenuis plane atque obscura, iudices, esset. Neque enim hoc a vobis populus Romanus exspectat neque eo potest esse contentus, si condemnatus sit is qui adesse noluerit, et si fortes fueritis in eo, quem nemo sit ausus defendere. Immo vero adsit,

1. respondet,] That is, 'answers to his name,' when he is called by the 'praeco' (Asconius).

Immo vero] This word may be taken either affirmatively or negatively, according to the words to which we suppose it to refer. This apparent inconsistency is explained by considering 'immo' to be a shorter form of 'in modo,' for 'modus' is a word that is very often attached to another word. There is 'admodum,' 'dummodo,' 'tantummodo,' 'ejusmodi,' &c. 'Illico' is an example of 'in' attached to another word of ordinary use (in loco). 'Immo' may be taken in this respondeat; summis opibus, summo studio potentissimorum hominum defendatur; certet mea diligentia cum illorum omnium cupiditate, vestra integritas cum istius pecunia, testium constantia cum illius patronorum minis atque potentia: tum demum illa victa videbuntur quum in contentionem certamenque venerint. Absens si iste esset damnatus, non tam ipse sibi consuluisse quam invidisse vestrae laudi videretur.

II. Neque enim salus ulla rei publicae major hoc tempore reperiri potest quam populum Romanum intelligere, diligenter rejectis ab accusatore iudicibus, socios, leges, rem publicam, senatorio consilio maxime posse defendi: neque tanta fortunis omnium perniciēs potest accidere quam opinione populi Romani rationem veritatis, integritatis, fidei, religionis ab hoc ordine abjudicari. Itaque mihi videor, iudices, magnam et maxime aegram et prope depositam rei publicae partem suscepisse, neque in eo magis meae quam vestrae laudi existimationique servisse. Accessi enim ad invidiam iudiciorum levandam vituperationemque tollendam, ut, quum haec res pro voluntate populi Romani esset iudicata, aliqua ex parte mea dili-passage as an affirmation, strengthened by 'vero,' as in the phrase 'ego vero;' and it refers to the word 'adesse.' "Yes, indeed, let him appear, let him answer." In c. 32, there is again 'Immo vero ab hominibus,' &c., where a reference to the preceding sentence shews that it may be translated: "No, indeed, not so, but by men of the gentlest disposition." In Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 42: "Quid hoc nos dicimus? Immo vero ipse praesens:"—"Well, is it I who say this? No, indeed, he is here himself to say it." Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 46. In Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 10: "Quid omne? plus immo etiam, inquit, si volet:"—"What all? yes, and more too, he says, if he shall choose." The literal rendering would be, "What all? more indeed in a manner, he says, if he shall choose." Some of the best instances of the use of 'immo' occur in Terence; as in Andr. 3, 5, 12. "Pa. Nempe ut modo. D. immo melius spero:"—"Pa. Ay, as you did just now. D. No, better I hope;" or, "Yes, and better I hope." It is often indifferent whether a man says Yes or No to a question, if he adds something by way of explanation; for neither Yes nor No alone fully expresses what he has to say. Andr. 1, 2, 30: "quid hoc intellextin' an nondum etiam ne hoc quidem? D. immo callide." Here are two questions: which must Davus be considered as answering? "Well, do you understand this, or don't you yet understand even this?" "Yes," says Davus, replying to the first part, "I understand it very well." "No," says Davus, replying to the second part, "I do understand it very well." The following passage is clear: Hauton. 1, 1, 4: "M. filium unicum adolescentulum Habeo. Ah! quid dixi habere me? immo habui, Chreme." "I have an only son, a youth: ah! did I say that I have? No, I had, Chremes;" or, "Yes, I had, Chremes:" where 'No' is a denial of 'have;' 'Yes' is an affirmation of 'had.' 'Modo' is generally a monosyllable in the verse of Terence, which shows that the Romans in speaking abbreviated it, like many other words. They would pronounce 'in modo,' 'immo,' and so they wrote it; and they might on the same principle have written 'dummodo,' 'dummo.'

2. abjudicari] See Act. i. c. 5: 'nor is there any calamity which can befall the interests of all the citizens so great, as for the opinion of the Roman people to declare that the Senatorian 'ordo' has no regard to truth, integrity, good faith, and religion.'

prope depositam] 'Depositam' has a sense almost like 'desperati.' A person is 'depositus' who is placed on the ground with little hope that he will rise again. Ovid says (Ep. Pont. ii. 2, 47), 'Jam prope depositus, certe jam frigidus.' Cicero uses 'suscipio,' 'to take up,' to raise, as the opposite of 'depono.'

gentia constituta auctoritas judiciorum videretur; postremo, ut esset hoc judicatum, ut finis aliquando judiciariae controversiae constitueretur. Etenim sine dubio, iudices, in hac causa ea res in discrimen adducitur. Reus est enim nocentissimus, qui si condemnatur, desinent homines dicere his judiciis pecuniam plurimum posse; sin absolvitur, desinemus nos de judiciis transferendis recusare. Tametsi de absolutione istius neque ipse jam sperat, nec populus Romanus metuit: de impudentia singulari quod adest, quod respondet, sunt qui mirentur; mihi pro cetera ejus audacia atque amentia ne hoc quidem mirandum videtur. Multa enim et in deos et in homines impie nefarieque commisit, quorum scelerum poenis agitur et a mente consilioque deducitur.

III. Agunt eum praecipitem poenae civium Romanorum, quos partim securi percussit, partim in vinculis necavit, partim implorantes jura libertatis et civitatis in crucem sustulit. Rapiunt eum ad supplicium dii patrii, quod iste unus inventus est qui e complexu parentum abreptos filios ad necem duceret, et parentes pretium pro sepultura liberum posceret. Religiones vero caerimoniaeque omnium sacrorum fanorumque violatae, simulacraque deorum quae non modo ex suis templis ablata sunt, sed etiam jacent in tenebris ab isto retrusa atque abdita, consistere ejus animum sine furore atque amentia non sinunt. Neque iste mihi videtur se ad damnationem solum offerre, neque hoc avaritiae supplicio communi qui se tot sceleribus obstrinxerit contentus esse: singularem quandam poenam istius immanis atque importuna natura desiderat. Non id solum quaeritur ut isto damnato bona restituantur iis quibus erepta sunt, sed et religiones deorum immortalium expiandae, et civium Romanorum cruciatus multorumque innocentium sanguis istius supplicio luendus est. Non enim furem sed ereptorem, non adulterum sed expugnatorem pudicitiae, non sacrilegum sed hostem sacrorum religionumque, non sicarium sed crudelissimum carnificem civium sociorumque in vestrum judicium adduximus; ut ego hunc unum ejusmodi reum post hominum memoriam fuisse arbitrer cui damnari expediret.

3. sacrilegum] On who lays his hands on sacred things, things set apart for religious purposes. Among other divisions of things, the Romans had a division of 'res divini juris,' or things set apart for the purposes of religion, and 'res humani juris,' things which were not (Gaius, ii. 1, &c.). A 'sacrilegus' is one 'qui sacra legit,' i. e. 'furatur,' one who robs temples or steals sacred things. In the Imperial period the word obtained the wider signification of any offence against religion. The Lex Julia Peculatus brought 'Sacrilegium' under the denomination or penalties of 'Peculatus.' And Cicero, c. 4, seems to include the offence of temple-robbing under 'Peculatus.' cui damnari expediret.] 'Because,' says Asconius, 'there was a less penalty in being

IV. Nam quis hoc non intelliget istum absolutum, diis hominibusque invitis, tamen ex manibus populi Romani eripi nullo modo posse? Quis hoc non perspicit praeclare nobiscum actum iri, si populus Romanus istius unius supplicio contentus fuerit, ac non sic statuerit, non istum majus in sese scelus concepisse, quum fana spoliavit, quum tot homines innocentes necavit, quum cives Romanos morte, cruciatu, cruce affecerit, quum praedonum duces accepta pecunia dimiserit, quam eos si qui istum tot, tantis, tam nefariis sceleribus coopertum jurati sententia sua liberarint? Non est, non est in hoc homine cuiquam peccandi locus, iudices; non is est reus, non id tempus, non id consilium, metuo ne quid arrogantius apud tales viros videar dicere, ne actor quidem est is cui reus tam nocens, tam perditus, tam victus, aut occulte surripi aut impune eripi possit. His ego iudicibus non probabo C. Verrem contra leges pecunias cepisse? sustinebunt tales viri se tot senatoribus, tot equitibus Romanis, tot civitatibus, tot hominibus honestissimis ex tam illustri provincia, tot populorum privatorumque literis non credidisse? tantae populi Romani voluntati restitisse? Sustineant. Reperiemus, si istum vivum ad aliud iudicium perducere poterimus, quibus probemus istum in quaestura pecuniam publicam Cn. Carboni consuli datam avertisse, quibus persuadeamus istum alieno nomine a quaestoribus urbanis, quod priore actione didicistis, pecuniam abstulisse. Erunt qui et in eo quoque audaciam ejus reprehendant, quod aliquot nominibus de capite quantum commodum fuerit fru-condemned in this trial, than in an assembly of the Roman people and in the punishment which they might inflict; an interpretation which, as Klotz remarks, is confirmed by the words 'Nam quis,' &c. Cicero means to say that Verres, if acquitted in this trial, would be punished by the 'Populus Romanus' by a special vote. Whether he threatens Verres with a regular proceeding by a kind of bill of pains and penalties, or with some irregular vengeance of the Roman people, does not seem quite clear. But one of the two seems to be meant. Zumpt gives it another meaning: 'ut animus furiis agitatus quiesceret soluta poena. V. Gro-nov. ad Tacit. Ann. xv. 68.'

4. contra leges pecunias cepisse?] The general expression of taking money contrary to (particular) 'leges,' must here mean such a taking of money as was the ground of a prosecution for 'Repetundae.' Compare the passage in the oration Pro M. Scauro, c. 21, "adversus leges pecuniarum captarum reum fecit repetundarum lege quam tulit Servilius Glaucia."

ad aliud iudicium] 'Populi scilicet et equitum Romanorum,' says Asconius, but he is mistaken. Cicero threatens him with a prosecution for 'peculatus,' for misemploying public money, as the words at the beginning of the next chapter show, and the words 'illum ejus peculatum,' near the end of this chapter.

alieno nomine] Asconius makes a guess that 'alieno nomine' means in the name of Carbo or his army; and another, that he got the money to buy corn in Sicily, and did not pay for it; which cannot be the meaning in this passage.

'Aliquot nominibus' means under certain heads or entries; as in c. 33, 'his nominibus solis,' &c. Cicero (De Am. c. 25), says, 'multis nominibus est hoc vitium notandum,' &c. quantum commodum fuerit] This means 'quantum libuerit,' 'just as much as he pleased;' as in Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 13: 'quod civis cum civi ageret, aut eum iudicem quem commodum erat, haruspitem, medicum suum dabat; aut,' &c.; where Asconius menti decumani detraxerit. Erunt etiam fortasse, iudices, qui illum ejus peculatum vel acerrime vindicandum putent, quod iste M. Marcelli et P. Africani monumenta, quae nomine illorum, re vera populi Romani et erant et habebantur, et fanis religiosissimis et ex urbibus sociorum atque amicorum non dubitaverit auferre.

V. Emerserit ex peculatus etiam iudicio, meditetur de ducibus hostium quos accepta pecunia liberavit; videat quid de illis respondeat quos in eorum locum subditos domi suae reservavit; quaerat non solum quemadmodum nostro crimini, verum etiam quo pacto suae confessioni possit mederi; meminerit se priore actione, clamore populi Romani infesto atque inimico excitatum, confessum esse duces a se praedonum securi non esse percussos, se jam tum esse veritum ne sibi crimini daretur eos ab se pecunia liberatos; fateatur id quod negari non potest, se privatum hominem praedonum duces vivos atque incolumes domi suae, posteaquam Romam redierit, usquedum per me licuerit, tenuisse. Hoc in illo majestatis iudicio si licuisse quotes Terence, Adelph. 1, 2, 38: 'Amat? dabitur a me argentum dum erit commodum.' Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 26: 'quos ei commodum sit invitet;' and c. 44.

de capite—frumenti decumani] That is, he remitted as much of the 'frumentum decumanum,' which was due to the Roman people, as he pleased.

M. Marcelli, &c.] The works of art which M. Marcellus gave up to the Siculi, and those which Scipio Africanus brought back from Carthage, and restored to them.

5. Emerserit] This tense is often so placed. 'Suppose him to escape from the prosecution for Peculatus;' which might be considered to be an elliptical expression, some word being understood. Compare 'ex hoc evaserit' in this chapter; and c. 14, 'fuerit aliis.' See Heindorf, Horat. 1 Sat. i. 45, note. But the present indicative, and even the perfect, are used to express a condition without 'si;' and 'emerserit' may be the second future of the indicative.

per me licuerit,] 'So long as I allowed it;' that is, 'I was the hindrance to its being done any longer.' 'Per me licet;' 'You may do it for me, I won't hinder you.' 'Habeat per me,' c. 12.

majestatis iudicio] The acts just mentioned would be sufficient to found a prosecution for 'Majestas' against Verres, who had saved the enemies of the state. The 'Majestas' of the Roman state is its 'integrity;' and the 'Majestas Populi Romani' is the whole of that which constituted the Roman state. To impair (minuere) this 'Majestas' was an offence; and it might be impaired by any act which directly tended to damage the state, as such. The old name for any act which was directly injurious to the state was 'Perduellio,' and the offender was called 'Perduellis.' Trials for 'Perduellio' took place even in the later times of the Republic, as in the case of C. Popilius Laenas, B.C. 107, and of M. Junius Silanus, consul B.C. 109. By the words 'apud Populum Romanum,' which follow in this chapter, Cicero threatens Verres with a prosecution before the Roman people, for putting to death a Roman citizen; and here the guilt of Verres would be decided by the 'suffragia Populi Romani.' Cicero promises to bring him before the 'Populus Romanus,' in his capacity of aedile, when he should have entered on his office; and the charge would be that of 'Perduellio.'—Cicero here speaks of a 'Majestatis iudicium' as a distinct thing from 'Perduellio;' at least, distinct in the form of procedure. Though the notion of 'Majestas minuta' was involved in that of 'Perduellio,' special 'leges' had defined 'Majestas' more particularly, and made it a Quaestio. The first was a Lex Apuleia (B.C. 102 or 100), which was followed by a Lex Cornelia, and this by a Lex Julia, which Lex Julia continued to be the fundamental Lex on this subject under the empire (Dig. 48. tit. 4).—The subject of 'Perduellio' and 'Majestas' is discussed with great minuteness by Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer; sibi ostenderit, ego oportuisse concedam. Ex hoc quoque evaserit, proficiscar eo quo me jampridem vocat populus Romanus. De jure enim libertatis et civitatis suum putat esse judicium, et recte putat. Confringat iste sane vi sua consilia senatoria, quaestiones omnium perrumpat, evolet ex vestra severitate; mihi credite, arctioribus apud populum Romanum laqueis tenebitur. Credet iis equitibus Romanis populus Romanus, qui ad vos antea producti testes, ipsis inspectantibus, ab isto civem Romanum qui cognitores homines honestos daret sublatum esse in crucem dixerunt. Credent omnes v et xxx tribus homini gravissimo atque ornatissimo M. Annio, qui se praesente civem Romanum securi percussum esse dixit. Audietur a populo Romano vir primarius, eques Romanus, L. Flavius, qui suum familiarem Herennium, negotiatorem ex Africa, quum eum Syracusis amplius centum cives Romani cognoscerent lacrymantesque defenderent, pro testimonio dixit securi esse percussum. Probabit fidem et auctoritatem et religionem suam L. Suetius, homo omnibus ornamentis praeditus, qui juratus apud vos dixit multos cives Romanos in lautumiis istius imperio crudelissime per vim morte esse multatos. Hanc ego causam quum agam beneficio populi Romani de loco superiore, non vereor ne aut istum vis ulla ex populi Romani suffragiis eripere, aut a me ullum munus aedilitatis amplius aut gratius populo Romano esse possit.

VI. Quapropter omnes in hoc judicio conentur omnia: nihil est jam quod in hac causa peccare quisquam, judices, nisi vestro periculo possit. Mea quidem ratio quum in praeteritis rebus est cognita, tum in reliquis explorata atque provisa est. Ego meum studium in rem publicam jam illo tempore ostendi, quum longo intervallo veterem consuetudinem retuli, et rogatu sociorum atque amicorum populi and briefly by the writer of this note, in Smith's Dict. of Antiqs.

recte putat.] Zumpt has 'ratione putat' from one MS. Both are good Latin, and it is merely a question of probability, which is decided in favour of 'recte' by the MSS.

amplius centum] This is one of the adverbs that is often used without 'quam' after it, and the case is not affected by it. 'Plus' and 'minus' are used the same way. 'Cognoscerent' means 'were witnesses to his character,' &c. Lib. 5. 65, 'cognosceret.'

lautumiis] These were the extensive stone-quarries of Syracuse, which Thucydides (vii. 86) calls λιθοτομίαι. The Athenians, who were taken prisoners in the Sicilian expedition, were placed in these quarries, where they endured dreadful sufferings. The stone for the construction of beneficio populi Romani] 'By the favour or grant of the Roman people,' who conferred the 'honores' by their votes, and were said to confer a 'beneficium.' Cicero says, Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 11, speaking of the senatorial rank: 'populo Romano cujus beneficio nos in hunc ordinem venimus.' The word had other significations among the Romans, as that of some special grant or favour. The history of it may be traced from the republican, through the imperial period, and into the middle ages, when it signified a fief, and also, as now, an ecclesiastical preferment (Beneficium, Dict. of Antiqs). Cicero declares what he will do when he enters on his office of aedile, when he will address the people from the Rostra (de loco superiore).

Romani, meorum autem necessariorum, nomen hominis audacissimi detuli. Quod meum factum lectissimi viri atque ornatissimi, quo in numero e vobis complures fuere, ita probaverunt ut ei, qui istius quaestor fuisset et ab isto laesus inimicitias justas persequeretur, non modo deferendi nominis sed ne subscribendi quidem, quum id postularet, facerent potestatem. In Siciliam sum inquirendi causa profectus; quo in negotio industriam meam celeritas reditutionis, diligentiam multitudo literarum et testium declaravit; pudorem vero ac religionem, quod, quum venissem senator ad socios populi Romani, qui in ea provincia quaestor fuissem, ad hospites meos ac necessarios causae communis defensor deverti potius quam ad eos qui a me auxilium petivissent. Nemini meus adventus labori aut sumptui neque publice neque privatim fuit. Vim in inquirendo tantam habui quantam mihi lex dabat, non quantam habere poteram istorum studio quos iste vexarat. Romam ut ex Sicilia redii, quum iste atque istius amici, homines lauti et urbani, sermones hujusce-

6. meorum autem] This passage shows the sense of 'autem,' which is not that of direct opposition, but of addition: it expresses something further or more, and it never stands first in a sentence. See Cic. De Am. c. 8. 'Quis est qui,' &c., followed by 'Quis autem est qui.'

quo in numero] He alludes to the question that was settled by the Divinatio, when the 'consilium,' or 'judices,' determined that Cicero should be the accuser. Some of the present 'consilium' were the same persons, and some were not. The 'consilium' that was formed for the decision on the Divinatio was changed to some extent by the 'rejectio' or challenges. Zumpt has 'quo e numero;' and he adds, 'Sic Steph. editio et Lambinus e vet. cod. et uterque Guelferbytanus.'

inimicitias justas] Asconius asks if 'justas' means 'magnas,' and he refers to the use of 'injusto' in Virgil, Georg. iii. 347. The answer is that it does not mean 'magnas;' it means 'well founded, sufficient.' 'Justas' might be taken ironically here; or, if not, Cicero does not scruple now to say that Verres had wronged his 'quaestor,' though he denied it in the Divinatio; and thus he adds one more to the long list of the offences of Verres.

pudorem . . ac religionem,] 'Pudorem' may be translated 'his modesty,' or 'his absence of all assumption,' in not claiming the public hospitality, to which he was entitled as a senator; and this, though he came on so important business. Here we learn that Cicero was now a senator, which is evidence, if any were wanted, that he acquired a seat in the senate after being 'quaestor.' But how is 'religio' to be understood? for the word must have a distinct meaning, and we must interpret it by reference to the general sense of the word, which implies a reference to divine powers, or to the gods. The duty which Cicero had undertaken was one that he was bound to discharge faithfully, both in the judgment of men, and in the judgment of the gods, to whom he was responsible. His sense of duty towards the gods prevented him from burdening an oppressed and pillaged people with any expense. He alleges it as a proof of his modesty and his religious (in the meaning already explained) sense of his duty, that he put neither communities, nor individual Sicilians, to any cost on his account. A senator, when he travelled not on public business, might still have a kind of nominal commission, called a 'legatio libera,' by virtue of which he was received at the public cost of the province, or of the towns, which he visited. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 11.

istorum studio] The MSS. have 'istorum,' which Zumpt alters to 'illorum.' He says, 'nam si Verres est iste, non possunt illi, qui ei opponuntur, et ipsi isti vocari.' But why not?

lauti et urbani,] It might be supposed that these words were spoken ironically; but that supposition is not necessary. 'Lautus,' a form of 'lavatus,' 'well washed' modi dissipassent quo animos testium retardarent, me magna pecunia a vera accusatione esse deductum, tametsi probabatur nemini, quod et ex Sicilia testes erant ii qui quaestorem me in provincia cognoverant, et hinc homines maxime illustres qui, ut ipsi noti sunt, sic nostrum unumquemque optime norunt; tamen usque eo timui ne quis de mea fide atque integritate dubitaret, donec ad rejiciendos judices venimus.

VII. Sciebam in rejiciendis judicibus nonnullos memoria nostra pactionis suspicionem non vitasse, quum in ipsa accusatione eorum industria ac diligentia probaretur. Ita rejeci judices ut hoc constet, post hunc statum rei publicae quo nunc utimur simili splendore et dignitate consilium nullum fuisse. Quam iste laudem communem ait sibi esse mecum, qui quum P. Galbam judicem rejecisset, M. Lucretium retinuit; et, quum ejus patronus ex eo quaereret, cur suos familiarissimos, Sex. Paeduceum, Q. Considium, Q. Junium rejici passus esset, respondit quod eos in judicando nimium sui juris sententiaeque cognosceret. Itaque judicibus rejectis sperabam jam onus meum vobiscum esse commune; putabam non solum notis sed etiam ignotis probatam meam fidem esse et diligentiam. Quod me non fefellit. Nam comitiis meis, quum iste infinita largitione contra me uteretur, populus Romanus judicavit istius pecuniam, quae apud me contra fidem meam nihil potuisset, apud se contra honorem meum nihil posse debere. Quo quidem die primum, judices, citati in hunc reum consedistis, quis tam inimicus huic ordini fuit, quis tam novarum rerum, judiciorum, judicumque or 'clean,' came to have numerous significations, the history of which it is not so easy to trace, inasmuch as even in modern languages, in like cases, it is often a matter of difficulty. The sense here is perhaps 'sharp' or 'clever,' as in the passage of Caecilius quoted by Cicero, De Am. c. 26: 'emunxeris lautissime.' In Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 25, there is 'parum laute,' which the context explains. 'Urbanus' is explained by Klotz in this passage to signify one who possesses the cunning and sharpness that are supposed to characterize towns' people as opposed to country folks; and he refers to Quintilian, Inst. Or. vi. 3. § 105, for a definition of 'urbanus,' as then understood. Zumpt refers to a passage in Cicero's letters (Ad Fam. iii. 8): "te hominem non solum sapientem, verum etiam, ut nunc loquimur, urbanum." See Heindorf, Horat. 1 Sat. iv. 90.

7. post hunc statum, &c.] Since Sulla's changes, ten years before. The 'rejectio' of the 'judices' was the test of Cicero's integrity in the prosecution, for he made it apparent that he wished to have an honest 'consilium.' When Cicero says that Verres claimed credit too, he means, of course, to deny his claim; for P. Galba, whom he rejected, was an honest man, and Lucretius, whom he kept, was not. Asconius tells us, whether it is a guess, or whether he had authority for it, that Lucretius was afterwards rejected by Cicero, for the accused had the first challenge. The reason which Asconius gives for affirming that Lucretius was rejected by Cicero is sufficient, for Cicero could not speak disparagingly of any 'judex' who was retained; and, indeed, he eulogises the whole 'consilium.' The reason which Verres is alleged to have given for allowing the rejection of the other three, which seems to mean, as Asconius says, rejecting them himself,—that they were men too independent (sui juris), is another sarcastic refutation of the claim of Verres.

cupidus qui non conspectu consessuque vestro commoveretur? Quum in eo vestra mihi dignitas fructum diligentiae referret, id sum assecutus ut una hora, qua coepi dicere, reo audaci, pecunioso, profuso, perduto, spem iudicii corrumpendi praeciderem; ut primo die testium tanto numero citato populus Romanus iudicaret isto absoluto rem publicam stare non posse; ut alter dies amicis istius ac defensoribus non modo spem victoriae sed etiam voluntatem defensionis auferret; ut tertius dies sic hominem prosterneret ut morbo simulato non quid responderet sed quemadmodum non responderet deliberaret; deinde reliquis diebus, his criminibus, his testibus, et urbanis et provincialibus, sic obrutus atque oppressus est ut his ludorum diebus interpositis nemo istum comperendinatum sed condemnatum iudicaret.

VIII. Quapropter ego quod ad me attinet, iudices, vici: non enim spolia C. Verris sed existimationem populi Romani concupivi. Meum fuit cum causa accedere ad accusandum: quae causa fuit honestior quam a tam illustri provincia defensorem constitui et deligi? rei publicae consulere: quid tandem rei publicae honestius quam in tanta invidia iudiciorum adducere hominem cujus damnatione totus ordo cum populo Romano et in laude et in gratia posset esse? ostendere ac persuadere hominem nocentem adductum esse: quis est in populo Romano qui hoc non ex priore actione abstulerit, omnium ante damnatorum scelera, furta, flagitia, si in unum locum conferantur, vix cum hujus parva parte aequari conferrique posse? Vos quod ad vestram famam, existimationem, salutemque communem pertinet, iudices, prospicite atque consulite. Splendor vester facit ut peccare sine summo rei publicae detrimento ac periculo non possitis. Non enim potest sperare populus Romanus esse alios in senatu qui recte possint iudicare, vos si non potueritis. Necesse est, quum de toto ordine desperarit, aliud genus hominum atque aliam rationem iudiciorum requirat. Hoc si vobis ideo levius videtur quod putatis onus esse grave et incommodum iudicare, intelligere debetis primum interesse, utrum id onus vosmet ipsi rejeceritis, an, quod probare populo Romano fidem vestram et religionem non potueritis, eo vobis judicandi potestas erepta sit. Deinde etiam illud cogitate, quanto periculo venturi simus ad eos iudices quos propter odium nostri populus Romanus de nobis voluerit judicare. Verum vobis dicam id quod intellexi, iudices: homines scitote esse quosdam, quos tantum odium vestri ordinis teneat ut hoc palam jam dictitent, se istum quem sciant esse hominem improbissimum hoc uno nomine absolvi velle, ut ab senatu iudicia per ignominiam turpitudinemque auferantur. Haec me, iudices, pluribus verbis vobiscum agere coëgit non timor meus de vestra fide, sed spes illorum nova, quae quum Verrem a porta subito ad iudicium retraxisset, nonnulli suspicati sunt non sine causa illius consilium tam repente esse mutatum.

Nam accusandi mihi tempus mea causa datum est, ut possem oratione mea crimina causamque explicare: hoc si non utor, non tibi injuriam nostri . . nobis] 'vestri—vobis.' Orell.

Haec me, &c.] 'Haec me res,' the reading of 'some MSS.,' according to Orelli: the reading of the MSS., according to Klotz. According to Orelli's reading, 'haec' is the accusative. According to that of Klotz, 'haec res' refers to what was said in the preceding sentence; but, 'haec res' not being sufficiently forcible, Cicero explains himself by declaring that it is not any fear that they will not discharge their duty, but the 'spes illorum nova,' that is, 'the thing,' 'haec res.' This reading and exposition of Klotz, I reject without any hesitation.

a porta subito] Cicero gives an air of reality to the speech, by speaking of Verres as if he had set out to leave Rome, and was induced to return to wait the result of his trial.

9. Nunc ne, &c.] Cicero still gives the colour of reality to his speech, by declaring that he will now make a formal continuous speech, which he did not do in the Actio Prima. And he says, in a sarcastic manner, (hic tu fortasse eris diligens) to Hortensius, "you will perhaps look sharply to see that I take up all the time that the 'lex' allows me;" whereas a man can refuse to avail himself of an advantage; he may forego it, if he pleases.—In place of 'non quoniam hoc sit necesse,' Klotz has 'non quo jam,' &c., which is a conjecture of Madvig. 'Abusus ero' means 'consumed,' for 'abutor' is, properly, 'to use a thing which is consumed in the use.' Comp. Cic. Top. 3, where the word 'abusus' is opposed to 'usus,' and Ulpian, Dig. 7. 5. 5.

facio, sed de meo jure aliquid et commodum detraho. Causam enim, inquit, cognosci oportet. Ea re quidem quod aliter condemnari reus, quamvis sit nocens, non potest. Id igitur tu moleste tulisti, a me aliquid factum esse quo minus iste condemnari posset? Nam causa cognita multi possunt absolvi: incognita quidem condemnari nemo potest. Adimo enim comperendinatum. Quod habet lex in se molestissimum, bis ut causa dicatur, quod aut mea causa potius est constitutum quam tua, aut nihilo tua potius quam mea. Nam si bis dicere est commodum, certe utriusque commune est; si eum qui posterius dixit opus est redargui, accusatoris causa ut bis ageretur constitutum est. Verum, ut opinor, Glaucia primus tulit ut Causam enim, &c.: . . . Adimo enim, &c.] 'Enim' has a reference to what has been said "hoc si non utor," &c. It is a supposed answer: 'Yes, but it is necessary for the case to be investigated.' To which supposed answer, Cicero rejoins: 'Admitted, so far as this, that a guilty man cannot be condemned without the case being investigated; but you surely won't make it a ground of complaint, that I have done any thing, the tendency of which is to prevent your client's condemnation.' The word 'enim' certainly does not mean 'for.' It is a word of reference, that is, it respects something that has gone before: but it is not strictly a word of inference. Cicero often begins his sentences with 'Etenim,' the meaning of which is much nearer, 'and indeed,' 'in truth,' than 'for.' The words 'Adimo enim comperendinatum' is another supposed objection: 'You say that I prevent the Comperendinatio;' to which Cicero replies: 'the very thing in the Lex that is most burdensome, that the cause should be heard twice, the very rule which was established,' &c. There is no difficulty in the second 'quod,' which Orelli has placed in brackets, and Ernesti, who mistook the whole passage, has changed into 'id.'

comperendinatum] The adjourning of a trial to the third day; the deferring of the verdict; hence also the arguing of the cause after it was thus adjourned. The word is compounded of 'con' and 'perendina,' for there are the adjective 'perendinus' and the form 'perendie,' like 'pridie,' 'postridie.' The word 'perendie' means the day after the morrow, as appears from Cicero to Atticus, xii. 44; and from a passage in the oration Pro Murena, c. 12: "tot homines, tam ingeniosos per tot annos statuere non potuisse utrum diem tertium an perendinum dici oporteret." See Gellius, x. 24. When 'dies tertius' is equivalent to 'dies perendinus,' the first day and the last are included in the reckoning, and there is one day in the middle. The etymology of 'perendie' is unknown. Asconius has a note on what follows, the matter of which is apparently only derived from his notion of the meaning of the text. He says that when the trial was adjourned, the accused spoke first, after having already replied in the previous proceedings, and the prosecutor then spoke again, so that the two speeches for the defence came between the two speeches for the prosecution. But this is absurd. Cicero argues that the 'comperendinatio' was rather intended for the advantage of the prosecutor, for he would have the opportunity of replying to his adversary's defence. 'Si eum qui posterius dixit' is evidently the speaker for the defence, for the speech for the prosecution was delivered first, and, if there was no 'comperendinatio,' the matter was ready for the decision of the 'consilium,' when the prosecutor had spoken first and the speaker for the defence had replied. If, argues Cicero, the object or purpose (opus) is for the second speaker to be replied to, then it is clear that the 'secunda actio' (ut bis ageretur) was intended for the benefit of the prosecutor. It could not be intended for the benefit of the accused; for, if the prosecutor brought forward no new matter in his second speech, the defendant would gain less by a second reply, than the prosecutor would by enforcing his original arguments and answering the answer of his adversary. And, if he did bring forward new matter, it must be something that he had neglected to bring forward before, or something that he had in the meantime discovered; in neither of which cases would the second 'actio' be for the benefit of the accused.

Glaucia] C. Servilius Glaucia who proposed (tulit) the 'lex' that bears his name. (Ex. i. ii.) Zumpt agrees with Ernesti in comperendinaretur reus; antea vel judicari primo poterat vel amplius pronuntiari. Utram igitur putas legem meliorem? opinor illam veterem, qua vel cito absolvi vel tarde condemnari licebat. Ego tibi illam Aciliam legem restituo, qua lege multi semel accusati, semel dicta causa, semel auditis testibus, condemnati sunt, nequaquam tam manifestis neque tantis criminibus quantis tu convinceris. Puta te non hac tam atroci sed illa lege mitissima causam dicere. Accusabo; respondebis: testibus editis, ita mittam in consilium ut, etiamsi lex ampliandi faciat potestatem, tamen isti turpe sibi existiment non primo judicare.

X. Verum si causam cognosci opus est, parumne cognita est? Dissimulamus, Hortensi, quod saepe experti in dicendo sumus. Quis nos magno opere attendit unquam in hoc quidem genere causarum ubi aliquid ereptum aut ablatum a quopiam dicitur? nonne aut in tabulis aut in testibus omnis expectatio judicum est? Dixi prima actione me planum esse facturum C. Verrem HS quadringenties contra leges abstulisse. Quid hoc planius egissem, si ita narrassem? Dio quidam fuit Halesinus, qui, quum ejus filio praetore Sacerdote hereditas a propinquo permagna venisset, nihil habuit tum neque negotii neque controversiae. Verres simulac tetigit provinciam, statim Messana literas dedit, Dionem evocavit, calum-making the Acilia prior to the Servilia Lex. When Cicero says 'ut opinor,' he does not mean to express a doubt. He speaks as a man who does not concern himself very particularly about the history of changes in law: he takes it for granted that it is so. Before the Lex Servilia the 'judices' either gave their votes at once, or declared an 'ampliatio,' an adjournment to another day, which might be a more distant day than the 'dies perendinus.' The 'ampliatio' depended on the choice of the 'judices.' The 'comperendinatio' was fixed by this 'lex.' The old law, says Cicero, permitted the 'judices' either to acquit at once, or to defer their decision for some time. He professes to restore in effect the Lex Acilia, which was enacted on the proposal of Acilius Glabrio, the father of the 'praetor,' who presided at this trial; and this 'lex' allowed no 'comperendinatio' or 'ampliatio.' But he says to Hortensius: imagine the proceedings to be not according to this severe law, but according to that old and very lenient law. Suppose this to be the case; Cicero will then make his charge, Hortensius will answer; and, after the witnesses are produced, Cicero will bring the 'judices' to their vote; for that is

'mittere in consilium:' and he says that even if the 'lex' were to allow an 'ampliatio,' they would be ashamed to avail themselves of it. Verres was prosecuted under the Lex Cornelia, which we must suppose to have contained the provisions of the Servilia, except as to the class from which the 'judices' were to be chosen. Orelli and Klotz have 'legem molliorem,' but there is good MSS. authority for 'meliorem,' which Zumpt has; and 'meliorem' is intelligible, which 'molliorem' is not.

10. a quopiam] 'from any person,' as Zumpt suggests, for he says that Cicero uses the ablative with a preposition in this sense; and he refers to c. 4, 'a quaestoribus urbanis,' &c.; c. 8, 'ab senatu,' &c.; and to other passages.

contra leges] 'Contra legem,' Orelli; but there is good authority for 'leges.' Zumpt refers to Act. i. c. 18; and to c. 4 of this oration: 'contra leges,' &c.

Messana literas dedit,] 'Addressed letters from Messana.' 'Dare literas' is the common expression for sending a letter, that is, giving it 'tabellario,' to the letter-carrier. The place from which the letter is sent is usually put in the ablative; but some-niatores ex sinu suo apposuit qui illam hereditatem Veneri Erycinae commissam esse dicerent: hac de re ostendit seipsum cogniturum. Possum deinceps totam rem explicare, deinde ad extremum id quod accidit dicere, Dionem HS decies centena millia numerasse ut causam certissimam obtineret; praeterea greges equarum ejus istum abigendos curasse, argenti vestisque stragulae quod fuerit curasse auferendum. times in the genitive, if the texts are right. Cic. Ad Q. Fr. ii. 15. The MSS. reading 'Messanam' is obviously a mistake.

calumniatores] A 'calumniator,' or 'calumniosus,' is one who knowingly and purposely, and with fraudulent design, schemes to trouble another (Paulus, Rec. Sent. i. 5, 1. Comp. Marcianus, Dig. 48. 16. 1, and Gaius, iv. 178). The word 'calumnia' contains the root 'calv' or 'calu,' which appears in the Fragments of the Twelve Tables, and shows the original meaning of the word: 'si calvitur pedemve struit' (Dirksen, Uebersicht, &c., der Zwölf-Tafel-Fragmente, p. 144; and Gaius, Dig. 50. 16. 233). As to 'calumnia,' compare Cic. Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 9: 'illam acerbissimam ministram praetorum avaritiae calumniam.'

hereditatem — commissam] This 'hereditas,' or property of a deceased person, was, it was alleged, to be forfeited, and came to the temple of Venus at Eryx. The alleged cause of forfeiture might be the non-performance of a condition. This use of 'commissus' is not uncommon in Cicero (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 14; and Lib. iii. c. 12; Ad Fam. xiii. 56), and also in the law writers (Dig. 39, tit. 4).

pecunias sumpsisse mutuas,] 'To have borrowed money.' 'Pecuniae mutuae' is money borrowed; and 'mutuum' is the general name for that Roman form of contract, by which things which were consumed in the use were borrowed, as money, wine, oil, and the like. In the case of a 'mutuum,' the thing borrowed became the property of the borrower, and he had only to return things of the same kind and value. (Gaius, iii. 90.)— 'nomina sua exegisse' 'had got in his debts' (see also c. 36). 'Nomen' is the entry in a book, which is one of the kinds of evidence of a debt. Its technical meaning is explained hereafter. Cicero uses 'exigere' in the De Am. c. 9, in a sense derived from this notion of getting in a debt.—'Praedia vendidisse,' 'sold his estates in land.' 'Praedium' is either 'urbanum' or 'rusticum.' A building on a 'praedium urbanum' is 'aedes:' on a 'praedium rusticum,' it is 'villa' (Dig. 50. 16. 27. 115. 211).

dicerent se jam tum audisse] "Apud antiquos de auditione testium dicebatur," Ascon.: a piece of information extracted from the text. We may certainly infer that this hearsay evidence was received. Yet we may assume that the Romans had sense enough to give to such evidence its proper value. The words 'apud antiquos,' perhaps, indicate that the author of the above note lived a long time after Cicero, and later than the real Asconius, who appears to have died in the latter part of the first century, A.D.

quum haec fierent, &c.] Klotz changes 'tum vos audiretis' into 'cum vos audiretis,' and makes 'tum causa agi vere videretur,' which is his reading and Zumpt's, to be the second member of the sentence. He says there is no sense in the common reading.

11. omnia crimina] 'All the charges.' Comp. Divin. c. 12, 'criminibus et oratione.' But 'crimen' was also used to signify both the charge, or accusation, and the matter, which was the foundation of the 'crimen.' There is a general distinction between 'crimen' and 'delictum'; for 'crimen' is properly applied to such matters as were the subject of 'judicia publica.' This passage seems to throw some light on the passage in Act. i. c. 18. He here uses the expression 'in testibus interrogandis' to express the whole of that part of the proceeding which related to the examination of witnesses; and that part included the statement of the charges, and the setting forth of them, which was followed by the examination of the witnesses. So that he appears to call this part of the proceedings, the 'examination of the witnesses;' which included both the

in medio posuissem,] Orelli has 'proposuissem.' Zumpt remarks, that 'in medio proponere' is not used in any other passage of Cicero.

in eo laborari] Zumpt has 'elaborari.' He says 'vulgo laborari, id esset in angustiis versari, quod nondum verum est.' 'Id elaborari'; Klotz:—'tum judicibus:' 'judicibus,' Or.

Omnia praeteribo quae mihi turpia dictu videbuntur, neque solum quid istum audire, verum etiam quid me deceat dicere, considerabo. Quaestor Cn. Papirio consule time, when it was in my power to avoid it." What he says is plain enough; but it is not so easy to express it.

'Cavere,' as Forcellini observes, is a forensic word. 'Cavere alicui' is said of a 'jurisconsultus,' whose advice is given for the protection of his client. 'Cavere sibi' is to get security, that is, legal security of some kind for oneself. 'Cavere ab aliquo,' is to get security from a person (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 23), 'ab sese caveat.' 'Cavere' is also used by the law-writers with a dative and accusative, to express the giving to a person security to some amount, as in Dig. 29. 2. 98: "Singuli heredes Sempronio caverunt summam, qua quisque condemnatus erat." To whom then does 'caverent' apply in this passage, and what is its sense? The subject of it is the same as that of 'redemerunt,' those who undertook to get Verres off; and 'caverent' implies a 'cautio' for their own benefit, not a 'cautio' as to the sum of money, for the money-terms are not the question here; but a 'cautio' as to time, for the 'redemptio' was 'sub conditione,' provided the affair was postponed till after the first of January.—'Quam diem isti qui istum,' &c.: Klotz.

12. peccatisque] Zumpt omits.

quem—produxit,] As Zumpt remarks,

Verres produced his son at the trial, or is here supposed to have brought him into court; and as to this Roman fashion, he refers to Quintilian, Inst. Or. xi. c. 3. § 174. The purpose of Cicero's foul abuse of the son is explained by Asconius after his fashion.

lenonum, &c.] See Divin. c. 15. The Lex Julia de Adulteriis made 'lenocinium' a punishable offence; but the 'lex' did not apply to those who got their living by the prostitution of slaves (Rein, Das Criminalrecht der Römer, p. 880). The meaning of 'perductores' may be collected from the context. Comp. Hor. 2 Sat. v. 77.

lucretur indicia, &c.] 'Let him have the benefit of all the evidence of his old infamy;' that is, let nothing be said of it.

Cn. Papirio consule] Asconius says 'legitur tamen et consuli;' which reading Orelli has. In favour of 'consule,' Klotz remarks, that after the murder of Cinna, B.C. 84, Cn. Papirius Carbo was sole consul, and that the time of the quaestorship of Verres is thus more distinctly marked. As Carbo was consul for the second time B.C. 84, and this oration was delivered (that is, supposed to be delivered) B.C. 70, Zumpt observes that Cicero, according to the common Roman way of reckoning, should have fuisti abhinc annos quatuordecim : ex ea die ad hanc diem quae fecisti in iudicium voco. Hora nulla vacua a furto, scelere, crudelitate, flagitio reperietur. Hi sunt anni consumpti in quaestura, et legatione Asiatica, et praetura urbana, et praetura Siciliensi. Quare haec eadem erit quadripartita distributio totius accusationis meae.

XIII. Quaestor ex senatusconsulto provinciam sortitus es : obtigit tibi consularis, ut cum consule Cn. Carbone esses, eamque provinciam obtineres. Erat tum dissensio civium, de qua nihil sum dicturus quid sentire debueris : unum hoc dico, in ejusmodi tempore ac sorte statuere te debuisse utrum malles sentire atque defendere. Carbo graviter ferebat sibi quaestorem obtigisse, hominem singulari luxuria atque inertia ; verumtamen ornabat eum beneficiis omnibus. Ne diutius teneam : pecunia attributa, numerata est : profectus est quaestor in provinciam : venit in Galliam exspectatus ad exercitum consularem cum pecunia. Simulac primum ei occasio visa est, cognoscite hominis principium magistratuum gerendorum et rei publicae administrandae, aversa pecunia publica, quaestor consulem, exercitum, sortem, provinciamque deseruit. Video quid egerim : erigit se, sperat sibi auram posse aliquam afflari in hoc crimine voluntatis assensionisque eorum quibus Cn. Carbonis mortui nomen odio sit, quibus illam relictionem proditionemque consulis sui gratam sperat fore. Quasi vero id cupiditate defendendae nobilitatis aut studio partium fecerit, ac non apertissime consulem, exercitum, provinciamque compilarit, et propter impudentissimum furtum aufugerit. Est enim obscurum et ejusmodi factum ejus ut possit aliquis suspicari C. Verrem, quod ferre said fifteen. But the Romans were not consistent as to including both extremes in reckoning. See Savigny, System des Heut. Röm. Rechts, iv. Beilage, xi., whose remarks have reference to the use of the ordinal numbers, first, second, and so on ; but the remarks are applicable also to the use of the cardinal numbers in some cases.

13. dissensio civium,] The civil war between Sulla and the partizans of Marius. The orator purposely touches lightly on this matter. A little further on he speaks of "Cn. Carbonis mortui," but, as Zumpt observes, he was put to death at Lilybaeum by the order of Cn. Pompeius. (See Ad Fam. ix. 21 ; and Plutarch, Pomp. c. 10).

beneficiis] 'beneficiis officiisque,' Zumpt. attributa,] A word used to express the payment of money out of the 'aerarium' to a 'quaestor' or other person. As to 'aversa,' see Divin. p. 31, note ; and Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 69, 'frumenti numerum . . aversum.' This use of the word appears in the 'oneris aversi actio,' Dig. 19. 2. 31. The word 'sortem' refers to the mode in which the 'quaestor' became attached to his consul, which involved 'religio' (p. 25, note).

assensionis] Zumpt and Klotz have 'dissensionis.' Zumpt says that 'assensionis,' which reading has generally been adopted since the time of P. Manutius, rests only on the 'lemma' of Asconius. He also reads 'afflare,' and contends that 'auram afflari' cannot be said. I do not see how 'dissensionis' can be explained.

Est enim obscurum] To prevent any obscurity, it may be remarked that Cicero is speaking ironically.

novos homines non potuerit, ad nobilitatem, hoc est ad suos, transisse, nihil fecisse propter pecuniam. Videamus rationes quemadmodum retulerit. Jam ipse ostendet quamobrem Cn. Carbonem reliquerit: jam se ipse indicabit.

Accepi, inquit, HS vicies ducenta triginta quinque millia quadringentos XVII nummos: dedi stipendio, frumento, legatis, pro quaestore, cohorti praetoriae, HS mille sexcenta triginta quinque millia quadringentos XVII nummos: reliqui Arimini HS sexcenta millia. 14. vicies] As the reading stands, the sum which Verres returned as expended by him, added to the amount which he said that he left at Ariminum, makes up the whole amount which he had received. From this it appears that 'vicies' is correctly explained to signify 'vicies centena millia.' In c. 10 there is 'HS decies centena millia,' for which 'decies' alone might be, and generally is, used. Horace says: 'decies centena dedisses' (1 Sat. iii. 15, and Heindorf's note).

cohorti praetoriae,] The term 'praetoria' was applied, whether the commander was 'consul' or 'praetor,' for every commander of an army was originally called 'praetor.' 'Cohors praetoria' is rightly explained by Asconius, 'comitibus consularibus,' those who were the commander's or governor's staff, the persons of higher rank immediately about him. The 'comites et adjutores' were the 'praetoria cohors' (Cic. Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 3); and the inferior officers or functionaries were said to be 'quasi ex cohorte praetoris.'—'Pro quaestore' is the right reading: he paid or retained this sum, 'pro officio quaestoris,' in respect of his office. The reading 'pro quaestori' is absurd, for a 'quaestor' would not say that he paid himself. Some editors have been misled apparently by the other dative cases: 'I disbursed for the soldiers' pay, for corn, for or to Legati; on my own account, as quaestor, I disbursed or retained,' &c.

Ariminum,] Rimini. This town, as Asconius says, was given up by P. Tullius Albinovanus, one of the Marian faction, to Sulla's party, B.C. 81, who plundered it; which circumstance, according to Cicero, accounts for Verres selecting Ariminum as the alleged place of deposit.

Recita] This is the word used for a public reading of letters addressed to the senate, and the like. (See Forcellini.)

quaestoribus urbanis] The two Urbani quaestores, who stayed in Rome, and had the management of the 'aerarium.' A lively picture of Cato's activity during his office is drawn by Plutarch (Cato Min. c. 16, &c.) This Lentulus was guilty of embezzlement of public money in some capacity (Plutarch, Cicero, c. 17). L. Triarius afterwards served under L. Lucullus in the Mithridatic war, and was defeated by Mithridates (Plutarch, Pomp. c. 35).

res rationum, &c.] Manutius omits 'res,' and Hotmann proposed to alter 'res' to 'Verris.' 'Res rationum' is the 'mat-

M. Piso.] He was quaestor (B.C. 83) to the consul L. Cornelius Scipio, whom he left for the party of Sulla. Scipio's troops deserted him through the intrigues of Sulla. Piso was at this time (B.C. 70) proconsul in Spain, and in B.C. 69 he had a triumph.

15. proscriptorum] The 'proscripti' were those whose names 'proscribebantur,' were put up in public. Plutarch, in his Life of Sulla (c. 31), has drawn a picture of those dreadful times, when the signal for a man's murder, and the seizure of his property, was the appearance of his name in the proscription lists. 'Proscribo' is a word used generally for any public notice that is put up, as an auction, for instance; and Ulpian (Dig. 14. 3. 11) has defined the word.

habuit honorem, &c.] 'He rewarded him like a traitor, but he did not trust him as a friend.' Zumpt correctly explains the sense of 'honos,' which here means a fee or pay for service, as in Cic. Ad Fam. xvi. 9: 'Curio misi ut medico honos haberetur.' From this sense of the word came 'honorarium.' (See Ulpian, Dig. 11. 6. 1.)

ac domesticum malum, non modo non exsistit, verum etiam opprimit antequam prospicere atque explorare potueris. Itane vero? tu, quum quaestor ad exercitum missus sis, custos non solum pecuniae, sed etiam consulis, particeps omnium rerum consiliorumque fueris, habitus sis in liberum loco, sicut mos majorum ferebat, repente relinquo, deseras, ad adversarios transeas? O scelus! O portentum in ultimas terras exportandum! Non enim potest ea natura quae tantum facinus commiserit hoc uno scelere esse contenta: necesse est semper aliquid ejusmodi molitur: necesse est in simili audacia perfidiaque versetur. Itaque idem iste quem Cn. Dolabella postea, C. Malleolo occiso, pro quaestore habuit,—haud scio an major etiam haec necessitudo fuerit quam illa Carbonis, ac plus judicium voluntatis valere quam sortis debeat,—idem in Cn. Dolabellam qui in Cn. Carbonem fuit. Nam quae in ipsum valebant crimina, contulit in illum, causamque illius omnem ad inimicos accusatoresque detulit: ipse in eum cui legatus, cui pro quaestore fuerat, inimicissimum atque improbissimum testimonium dixit. Ille, miser quum esset, Cn. Dolabella, tum prodicione istius nefaria, tum improbo et falso ejusdem testimonio, tum multo etiam ex maxima parte istius furtorum ac flagitiorum invidia conflagravit.

XVI. Quid hoc homine faciatis? aut ad quam spem tam perfidiosum, tam importunum animal reservetis? qui in Cn. Carbone sortem, in Cn. Dolabella voluntatem neglexerit ac violarit, eosque non modo non exsistit,] All the MSS., according to Zumpt, have this reading, and yet he omits the 'non' before 'exsistit.' His remark that nothing is more common than for 'non' to be incorrectly added or omitted in the MSS., is true; and there are nowhere more instances of it than in the Digest. But he gives the passage a meaning which is contrary to what Cicero intends to say: 'non modo existit, antequam prospicias, verum etiam opprimit, antequam cavere possis.' But Cicero does not intend to say this: he says that this evil does not show itself, but crushes you, before you can have the opportunity of looking at it, and seeing what it is. It does not even give warning: it comes upon you unawares. Madvig (Opuscula Academica, p. 326) approves of the omission of this 'non,' on the authority of Augustinus, De Civ. Dei, lib. 19. 5, who has, however, 'non solum.' According to the supposed reading of Augustinus, then, the sense is this: 'it shows itself, and that is not all; it even crushes you before,' &c., which is plain nonsense. Zumpt and Madvig make the passage like other passages in these speeches, where 'non modo' is followed by 'verum etiam,' without any negative interposed. It would be just as consistent to strike out the 'non' before 'adesse' in Div. c. 9, 'non modo non adesse,' &c.

C. Malleolo occiso,] 'Oratorie pro mortuo occisum dixit.' Asconius.

16. Quid hoc homine faciatis?] 'What can you do with such a fellow?' The ablative is used the same way with the passive 'factum,' and with the verb 'fio,' as 'quid me' or 'de me fiet?' 'Quid illo myoparone factum sit,' c. 35. (See Forcellini.)

in Cn. Dolabella,—in Cn. Carbone] 'In Cn. Carbonem . . Cn. Dolabellam,' are said by Zumpt to be found in all the MSS. and all the old editions. Zumpt explains 'voluntatem neglexerit' to refer to the 'voluntas' of Verres, and the 'judicium voluntatis,' in c. 15, also to mean the 'voluntas' of Verres. It seems to me to mean the 'voluntas' of Dolabella.

ambos non solum deseruerit, sed etiam prodiderit atque oppugnarit. Nolite, quaeso, iudices, brevitatem orationis meae potius quam rerum ipsarum magnitudine crimina ponderare. Mihi enim properandum necessario est ut omnia vobis quae mihi constituta sunt possim exponere. Quamobrem quaestura istius demonstrata primique magistratus et furto et scelere perspecto, reliqua attendite. In quibus illud tempus Sullanarum proscriptionum ac rapinarum praetermittam; neque ego istum sibi ex communi calamitate defensionem ullam sinam sumere: suis eum certis propriisque criminibus accusabo. Quamobrem hoc omni tempore Sullano ex accusatione circumscripto, legationem ejus praeclaram cognoscite.

XVII. Posteaquam Cn. Dolabellae provincia Cilicia constituta est, O dii immortales! quanta iste cupiditate, quibus allegationibus illam sibi legationem expugnauit: id quod Cn. Dolabellae principium maximae calamitatis fuit. Nam ut iste profectus est, quacun- que iter fecit, ejusmodi fuit non ut legatus populi Romani sed ut quaedam calamitas pervadere videretur. In Achaia—praetermittam minora omnia quorum simile forsitan alius quoque aliquid aliquando fecerit: nihil dicam nisi singulare, nisi id quod si in alium reum diceretur incredibile videretur—magistratum Sicyonium nummos poposcit. Ne sit hoc crimen in Verrem: fecerunt alii. Quum ille non daret, animadvertit. Improbum, sed non inauditum. Genus animadversionis videte: quaeritis ex quo genere hominem istum judicetis. Ignem ex lignis viridibus atque humidis in loco angusto fieri jussit: ibi hominem ingenuum, domi nobilem, populi Romani socium atque amicum, fumo excruciatum, semivivum reliquit. Jam quae iste signa, quas tabulas pictas ex Achaia sustulerit, non dicam hoc loco: est alius mihi locus ad hanc istius cupiditatem demonstrandam separatus. Athenis audistis ex aede Minervae grande auri pondus ablatum. Dictum hoc est in Cn. Dolabellae iudicio. Dictum? etiam aestimatum. Hujus consilii non modo participem C. [17. allegationibus—legationem] One of Cicero's plays on words, in which he indulged more than good taste can approve. The Cilician praetorship of Dolabella belonged to B.C. 80, and probably to 79 also.

manumitted slave, which would have been bad enough. As to the definition of 'ingenuus,' see Gaius (i. 11).

sustulit signa pulcherrima atque antiquissima, eaque in onerariam navem suam conjicienda curavit. Postridie quum fanum spoliatum viderent ii qui Delum incolebant, graviter ferebant: est enim tanta apud eos ejus fani religio atque antiquitas ut in eo loco ipsum Apollinem natum esse arbitrentur. Verbum tamen facere non audebant, ne forte ea res ad Dolabellam ipsum pertineret.

XVIII. Tum subito tempestates coortae sunt maximae, iudices, ut non modo proficisci quum cuperet Dolabella non posset, sed vix in oppido consisteret; ita magni fluctus ejiciebantur. Hic navis illa praedonis istius, onusta signis religiosis, expulsa atque ejecta fluctu, frangitur: in littore signa illa Apollinis reperiuntur: jussu Dolabellae reponuntur: tempestas sedatur: Dolabella Delo proficiscitur. Non dubito quin, tametsi nullus in te sensus humanitatis, nulla ratio unquam fuit religionis, nunc tamen in metu periculoque tuo tuorum tibi scelerum veniat in mentem. Potestne tibi ulla spes salutis commoda ostendi, quum recordaris in deos immortales quam impius, quam sceleratus, quam nefarius fueris? Apollinemne tu Delium spoliare ausus es? illine tu templo, tam antiquo, tam sancto, tam religioso, manus impias ac sacrilegas afferre conatus es? Si in pueritia non his artibus et disciplinis institutus eras ut ea quae literis mandata sunt disceres atque cognosceres, ne postea quidem, quum in ea ipsa loca venisti, potuisti accipere id quod est proditum memoria ac literis Latonam ex longo errore et fuga, gravidam, et jam ad pariendum [vicinam] temporibus exactis, confugisse Delum atque ibi Apollinem Dianamque peperisse? qua ex opinione hominum illa insula eorum deorum sacra putatur; tantaque ejus auctoritas religionis et est et semper fuit ut ne Persae quidem, quum Apollinem natum] So the story is told in the so-called Homeric Hymn to Apollo, and in the Hymn of Callimachus.

18. ita magni fluctus] 'Such great waves were thrown up.' 'Ita' is thus sometimes used with an adjective, as in Cic. De Sen. c. 20, 'non ita longa;' Ad Q. Fr., c. 11, 'non ita acerbum.' 'Tam' is used the same way, Ad Q. Fr. c. 5.

proditum memoria, &c.] Orelli has 'memoriae;' and both forms are used. But 'literis' appears to be the ablative, and therefore it should be 'memoria.' This sentence, which begins 'Si in pueritia,' is interrogative. Klotz and Orelli place the ? after 'literis.' Zumpt makes the sentence affirmative. Comp. 'Si te... ne illud quidem,' c. 34.

ne Persae quidem,] The story of the Persians landing at Delos, B.C. 490, is told by Herodotus (vi. 96). Asconius remarks that it was not only because they were enemies that the Persians destroyed the Greek temples, but because they thought that no temples should be erected to the deities (Cic. De Legibus, ii. 10). Herodotus (i. 131) says that the Persians made no statues, temples, or altars; and that they sacrificed to the sun, the moon, the earth, fire, water, and the winds. The Persians were, therefore, temple-destroyers and iconoclasts by profession, as they showed also in their invasion of Egypt under Cambyses, for the destruction of many of the ancient monuments can hardly be attributed to any other than the Persians; I mean, such monuments as we know to have been destroyed before the Roman period. The reason of their sparing the temples in Delos was, as the Scholiast on Aristophanes (Peace, 409) says, who is quoted by Klotz, because the bellum toti Graeciae, diis hominibusque indixissent, et mille numero navium classem ad Delum appulissent, quidquam conarentur aut violare aut attingere. Hoc tu fanum depopulari, homo improbissime atque amentissime, audebas? Fuit ulla cupiditas tanta quae tantam exstingueret religionem? et si tum haec non cogitabas, ne nunc quidem recordaris nullum esse tantum malum quod non tibi pro sceleribus tuis jamdiu debeatur?

XIX. In Asiam vero postquam venit, quid ego adventus istius prandia, coenas, equos, muneraque commemorem? Nihil cum Verre de quotidianis criminibus acturus sum. Chio per vim signa pulcherrima dico abstulisse: item Erythris, et Halicarnasso. Tenedo, praetereo pecuniam quam eripuit, Tenem ipsum qui apud Tenedios sanctissimus deus habetur, qui urbem illam dicitur condidisse, cujus ex nomine Tenedus nominatur, hunc ipsum, inquam, Tenem, pulcherrime factum, quem quondam in comitio vidistis, abstulit magno cum gemitu civitatis. Illa vero expugnatio fani antiquissimi et nobilissimi Junonis Samiae, quam luctuosa Samiis fuit, quam acerba toti Asiae, quam clara apud omnes, quam nemini vestrum inaudita; de qua expugnatione quum legati ad C. Neronem in Asiam Samo venissent, responsum tulerunt, ejusmodi querimonias quae ad legatum populi Romani pertinerent, non ad praetorem sed Romam deferri oportere. Quas iste tabulas illinc, quae signa sustulit? quae cognovi egomet apud istum in aedibus nuper quum obsignandi gratia venissem. Quae signa nunc, Verres, ubi sunt?

Persians recognized their sun-god in Apollo, and their moon in Artemis. Verres, however, was not the first who plundered Delos; but it was not Cicero's purpose to tell us that fact. Archelaus, the general of Mithridates, violated its sanctity, as appears from Appian, Mithridat., c. 28; Pausanias, Laconica, c. 23, and Strabo, p. 486, ed. Cas., referred to by Zumpt. But there is a difference between what is done in time of war, and robberies, like those of Verres, in a time of peace.

19. adventus istius] Klotz makes 'adventus' the accusative, and the words which follow 'istius' to be explanatory of what was meant by an 'adventus.' He refers for this plural use of 'adventus' to Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 34, and Lib. 4. c. 14: but see c. 24, 'adventus sui.' His explanation is specious, but not true. 'Adventus istius' refers to 'venit.' As to the 'equos,' there is no difficulty, though Asconius makes one: he required horses of the people, as well as other services.

in comitio] The Roman 'aediles' sometimes borrowed valuable works of art from the provinces, for the embellishment of the public exhibitions, which it was their office to give to the Romans. It seems likely enough that such loans were not always returned, though in the instance of this statue of Tenes it must have been so. Klotz refers to Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 4, and Lib. 4, c. 3, for further matter as to this mode of decorating the 'comitium.' As to Tenes or Tennes, see Pausanias, x. 14, and Steph. Byzant. v. Τένεδος.

Junonis Samiae,] Herodotus (iii. 60) speaks of the temple of Hera, at Samos, as the largest that he had seen. In Strabo's time (p. 637) the Heraeum was a 'pinacotheca,' or 'picture-gallery;' and the Hypaethrum was filled with the finest statues. If Cicero means to blame Nero indirectly, there seems no ground for it; for, though the robbery was committed in the province of Asia, of which Nero was governor, Verres was the 'legatus' of Dolabella.

obsignandi] The passage shows that the prosecutor had the power of putting seals illa quaero quae apud te nuper ad omnes columnas, omnibus etiam intercolumniis, in silva denique disposita sub divo vidimus. Cur ea, quamdiu alium praetorem cum iis iudicibus quos in horum locum sortitus es de te in consilium iturum putasti, tamdiu domi fuerunt? posteaquam nostris testibus nos quam horis tuis uti malle vidisti, nullum signum domi reliquisti praeter duo quae in mediis aedibus sunt; quae ipsa Samo sublata sunt? Non putasti me tuis familiarissimis in hanc rem testimonia denuntiaturum qui tuae domi saepe fuissent, ex quibus quaererem, signa scirentne fuisse quae non essent?

XX. Quid tum hos de te judicatuos arbitratus es, quum viderent te jam non contra accusatorem tuum sed contra quaestorem sectoremque pugnare? Qua de re Charidemum Chium testimonium priore actione dicere audistis; sese, quum esset trierarchus et Verrem ex Asia decedentem prosequeretur, jussu Dolabellae fuisse una cum isto Sami; seseque tum scire spoliatum esse fanum Junonis et oppidum Samum; posteaque se causam apud Chios cives suos Samiis accusantibus publice dixisse; eoque se esse on such things as ought not to be removed pending the trial; an inference from this passage which Asconius, as usual, expresses in other words.

columnas,] These statues were placed at columns, and in the intercolumniations (intercolumnia), or arranged in the planted grounds or 'horti' (silva). The Romans were fond of gardens, which they decorated with statues and works of art. This kind of 'silva' was sometimes called 'viridarium.'

sortitus es] Asconius says, that we must understand Cicero to mean Metellus (alium praetorem), and by the 'judices,' those whom Verres expected to put in the place of those who would be incapacitated for sitting in the 'consilium,' if the trial should be deferred to the next year. The text 'sortitus es' cannot be right. Orelli has 'subsortiturus eras,' the emendation of Hotmann; and Zumpt has 'sortitus esses,' which is his own.

testimonia denuntiaturum] 'would give them notice to appear as witnesses.' 'Denuntiare' is used, generally, to give a person notice of any kind, as Ad Fam. xi. 25: "expectanti mihi tuas quotidie literas Lupus noster subito denuntiavit ut ad te scriberem, si quid vellem." The legal 'denuntiatio,' as Klotz shows, precedes the 'citatio,' or calling of the witnesses in court. 'Denuntiare' means, to give them a legal summons to attend as witnesses; and 'citare,' to call on them in court (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 30; Pro Sext. Rosc. c. 38; Pro L. Flacco, c. 6, 15). — 'Domi semper fuissent:' Zumpt.

20. quaestorem, &c.] Asconius says, that there is a reading 'quaesitor;' but that reading does not suit the meaning of the passage. Cicero means to say, that when Verres removed these things, it was an admission of his guilt: he had given up the struggle against his prosecutor, and was now only contending with those whose business it would be to do execution by taking his goods and selling them, the 'quaestor urbanus' and the 'sector.' Zumpt refers to the term as expressed in a fragment of the 'Lex Servilia': "eum qui ex hac lege condemnatus erit, quaestor praedes facito det de consilii majoris partis sententia quanti ei censuerint: si praedes dati non erunt, bona ejus facito publice possideantur conquiranturque;" and to Livy, xxxviii. 60: "in bona deinde L. Scipionis possessum publice quaestores praetor misit." Those are called 'sectores' who buy property 'publice' (Gaius, iv. 146), and 'publice' refers to such property as was seized on account of the State. The 'sector' bought it in the lump, and the auction transferred to him the ownership; but it said that he took the property with its liabilities.

decedentem] Samos was plundered when Verres was leaving Asia; and probably Chios and Tenedus also. See 'decessissem,' p. 8, note.

absolutum quod planum fecisset, ea quae legati Samiorum dicerent ad Verrem non ad se pertinere. Aspendum vetus oppidum et nobile in Pamphylia scitis esse, plenissimum signorum optimorum. Non dicam illinc hoc signum ablatum esse et illud : hoc dico, nullum te Aspendi signum, Verres, reliquisse ; omnia ex fanis, ex locis publicis, palam, spectantibus omnibus, plaustis evecta exportataque esse. Atque etiam illum Aspendum citharistam, de quo saepe audistis id quod est Graecis hominibus in proverbio, quem omnia intus canere dicebant, sustulit et in intimis suis aedibus posuit ; ut etiam illum ipsum artificio suo superasse videatur. Pergae fanum antiquissimum et sanctissimum Dianae scimus esse : id quoque a te nudatum ac spoliatum esse, ex ipsa Diana quod habebat auri detractum atque ablatum esse dico. Quae, malum, est ista tanta audacia atque amentia ? quas enim sociorum atque amicorum urbes adisti legationis jure et nomine, si in eas vi cum exercitu imperioque invasisses, tamen, opinor, quae signa atque ornamenta ex his urbibus sustulisses, haec non in tuam domum neque in suburbana amicorum sed Romam in publicum deportasses.

XXI. Quid ego de M. Marcello loquar, qui Syracusas urbem ornatissimam cepit ? quid de L. Scipione, qui bellum in Asia gessit, Antiochumque regem potentissimum vicit ? quid de T. Flaminio, qui regem Philippum et Macedoniam subegit ? quid de L. Paulo, qui regem Persen vi ac virtute superavit ? quid de L. Mummius, qui urbem pulcherrimam atque ornatissimam, Corinthum, plenissimam rerum omnium, sustulit, urbesque Achaiae Boeotiaeque multas sub imperium populi Romani ditionemque subjunxit ? Quorum domus omnia intus, &c.] Cicero has this expression (In Rullum, ii. 26) : "atque hoc carmen hic tribunus plebis non vobis, sed sibi intus canit." The explanation of this passage by Asconius, which Klotz has adopted, is the following :—"There was something in the manner in which this figure was represented as holding the lyre, to which the words 'intus canere' refer. Asconius says that the player on the cithara holds the 'plectrum' in his right hand, which is 'foris canere ;' and he has the fingers of the left hand on the strings, which is 'intus canere.' This 'citharista' of Aspendus was represented doing every thing with the left hand, 'intus : ' he did not use the right hand at all. The proverbial expression 'intus canere' was applied to a person who sily looked after his own interest." But this explanation of Asconius certainly does not explain the proverb. Zumpt gives a different sense to the words 'intus canere,' as applied to the 'citharista : ' "the statue was made with such skill, that the 'citharista' seemed to be feeling his music, or 'intus canebat ;' " but no body else, of course, could hear it. He had, then, all his playing to himself. So Verres played for himself alone. Cicero makes a poor play on the word 'intus,' when he says "in intimis suis aedibus posuit."

Quae, malum, est ista] This is one of the familiar modes of expression (malum) which the reader must translate as he pleases. Forcellini's version is "che diavol è." Comp. Terence, Phormio, v. 7, 55 ; "Quid vos, malum, ergo me sic ludificamini ?"

21. M. Marcello, &c.] Cicero enumerates the Roman generals, who had enriched Italy with the spoils of conquered countries. L. Mummius carried off a rich booty of works of art from Corinth, which were used to embellish Rome, and some of the surrounding cities. (Strabo, p. 381. ed. Cas.)

quum honore ac virtute florerent, signis et tabulis pictis erant vacuae. At vero urbem totam, templa deorum omnesque Italiae partes illorum donis ac monumentis exornatas videmus. Vereor ne haec forte cuipiam nimis antiqua et jam obsoleta videantur; ita enim tum aequabiliter omnes erant hujusmodi ut haec laus eximiae virtutis et innocentiae non solum hominum verum etiam temporum illorum esse videatur. P. Servilius, vir clarissimus, maximis rebus gestis, adest: de te sententiam laturus est. Olympum vi, copiis, consilio, virtute cepit, urbem antiquam et omnibus rebus auctam et ornatam. Recens exemplum fortissimi viri profero. Nam postea Servilius imperator populi Romani Olympum, urbem hostium, cepit quam tu in iisdem illis locis legatus quaestorius oppida pacata sociorum atque amicorum diripienda ac vexanda curasti. Tu quae ex fanis religiosissimis per scelus et per latrocinium abstulisti, ea nos videre nisi in tuis amicorumque tuorum tectis non possumus: P. Servilius quae signa atque ornamenta ex urbe hostium, vi et virtute capta, belli lege atque imperatorio jure sustulit, ea populo Romano apportavit, per triumphum vexit, in tabulas publicas ad aerarium perscribenda curavit. Cognoscite ex literis publicis hominis amplissimi diligentiam. Recita. RATIONES RELATAE P. SERVILII. Non solum numerum signorum sed etiam uniuscujusque magnitudinem, figuram, statum, literis definiri vides. Certe major est virtutis victoriaeque jucunditas quam ista voluptas quae percipitur ex libidine et cupiditate: multo diligentius habere dico Servilium praedam populi Romani quam te tua furta notata atque perscripta.

At vero] The use of 'at,' which is a word of 'addition,' is very distinct from 'sed,' a word of 'opposition.' Its use is in the way of making an objection, which is very common; and also in making an answer to an objection. De Sen. c. 6: "non facit ea quae juvenes"—an objection; to which the answer is: "at vero multo majora et meliora facit." The interpretation of the text seems to be this: "The houses of these men, though ennobled by the honours of the State and by virtue, had, it is true, no statues and paintings. But if their houses were without them, the city, &c. was not."

P. Servilius,] Isauricus, who conducted the war against the pirates on the south coast of Asia Minor, and took several cities, among which was Olympus (Deliktash), on the coast of Lycia. The place is identified by an inscription 'Ολυμπήνων ἡ βουλή καὶ ὁ δῆμος (Beaufort's Karamania). The MSS. of Cicero, have 'Olynthum,' a mani-

belli lege, &c.] 'Belli lege' must not be rendered by the 'law of war,' in the modern sense of the term. The word would be 'jus' in such case. It means according to the terms (lex) on which war is carried on, one of which is that the conqueror acquired the property of the conquered, according to ancient usage.

statum,] Asconius says, is the condition of the statues, as to ornaments and the like appendages.

praedam] 'Praeda' was 'that which was taken in war,' and it was, properly, brought into the 'aerarium,' if it was money, or the produce of what was sold (Liv. ii. 42): if other things, a catalogue was made, and they were sent to Rome. In certain cases, the 'praeda' was given to the soldiers (Liv. vi. 13; x. 20). See Praeda, Dict. of Antiqs. —'furta notata atque descripta:' Orelli.

XXII. Dices tua quoque signa et tabulas pictas ornamento urbi foroque populi Romani fuisse. Memini: vidi simul cum populo Romano forum comitiumque adornatum, ad speciem magnifico ornatu, ad sensum cogitationemque acerbo et lugubri. Vidi collucere omnia furtis tuis, praeda provinciarum, spoliis sociorum atque amicorum. Quo quidem tempore, iudices, iste spem maximam reliquorum quoque peccatorum nactus est. Vidit enim eos qui iudiciorum dominos se dici volebant harum cupiditatum esse servos. Socii vero nationesque exterae spem omnium tum primum abjecerunt rerum ac fortunarum suarum; propterea quod casu legati ex Asia atque Achaia plurimi Romae tunc fuerunt, qui deorum simulacra ex suis fanis sublata in foro venerabantur, itemque cetera signa et ornamenta quum cognoscerent alia alio in loco lacrimantes intuebantur. Quorum omnium hunc sermonem tum esse audiebamus: Nihil esse quod quisquam dubitaret de exitio sociorum atque amicorum, quum quidem viderent in foro populi Romani, quo in loco antea qui sociis injurias fecerant accusari et condemnari solebant, ibi esse palam posita ea quae ab sociis per scelus ablata ereptaque essent. Hic ego non arbitror illum negaturum signa sese plurima, tabulas pictas innumerabiles habere: sed, ut opinor, solet haec quae rapuit et furatus est nonnunquam dicere se emisse: quoniam quidem in Achaia, Asiam, Pamphyliam, sumptu publico et legationis nomine, mercator signorum tabularumque pictarum missus est.

XXIII. Habeo et istius et patris ejus accepti tabulas omnes, quas diligentissime legi atque digessi; patris quoad vixit; tuas quoad ais te confecisse. Nam in isto, iudices, hoc novum reperietis. Audimus aliquem tabulas nunquam confecisse; quae est opinio hominum de M. Antonio falsa; nam fecit diligentissime.

22. iudiciorum dominos] An allusion, says Asconius, to Hortensius and the other nobles. Cicero says that their cupidity was inflamed by the sight of the works of art, which Verres had collected in Rome, and he was encouraged to go on with his robberies during his government of Sicily. It is conjectured by Ferracci, quoted by Klotz, that Verres made this display during the time that he was 'praetor urbanus,' in which capacity he had to superintend the 'Ludi Apollinares.'

fecerant—solebant,] These indicatives, which occur in the reported words of others, are contrary to Roman usage.

quoniam quidem, &c.] This is said ironically. Asconius read "legationis nomine cum imperio et securibus mercator."

23. accepti tabulas omnes,] The account-books of Verres and his father, in which all their receipts or acquisitions were entered. For every Roman was expected to keep his accounts, so as to be able to show his receipts and expenditure. The Romans were a book-keeping people, and very precise in all matters of business. With us, every tradesman or merchant is expected to keep accounts; but among the Romans, every good 'paterfamilias' or 'head of a family' was expected to keep accounts. The allusions to book-keeping, and the terms of book-keeping, occur very frequently in the Roman writers.

M. Antonio] Asconius says that this is M. Antonius Creticus, an unprincipled fel-Verum sit hoc genus aliquod minime probandum. Audimus alium non ab initio fecisse, sed ex tempore aliquo confecisse: est aliqua etiam hujusce rei ratio. Hoc vero novum et ridiculum est quod hic nobis respondit quum ab eo tabulas postularemus, usque ad M. Terentium et C. Cassium consules confecisse, postea destitisse. Alio loco hoc cujusmodi sit considerabimus; nunc nihil ad me attinet; horum enim temporum in quibus nunc versor habeo tabulas et tuas et patris. Plurima signa pulcherrima, plurimas tabulas optimas deportasse te negare non potes: atque utinam neges. Unum ostende in tabulis aut tuis aut patris tui emptum esse: vicisti. Ne haec quidem duo signa pulcherrima quae nunc ad impluvium tuum stant, quae multos annos ad valvas Junonis Samiae steterunt, habes quomodo emeris; haec, inquam, duo, quae in aedibus tuis sola jam sunt, quae sectorem expectant, relictæ ac destituta a ceteris signis.

XXIV. At, credo, in hisce solis rebus indomitas cupiditates atque effrenatas habebat: ceterae libidines ejus ratione aliqua aut modo continebantur. Quam multis istum ingenuis, quam multis matribus familias in illa tetra atque impura legatione vim attulisse existimatis? Ecquo in oppido pedem posuit ubi non plura stuprorum flagitiorumque suorum quam adventus sui vestigia reliquerit? Sed ego omnia quae negari poterunt praetermittam; etiam haec quae certissima sunt et clarissima relinquam: unum aliquod de nefariis istius factis eligam, quo facilius ad Siciliam possim aliquando, quae mihi hoc oneris negotiique imposuit, pervenire. Oppidum est in Hellesponto Lampsacum, iudices, in primis Asiae provinciae clarum et nobile; homines autem ipsi Lampsaceni tum low, who has been alluded to before (Divinatio, p. 30). But it appears to be his father, the orator, M. Antonius, for Cicero makes him say (De Or. ii. 23): 'sed tamen ne tabulas quidem conficere existumor.'

impluvium] In the roof of the 'atrium' of a Roman house, there was an opening, called 'compluvium,' towards which the roof sloped, and the rain-water from the roof was thus carried down into the 'impluvium' or cistern in the floor, round which statues were placed. If a snake, perchance, got on the roof, it might find its way into the 'impluvium;' manifestly a very bad omen (Terence, Phormio, iv. 4, 26).

habes quomodo emeris;] The omission of the infinitive after 'habes' need create no difficulty. The word to be supplied is indicated by the verb 'ostende.' It seems not to have been sufficiently observed how common the omission of a verb is in the language of Cicero, when it is easily supplied from the context.

24. At, credo, &c.] 'But it will be said, I suppose,' &c. Here 'At' has its ordinary sense (see c. 21), and 'credo' is used ironically; as in the Letter to Q. Fr. i. 1, 2: 'erit, credo, periculum.'—'Cupiditas' is generally the passion for gain, greediness, love of lucre, as we see in many passages of Cicero.

Lampsacum,] The Greek form is 'Lampsacos;' but the neuter is used here, as 'Cyzicum' for 'Cyzicus.' This story, like some others, has nothing to do with Cicero's case, for Verres was prosecuted for Repetundae; but it is a good example of his way of stating facts, and so far we are glad to have it.

summe in omnes cives Romanos officiosi, tum praeterea maxime sedati et quieti, prope praeter ceteros ad summum Graecorum otium potius quam ad ullam vim aut tumultum accommodati. Accidit, quum iste a Cn. Dolabella efflagitasset, ut se ad regem Nicomedem regemque Sadalam mitteret, quumque iter hoc sibi magis ad quaestum suum quam ad rei publicae tempus accommodatum depoposcisset, ut illo itinere veniret Lampsacum cum magna calamitate et prope pernicio civitatis. Deducitur iste ad Janitorem quendam hospitem, comitesque ejus item apud ceteros hospites collocantur. Ut mos erat istius, atque ut eum suae libidines flagitiose facere admonebant, statim negotium dat illis suis comitibus, nequissimis turpissimisque hominibus, uti videant et investigent ecqua virgo sit aut mulier digna quamobrem ipse Lampsaci diutius commoraretur.

XXV. Erat comes ejus Rubrius quidam, homo factus ad istius libidines, qui miro artificio quocunque venerat haec investigare omnia solebat. Is ad eum rem istam defert, Philodamum esse quendam, genere, honore, copiis, existimatione facile principem Lampsacenorum: ejus esse filiam quae cum patre habitaret propterea quod virum non haberet, mulierem eximia pulchritudine; sed eam summa integritate pudicitiaeque existimari. Homo ut haec audivit, sic exarsit ad id quod non modo ipse nunquam viderat, sed ne audierat quidem ab eo qui ipse vidisset, ut statim ad Philodamum migrare se diceret velle. Hospes Janitor qui nihil suspicaretur Nicomedem] Nicomedes III., king of Bithynia, who gave his states by his testament to the Roman people (B.C. 75), as Attalus, of Pergamus, had done before. Sadala was a Thracian king, whom Garatoni conjectures to be the father of Cotys, and the grandfather of Sadala, who is mentioned by Caesar (Bell. Civ. iii. 4). facere admonebant,] There are other examples of 'admoneo' with an infinitive (Forcellini). Whether there is another example in Cicero, I do not know.

commoraretur.] Ernesti's correction, 'commoretur,' made on account of the two present tenses which precede, is quite unnecessary. Zumpt refers to two like instances, Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 15, 39.

25. Hospes Janitor qui nihil suspicaretur] This form, with 'iste qui non . . posset,' and 'iste qui . . raperetur,' are good examples of one of the niceties of the Latin language, which a few pertinent examples explain better than rules. The dependence of these clauses on 'hospes' and 'iste' is obvious. The ordinary explanation is, that these subjunctives express the reason or motive for what is declared by the clause of the indicative, which follows. They might, therefore, be translated, 'the host, because he had no suspicion of the real intention of Verres, fearing,' &c.; and, 'Verres, because he could not invent any excuse for leaving his host.' The next chapter contains another example: 'homo qui . . existimatus esset.' In all these, and other like cases, the principal predication of the sentence is not contained in the 'qui' and the subjunctive, which clause is quite subordinate. The meaning is this: 'qui nihil suspicaretur' stands in what some grammarians call the attributive relation to the subject. So we might say, 'Janitor, the host, having no suspicion at all;' and the Latin expression is 'nihil suspicans,' 'quum nihil suspicaretur,' or 'qui nihil suspicaretur;' as to which we must observe that 'quum' itself is a form of 'qui.' An example will explain the difference between 'qui' with an indiveritus ne quid in ipso se offenderetur, hominem summa vi retinere coepit. Iste qui hospitis relinquendi causam reperire non posset, alia sibi ratione viam munire ad stuprum coepit: Rubrium, delicias suas, in omnibus ejusmodi rebus adiutorem suum et conscium, parum laute deversari dicit; ad Philodamum deduci jubet. Quod ubi est Philodamo nuntiatum, tametsi erat ignarus quantum sibi ac liberis suis jam tum mali constitueretur, tamen ad istum venit; ostendit munus illud suum non esse; se, quum suae partes essent hospitum recipiendorum, tum ipsos tamen praetores et consules non legatorum assecclas recipere solere. Iste qui una cupiditate raperetur totum illius postulatum causamque neglexit: per vim ad eum qui recipere non debebat Rubrium deduci imperavit.

XXVI. Hic Philodamus posteaquam jus suum obtinere non potuit, ut humanitatem consuetudinemque suam retineret laborabat. Homo qui semper hospitalissimus amicissimusque nostrorum hominum existimatus esset, noluit videri ipsum illum Rubrium invitus in domum suam recepisse: magnifice et ornate, ut erat in primis inter suos copiosus, convivium comparat: rogat Rubrium ut quos ei commodum sit invitet, locum sibi soli si videatur relinquat: etiam filium suum, lectissimum adolescentem, foras ad propinquum suum quendam mittit ad coenam. Rubrius istius comites invitat: eos omnes Verres certiores facit quid opus esset. Mature veniunt: discumbitur. Fit sermo inter eos, et invitatio ut Graeco more biberetur. Hortatur hospes: poscunt majoribus poculis: celebratur omnium sermone laetitiaque convivium. Posteaquam satis cative, and with a subjunctive, in a case of this kind: 'Hic licitor istius Cornelius, qui cum ejus servus erat a Rubrio quasi in praesidio ad auferendam mulierem collocatus, occiditur . . . iste qui sua cupiditate tantos tumultus concitatos videret, cupere aliqua evolare si posset' (c. 26).

assecclas] A shortened form of such a word as 'adsecula,' which contains the crude form 'sequu,' or 'secu,' to follow. Forcellini observes, that in some MSS. of Cicero, the reading in the Pro Sextio, c. 64, is 'assecula.'

26. jus suum, &c.] 'Could not maintain his right.'—'in domum:' 'in' om. Zumpt.

invitatio ut Graeco more] Asconius explains this by saying that it was the Greek fashion, when a man drank his wine, to address the gods, and then his friends, by name. In the Tusculanae Disputationes (i. 40), it is said that Theramenes, on drinking the poison, threw what remained at the bottom out of the cup, so as to make a noise on the floor, we may suppose, and said: 'Propino hoc pulcro Critiae, qui in eum fuerat teterrimus: Graeci enim in conviviis solent nominare cui poculum tradituri sint.' Zumpt explains 'Graeco more' to be the 'propinandi mos,' or the custom of addressing the person to whom you wish well, and offering him a glass to empty, after having first put it to your lips.

poscunt majoribus] 'They call for larger cups:' 'bibere' being supplied. Asconius says: 'sunt qui producta scilicet O litera poscunt legunt, quasi saepe potant;' though he does not adopt this interpretation, and it is not likely that any one else will. There does not appear to be a verb 'po-sco,' though it is a possible form, and there is the noun 'po-sca,' which may be compared with 'e(d)-sca.'

celebratur—convivium.] Such sentences as these, so different from our mode of expression, are instances of the extreme difficulty of translating the Latin language.

calere res Rubrio visa est, Quaeso, inquit, Philodame, cur ad nos filiam tuam non intro vocari jubes? Homo qui et summa gravitate, et jam id aetatis et parens esset, obstupuit hominis improbi dicto. Instare Rubrius. Tum ut aliquid responderet negavit moris esse Graecorum, ut in convivio virorum accumberent mulieres. Hic tum alius ex alia parte: Enimvero ferendum hoc non est; vocetur mulier: et simul servis suis Rubrius ut januam clauderent et ipsi ad fores assisterent imperat. Quod ubi ille intellexit id agi atque id parari ut filiae suae vis afferretur, servos suos ad se vocat: his imperat ut se ipsum negligent, filiam defendant; excurrat aliquis qui hoc tantum domestici mali filio nuntiet. Clamor interea fit tota domo inter servos Rubrii atque hospitis. Jactatur domi suae vir primus et homo honestissimus: pro se quisque manus affert: aqua denique ferventi a Rubrio ipso Philodamus perfunditur. Haec ubi filio nuntiata sunt, statim exanimatus ad aedes contendit ut et vitae patris et pudicitiae sororis succurreret. Omnes eodem animo Lampsaceni simul ut hoc audiverunt, quod eos tum Philodami dignitas, tum injuriae magnitudo movebat, ad aedes noctu convenerunt. Hic lictor istius Cornelius, qui cum ejus servis erat a Rubrio quasi in praesidio ad auferendam mulierem collocatus, occiditur, servi nonnulli vulnerantur, ipse Rubrius in turba sauciatur; iste qui sua cupiditate tantos tumultus concitatos videret, cupere aliqua evolare si posset.

XXVII. Postridie mane homines in contionem conveniunt:

The notion of 'celebro' is to 'fill,' as in Cicero, De Prov. Cons. c. 9: 'cujus literis, &c., celebrantur aures quotidie meae novis nominibus gentium.' The meaning is: 'all the guests were talking and enjoying themselves;' a very inadequate version.

satis calere res] Hotmann compares Demosthenes περὶ παραπροσβείας, § 196, Bekk., ὥς δὲ προῦει τὸ πρᾶγμα καὶ δι-θερμαίνοντο, &c. But 'calere' and δι-θερμαίνοντο are not aptly compared. Forcellini translates the passage thus: 'when Rubrius thought that they were all well heated with wine.' The meaning is what Zumpt says: 'when matters seemed ripe, when all seemed to be going on well.' As to this impudent proposal to call in the young woman, and the answer of Philodamus, compare Herodotus (v. 18), where the Persian ambassadors, having well drunk, called for the women of their host, the king of Macedonia. The king's reply was: Ὁ Πέρσαι, νόμος μὲν ἡμῖν γέ ἐστι οὐκ οὗτος, ἀλλὰ κεχωρίσθαι ἀνδρας γυναικῶν.

Tum ut, &c.] 'Tum ille ut:' Orelli.

Enimvero] The word 'enim' sometimes stands alone at the beginning of a sentence; and with 'vero' attached to it, very often. It means 'in very deed,' 'in very truth this is not to be endured;' and it is an expression of emotion, and some irritation, as we see in Terence (Phorm. iii. 4, 1): 'Enimvero, Antipho, multimodis cum istoc animo es vituperandus.'

Quod—id] 'Quod,' says Zumpt, 'ad orationem continuandam pertinet, fere ut Germ. nun, cum sine accentu dicitur.' But this is no explanation. 'Quod' is the relative, and 'id' is a further exponent: 'now when he observed this, that the object was.' See Lib. 2. c. 26, and the note. Zumpt has 'Enimvero, &c., hoc quidem non est.'

filio nuntiet] 'Filio suo nuntiet,' Orelli. —'Tota domo, pugna inter:' Orelli.

vir primus] Zumpt compares Lib. 2. c. 4, 8; and Lib. 3. c. 71. He omits 'homo.'

27. Postridie mane] 'Postridie homines mane,' Zumpt.—'In concionem veniunt:' Orelli.

quaerunt quid optimum factu sit: pro se quisque, ut in quoque erat auctoritatis plurimum, ad populum loquebatur: inventus est nemo cuius non haec et sententia esset et oratio: Non esse metuum, si istius nefarium scelus Lampsaceni ulți vi manuque essent, ne senatus populusque Romanus in eam civitatem animadvertendum putaret: quod si hoc jure legati populi Romani in socios nationesque exteras uterentur, ut pudicitiam liberorum servare ab eorum libidine tutam non liceret, quidvis esse perpeti satius quam in tanta vi atque acerbitate versari. Haec quum omnes sentirent et quum in eam rationem pro suo quisque sensu ac dolore loqueretur, omnes ad eam domum in qua iste deversabatur profecti sunt; caedere januam saxis, instare ferro, ligna et sarmenta circumdare, ignemque subjicere coeperunt. Tum cives Romani qui Lampsaci negotiabantur concurrunt: orant Lampsacenos ut gravius apud eos nomen legationis quam injuria legati putaretur: sese intelligere hominem illum esse impurum ac nefarium; sed quoniam nec perfecisset quod conatus esset, neque futurus esset Lampsaci postea, levius eorum peccatum fore si homini scelerato pepercissent quam si legato non pepercissent. Sic iste multo sceleratior et nequior quam ille Hadrianus aliquanto etiam felicior fuit. Ille quod ejus avaritiam cives Romani ferre non potuerant Uticae domi suae vivus exustus est: idque illi merito accidisse existimatum est, ut laetarentur omnes neque ulla animadversio constitueretur: hic sociorum ambustus incendio, tamen ex illa flamma periculoque evolavit; neque adhuc causam ullam excogitare potuit quamobrem commiserit aut quid evenerit ut in tantum periculum veniret. Non enim potest dicere, Quum seditionem sedare vellem, quum frumentum imperarem, quum stipendium cogerem, quum aliquid denique rei publicae causa gererem; quod acrius imperavi, quod animadverti, quod minatus sum. Quae si diceret, tamen ignosci non oporteret, si nimis atrociter imperando sociis in tantum adductus periculum videretur.

XXVIII. Nunc quum ipse causam illius tumultus neque veram dicere neque falsam confingere audeat; homo autem ordinis sui frugalissimus, qui tum accensus C. Neroni fuit, P. Tettius, haec Hadrianus] This C. Fabius Hadrianus was the governor of Africa. The story is told by Valerius Maximus (ix. 10. § 2. Comp. Livy, Epitome, 86, and Orosius, v. 20). Klotz remarks that Cicero does not tell us that the death of this scoundrel was not avenged, mainly because he was opposed to the party of Sulla, which had then the supremacy, and was glad to be rid of him.—‘Ferre non potuerunt:’ Zumpt.—‘Idque ita illi merito:’ Orelli.

28. accensus] ‘A summoning officer.’ The functions of an ‘accensus’ appear from the Commentarii Consulares, quoted by Varro (L. L. vi. 88. ed. Müller): ‘qui exercitum imperaturus erit, accenso dicit hoc: Calpurni, voca in licium omnes Quirites huc ad me,’ &c. ‘Accensi’ were also em-eadem se Lampsaci cognosse dixerit; vir omnibus rebus ornatissimus C. Varro, qui tum in Asia tribunus militum fuit, haec eadem ipsa se ex Philodamo audisse dicat—potestis dubitare quin istum fortuna non tam ex illo periculo eripere voluerit quam ad vestrum judicium reservare? Nisi vero illud dicet quod et in testimonio Tettii priore actione interpellavit Hortensius:—quo tempore qui-dem signi satis dedit, si quid esset quod posset dicere, se tacere non posse; ut, quamdiu tacuit in ceteris testibus scire omnes possemus, nihil habuisse quod diceret:—hoc tum dixit, Philodamum et ejus filium a C. Nerone esse damnatos. De quo ne multa disseram, tantum dico, secutum id esse Neronem et ejus consilium, quod Cornelium lictorem occisum esse constaret: putasse non oportere esse cuiquam ne in ulciscenda quidem injuria hominis occidendi potestatem. In quo video Neronis judicio non te absolutum esse improbitatis, sed illos damnatos esse caedis. Verum ista damnatio tamen cujusmodi fuit? Audite, quaeso, judices, et aliquando miseremini sociorum, et ostendite aliquid his in vestra fide praesidii esse oportere.

XXIX. Quod toti Asiae jure occisus videbatur istius ille, verbo lictor, re vera minister improbissimae cupiditatis, pertimuit iste ne Philodamus Neronis judicio liberaretur: rogat et orat Dolabellam ut de sua provincia decedat, ad Neronem proficiscatur; se demon-strat incolumem esse non posse, si Philodamo vivere atque aliquando Romam venire licuisset. Commotus est Dolabella: fecit id quod multi reprehenderunt, ut exercitum, provinciam, bellum relinqueret, et in Asiam, hominis nequissimi causa, in alienam provinciam, proficisceretur. Posteaquam ad Neronem venit, contendit ab eo ut Philodami causam cognosceret. Venerat ipse qui esset in consilio et primus sententiam diceret; adduxerat etiam praefectos et tri-bunos militares suos quos Nero omnes in consilium vocavit; erat in consilio etiam aequissimus judex ipse Verres; erant nonnulli togati ployed in the courts (Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 4). See 'Accensus,' Forcellini.—The word 'frugalitas' is defined by Cicero (Tusc. Disp. iii. 8): 'ejus (frugalitatis) enim videtur esse proprium motus animi appetentes regere et sedare, semperque adversantem libidini, moderatam in omni re servare constantiam; cui contrarium vitium nequitia dicitur.'

ut, quamdiu, &c.] 'ut, quamdiu in ceteris rebus tacuerit:' Orelli.—'Sed hoc tum dixit:' Orelli. 'Sed' is an addition of Lambinus.—'Ne multum disseram:' Zumpt and Klotz.

29. quod multi reprehenderunt,] Cicero merely says that many persons found fault with Dolabella for leaving his province under the circumstances. Hotmann's notion that such conduct was punishable, hardly requires a confutation. Klotz, however, has shown that the old commentator was mistaken. A mere personal absence from his province, like this, was not an offence; the governor, who quitted his province for a temporary purpose, left a representative behind him.

togati] Romans: 'equites,' as Asconius creditores Graecorum, quibus ad exigendas pecunias improbissimi cujusque legati plurimum prodest gratia. Ille miser defensorem reperire neminem poterat. Quis enim esset aut togatus qui Dolabellae gratia, aut Graecus qui ejusdem vi et imperio non moveretur? Accusator autem apponitur civis Romanus de creditoribus Lampsacenorum, qui si dixisset quod iste jussisset, per ejusdem istius lictores a populo pecuniam posset exigere. Quum haec omnia tanta contentione, tantis copiis agerentur; quum illum miserum multi accusarent, nemo defenderet; quumque Dolabella cum suis praefectis pugnaret in consilio; Verres fortunas agi suas diceret; idem testimonium diceret, idem esset in consilio, idem accusatorem parasset: haec quum omnia fierent et quum hominem constaret occisum, tamen tanta vis istius injuriae, tanta in isto improbitas putabatur ut de Philodamo AMPLIUS pronuntiaretur.

XXX. Quid ego nunc in altera actione Cn. Dolabellae spiritus, quid hujus lacrymas et concursationes proferam? quid C. Neronis, viri optimi atque innocentissimi, nonnullis in rebus animum nimium timidum atque demissum? qui in illa re quid facere potuerit non habebat, nisi forte, id quod omnes tum desiderabant, ut ageret eam rem sine Verre et Dolabella. Quidquid esset sine his actum, omnes probarent: tum vero quod pronuntiatum est, non per Neronem judicatum sed per Dolabellam ereptum existimabatur. Condemnatur enim perpauca sententiis Philodamus et ejus filius. Adest, instat, urget Dolabella ut quamprimum securi feriantur, quo quam minime multi ex illis de istius nefario scelere audire possent. Constituitur in foro Laodiceae spectaculum acerbum et miserum et grave toti Asiae provinciae; grandis natu parens adductus ad supplicium; ex altera parte filius: ille quod pudicitiam liberorum, hic quod vitam patris famamque sororis defenderat. Flebat uterque non de suo supplicio, sed pater de filii morte, de patris filius. Quid lacrymarum ipsum Neronem putatis profudisse? quem fletum totius Asiae fuisse? quem luctum et gemitum Lampsacenorum? securi esse percussos homines innocentes, nobiles, socios populi says. They may or may not have been 'equites,' though it is most probable that they were. They were 'negotiatores.'

amplius] He was not condemned or acquitted, but the case was adjourned: 'causa ampliata est.' See the passage in Gellius (xiv. c. 2): 'juravi mihi non liquere;' and the examples in Forcellini, v. Amplius, &c.

30. nimum timidum] 'nimis timidum,' Orelli. See Zumpt's note.

Laodiceae] Cicero does not say which Laodicea he means; but the place appears to be Laodicea ad Lycum, in Phrygia, which was within the limits of Dolabella's government (c. 38). It is now Eski Hissar, or the Old Castle, in the south-west angle of the old province of Phrygia. Under the Roman dominion it was a flourishing commercial city, and one of the earliest Christian communities in Asia Minor.

Romani atque amicos, propter hominis flagitiosissimi singularem nequitiam atque improbissimam cupiditatem? Jam, jam, Dolabella, neque me tui neque tuorum liberum, quos tu miseros in egestate atque in solitudine reliquisti, misereri potest. Verresne tibi tanti fuit ut ejus libidinem hominum innocentium sanguine lui velles? Idcircone exercitum atque hostem relinquebas ut tua vi et crudelitate istius hominis improbissimi pericula sublevares? Quod enim eum tibi quaestoris in loco constitueras, idcirco tibi amicum in perpetuum fore putasti? Nesciebas ab eo Cn. Carbonem consulem, cujus re vera quaestor fuit, non modo relictum sed etiam spoliatum auxiliis, pecunia, nefarie oppugnatum et proditum? Expertus igitur es istius perfidiam tum quum se ad inimicos tuos contulit, quum in te homo ipse nocens acerrimum testimonium dixit, quum rationes ad aerarium nisi damnato te referre noluit.

XXXI. Tantaene tuae, Verres, libidines erunt ut eas capere ac sustinere non provinciae populi Romani, non nationes exterae possint? Tune quod videris, quod audieris, quod concupieris, quod cogitaris, nisi id ad nutum tuum praesto fuerit, nisi libidini tuae cupiditatieque paruerit, immittentur homines? expugnabuntur domus? civitates non modo pacatae, verum etiam sociorum atque amicorum, ad vim atque ad arma confugient, ut ab se atque ab liberis suis legati populi Romani scelus ac libidinem propulsare possint? Nam quaero abs te circumsessusne sis Lampsaci, coeperitne domum in qua deversabare illa multitudo incendere; voluerintne legatum populi Romani comburere vivum Lampsaceni. Negare non potes. Habeo enim testimonium tuum quod apud Neronem dixisti; habeo quas ad eundem literas misisti. Recita hunc ipsum locum de testimonio. TESTIMONIUM C. VERRIS IN ARTEMIDORUM. [Recita ex Verris literis ad Neronem. EX LITERIS

lui] 'Luo' means to loose, like 'soluo' (solvo). 'Luo' is used, like 'solvo,' to express the payment of a debt (p. 59, 60, note); as in the Twelve Tables (Plin. H. N., xvii. c. 1); and 'luere pignus,' to release a pledge (Julian, Dig. 30. s. 86). The expression 'luere peccata sua' is exactly the same; it means 'to loosen or discharge their offences;' that is, to pay the penalty, and so to remove the offence. Cicero says: 'Was Verres, in your estimation, worth so much, that you would have the guilt of his lustful passion discharged by the blood of innocent men?' It ought to have been discharged by his own blood. It is natural enough that when 'luo' signified to pay the penalty of an offence, as (Ad Attic. iii. 9) 'itaque mei peccati luo poenas,' 'I pay the penalty of my offence,' it should come to be used briefly thus: 'itaque peccatum meum luo.' The loose translation of 'luo' by 'expiate,' and the like words, should be abandoned.

quaestor fuit,] 'Quaestor fuerat,' Zumpt, who correctly explains 'auxiliis, pecunia,' by 'auxilia quae pecunia continebantur,' as Asconius also does.

damnato te] Because Dolabella, after his condemnation, went into exile, and his evidence could not be received in any way.

31. Recita ex Verris, &c.] These words,

C. VERRIS AD C. NERONEM] NON MULTO POST IN DOMUM. Bellumne populo Romano Lampsacena civitas facere conabatur? deficere ab imperio ac nomine nostro volebat? Video enim, et ex iis quae legi et audivi intelligo, in qua civitate non modo legatus populi Romani circumsessus, non modo igni, ferro, manu, copiis oppug-natus, sed aliqua ex parte violatus sit, nisi publice satisfactum sit, ei civitati bellum indici atque inferri solere. Quae fuit igitur causa cur cuncta civitas Lampsacenorum de contione, quemadmodum tute scribis, domum tuam concurrerit? Tu enim neque in literis quas Neroni mittis, neque in testimonio causam tanti tumultus ostendis ullam. Obsessum te dicis, ignem allatum, sarmenta circumdata, lictorem tuum occisum esse dicis, prodeundi tibi in publicum potes-tatem factam negas: causam hujus tanti terroris occultas. Nam si quam Rubrius injuriam suo nomine ac non impulsu tuo et tua cupiditate fecisset, de tui comitis injuria questum ad te potius quam te oppugnatum venirent. Quum igitur quae causa illius tumultus fuerit testes a nobis producti dixerint, ipse celarit, nonne causam hanc quam nos proposuimus tum illorum testimonia tum istius taciturnitas perpetua confirmat?

sunt ut ii quibus injurias fecerit neque legitimum tempus expectare ad ulciscendum neque vim tantam doloris in posterum differre potu-erint? Circumsessus es. A quibus? A Lampsacenis: barbaris hominibus, credo, aut iis qui populi Romani nomen contemnerent.
Immo vero ab hominibus et natura et consuetudine et disciplina lenissimis, porro autem populi Romani conditione sociis, fortuna servis, voluntate supplicibus; ut perspicuum sit omnibus, nisi tanta acerbitas injuriae, tanta vis sceleris fuisset, ut Lampsaceni morien-dum sibi potius quam perpetiendum putarent, nunquam illos in eum locum progressuros fuisse ut vehementius odio libidinis tuae quam metu legationis moverentur. Nolite, per deos immortales, cogere nion of Lambinus as an editor of Cicero.

32. legitimum tempus] 'The time fixed by the Lex;' for it was only after the expiration of his office that Verres could have been tried at Rome. Garatoni quotes the words of the Lex Servilia: 'de hisce dum magistratum aut imperium habebunt judicium non fiet.' The praetor, under whom a 'legatus' was, as in the case of Verres, might rescind the acts of his inferior, as in the case mentioned in the Divinatio (c. 17), to which Klotz refers, but he could not try him. He might, however, dismiss him from his office. See Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 11, referred to by Klotz.

transtulisse,] Zumpt and Klotz have preferred 'contulisse,' and 'insimularis,' the readings of Asconius, to the MSS. authority. There is no doubt that Asconius found these readings in his MSS., and they may be the better readings.

imminuisti, &c.] 'Why have you impaired the rights and privileges of Legati?' He means to say to Verres, 'If your cause was just, why did you not prosecute those who violated the privileges of a Legatus of the Roman people? By acting in this way prodidisti? cur injurias tuas conjunctas cum publicis reliquisti? Etenim nomen legati ejusmodi esse debet quod non modo inter sociorum jura sed etiam inter hostium tela incolume versetur.

XXXIV. Magnum hoc Lampsacenum crimen est libidinis atque improbissimae cupiditatis. Accipite nunc avaritiae propemodum in suo genere non levius. Milesios navem poposcit quae eum praesidii causa Myndum prosequeretur. Illi statim myoparonem egregium you have damaged the dignity of a Legatus.' The expression 'minuere,' or 'imminuere,' is also applied to the offence of 'majestas,' that is, the impairing of the integrity of the Roman power; and the conduct of Verres was, in fact, if Cicero's statement were true, a case of 'majestas imminuta.'

populum concitarent] On the authority of the better MSS., Zumpt writes 'concitarent.' Orelli has 'concitarant.' It is one of those cases in which either word may stand; but the sense of the passage will vary with the form of this verb. 'Qui concitarant' would be an affirmation by Cicero, that certain persons had stirred up the people to a riot; which Cicero certainly did not mean to admit. 'Qui concitarent' is what Verres says. Zumpt seems to me not consistent in writing 'concitarent' here, and 'quos insimularis' above.

asylum] The practice of criminals taking refuge or seeking asylum in temples, was common among the Greeks, of which there is a notable example in the case of Pausanias (Thucydides, i. 134). A passage in Tacitus (Ann. iii. 60) shows that this practice was checked by the Roman Senate in the time of Tiberius.—'Fuisse arguebatur,' Zumpt.—'auctores et principes:' Orelli.

sociorum jura] 'The name of Legatus ought to be inviolate, not only in the midst of the rights of the Socii, but even amidst the weapons of enemies.' It is clear enough what Cicero means to say, but to transfer it into another language is not easy; for, if we abandon the Roman form, we lose the force of the expression; and, if we keep to it closely, we produce a version which is hardly English. To express the meaning without regard to Cicero's form, we may say: 'in fact, the name of Legatus ought to be a protection to him who bears it, not only among our Socii, who have rights which the Roman people acknowledge, but also against an enemy in time of war.' As to 'jura,' see p. 34.

34. myoparonem] The μυοπάρον is mentioned by Plutarch (Antonius, c. 35). Compare Appian (Civil War, v. 95). It appears that the Milesians had a fleet which, according to Asconius, they were required to maintain, by virtue of their 'foedus' with the Roman people. See c. 35. 'Decem enim naves jussu L. Murenæ, &c.—quae eum praesidii causa,' &c. Zumpt gives other examples of 'is' being used, when the reflective pronoun appears to be the proper word (Cic. De Or. i. 54; Pro Sext. c. 24: 'ne noctem quidem consules inter meum discrimen et eorum praedam interesse passi sunt'). See also Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 62; Lib. 4. c. 39.

de sua classe ornatum atque armatum dederunt. Hoc praesidio Myndum profectus est. Nam quid Milesiis lanae publicae abstulerit, item de sumptu in adventum, de contumeliis et injuriis in magistratum Milesium, tametsi dici tum vere, tum graviter et vehementer potest, tamen dicere praetermittam, eaque omnia testibus integra reservabo: illud, quod neque taceri ullo modo, neque dici pro dignitate potest, cognoscite. Milites remigesque Miletum Myndo pedibus reverti jubet: ipse myoparonem pulcherrimum, de decem Milesiorum navibus electum, L. Magio et L. Fannio qui Myndi habitabant vendidit. Hi sunt homines quos nuper senatus in hostium numero habendos censuit: hoc illi navigio ad omnes populi Romani hostes usque ab Dianio quod in Hispania est ad Sinopen quae in Ponto est navigaverunt. O dii immortales, incredibilem avaritiam, singularemque audaciam! Navem tu de classe populi Romani, quam tibi Milesia civitas ut te prosequeretur dedisset, ausus es vendere? Si te magnitudo maleficii, si te hominum existimatio non movebat, ne illud quidem cogitabas, hujus improbissimi furti, sive adeo nefariae praedae, tam illustrem ac tam nobilem civitatem testem futuram? An quia tum Cn. Dolabella in eum, qui ei myoparoni praefuerat Milesiisque rem gestam renuntiabat, animadvertere tuo rogatu conatus est, renuntiationemque ejus quae erat in publicas literas relata illorum legibus tolli jusserat, idcirco te ex hoc crimine elapsum esse arbitrabare?

lanae publicae] Milesian wool (Milesia vellera) is often mentioned. Graevius explains this wool to be that which the city of Miletus derived from the sheep on the public pastures, part of which wool was paid as a contribution to the Romans. But the text says simply 'public;' it says nothing of any part of it being due to the Romans. The town was famed for its skill in dyeing.

L. Magio, &c.] Asconius observes that these two men, who belonged to the Marian faction, were sent by Mithridates the Great to Sertorius, in Spain, to propose the formation of an alliance against the Roman power. The communication between Sertorius and Mithridates is mentioned by Plutarch (Sertorius, c. 23), Appian (Mithridatica, c. 68), and Orosius (vi. 2). Cicero says that they sailed in this very ship from Dianium, a town on the east coast of Spain (Denia), and a colony of Massalia, to Sinope, in Pontus, one of the chief towns of Mithridates. Zumpt's remark, 'quid? si negotiatoribus illis civitas Milesiorum debebat, ut pignoris capiendi jus haberent,' does not seem to me of any weight. We cannot literally accept all that Cicero says, and Verres may have had some show of right or title to sell the ship; but Cicero says nothing that justifies him. Nor does the sentence, 'An quia tum Cn. Dolabella,' &c., support such a conjecture, as Klotz supposes. As we know nothing except what Cicero tells us, we must take all his evidence. The captain of the ship reported the sale, and his report was entered on the public books, which was evidence enough of the irregularity of the proceeding, and confirmed by the fact of the captain being punished by Cn. Dolabella, and of the entry being also erased from the public books at his order. If we take the whole as evidence, the guilt of Verres is established by the fact of the entry in the books being destroyed by Dolabella. Here we learn that 'publicae literae' was a name for public records—'L. Fannio:' 'L. Rabio.' Orelli.

Semper enim existimasti, et maxime in Sicilia, satis cautum tibi ad defensionem fore si aut referri aliquid in literas publicas vetuisses, aut quod relatum esset tolli coëgisses. Hoc quam nihil sit, tametsi ex multis Siciliae civitatibus priore actione didicisti, tamen etiam in hac ipsa civitate cognosce. Sunt illi quidem dicto audientes, quamdiu adsunt ii qui imperant: simulac discesserunt, non solum illud perscribunt quod tum prohibiti sunt, sed etiam causam adscribunt cur non tum in literas relatum sit. Manent istae literae Mileti, manent, et dum erit illa civitas manebunt. Decem enim naves jussu L. Murenæ populus Milesius ex pecunia vectigali populo Romano fecerat, sicut pro sua quaeque parte Asiae ceterae civitates; quamobrem unam ex decem, non praedonum repentino adventu sed legati latrocinio, non vi tempestatis sed hac horribili tempestate sociorum amissam in literas publicas rettulerunt. Sunt Romae legati Milesii, homines nobilissimi ac principes civitatis, qui, tametsi mensem Februarium et consulum designatorum nomen expectant, tamen hoc tantum facinus non modo negare interrogati, sed ne producti quidem reticere poterunt: dicent, inquam, et religione adducti et domesticarum legum metu, quid illo myoparone factum sit; ostendent C. Verrem in ea classe quae contra piratas aedificata sit piratam ipsum consceleratum fuisse.

XXXVI. C. Malleolo quaestore Cn. Dolabellæ occiso, duas sibi hereditates venisse arbitratus est: unam quaestoriae procurationis, nam a Dolabella statim pro quaestore jussus est esse: alteram tutelae, nam quum pupilli Malleoli tutor esset, in bona ejus impetum fecit. Nam Malleolus in provinciam sic copiose 35. populo Rom.] 'Populi Romani:' Orelli. Februarium] In this month the Senate gave audience to ambassadors from the provinces, and from foreign states. Klotz refers to the principal passage on this matter in Cicero's Letters (Ad Fam. i. 4): "Senatus haberi ante Kalendas Febr. per legem Pupiam, id quod scis, non potest: neque mense Febr. toto nisi perfectis aut rejectis legationibus." He also refers to the Epistolae ad Quintum Fr. ii. 3; and to Polybius, vi. 12. In place of 'expectant,' Asconius mentions a reading 'extimescunt,' and he adds that the two words here signify the same thing. The Milesians were of course acquainted with the names of the 'consules designati,' Hortensius and Metellus; and 'expectant' does not, therefore, refer to the knowledge of their names, but to what they might expect from consuls who bore the names of Hortensius and Metellus. The passage means, "though the Milesians have to wait for February, when they will get their audience, and are yet uncertain what treatment to expect from the 'consules designati,' whose names they know."—'legum domesticarum:' Orelli.

36. pupilli—tutor] We must suppose that Malleolus by his testament appointed Verres the tutor of his son, who was 'impubes,' that is, under the age when he could do legal acts; and therefore he required, according to Roman usage, a 'tutor,' for the protection of his property and his interests. The ward was called 'pupillus;' that is, 'pupillus' is the legal name of an 'impubes' whose property is under the care of a 'tutor.' As to the relation of 'tutor' and 'pupillus,' the reader may consult the Dict. of Antiqs. 'Impubes,' and 'Tutor.'

Quum [eum] ad HS vicies quinquies redegissee constaret, ut Romam rediit, nullam literam pupillo, nullam matri ejus, nullam tutoribus reddidit; servos artifices pupilli quum haberet domi, circum pedes autem homines formosos et literatos, suos esse dicebat, se emisse. piose' was a gloss, but without any reason. Comp. De Sen. c. 8. 'Sic avide.' Zumpt remarks, 'Sic hoc modo pro tam adhiberi rarum est.' Comp. Act. i. c. 6: 'sic erat humilis . . ut videretur.' 'Sic' is often used in this way; and there is no use in saying that it is used for 'tam.'

occuparat] This means 'he laid out,' he employed his money in loans to the 'populi,' the provincials. He went out for the purpose of enriching himself by money-lending and traffic, after Roman fashion. 'Occupare,' in this sense, is explained by the examples in Forcellini; and by Cicero, Pro Flacco, c. 21. As to this practice of money-lending at exorbitant interest, see Cic. Ad Att. v. 21. Asconius says: "Between syngraphae and the other chirographa there is this difference, that in the other it is usual for those things or transactions only to be inserted which have actually occurred; in syngraphae, an agreement (pactio) enters which is even contrary to fact (contra fidem veritatis), and money which has never passed (non numerata), or has not passed to the full amount, is entered according to the pleasure of the parties at the time, in conformity with the usage and practice of the Greeks: other writings (tabulae) are used to be kept of the one part only; syngraphae, signed by the hand of each party, are delivered to each party to keep." The passage of Gaius (iii. § 134) is as follows: "Praeterea litterarum obligatio fieri videtur chirographis et syngraphis, id est, si quis debere se aut daturum se scribat; ita scilicet si eo nomine stipulatio non fiat. Quod genus obligationis proprium peregrinorum est."

This distinction of Asconius between 'syngrapha' and 'chirographum' does not appear to be true. 'Syngrapha,' in the old Greek law, did not denote a particular kind of contract, but is the general name for any written evidence of an agreement, a sense which it had in common with other terms which were occasionally used. The Romans found such writings in use in their Greek provinces, and also the rule of law established, that a man might sue upon any written agreement, without regard to its form. 'Chirographum,' in Cicero's time, meant any writing, particularly one in the handwriting of the person whom it specially concerned, but it had no particular reference to legal transactions. In the second century of the Christian aera, the word was generally used to signify an acknowledgment of a debt, but it was not limited to the case of a loan; and the two words, 'syngraphae' and 'chirographa,' were generally used indifferently. So it was in the time of Gaius; and in the provinces a man might sue on a contract contained in any informal writing, which was contrary to the rule of Roman law (Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, vol. i., Literalcontract der Römer). See Cic. Ad Att. v. 21.

familiam magnam,] 'Familia' is here taken in its wider sense, which includes a man's slaves. 'Familia et pecunia' comprehended all that a man had: 'Familiam pecuniamque tuam endo mandatam tutelam custodelamque meam recipio,' &c., Gaius, ii. 104.

nullam literam] Schütz conjectured that 'literam' should be 'libellam;' not an improbable conjecture (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 10), if 'literam' is unintelligible. If 'litera' is right, it has reference to 'ratio,' 'accounts,' and means, that he did not give in a single letter of accounts.—'Multis efflagitatus:' Orelli. But 'a multis,' which Zumpt has adopted from some of the best MSS., seems better; for 'multis,' as Zumpt observes, is 'multis verbis.'

codicis, &c.] ‘Codex’ or ‘codices,’ or ‘codex accepti et expensi,’ ‘tabulae,’ ‘domestica ratio,’ are names for account-books, which were, it appears, sometimes kept on tablets smeared with wax. At the bottom of the ‘codex,’ in the lowest part of the ‘tabella,’ there was an erasure in the last entry (nomen). As to these ‘codices,’ which every citizen kept who was ‘sui juris,’ see Pro Rosc. Am. c. 2, 3.

expensa, &c.] These are the usual Roman forms. ‘Expensum ferre,’ or ‘referre,’ is to make an entry on the credit side in a man’s books: ‘acceptum ferre,’ or ‘referre,’ is to make an entry of money received, or on the debtor side. Verres entered six hundred thousand as received by him on account of Malleolus, but he also entered the same amount as paid to Chrysogonus. “You may conjecture,” says Cicero, “how he reduced the ‘decies’ (centena millia) to ‘sexcenta millia.’” Comp. c. 39, ‘Quod minus Dolabella,’ &c.; and Lib. 2. c. 70, ‘Nam quas pecunias,’ &c. It does not appear how Verres could discharge himself by such an entry against Chrysogonus, who was probably his slave. His books showed that he had received six hundred thousand, and he was answerable for it. But we cannot explain that which Cicero professes himself unable to understand. See c. 38, note on ‘his nominibus.’ —‘sexcenta facta sunt:’ Orelli.

quinquaginta millia, &c.] The common reading is ‘quinque millia,’ which Ernesti explains thus: that Verres did not pay even ‘quinque millia’ to the ‘heredes.’ But this cannot be the meaning, as Zumpt shows. Verres was bound to pay what his books showed that he had received; but, in some way that is not explained, he contrived to retain ‘quinquaginta millia,’ as the best MSS. have it.

peculia, &c.] The ‘peculium’ was that property which a ‘filiusfamilias,’ that is, a son who was in his father’s power, or a slave held, with the father’s or master’s consent; for a ‘filiusfamilias,’ or a slave, could not strictly hold property. All that a son acquired, with some limitations (castrense peculium), and all that a slave acquired, belonged to the father or master; but, by usage, a slave had a kind of property which was considered his own, and it was called his ‘peculium.’

‘Vicarii servi’ were such slaves as another slave was allowed to hold as part of his ‘peculium;’ and such slaves were part of the ‘peculium’ of the slave, who was their ‘quasi dominus.’ Ulpian (Dig. 15. 1. 17) says: “sicut ipsi vicarii sunt in peculio, ita etiam peculia eorum.”

37. en memoria] Zumpt observes that some MSS., and one of them among the best, have ‘en memoriam—en metum;’ but he observes that Cicero always uses ‘en’ with a nominative; and even ‘ecce,’ except in De Fin. ii. 30, where he proposes to omit ‘ecce.’—‘vexandam tradidisset:’ Orelli.

Hoc scitote: his nominibus, quae res non potuisti?] I have placed a note of interrogation at the end of this sentence, with Orelli and Klotz.—‘ille Malleolus:’ Or.

at] ‘At’ may be here translated ‘at least.’ Neither ‘sed’ nor ‘autem’ could perform the office of ‘at’ in this passage. The sense of the passage is this: ‘Si non quae abstulisti’ means as much as if Verres were to say, ‘I won’t restore all that I have taken:’ to which the answer is, ‘Well, we don’t expect that; we don’t expect all: but let us have what you have charged yourself with receiving.’

38. commune] ‘Mire commune rem publicam:’ Asconius. There seems nothing strange in ‘commune’ being used for a ‘community.’ It is the same as the Greek τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Ἀχαιῶν. Forcellini does not supply instances; but ‘commune Siciliae’ occurs (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 46, 59), where it ought to be ‘commune Siculorum,’ to correspond to the Greek expression. This Milyas is a tract in the south-west part of Asia Minor, bordering on Lycia and Pamphylia. The form corresponding to ‘commune Siciliae’ would be ‘commune Milyados.’ Zumpt supposes that Cicero’s ‘Milyadum’ is a shorter form of ‘Milyadarum.’

frumento imperando, &c.] ‘Requiring certain quantities of grain, and then commutating his demand into a money payment.’ This passage shows that the divisions of Lycia, &c., were at this time attached to the province of Cilicia.

his nominibus,] ‘Nomen’ (c. 36) is a word which signifies ‘heads’ or ‘entries’ in a book of accounts, which entries would contain the names of persons and other circumstances. Hence ‘nomen’ is used generally for a head or title of account. Savigny (Vermischte Schriften, i. 213) shows that the Roman expression, ‘nomina facere’ (Inst. iv. tit. 21; Cic. De Off. iii. 14), signifies the contracting that ‘obligatio’ which the Romans called the ‘obligatio literis’ or ‘literarum.’ If we can ascertain in what form the ‘nomina facere’ was made, we shall also ascertain in what form the ‘obligatio literis’ was effected. Many passages show that ‘nomina facere’ is an entry in a ‘codex’ or ‘tabulae,’ without any reference to any other documentary evidence than that which the ‘codex’ supplies (Verr. Lib. i. c. 36, 39; Ad Att. iv. 18; Seneca, De Benef. iii. c. 15; Cic. Pro Rosc. Am. c. 5). In this last passage, Cicero enumerates the three strict forms of contract upon which a ‘pecunia certa’ could be sued for. He says that it must be either 'pecunia data,' a loan; or 'stipulata,' that is, the claim must be founded on the peculiar Roman contract called 'stipulatio;' or it must be 'expensa lata,' that is, 'expensilatio,' or an entry in the 'codex.' Such an entry was itself the forming of the contract. It is true that 'tabulae,' like other writings, could be used as evidence; but that does not prove that entries might not be the contract itself. A promissory note, or a bill of exchange, in itself expresses an 'obligatio,' whatever other use may be made of it as evidence. This ordinary 'codex accepti et expensi,' which every man was expected to keep, contained the entries, in the order of time, of all a man's receipts and payments, with the matter to which the receipts and payments referred, and the names of the persons from whom the sums were received, or to whom they were paid. Out of such a book or journal a man might make a more formal book, in which his transactions with each individual might be arranged under their several heads; but this would be a different kind of book from the 'codex accepti et expensi.' As to the 'literarum obligatio,' it was the entry of the creditor in his 'codex' (expensilatio) which made the 'obligatio,' and gave to it its name, and not the entry of the debtor in his 'codex' (acceptilatio), which corresponded to the entry of the creditor. The difficulties that are obvious as to the proof of a debt in the case of an 'obligatio literis,' have nothing to do with the nature of the 'obligatio,' which is clearly ascertained. Nor is it supposed that a mere entry by a man in his 'codex' (expensilatio) could make another man his debtor. If debtor and creditor were both honest men, the 'expensilatio' in the books of one would correspond to the 'acceptilatio' in the books of the other. If they did not, there must be evidence to prove that the 'expensilatio' was properly made. This is certain, that in the 'obligatio literarum' the creditor sued upon the entry in his 'codex,' as the contract; but this is quite a different matter from the evidence that he might have to produce in order to show that the entry was made under such circumstances as would entitle the maker to sue on it.

Itaque M. Scaurus, qui Cn. Dolabellam accusavit, istum in sua potestate ac ditione tenuit. Homo adolescens quum istius in inquirendo multa furta ac flagitia cognosceret, fecit perite et callide: volumen ejus rerum gestarum maximum isti ostendit: ab homine quae voluit in Dolabellam abstulit; istum testem pro-

quae res, &c.] 'Quae res' refers to 'nomina,' but 'quae' alone would not have expressed Cicero's meaning. It is explanatory of 'nomina,' and the meaning of 'quae' is enlarged by the addition of 'res:' 'on these items or heads, I mean what he did when he required of the cities corn, skins, hair cloth, sacks,' &c. The skins and hair cloths were for the use of the army and navy. As to 'quae res,' comp. 'quibus ego in rebus interfui,' c. 40.

proque his rebus] Orelli omits 'que,' contrary to the best MSS., and contrary to the usage of the language; for, as Zumpt observes, 'que' is often used for 'sed,' when it is preceded by a negation—'etiamsi voluntate . . . tamen omnia.' Cicero generally, in these orations, uses 'tametsi—tamen.'

duxit: dixit iste quae velle accusatorem putavit. Quo ex genere mihi testium qui cum isto furati sunt si uti voluissem, magna copia fuisset; qui ut se periculo litium conjunctione criminum liberarent, quo ego vellem descensuros pollicebantur. Eorum ego voluntatem omnium repudiavi. Non modo proditori sed ne perfugae quidem locus in meis castris cuiquam fuit. Forsitan meliores illi accusatores habendi sint qui haec omnia fecerunt. Ita esto: sed ego defensorem in mea persona, non accusatorem maxime laudari volo. Rationes ad aerarium antequam Dolabella condemnatus est non audet referre: impetrat a senatu ut dies sibi prorogaretur, quod tabulas suas ab accusatoribus Dolabellae obsignatas diceret, proinde quasi exscribendi potestatem non haberet. Solus est hic qui nunquam rationes ad aerarium referat.

XXXIX. Audistis quaestoriam rationem tribus versiculis relatum; legationis non nisi condemnato et ejecto eo qui posset reprehendere; nunc denique praeturae quam ex senatus consulto statim referre debuit usque ad hoc tempus non rettulit. Quaestorem se in senatu expectare dixit; proinde quasi non, ut quaestor sine praetore possit rationem referre, ut tu Hortensi, ut omnes, eodem modo dies—prorogaretur,] 'That the time should be extended.' Thus the Romans said 'prorogatum imperium,' to express the prolongation of a man's 'imperium' (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1, 1); and, in the same sense, Cicero says, 'ne provincia nobis prorogetur' (Ad Att. v. 11).

proinde quasi] 'Just as if he had not the power of taking copies.' 'Proinde' is often used thus with 'quasi.' 'Proinde' is one of the compound forms of 'inde,' of which there are 'exinde,' 'deinde,' 'subinde.' 'Perinde,' as Professor Key seems to prove (Lat. Gram. § 800), is not a genuine form. In the following chapter, Orelli, Zumpt, and Klotz have 'perinde.' Zumpt maintains the existence of 'perinde,' and he attempts to make a distinction between the meaning of the two words. The MSS. are not decisive authority in a matter of this kind, and they give both forms. Analogy is in favour of 'proinde' only, for we have 'deinde,' 'exinde,' 'subinde.'

for there were two 'quaestors' for Sicily. But shortly after we have 'verum quaestores—venerunt;' and the correction of Lambinus seems probable enough. Zumpt observes that it was much more usual for a 'quaestor' to give in his accounts without his 'praetor,' than for the 'praetor' without his 'quaestor.' And he proves this by stating that 'praetors' or 'consuls' often stayed more than a year in a province, while the 'quaestors' were changed annually; and so it appears that 'quaestors' generally rendered their accounts without their 'praetor.' But this is very indifferent arguing, though the conclusion may be true. Zumpt asks, if all 'praetors' had done what Cicero says that they could do, give in their accounts without waiting for their 'quaestor,' with what show of right could Verres have said in the senate, that he was waiting for one of his 'quaestors?' The answer is, that it might be with no show of right, but a great show of impudence. Dolabella, said Verres, obtained permission to wait for his 'quaestor,' who was Verres himself. But this is not in favour of Zumpt's argument; for, if Dolabella had this allowed him (impetrarat), it is clear that it was a favour; and, instead of citing the case of Dolabella, Verres should have appealed to the general practice.—Orelli reads 'sine praetore posset.'

sine quaestore praetor. Dixit idem Dolabellam impetrasse. Omen magis patribus conscriptis quam causa placuit. Probaverunt. Verum quaestores quoque jampridem venerunt. Cur non rettulisti? Illarum rationum ex ea faece legationis quaestoriaeque tuae procurationis illa sunt nomina, quae Dolabellae necessario sunt aestimata. EX LITIBUS AESTIMATIS DOLABELLAE PR. ET PRO PR. Quod minus Dolabella Verri acceptum rettulit quam Verres illi expensum tulerit, HS quingenta triginta quinque millia; et quod plus fecit Dolabella Verrem accepisse quam iste in suis tabulis habuit, HS ducenta triginta duo millia; et quod plus frumenti fecit accepisse istum, HS decies et octingenta millia, quod tu, homo castissimus, aliud in tabulis habebas. Hinc illae extraordinariae pecuniae, quas nullo duce tamen aliqua ex particula investigamus, redundarunt: hinc ratio cum Q. et Cn. Postumis Curtiis multis nominibus quorum in tabulis iste habet nullum: hinc HS quaterdecies P. Tadio numeratum Athenis testibus planum faciam: hinc emptissima praetura; nisi forte id etiam dubium est quomodo iste praetor factus sit. Homo scilicet aut industria, aut opera probata, aut frugalitatis existimatione praeclara, aut denique, id quod levissimum est, assiduitate, qui ante quaesturam cum meretricibus lenonibusque vixisset, quaesturam ita gessisset quemadmodum cognovistis, Romae post quaesturam illam nefariam vix triduum constitisset, absens non in oblivione jacuisset, sed in assidua commemoratione omnibus Omen] A Roman mode of expression which is very difficult to translate. Verres urged that Dolabella had obtained what he asked for; and Dolabella was afterwards tried and convicted. The senate was better pleased with the instance which Verres cited than with his argument, for they hoped, as Cicero would have us suppose, that the precedent of Dolabella might be made complete by Verres being convicted also.

PR., &c.] 'PR. ET PRO PR.,' the reading of all the MSS., seem to be the abbreviations for 'praetori' and 'propraetori.' Orelli's text is 'pr. p. r. pecuniae redactae.' But 'pecuniae redactae' is not in the MSS.; and, if these words were, 'p. r.' cannot mean 'populo Romano,' as some have supposed; for 'pecuniae redactae,' as Zumpt observes, is the same as 'exactae.'

castissimus,] 'Callidissimus:' Zumpt, from one MS. (Guelf. vetustior). 'Quod—aliud:' Ernesti would alter 'quod' to 'id;' and other alterations have been proposed, all of which are unnecessary. The text is as plain as it can be: 'the which you, most immaculate of men, had entered quite dif-

extraordinariae] Any money not acquired in the usual way might be called 'extraordinaria;' but probably this term had a technical meaning. That the money was in this case dishonestly acquired appeared from the amount, and from the fact of Verres keeping no account of these large sums, which he paid over to others to keep for him, and to avoid detection. The 'extraordinaria pecunia,' according to Savigny, consists in the omission of an entry which ought to be made, which entry was omitted for the purpose of fraud and concealment (Pro Rosc. Am. c. 1).

numeratum] The old reading 'numerata,' though the reading of all the MSS., as it is said, is not the true reading; for J. F. Gronovius has shown that HS, with a numeral adverb, must be taken as a neuter singular (Zumpt). See Zumpt's Appendix.

assiduitate,] This is a term applied to candidates for offices, who showed themselves to the people, and canvassed for votes. Klotz refers to the oration Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 26, and Pro L. Murena, c. 9. omnium flagitiorum fuisset, is repente, ut Romam venit, gratis praetor factus est. Alia porro pecunia ne accusaretur data. Cui sit data, nihil ad me, nihil ad rem pertinere arbitror: datam quidem esse tum inter omnes recenti negotio facile constabat. Homo stultissime et amentissime, tabulas quum conficeres, et quum extraordinariae pecuniae crimen subterfugere velles, satis te elapsurum omni suspicione arbitrabare, si quibus pecuniam credebas iis expensum non ferres, neque in tuas tabulas ullum nomen referres, quum tot tibi nominibus acceptum Curtii referrent? Quid proderat tibi te expensum illis non tulisse? An tuis solis tabulis te causam dicturum existimasti?

XL. Verum ad illam jam veniamus praeclaram praeturam, criminaque ea quae notiora sunt his qui adsunt quam nobis qui meditati ad dicendum paratique venimus; in quibus non dubito quin offensionem negligentiae vitare atque effugere non possim. Multi enim ita dicent: De illo nihil dixit, in quo ego interfui: illam injuriam non attigit, quae mihi aut quae amico meo facta est, quibus ego in rebus interfui. His omnibus qui istius injurias norunt, hoc est, populo Romano universo, me vehementer excusatum volo, non negligentia mea fore ut multa praeteream, sed quod alia testibus integra reservari velim, multa autem propter rationem brevitatis ac temporis praetermittenda existimem. Fatebor etiam illud invitus, me prorsus, quum iste punctum temporis nullum vacuum peccato praeterire passus sit, omnia quae ab isto commissa sunt non potuisse cognoscere. Quapropter ita me de praeturae criminibus auditote, ut ex utroque genere et juris dicundi et sartorum tectorum exigendorum ea postuletis, quae maxime digna sunt eo reo cui parvum ac mediocre objici nihil oporteat. Nam ut praetor factus est qui auspicato a Chelidone surrexisset, sortem nactus est urbanae provinciae, magis ex sua Chelidonisque quam ex populi Romani voluntate. Qui principio qualis in edicto constituendo fuerit cognoscite.

40. ex utroque genere] That is 'crimen,' of which 'et juris dicundi,' &c., is the explanation.

digna sunt] 'Sint:' Orelli. The MSS. authority is in favour of 'sunt,' a direct affirmation of Cicero.

Chelidone] Asconius observes that Cicero is playing on the word 'Chelidon,' which in Greek means a 'swallow,' and was also the name of the woman who was a favourite of Verres. As a swallow is a city bird, so Verres, who cohabited with Cheli-don, had the good luck to get the city praetorship, under the auspices of Chelidon. But the explanation of Zumpt is better. "Verres," he says, "ought to have performed his religious duties in the morning, instead of which he rose from the embraces of Chelidon to go to the 'comitia.'" He adds, that there is an amphibolia in the word 'surgendo,' 'nam sedentes auspicabantur.' As to 'provincia' and 'edictum,' see the Excursus iv. 'Edicta Magistratum;' and Lib. 2. c. 1.

XLI. P. Annius Asellus mortuus est C. Sacerdote praetore. Is quum haberet unicam filiam neque census esset, quod eum natura hortabatur, lex nulla prohibebat, fecit ut filiam bonis suis heredem institueret. Heres erat filia. Faciebant omnia cum pupilla, legis aequitas, voluntas patris, edicta praetorum, consuetudo juris ejus quod erat tum quum Asellus est mortuus. Iste praetor designatus—utrum admonitus an tentatus, an, qua est ipse sagacitate in his rebus, sine duce ullo, sine indice, pervenerit ad hanc improbitatem nescio; vos tantum hominis audaciam amentiamque cognoscite—appellat heredem L. Annium qui erat institutus secundum filiam; non enim mihi persuadetur istum ab illo prius appellatum: dicit se posse ei condonare edicto hereditatem; docet hominem quid possit fieri. Illi bona res, huic vendibilis videbatur. Iste, tametsi singulari est audacia, tamen ad pupillae matrem submittebat: malebat pecuniam accipere ne quid novi ediceret quam ut hoc edictum tam improbum et inhumanum interponeret. Tutores pecuniam praetori si pupillae nomine dedissent, grandem praesertim, quemadmodum in rationem inducerent, quemadmodum sine periculo suo dare possent, non videbant: simul et istum fore tam improbum non arbitrabantur. Saepe appellati pernegaverunt. Iste ad arbitrium ejus cui condonabat hereditatem ereptam a liberis, quam aequum edictum conscripserit, quaeso, cognoscite. QUUM INTELheredem institueret.] 'Instituere' was the technical word for making a person 'heres' by a testament. Gaius (ii. 117): "sollemnis autem institutio haec est: Titius heres esto;" and see his remark on the forms 'heredem instituo,' 'heredem facio.'—A 'secundus heres,' or, as Cicero here expresses it, "qui erat institutus secundum filiam" (next to, after), was one who was 'institutus' as 'heres,' if the first could not, or did not, take the 'hereditas.' See Gaius (ii. 174): "interdum duos pluresve gradus heredum facimus hoc modo," &c. In the case of 'liberi impuberes,' who were in the testator's power, he could also substitute other 'heredes,' even if the 'liberi' took the 'hereditas,' provided they died while 'impuberes.'

in rationem inducerent,] 'Bring it into their accounts.' 'Tutores' were liable to account for the administration of the property of their 'pupillus,' or 'pupilla,' when their functions were at an end; and they could not have justified such a payment.

condonabat] 'condonaratus . . . ereptam liberis . . . scripserit:' Orelli.—'an ideo aliquid contra mulieres scripsit:' Klotz.

Quis potius] This is said ironically. The words 'obviam ire' show what is to be supplied with 'Quis potius,' &c. "Verres says temporibus sed etiam apud majores nostros? quis tam remotus fuit a cupiditate? Dic, quaeso, cetera: delectat enim me hominis gravitas, scientia juris, auctoritas. QUI AB A. POSTUMIO Q. FULVIO CENSORIBUS POSTVE EA . . . FECIT, FECERIT. Quis unquam edixit isto modo? quis unquam ejus rei fraudem aut periculum proposuit edicto, quae neque post edictum neque ante edictum provideri potuit?

XLII. Jure, legibus, auctoritate omnium qui consulebantur, testamentum P. Annius fecerat, non improbum, non inofficiosum, non inhumanum: quod si ita fecisset, tamen post illius mortem nihil de testamento illius novi juris constitui oporteret. Voconia lex te videlicet delectabat? Imitatus esses ipsum illum Q. Voconium qui lege sua hereditatem ademit nulli neque virgini neque mulieri: sanxit in posterum, qui post eos censores census esset, ne that he will check men's greediness after lucre. Who more likely than he to do it, I don't say among men of our day, but even among our ancestors?" The 'majores nostri' belonged to the good old times.

Quis unquam, &c.] This passage is obscure; and its meaning could only be fully ascertained if we had the text of the edict, instead of the few words which are cited: "who ever made an edict after this fashion? who ever by his edict laid a snare or created a hazard, as to a matter which could not be provided against, either after or before the publication of the edict?" The reading of Klotz is "unquam ei rei . . . quae neque post edictum reprehendi neque ante," &c. Orelli repeats 'fecit, fecerit?' thus. Zumpt contends that the words 'fecit, fecerit' are not to be taken in connexion with the words 'Qui ab A. Postumio,' &c., but that the chief part of the edict between 'postve ea' and 'fecit, fecerit' is omitted; and in his note, he gives what he supposes to be the substance of the part which is omitted. 'Qui ab A. Postumio,' &c. cannot, as Zumpt remarks, refer to the 'census' of these 'censors' as a time to reckon from; for, if that were so, the form should be 'A. Postumio, Q. Fulvio censoribus;' but the 'censors' were not thus referred to for the purpose of a determination of time. His conclusion is, and probably a just one, that the words which followed 'postve ea' referred to persons being 'censi;' and 'fecit, fecerit' referred to the words 'virginem mulieremve heredem.' The censorship of Postumius and Fulvius was B.C. 174.

42. testamentum—non improbum,] Asconius explains 'improbum testamentum' to be a 'testamentum' made 'contra leges;' which, if correctly interpreted, means in violation of some particular 'leges.' But his statement is not worth any thing. Klotz has something on this word, which I don't understand. His legal explanations are loose and inexact. 'Improbis' is 'non probus,' 'not honest or upright:' it is joined with 'intestabilis' in a passage in the Twelve Tables quoted by Gellius (xv. 13). Neither 'improbum' nor 'inhumanum' appears to have a technical meaning. 'Inofficiosum' has a technical meaning. A 'testamentum inofficiosum' is a testament made in legal form, 'sed non ex officio pietatis,' 'not as a good man ought to make it.' If a man exheredated his own children, or passed over his parents, or brethren, or sisters, without some sufficient reason, the will, though good in form, might be attacked by these near kinsfolk, who would be his 'heredes' in case of intestacy, in a suit called 'Querela Inofficiosi.' The persons thus passed over would, of course, be supposed to have merited this mark of the testator's disapprobation; but, if the disapprobation was unmerited, the testator had done them a wrong, and their remedy was to get the will set aside, as made under the influence of passion. The ultimate object of the suit, was the vindication of the character of the complainants; but the direct effect of the suit was to set aside the will and make them 'heredes.' It is not known when this form of action was introduced; and we cannot conclude because Cicero uses the term, 'inofficiosum,' that the 'Querela Inofficiosi' existed in his time.—The subject is explained by Savigny, System des Heut Röm. Rechts, ii. 127. See also Dig. 5. tit. 2, De Inofficioso Testamento.

quis heredem virginem neve mulierem faceret. In lege Voconia non est fecit, fecerit; neque in ulla praeteritum tempus reprehenditur nisi ejus rei quae sua sponte scelerata et nefaria est ut, etiamsi lex non esset, magno opere vitanda fuerit. Cornelia testamentaria, nummaria, ceterae complures; in quibus non jus aliquod novum populo constituitur, sed sancitur ut, quod semper malum facinus fuerit, ejus quaestio ad populum pertineat ex certo tempore. De jure vero civili si quis novi quid instituerit, is omnia quae ante acta sunt rata esse non patietur? Cedo mihi leges Atinias, Furias, ipsam, ut dixi, Voconiam, omnes praeterea de jure civili: hoc reperiēs in omnibus statui jus quo post eam legem populus utatur. in ulla] That is, 'in ulla lege.' 'Nisi ejus rei' means, 'nor is past time noticed except in a matter which is naturally criminal and wrong.' He means to say, that the moral notions of a people condemn some things, though there may be no 'lex' nor formal enactment on the matter. Those legal rules which exist in the common understanding and consciousness of a people and have effect given to them by those who are empowered to declare the law, are a part of 'jus,' and are law in the most strict and exact sense of the term.

in his rebus] This refers to 'ejus rei,' &c. He means to say, that many rules of law (jus) received a sanction from 'leges,' and yet the 'leges' were so framed as not to apply to past acts. 'Sanctio' is that part of a 'lex' which gives to it its efficacy, such as a penalty or punishment (Inst. Just. ii. tit. 1. s. 10). He instances a 'Lex Cornelia de Falso' (for Cicero means only one 'Lex Cornelia' here) on forged testaments and forged coin, which made these offences a 'Crimen Publicum' and cognizable as such; but the 'lex' did not apply to offences committed before its enactment, as Cicero says. After 'Cornelia—complures,' Hotmann understands 'sunt.'—'Ejus quaestio ad populum,' &c., means 'it is made the subject of a Judicium Publicum.' See Excursus ii.

De jure—civili] 'Jus civile' here means 'Jus Privatum' as opposed to 'Jus Publicum,' which term 'Jus Publicum' comprehended Criminal Law. Asconius has correctly marked this sense of 'Jus Civile.'

si quis novi, &c.] There is a great discrepancy in the form in which this passage is given in the editions, though none in the sense. Zumpt reads 'si quis novi quid instituit . . . rata esse patitur.' Klotz reads 'instituit . . . is non omnia . . . patietur?'

Furias,] The word 'Furias,' which follows 'Furias,' is said to be in all the MSS., and all the old editions. Yet it is perhaps properly omitted, for 'Furia' and 'Fusia' are the same word. But see Zumpt's note. As to these 'Leges,' see Dict. of Antiquities. art. Lex.—'initium quoque edicti:' Orelli.

43. Quia non generis, &c.] Klotz has "quia non juris, &c. . . amplecteris . . . te pretio non jure esse commotum."

verbis complecteris; ut facile appareat te pretio esse commotum. Atque hoc si in posterum edixisses, minus esset nefarium, tamen esset improbum; sed tum vituperari posset, in dubium venire non posset; nemo enim committeret. Nunc est ejusmodi edictum ut quivis intelligat non populo esse scriptum sed P. Annii secundis heredibus. Itaque quum a te caput illud tam multis verbis mercenario prooemio esset ornatum, ecquis est inventus postea praetor qui illud idem ediceret? Non modo nemo edixit, sed ne metuit quidem quisquam ne quis ediceret. Nam post te praetorem multi testamenta eodem modo fecerunt; in his nuper Annaea. Ea de multorum propinquorum sententia, pecuniosa mulier, quod censa non erat, testamento fecit heredem filiam. Jam hoc magnum iudicium hominum de istius singulari improbitate, quod Verres sua sponte instituisset, id neminem metuuisse ne quis reperiretur qui istius institutum sequi vellet. Solus enim tu inventus es cui non satis fuerit corrigere voluntates vivorum, nisi etiam rescinderes mortuorum. Tu ipse ex Siciliensi edicto hoc sustulisti; noluisti ex improvise si quae res natae essent ex urbano edicto decernere.

committeret.] 'No one would have acted against the edict.'—'In dubium venire non posset.' Zumpt says, that the 'edictum in dubium non venit, verum testamenta;' and he concludes that 'concinnitatis causa' Cicero has written rather carelessly.

Annaea.] Zumpt prefers 'Annaea,' for which there is good authority, to the common reading 'Annia;' for, if this 'Annia' had been a kinswoman or sister of P. Annius, Cicero would have made that relationship matter for 'novam aliquam invidiam.' In place of 'multi testamenta eodem modo fecerunt,' Klotz has 'multi in iisdem causis fuerunt,' from the Cod. Vat.

corrigere voluntates] 'You are the only man ever known, who was not satisfied with regulating the wills of living persons, unless you could also rescind the expressed will of the dead.' He was not satisfied with laying down rules of law, which affected a man's future testamentary power, but he must also undo the testamentary dispositions of those who made their wills before his rule was made. 'Corrigere testamenta:' Klotz.

noluisti ex improvise, &c.] Orelli, Klotz, and Zumpt have 'voluisti,' which, as Menard observes, is directly contrary to the meaning. 'Ex improvise' belongs to 'si quae res,' &c. Zumpt and Klotz have a comma after 'improvise,' which Orelli has not.

The difference between 'noluisti' and 'voluisti' in a MS. is so trifling, that we cannot depend on the readings, and we must endeavour to determine from the sense which is the true word. Menard observes, that if Verres had framed his decrees upon the 'urbanum edictum,' it could not be said that the 'urbanum edictum' was repealed by the Siciliense. In the beginning of c. 46, Cicero observes that Verres, as in the case of 'mulierum hereditates,' so in that of 'hereditatum possessiones,' had not transferred the chapters of his 'urbanum edictum' into the 'provinciale;' and he says nothing of Verres making his 'decreta' as to such matters, under any circumstances, conformably to the 'urbanum,' but he assumes that these chapters were to have no effect at all.

He asks (c. 46): "did you think that the inhabitants of the province had a better title than ourselves to the enjoyment of 'aequum jus?'" If Cicero had said that Verres intended (voluit) in cases not provided for, if such arose, to make his 'decreta' in conformity to the 'urbanum edictum,' that is, the inequitable chapters of it, he would have been destroying his own argument, which is, that Verres totally rejected these reprehensible chapters of his 'urbanum edictum.' 'Ex improvise' must be explained by reference to 'provideri' at the end of c. 41; and the sense of the passage is this: "you did not choose in extraordinary cases to apply to your urban edict."

Quam postea tu tibi defensionem relinquebas, in ea maxime offendisti, quum tuam auctoritatem tute ipse edicto provinciali repudiabas.

XLIV. Atque ego non dubito quin ut mihi, cui filia maxime cordi est, res haec acerba videatur atque indigna, sic unicuique vestrum qui simili sensu atque indulgentia filiarum commovemini. Quid enim natura nobis jucundius, quid carius esse voluit, quid est dignius in quo omnis nostra diligentia indulgentiaque consumatur? Homo importunissime, cur tantam injuriam P. Annio mortuo fecisti? cur hunc dolorem cineri ejus atque ossibus inussisti, ut liberis ejus bona patria, voluntate patris, jure, legibus tradita, eriperes, et cui tibi esset commodum condonares? Quibuscum vivi bona nostra partimur, iis praetor adimere nobis mortuis bona fortunasque poterit? NEC PETITIONEM, inquit, NEC POSSESSIONEM DABO. Eripies igitur pupillae togam praetextam? detrahes ornamenta non solum fortunae sed etiam ingenuitatis? Miramur ad arma contra istum hominem Lampsacenos isse? miramur istum de provincia decedentem clam Syracusis profugisse? Nos si alienam vicem pro nostra injuria doleremus, vestigium istius in foro non esset relictum. Pater dat filiae; prohibes: leges sinunt; tamen te interponis. De suis bonis ita dat ut ab jure non abeat. Quid habes quod reprehendas? nihil, opinor. At ego concedo: prohibe si potes; si habes qui te audiat; si potest tibi dicto audiens esse quisquam. Eripias tu voluntatem mortuis, bona vivis, jus omnibus? Hoc populus Romanus non manu vindicasset, nisi te huic tempori atque huic judicio reservasset?

bona fortunasque] See note on 'bona' and 'fortunas,' Divin. p. 34. 'Fortunam' is used in the singular by Scaevola (Dig. 4. 7. 40): 'argentarius coactor totam fortunam in nominibus habebat:' he had all his money invested in loans, or out in some way.

petitionem,] The 'praetor' declared that he would not allow her to sue (petere) for the 'hereditas;' for, in the case of an "in rem actio," one of the modes of proceeding was 'per formulam petitoriam,' in which the plaintiff (actor) claimed the thing as his property (Gaius, iv. 91, 92): "Petitoria autem formula haec est, qua actor intendit rem suam esse." Nor would the 'praetor' allow her to take possession of the 'here-

togam praetextam?] The 'toga praetexta' was worn both by males and females; by boys till they assumed the 'toga virilis,' and by girls till they were married. As the 'toga' was the characteristic dress of the Romans, Cicero means to say, that the conduct of Verres was equivalent to depriving the girl of her citizenship, to stripping her even of the signs of her free birth (ingenuitas), treating her as a slave, as a person without rights.

pro nostra, &c.] "If we had grieved for another's lot, as if the wrong had been done to ourselves." Zumpt compares Cic. Pro Rosc. Am. c. 21: 'pro summa solitudine.'

cursus iv. on the Edicta Magistratum.

The division into chapters is sometimes made in such a way as to obscure the argument. The matter of Annii, the 'Vocunia Lex,' concludes with the indignant words, 'huic judicio reservasset;' and the words 'Posteaquam jus praetorium,' &c., introduce the case of Minucius, as to which Cicero briefly states the law first, and then shows how Verres behaved in this matter. This is the remark of Madvig, Opuscula, p. 348: "De locis aliquot Ciceronis Orationum Verrinarum dissertatio critica."

possessio daretur.] It was part of the 'praetor's' office to grant a 'bonorum possessio,' or permission to take possession of the property of a deceased person in many cases, which are mentioned further on, in the notes to this chapter. The case here put, is that of the 'praetor' granting a 'bonorum possessio' when no will was produced, though there might be a will, which for some reason was not produced. In such case, he could, as Cicero says, grant a 'bonorum possessio' to those who would be 'heredes' if the deceased had died intestate. But the 'praetor' could not give such persons a legal title; the utmost that he could do was to protect them in the possession which he had allowed them to take. The words 'si is intestatus mortuus esset' are omitted by Orelli, though they are in the MSS., and in all the old editions, in conformity with the opinion of Hotmann that it is a gloss taken from Asconius. Hotmann observes that there is nothing for 'is' to refer to; but this difficulty Zumpt removes, by understanding 'alicui' with 'heredem esse.' But the true reading is probably indicated by the words of the Edict quoted by Julian (Dig. 38. 7. 1): 'tum quem ei heredem esse oporteret, si intestatus mortuus esset.' The text of Cicero however may be explained as it stands. The words 'tabulae testamenti' imply some person whose 'tabulae testamenti' were not produced. 'Is' therefore is 'the person whose Tabulae were not produced.' 'Secundum eum' means 'in favour of him;' as in Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 17: 'de absente secundum praesentem judicare.' So 'vindiciae secundum libertatem,' in favour of liberty (Dig. 1. tit. 2. § 24).

facile est dicere;] Orelli has 'docere.'

45. prudentia.] means ironically 'juris prudentia.'

lege hereditas] 'Lex,' used thus absolutely, means the 'Lex Duodecim Tabularum,' which, if there were no 'sui heredes,' gave the 'hereditas' to the 'agnati;' and, if there were no 'agnati,' the 'lex' gave the 'hereditas' to the 'gentiles,' which is the case that Cicero puts here (Gaius, iii. § 17). If Verres had adopted in his 'edictum' (habuisset) that rule of law which all 'praetors,' both before him and since, have adopted, he would have given the 'possessio' to the 'gens.' The 'Gentilitium Jus,' which was in force in the time of Cicero, had fallen into desuetude in the time of the Antonini, when Gaius wrote: 'totum gentilicium jus in desuetudinem abiisse.' As to 'gens' and 'gentiles,' see Dict. of Antiqs., 'Gens.'

lege ageret] If any man thought that he was entitled under a will, though no will was yet produced, he could either sue directly for the 'hereditas' by the 'formula petitoria,' in which case there must be a 'stipulatio judicatum solvi' on the part of the defendant in possession, by way of 'satisfactio,' or security, to the plaintiff; or hereditatem ; aut pro praede litis vindiciarum quum satis accepisset, sponsionem faceret ; ita de hereditate certaret. Hoc, opinor, jure et majores nostri et nos semper usi sumus. Videte ut hoc iste correxerit. Componit edictum iis verbis ut quivis intelligere possit unius hominis causa conscriptum esse ; tantum quod hominem non nominat, causam quidem totam perscribit ; jus, consuetudinem, aequitatem, edicta omnium negligit. EX EDICTO URBANO. SI DE HEREDITATE AMBIGITUR. . . . SI POSSESSOR SPONSIONEM NON FACIET. Jam quid id ad praetorem uter possessor sit ? nonne id quaeri oportet utrum possessorem esse oporteat ? Ergo quia possessor est, non moves possessione ; si possessor non esset, non dares. Nusquam enim scribis, neque tu aliud quicquam edicto complecteris nisi eam causam pro qua pecuniam acceperas. Jam hoc ridiculum est. SI DE HEREDITATE AMBIGITUR, ET TABULAE TESTAMENTI the plaintiff would proceed by the 'sponsio,' and there would be, on the part of the defendant in possession, a 'pro praede litis et vindiciarum stipulatio,' which would be a security for the value of the thing (lis), the ownership of which was in dispute, and for the 'mesne' (intermediate) profits (vindiciae), as Gaius explains it (iv. § 91, &c.). The correct expression is 'pro praede litis et vindiciarum ;' but Cicero's omission of 'et,' in which he is followed by Asconius, is conformable to Roman usage, as in the expression, 'Patres Conscripti,' 'usus fructus,' and others. Gaius says that 'pro praede,' &c., is said, because originally, when the process was 'lege,' 'praedes,' or security, was given by the possessor to the plaintiff for the 'lis et vindiciae,' in place of which (pro praede, &c.) the 'stipulatio' was introduced.

In the 'formula petitoria,' the plaintiff's claim (intentio) to the thing was expressed, as in the formula, 'L. Octavius, &c.' (Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 12). In the 'sponsio,' the form of 'stipulatio' was this: 'Si homo quo de agitur ex jure Quiritium meus est, sestertios cxxv nummos dare spondes?' And, with reference to this 'stipulatio,' the 'intentio' of the formula was: 'Si paret N. N. A. A. ss. cxxv. nummos dare oportere.' (Excursus v.)

si possessor] Klotz reads 'si est possessor,' and Asconius says 'subauditur est,' because there is a reading 'si et,' &c. ; but this does not seem necessary. Cicero quotes the words of the edict of Verres: "if the person in possession shall not make the 'sponsio,'" &c. Cicero's argument is, Verres says 'si possessor ;' but the question is not who is in possession, but who ought to be :

according to your edict, because a man is in possession, you don't disturb him ; and, for the same reason, if a man was not in possession, you would not give him the possession.

Possession here is to be taken in its proper sense. If two parties disputed about the ownership of a thing, he who is in possession must be the defendant, and he who is not in possession has the burden of proving his title. If therefore it was uncertain who was in possession, or who must be considered 'possessor,' this question must be settled first ; and the 'praetor' settled this by a 'possessorial interdict.' When Cicero then says 'uter possessor sit,' he simply means which of the two is in the corporeal possession of the thing ; but that does not determine which of the two ought to be considered 'possessor' for the purposes of the suit, for the actual possessor might not be entitled to the possession. Zumpt says: "si quaeris, quod boni ex ista temporaria possessione homini contingere potuerit, unum hoc vetere proverbio respondeo: Beati possidentes." Such an answer however will not satisfy every body. (Excursus v.)

Jam hoc ridiculum est.] This is not more ridiculous than the pointing of Zumpt and others, who place (:) after 'ridiculum est,' and a full stop after 'hereditatem dabo.' There is nothing ridiculous in the 'translatitium edictum,' which Cicero quotes. The 'ridiculum' lies elsewhere.

Si de hereditate, &c.] Here we have a portion of the edict. The 'praetor' gave the 'bonorum possessio,' (1) when there was no testament (Dig. 38. tit. 6: 'si tabulae testamenti nullae extabunt'), that is, a 'possessio' in the case of intestacy, of which there were several cases, determined by the class of persons who in succession were entitled; (2) if there was a testament, and in this case either 'contra tabulas,' or 'secundum tabulas.' "If," says the edict, "a will is produced with the proper number of seals, that is, not fewer than seven, I will give the 'hereditas' according to the terms of the testament." He ought to say 'possessio,' for the 'praetor' could not make a 'heres' (Gaius, iii. 32); he could only allow a person to take possession of the property: but 'hereditas,' in the sense of 'possessio hereditatis,' may have been used. In c. 47 there is the expression 'possessionem hereditatis,' which Hotmann proposed to read here. Zumpt reads 'possessionem' for 'hereditatem,' and he says that this reading is found in one MS. (Lag. 29).

hoc translatitium est: &c.] These are the words of Cicero, who says that this part of the edict of Verres is adopted from former edicts, and is all right. (Comp. Dig. 38. tit. 6: 'si tabulae testamenti nullae,' &c.) If no 'tabulae' were produced, then the terms of the edict ought to be as in c. 44: 'Posteaquam jus praetorium,' &c. Comp. Dig. 38. 7. 1: 'Haec verba edicti: Tumquem ei heredem esse oporteret,' &c. But Cicero makes Verres say, "then he will give the 'hereditas' to him who says that he is 'heres,'" that is, to a man who affirms that he is 'heres' by the testament, but does not produce the testament. Klotz supposes that Verres may have said, "I will give it to him who proves himself to be 'heres.'" But, if Verres said this, he would have said right. He who produced a will in which he was made 'heres' (and he could prove himself to be testamentary 'heres' in no other way), was entitled to the 'possessio.' The note of Asconius is unintelligible. The substance of the matter is, that the edict of Verres, according to Cicero, was irregular, made for a corrupt purpose; and when he got to Sicily he adopted the usual form, 'in hereditatum possessionibus dandis,' a form which every 'praetor' at Rome used except himself, and which he deviated from for a corrupt purpose. Zumpt writes 'se ei daturum qui dicat,' &c., but 'invitus,' and in obedience to the MSS.

The whole of this matter about the edict of Verres is difficult to understand, for we are confused between what ought to have been the edict of Verres, and what it was. To understand Cicero, we must take his statement as to the edict of Verres to be true; for, if we do not, we cannot see the justice of his conclusions. As Cicero represents the conduct of Verres, the absurdity of his edictal rule is apparent. Whether Cicero stated every thing correctly, is a different matter. But his statements and his conclusions are consistent.

Quid nunc dicam? &c.] 'What shall I now say? That no other person ever since made this edictal rule? Strange, indeed, if nobody chose to be called like Verres. But Verres himself does not include this rule in his Sicilian edict.' Orelli omits 'hoc' after 'unquam.' Zumpt adds it, 'fide Lag. 29.' 'Strange, indeed,' is said ironically. "Strange, that nobody chose to be likened to Verres. Why Verres did not choose to be like himself; for he changed the rule in Sicily."

46. Ac] 'At:' Orelli; but incorrectly.

Non enim hoc potest hoc loco dici multa esse in provinciis aliter edicenda; non de hereditatum quidem possessionibus, non de mulierum hereditatibus. 46. caput—capita] ‘Caput,’ in this sense, is equivalent to ‘title,’ or ‘chapter;’ for ‘caput’ was used to express one of the divisions of a ‘lex,’ which we should call a section. Cic. De Lege Agr. ii. 6: ‘a primo capite legis usque ad extremum;’ and also a division or title of the ‘edictum;’ Cicero, Ad Fam. iii. 8: ‘Romae composui edictum—diligentissime scriptum caput est quod pertinet ad minuendos sumptus civitatum; quo in capite sunt quaedam nova, salutaria civitatibus.’

uteremur,] ‘Uterentur’ (Orelli), which is the suggestion of Hotmann. But Zumpt says that there is no variation in the MSS., and that the usage of the Latin requires ‘uteremur,’ to agree with ‘nos.’

nundinarentur,] ‘Nundinae,’ every ninth day, was a kind of market-day. ‘Nundinor’ is to buy and sell; hence here it signifies to traffic with Verres, who had ‘jurisdictio,’ as ‘praetor urbanus.’—‘Illud ipsum edictum:’ ‘ipsum’ om. Orelli. Zumpt has taken ‘ipsum’ from Lag. 29.

decernebat.] ‘Decerno,’ ‘decretum,’ are the terms applicable to decisions in particular cases. The praetor’s decision, of course, ought to be conformable to his ‘edictum,’ or ‘general rules,’ and to deviate from this was an offence against ‘religio.’ Instances of praetors not acting conformably to their ‘edictum’ were not rare, and a Lex Cornelia was passed B.C. 67, which required the praetors to administer justice conformably to their Edicta Perpetua (Ascon. in Cic. Cornel. p. 58; Dion Cassius, xxxvi. 23). See Excursus iv.

L. Piso] Piso was a colleague of Verres, and probably Praetor Peregrinus. A ‘magistratus’ of equal or superior rank, and also the Tribuni Plebis, might be appealed to from the decree of a ‘magistratus,’ with whose ‘decretum’ a party was dissatisfied; and this interposition was called ‘intercessio.’ But the word ‘intercessio’ is chiefly applied to the ‘intercessio’ of the Tribuni Plebis; which ‘intercessio,’ in matters that related to the Civil Law (as opposed to the Criminal), had the effect of nullifying the act which was appealed against. The ‘magistratus,’ who was appealed from, might then give a fresh judgment or decision. If a praetor was appealed to from his colleague, it appears that he might hear the case himself, and decide according to his opinion. We learn from this passage, that the ‘magistratus’ kept a record, or notes, of their proceedings, which would serve to refresh their memory, and as a guide in future cases. They were sometimes called ‘commentarii, actorum commentaria.’

Quod vos—quae] There is no difficulty about this form of expression. Comp. De Am. c. 15: ‘Quod Tarquinius dixisse ferunt . . se intellexisse quos fidos amicos haberet,’ &c.; and ‘Quod nisi Metellus hoc solitus sit convenire; quem iste collegam nisi habuisset, lapidibus coopertus esset in foro. Sed eo leviores istius injuriae videbantur quod erat in aequitate prudentiaque Pisonis paratissimum perfugium, quo sine labore, sine molestia, sine impensa, etiam sine patrono homines uterentur. Nam, quaeso, redite in memoriam, iudices, quae libido istius in jure dicundo fuerit, quae varietas decretorum, quae nundinatio, quam inanes domus eorum omnium qui de jure civili consuli solent, quam plena ac referta Chelidonis; a qua muliere quum erat ad eum ventum et in aurem ejus insusurratum, alias revocabat eos inter quos jam decreverat, decretumque mutabat, alias inter alios contrarium sine ulla religione decernebat ac proximis paulo ante decreverat. redite in memoriam,] Forcellini cites Cicero De Senectute, c. 7: 'in memoriam redeo;' and Pro Quintio, c. 18; and he says that it means, as in this case, 'see that you remember.'

ridiculi] This word, which has the termination that is commonly a diminutive, has the sense of 'moving to laughter.' It appears to be used in this passage, in the first instance, in the sense of moving to laughter, by the play on the word 'jus,' coupled with the word 'verrinum,' where the laugh would be at the joke, not at those who uttered it. In the second instance, the speakers were 'frigidiores,' and their frigid joke furnished rather matter for laughing at them, than at what they said.—'Ut audistis,' Orelli.

47. commemorem] 'Commemorem,' Zumpt from Lag. 29. He adds that Cicero very seldom uses 'memorare' for 'commemorare.' He cites as an example, Lib. 4. c. 48. Orelli has 'memorem.'

tribunus plebis] Asconius says that it was M. Lollius Palicanus, who exerted himself in the restoration of the Tribunicia potestas. He appears to have been Tribunus plebis, B.C. 71 (Zumpt).

conspectum] Zumpt from Lag. 29. Orelli has 'prospectum;' 'contra sermonis usum,' as Zumpt remarks, in conjunction with such a word as 'produxit.'

suo tempore] As Klotz remarks, this matter would belong to the fifth book De

viros bonos, &c.] As these 'boni et honesti' refused to perform the will of the testator, Asconius inquires in what sense Cicero could give them these names. Cicero says he made several men of good character his 'heredes.' If they turned out to be knaves, when they were put to the test, there is nothing strange in that. Zumpt explains it thus: 'viros bonos, i. e. rei publicae, qualis tum constituta erat, amicos, nobilitatis fautores, ne P. Trebonium ipsum judices Marianarum partium assecclam clandestinum putarent;' and he is probably right, for Cicero's 'boni viri' is often so used in a political sense.

quae—vetaret.] Orelli has 'vetat,' which makes the expression 'quae . . . vetat,' the remark of Cicero; but, as he observes, the words are perhaps a gloss. Zumpt has 'vetaret,' an emendation of Ernesti. This Lex Cornelia was one of those passed in the dictatorship of Sulla, a 'Lex de proscribendis malis civibus,' an expression which helps to explain Cicero's 'viri boni.' Cicero (Pro Sex. Ros. Am. c. 43) says that he does not know whether this 'lex' should be called Valeria (Valerii Flacci interregis) or Cornelia.

dat his possessionem.] 'Injuste,' 'illegally,' says Asconius, the false, in this instance at least. He says that the testament should either have been declared invalid, as contrary to the Lex Cornelia, or the entire will of the testator should have been observed. But Cicero says 'id ego non reprehendo;' and he could not find fault with this part of the decision of Verres. It does not appear that the 'jusjurandum' was a 'conditio' (suspensive, or precedent) which must be performed before the persons named as 'heredes' could be 'heredes.' If it was, the praefor could excuse the oath

(that is, 'remittere conditionem'); but still the 'heredes' might be required to fulfil the 'conditio' in the form of a 'modus,' that is, if it was not illegal. If, however, any party who was named 'heres' chose to take the oath, he could do so, and he might be compelled to perform the 'conditio' as a 'modus.' The following is an example of a 'modus.' A testator might leave his property to a person, and add that he must do some particular thing; for instance, raise a monument to him. In this case the person was made 'heres' absolutely, but still he was bound to do what the testator wished. But, if the doing of the thing was in any way impossible, the 'heres' was released from the obligation to do it, and his right and title as 'heres' were not at all impaired. If the thing was illegal, the conclusion was the same. Now in this case the praetor ought to have given the 'possessio' to all, to those who took the oath and to him who did not. Those who did not take the oath would not be bound by the 'modus,' if the thing was illegal; and he who took the oath, if he performed the 'modus,' would be liable to the penalty of the Lex Cornelia, if the penalty applied to this case. Cicero's statement and arguments are quite correct. As to 'conditio' and 'modus,' see Savigny, Das Heutige Röm. Recht, vol. iii. § 116—129. Though Cicero could not deny that the proceeding of Verres was legal so far as concerned the other 'heredes,' he adds 'etenim,' &c.: 'and indeed it was not fair,' &c., which is said with a kind of sneer, as being the remark which Verres or his friends might make. To which Cicero replies 'At ille,' &c. 'Yet the freed man thought that he should do wrong, if,' &c. Klotz, who seems inclined to set Verres in the right as much as he can, says that he did not strictly act illegally in refusing the 'possessio' to the 'libertus.' But Cicero says that he did, and he knew more of Roman law than his German commentator. The 'libertus' pro-erat iniquum homini proscripto, egenti, de fraternis bonis quidquam dari. At ille libertus, nisi ex testamento patroni jurasset, scelus se facturum arbitrabatur. mised to do that which was forbidden by the Lex Cornelia, but that did not deprive him of his title to the share of the inheritance: it only made him liable to the penalty of the 'lex,' if there was any for such a case. And Klotz observes in his note on 'quae . . . vetat,' that the Lex Cornelia did not apply directly to the case of a testament, so as to invalidate such a gift, but simply forbade any relief to be given to the proscribed, and therefore applied to all persons. If this is so, how can he say that Verres did not act illegally in refusing the 'possessio?' The orator argues better than the commentator.

At ille libertus,] 'At' is a correction of Hotmann, and apparently a true correction. The MSS. have 'et.'

quod—surrexerit] The common reading is 'surrexit.' A careful reader might ask if it should not be 'surrexerit.' Klotz has 'surrexerit,' from the Vatican palimpsest, published by Mai. The 'ordo' is the 'ordo libertinorum,' whom, as Asconius re-

sextam partem] Olympus was a freedman, and the daughter of his 'patronus' claimed a portion of the property of which he died possessed. This was the case of a 'libertus' making a testament, to which case the law of the Twelve Tables did not apply. Originally, if a freedman made a testament, he could pass over (praeterire) his patron altogether. But according to Ulpian (Frag. Tit. xxix.), in the case of a 'libertus' making a testament and giving nothing or less than half of his property to his patron, the praetor's edict gave the patron the 'bonorum possessio contra tabulas testamenti' of one half, unless the 'libertus' left behind him as a successor a natural, that is, a not adopted child. Aequa postulatio, summa hominum auctoritas pretio superabatur. Venit Romam Ligur : non dubitabat quin, si ipse Verrem convenisset, aequitate causae et auctoritate sua commovere hominem posset. Domum ad eum venit : rem demonstrat : quam pridem sibi hereditas venisset docet : quod facile in causa aequissima homini ingenioso fuit, multa quae quemvis commovere possent dixit : ad extremum petere coepit ne usque eo suam auctoritatem despiceret, gratiamque contemneret, ut se tanta injuria afficeret. Homo Ligurem accusare coepit qui in re adventitia atque hereditaria tam diligens tam attentus esset : debere eum aiebat suam quoque rationem ducere ; multa sibi opus esse, multa canibus suis quos circa se haberet. Non possum illa planius commemorare quam ipsum Ligurem pro testimonio dicere audistis. Quid enim, Verres, utrum ne his quidem testibus credetur, an haec ad rem non pertinent ? Non M. Octavio ? non L. Liguri ? Quis nobis credet ? cui nos ? quid est, Verres, quod planum fieri testibus possit, si hoc non fit ? An id quod dicunt leve est ? Nihil levius quam praetorem urbis hoc juris in suo magistratu constituere, rule as to the one half was introduced, it does not appear (comp. Gaius, iii. 40) ; but it was before the enactment of the Lex Papia Poppaea, which gave greater advantages to patrons in the case of the richer class of 'liberti.' Zumpt finds some justification for the proceeding of Verres in this matter, that the claim of the patron's daughter was made in the praetorship of Verres, and he refers to Gaius, iv. 100. But this is a misconception of the whole matter. Cicero's statement is clear and consistent.

nisi—decideretur,] 'Unless he came to some terms with the woman.' If this allegation against Verres is true, it shows that he was dishonest. He who has to declare the law, cannot impose terms on the parties, and punish either of them who does not comply. It is his business to declare the law and apply it to the facts of the case. 'Decidere,' in the sense of 'coming to terms,' 'settling an affair,' occurs often. See Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 32, and Lib. 3. c. 48, 'decidere liceret.' And comp. 'decisione,' c. 54 of this oration.

ad eas hereditates] Lambinus has 'in' on the authority of Priscian, which Zumpt disapproves ; but the Vatican Codex has 'in,' which Klotz adopts.

in re adventitia] 'Quia ab alieniore hereditas veniebat,' says Asconius.

suam quoque rationem, &c.] Verres said that 'he must have respect to himself also.' Some read 'sui,' says Lambinus, who thinks however that 'suam' is right. Hotman cites a like example from Cicero, 'duxi meam rationem,' Ad Att. viii. 11. D. ; but it is doubtful, as Zumpt says, if 'suam rationem' is Latin. The 'canes' of Verres are his informers, who smelled out what was to their master's profit (c. 51 ; and Lib. 4. c. 21, &c.)

Quid enim, Verres,] I have removed the note of interrogation, which is absurdly placed after Verres. Klotz reads 'Quid est, Verres ? utrum ne,' &c., after the Cod. Vat., which is perhaps better. He also reads 'Non credemus M. Octavio' and a little further on 'praetorem urbanum,' in accordance with the Cod. Vat.

Octavium Ligurem, hominem ornatissimum loco, ordine, nomine, virtute, ingenio, copiis, poscere pecuniam non dubitarit?

Fannio fratri tuo credere; dicit enim rem incredibilem: C. Verrem insinulat avaritiae et audaciae, quae vitia videntur in quemvis potius quam in istum convenire. Dixit Q. A building that was in perfect repair was ‘sartum, tectum integrumque,’ c. 50. ‘Sarcire’ is applied to the mending of clothes or shoes; and also to the repair of buildings. ‘Tegere’ properly refers to the roof. Zumpt refers to Cic. Ad Div. xiii. 11, ‘sarta tecta aedium,’ &c. ‘Dach und Fach’ as the Germans say (Zumpt)—‘atque manifestae . . . proferentur.’ Zumpt.

Postumius in the Latin war, after the battle near the lake Regillus (B.C. 499), and dedicated by his son (Liv. ii. 20, 42). It was destroyed in the time of the Gallic invasion; but it must have been rebuilt. L. Metellus Dalmaticus, consul B.C. 119, restored or beautified the temple. See c. 59.

Caesius, factum est senatusconsultum, quibus de sartis tectis cognitum et judicatum non esset, uti C. Verres P. Caelius praetores cognoscerent et judicarent. Qua potestate iste permissa, ut ex C. Fannio et ex Q. Tadio cognovistis, verumtamen quum esset omnibus in rebus apertissime impudentissimeque praedatus, hoc voluit clarissimum relinquere indicium latrociniorum suorum de quo non audire aliquando sed videre quotidie possemus. Quaesivit quis aedem Castoris sartam tectam deberet tradere. Junium ipsum mortuum esse sciebat: scire volebat ad quem illa res pertineret. Audit pupillum esse filium. Homo qui semper ita palam dictitasset pupillos et pupillas certissimam praedam esse praetoribus, optatum negotium sibi in sinum delatum esse dicebat. advocationes] 'A place which is daily crowded by those who attend there to give their aid in matters of the greatest importance.' He means the 'advocati,' who assisted parties with their advice and aid, or sometimes even a 'magistratus;' "ii qui advocati sunt" (see Lib. 3. c. 7). They did not make the speech. That was the business of the 'patronus' or orator. Forcellini, who quotes Asconius, takes the word 'advocationes' to mean 'consultatio,' which is a mistake. It has the meaning that it has in Cicero, Ad Fam. vii. 10. 'Advocatio,' says Zumpt, 'coetus est congregatorum.'

50. Aedem Castoris,] Orelli reads 'tuen-dam. L. Sulla, Q. Metello consulibus is mortuus est. Reliquit,' &c. It appears (c. 55) that Junius made the contract with the censors L. Marcius, M. Perperna (B.C. 86?). We avoid the apparent contradiction by omitting 'de,' and connecting the man's death with the year of the consuls. But, as Zumpt remarks, the time of the man's death is quite immaterial. Ernesti supposes that the contract, after being made with the censors, was renewed with the consuls L. Sulla and Q. Metellus (B.C. 80), at which time there were no censors. It appears that the consuls L. Octavius, C. Aurelius (B.C. 75) afterwards made the contracts for repairs (aedes locavissent), but had not time to examine if the contracts were performed as to all the buildings (sarta tecta exigere). Finally, a 'Senatusconsultum' empowered Verres and Caelius to examine into the condition of the temples.

intertrimentum] The loss occasioned in a substance by rubbing or wear, as in silver or gold (Liv. xxxii. 2). The explanation of the word by Asconius, 'intertrimentum vero . . dantis et accipientis,' does not seem applicable. It appears that Rabonius had in some way taken up the contract, and it Rabonium vocat: quaerit ecquid sit quod a pupillo traditum non sit quod exigi debeat. Quum ille, id quod erat, diceret facilem pupillo traditionem esse, signa et dona comparere omnia, ipsum templum omni opere esse integrum, indignum isti videri coepit ex tanta aede tantoque opere se non opimum praeda praesertim a pupillo discedere.

LI. Venit ipse in aedem Castoris: considerat templum: videt undique tectum pulcherrime laqueatum, praeterea cetera nova atque integra. Versat se: quaerit quid agat. Dicit ei quidam ex illis canibus quos iste Liguri dixerat esse circa se multos, Tu, Verres, hic quod moliare nihil habes, nisi forte vis ad perpendicularum columnas exigere. Homo omnium rerum imperitus quaerit quid sit ad perpendicularum. Dicunt ei fere nullam esse columnam quae ad perpendicularum esse possit. Nam mehercule, inquit, sic agamus: columnae ad perpendicularum exigantur. Rabonius qui legem nosset qua in lege numerus tantum columnarum traditur, perpendiculari mentio fit nulla, et qui non putaret sibi expedire ita accipere, ne eodem modo reddendum esset, negat id sibi deberi; negat oportere exigi. Iste Rabonium quiescere jubet, et simul ei nonnullam spem societatis ostendit: hominem modestum et minime pertinacem facile coercet: columnas ita se exacturum esse confirmat. Nova res atque improvisa pupilli calamitas nuntiatur statim C. Mustio, vitrico pupilli, qui nuper est mortuus, M. Junio patruo, P. Potitio tutori, homini frugalissimo. Hi rem ad virum primarium, summo officio ac virtute praeditum, M. Marcellum, qui erat pupilli tutor, deferunt. Venit ad Verrem M. Marcellus: petit ab eo pro sua fide ac diligentia pluribus verbis, ne per summam injuriam pupillum Junium fortunis patriis conetur evertere. Iste qui jam spe et opinione praedam illam devorasset, neque ulla aequitate orationis neque auctoritate M. Marcelli commotus est. Itaque quemadmodum ostendisset se id exacturum esse respondit. Quum sibi omnes ad istum allegationes difficiles, omnes aditus arduos ac potius interclusos viderent, apud quem non jus, non aequitas, non misericordia, had been agreed that the edifice should be delivered to him in complete repair. According to Cicero, Rabonius was satisfied with the condition of the temple.

51. Nam mehercule,] Zumpt properly compares Lib. 2. c. 29, 'nam hercle;' and Lib. 3. c. 85, 'nam speravissem:' and he adds, that it is now generally agreed that 'nam' is to be explained by an ellipsis. But this is not a right explanation. We must recur to the primary meaning of the word, which seems to be akin to 'enim,' another form; and it means 'indeed,' 'well,' or the like. 'Germanice dixeris, Ja' (Zumpt).

legem] 'The terms.' This is a usual meaning of 'lex,' but not its proper meaning. See c. 55: 'lex operi faciundo.'

reddendum] 'Tradendum,' Zumpt from Priscian and Lag. 29; which, if we judge by the propriety of the terms, and not the MSS. authority, is the better word.

non propinqui oratio, non amici voluntas, non cujusquam auctoritas [pro pretio,] non gratia valeret, statuunt id sibi optimum esse factu, quod cuivis venisset in mentem, petere auxilium a Chelidone quae isto praetore non modo in jure civili privatorumque omnium controversiis populo Romano praefuit, verum etiam in his sartis tectisque dominata est.

LII. Venit ad Chelidonem C. Mustius, eques Romanus, publicanus, homo cum primis honestus: venit M. Junius, patruus pueri, frugalissimus homo et castissimus: venit homo summo honore, pudore, et summo officio, spectatissimus ordinis sui, P. Potitius tutor. O multis acerbam, O miseram atque indignam praeturam tuam! Ut mittam cetera, quo tandem pudore tales viros, quo dolore, meretricis domum venisse arbitramini? qui nulla conditione istam turpitudinem subissent, nisi officii necessitudinisque ratio coëgisset. Veniunt, ut dico, ad Chelidonem. Domus erat plena: nova jura, nova decreta, nova judicia petebantur: Mihi det possessionem: mihi ne adimat: in me judicium ne det: mihi bona addicat. Alii nummos numerabant, alii tabulas obsignabant: domus erat non meretricio conventu sed praetoria turba referta. Simulac potestas primum data est, adeunt hi quos dixi. Loquitur Mustius: rem demonstrat: petit auxilium: pecuniam pollicetur. Respondit illa ut meretrix non inhumane: libenter ait se esse facturam, et se cum isto diligenter sermocinaturam: reverti jubet. Tum discedunt. Postridie revertuntur: negat illa posse hominem exorari: permagnam eum dicere ex illa re pecuniam confici posse.

LIII. Vereor ne quis forte de populo, qui priore actione non adfuit, haec, quia propter insignem turpitudinem sunt incredibilia, fingi a me arbitretur: ea vos antea, judices, cognovistis. Dixit juratus P. Potitius, tutor pupilli Junii: dixit M. Junius tutor et patruus: Mustius dixisset si viveret, sed pro Mustio recenti re de Mustio auditum dixit L. Domitius; qui quum sciret me ex Mustio pro pretio,] These words are in all the MSS.; which Zumpt explains as meaning 'tantum quantum pretium' or 'pretii loco.'

52. summo honore,] There is a difficulty about the word 'honore;' for it appears that this Potitius, or Tettius, as Zumpt has it, was a plebeian. Madvig proposes to omit 'honore.'

numerabant,] Cicero represents some as paying down ready money in the house of Chelidon to purchase the interest of the mistress of Verres: others, as sealing writings, by which he seems to mean an obligation to pay.

ut meretrix] "Considering she was a 'meretrix,' she was not unreasonable." Comp. De Sen. c. 13, 'multae etiam ut in homine Romano literae.' Cicero represents the affair as conducted with the solemnity of an embassy. We must take the narrative as we have it, without being bound to believe it all.

53. de Mustio auditum] L. Domitius gave evidence as to what he heard from Mustius, who was now dead. This hearsay evidence the Romans did not reject, but they had sense enough to set a true value on it.

vivo audisse, quod eo sum usus plurimum, (etenim iudicium, quod prope omnium fortunarum suarum C. Mustius habuit, me uno defendente vicit), quum hoc, ut dico, sciret L. Domitius me scire, ad eum res omnes Mustium solitum esse deferre, tamen de Chelidone reticuit quoad potuit: alio responsionem suam derivavit. Tantus in adolescente clarissimo ac principe juventutis pudor fuit ut aliquamdiu, quum a me premeretur, omnia potius responderet quam Chelidone nominaret. Primo necessarios istius ad eum allegatos esse dicebat: deinde aliquando coactus Chelidone nominavit. Non te pudet, Verres, ejus mulieris arbitrato gessisse praetura, quam L. Domitius ab se nominari vix sibi honestum esse arbitrabatur?

LIV. Rejecti a Chelidone capiunt consilium necessarium ut suscipiant ipsi negotium. Cum Rabonio tutore, quod erat vix HS quadraginta millium, transigunt HS ducentis millibus. Refert ad istum rem Rabonius: ut sibi videatur, satis grandem pecuniam et satis impudentem esse. Iste qui aliquanto plus cogitasset, male accipit verbis Rabonium: negat eum sibi illa decisione satisfacere posse. Ne multa, locaturum se esse confirmat. Tutores haec nesciunt: quod actum erat cum Rabonio, putant id esse certissimum: nullam majorem pupillo metuunt calamitatem. Iste vero non procrastinat: locare incipit, non proscripta neque edicta die, alienissimo tempore, ludis ipsis Romanis, foro ornato. Itaque renuntiat Rabonius illam decisionem tutoribus. Accurrunt tamen ad tempus tutores: digitum tollit Junius patruus: isti color immu-derivavit.] 'He turned off his answer to something else:' he avoided the question. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 2. c. 20, 'culpam derivare in aliquem.' The metaphor is taken from irrigation and draining, by which water was carried in channels (rivi) from one place to another. In our language the word has lost its primary meaning, and particularly in such a word as rivals (rivales), which in Latin means persons who had a common interest in a 'rivus,' or watercourse, as we see from Ulpian, Dig. 43. 19. 1: "si inter rivales, id est qui per eundem rivum aquam ducunt, sit contentio de aquae usu." The Latin word has also our derived sense of 'rival.'

locaturum] Verres affirmed that he would let the contract anew to another undertaker or contractor (conductor, redemptor, manceps). When Rabonius sent the 'tutores' word (renuntiat) that the bargain which they had made with him was at an end, the 'tutores' determined to bid at the letting on behalf of their 'pupillus,' in order that he might have the benefit of the contract, and not have to deal with a public contractor (manceps) who was in the interest of Verres. The letting of these public contracts was by 'auctio,' or public bidding, to which applies the expression 'digitum tollit,' the sign of a bid (comp. Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 11). It was the object of Verres to prevent the 'tutores' of Junius from taking the contract.

proscripta, &c.] The word 'proscripta,' as Zumpt observes, means a notice put up, on a 'tabula,' for instance; and 'edicta' refers to notice given by proclamation, as by a 'praeco.'

tatus est: vultus, oratio, mens denique excidit. Quid ageret coepit cogitare. Si opus pupillo redimeretur, si res abiret ab eo mancipe quem ipse apposuisset, sibi nullam praedam esse. Nihil ingeniose, nihil quod quisquam posset dicere, improbe verum callide: nihil ab isto tectum, nihil veteratorium expectaveritis: omnia aperta, omnia perspicua reperientur, impudentia, amentia, audacia. Si pupillo opus redimitur, mihi praeda de manibus eripitur. Quod est igitur remedium? quod? ne liceat pupillo redimere. Ubi illa consuetudo in bonis, praedibus praediisque vendendis, omnium consulum, censorum, praetorum, quaestorum denique, ut optima conditione sit is cuja res sit, cujum periculum? Excludit eum solum cui prope dicam soli potestatem factam esse oportebat. Quid enim quisquam ad meam pecuniam me invito adspirat, quisquam accedit? quod quisquam, &c.] 'Ut quisquam posset;' Zumpt, from Lag. 29.

bonis, praedibus, &c.] This passage has caused some difficulty. Klotz has a long note on it, but I think that he has mistaken the sense of the passage in following Hotmann. The first question is if 'bonis' is an adjective, as Asconius takes it to be, when he says 'bona praedia dicuntur bona satisfactionibus obnoxia;' and 'praedia sunt res ipsae; praedes homines, id est, fidejussores, quorum res bona praedia [non] uno nomine dicuntur.'

But Klotz is right in taking 'bona' to be a substantive, though he takes it in the wrong sense. 'Praedes' are 'fidejussores,' persons who are securities. 'Praedium' is land; 'praedium urbanum' is land in a city, with buildings on it; 'praedium rusticum' is land in the country, with a house on it, a 'villa' (Dig. 50. 16. s. 27, 115, 221). The expression 'bona vendere, praedia vendere,' is common enough. 'Praedes vendere' occurs in Cicero again (Phil. ii. 31); and the expression must mean, to sell all the property of a 'praes.' Cicero then means to say, that when a sale of this kind is made by consuls, quaestors, or others, to satisfy the demands of the state, the person whose property was thus put up had a preference, if he offered and paid the whole amount; and why should the same not be the case in letting a contract? For, if the temple required repairs, why not let the 'tutores' of the 'pupillus' have the contract, for the repairs must be done at his cost; and the state had the security of his 'praedes' and (their) 'praedia?' "If you, the praetor, don't think that the 'cautio' is sufficient, will you put whom you please in possession of my property, and will you not allow me to have the opportunity of protecting my own interests, that is, of having the contract to repair, which repairs must be done at my cost, and you will have the opportunity of judging if they are properly done?"

Manutius saw the right meaning of the passage, except that he understands 'praedes' to be 'mancipia,' or slaves, an error which Graevius corrects. 'Bonis' means any 'bona' of any person which are sold by the state.

quisquam accedit?] There is hardly any sense in the common reading 'quid accedit?' Klotz has 'quisquam accedit?' according to the Cod. Vat.

tua qui locas:] The relative is sometimes used this way, and refers to its antecedent implicated in the adjective pronoun. There is a similar expression in a letter of Cato to Cicero (Ad Fam. xv. 5): 'ut tuam virtutem . . domi togati, armati foris.'

et si non putas cautum,] Madvig (Opuscula, p. 350) thinks that some words are omitted after 'cautum;' so that the sentence would run thus: 'et si non putas cautum, amplius cavebitur.' He argues that the conclusion by which the injustice of the new edict is to be expressed, is not appropriately connected with one of the putas cautum, scilicet tu, praetor, in mea bona quos voles immittes, me ad meas fortunas defendendas accedere non sines?

LV. Operae pretium est ipsam legem cognoscere. Dicetis eundem conscripsisse qui illud edictum de hereditate: LEX OPERI FACIUNDO. QUAE PUPILLI JUNII. Dic, dic, quaeso, clarius, C. VERRES PR. URBIS ADDIDIT. Corriguntur leges censoriae. Quid preceding members by the word 'et;' for that the word 'scilicet,' this vehement interrogation, should stand by itself. But the graver objection, as he considers it, is this, that Cicero does not affirm that which he ought particularly to affirm; he does not say that, if the security was not sufficient, further security would be given; and yet he does not omit to mention the supposition of insufficient security, but he subjoins (in the following words) what would be an answer for Verres, and show that he had acted legally. This is Madvig's argument, as I understand it; for his language is not very easy to understand. He adds: "nam si non satis cautum putabat, qui poterat Junium admittere? Ridicule ergo prorsus interrogatur. Patet, illa: 'et si non putas cautum' ita dici a Cicerone, ut vel hoc extremum effugium Verri occludatur; itaque quemadmodum illa: 'probatio futura est tua' statim (c. 55) hoc modo repetuntur: 'at erat probatio tua,' sic haec pars sic effertur: 'at erat, et esset amplius, si velles, populo cautum praedibus et praediis.'" He concludes that after 'et si non putas cautum' there should be something corresponding to 'at erat, et esses amplius,' &c., in the following chapter.

I have noticed this argument because of the respect that is due to any remark of so distinguished a scholar; but I don't think that there is any thing in it. If there is no objection to the Latinity of the passage, there is certainly none to the argument. The youth is made to say 'there was security sufficient; and if you don't think that there was, you will, forsooth, send just whom you please to invade my property, and you will not let me have the opportunity of protecting my own interests.' This is further explained in the next chapter: 'at erat probatio,' &c. If the security was not sufficient, Verres ought not to have taken advantage of that, and given the contract to another, the consequence of which would be the ruin of the youth, who would be obliged to pay a large sum for repairs, which he could have made at a light cost. The argument is: 'if you don't think the security sufficient, you will, forsooth, take such a step as will ruin me at once, by giving the contract to others.' The argument is perfectly clear; but Madvig has misunderstood it, as I think.

55. lex operi] All the MSS. have 'ex,' which the very learned Antonio Agustin, archbishop of Tarragona, first recommended to be altered to 'lex,' a certain emendation; for this is the usual formula 'Lex,' &c.; and Cicero has just said 'legem cognoscere,' 'listen to the terms.' The corruption 'ex' easily explains the corruption 'opere,' which all the MSS. have except the Cod. Vat.

Quid enim video, &c.] The Cod. Vat. omits 'video in.' The usual punctuation is 'Quid enim? video in multis,' &c. In Horace, 1 Sat. i. 7, there is 'Quid enim? concurritur,' according to the usual punctuation, where Heindorf remarks that this form of expression is common in Cicero, and he compares it with τί γάρ; in Greek. I do not propose to examine what is there said about τί γάρ; in Greek, for Greek construction does not explain Latin construction. The translation of the text of Cicero is: "Don't I see in many old forms of letting used by the censors?" and that of Horace: "Is not a battle fought?" It may also be rendered correctly enough thus: "Verres is correcting the terms of the censors. Well, what of that? I see it is so in many of the old terms of contract, &c. Verres would do something of the kind." It is plain that 'Quid enim' begins an interrogative formula, and that it requires a verb. But it is also true that, in rapid and impassioned speech, usage often omitted the verb which ought to go with 'Quid enim,' and the speaker completed his meaning by the enunciation of another verb. And this second verb may be enunciated either as an answer to the first verb suppressed, in which case it may be either an affirmation or a negation; or it may be a continuation of the interrogation, in such a form as 'Quid enim, ad amicosne confugiam?' or as in Divin. c. 11: 'Quid illa, Caecili, contemnendane tibi videntur,' &c. A like remark applies to sentences beginning with 'Quid ergo,' &c., as in the beginning of c. 57.

At erat, et esset amplius, si velles, populo cautum praedibus et praediis. Hic te si res ipsa, si indignitas injuriae tuae non commovebat, si pupilli calamitas, propinquorum lacrimae, D. Bruti cujus praedia subierunt periculum, M. Marcelli tutoris auctoritas apud te ponderis nihil habebat; ne illud quidem animadvertebas, ejusmodi fore hoc peccatum tuum quod tu neque negare posses (in tabulas enim rettulisti) nec cum defensione aliqua confiteri? Addicitur id opus HS 10LX millibus, quum tutores HS LXXX millibus id opus ad illius iniquissimi hominis arbitrium se effecturos esse clamarent. Etenim quid erat operis? Id quod vos vidistis. Omnes illae columnae quas dealbatas videtis, machina apposita, nulla impensa dejectae, eisdemque lapidibus repositae sunt: hoc tu HS 10LX millibus loca-

Cn. Domitius, &c.] The first two were censors in B.C. 116, and their censorship was distinguished for the great works constructed during their office, and for the strictness with which the censors performed their duty of revising (legendi) the senate. The censorship of Cassius and Servilius belongs to B.C. 126.

Qui de L. Marcio, &c.] The text, as it stands in the Variorum edition, contains 'redemerit eum' after 'censoribus,' and 'ei' twice after 'neve,' and is thus explained by Manutius and Gruter: "If any person has taken a contract from the censors, L. Marcus M. Perperna, no other person must admit that person as a partner, nor give him a share in a contract, nor undertake the contract for him, or on his behalf." This was done to exclude the 'pupillus,' and to prevent Junius, or any one else bidding for him. Manutius is wrong in supposing 'de' in this passage to be equivalent to 'post;' and his reason for this explanation is, that, according to c. 50, P. Junius had taken the contract from the consuls, Sulla and Metellus, and not from the censors, Marcus and Perperna. But see the note on c. 50. Zumpt says that the text as he gives it, and as it is pointed here, is the reading of all the MSS. and all the old editions; and the emendations are not necessary. The words of the edict are not quoted in full, for it is plain that the

subierunt] Klotz has 'suberant,' and he reads 'si D. Bruti, cujus praedia suberant, periculum.' The Vatican palimpsest and Asconius read 'suberant.' Asconius explains the words thus: 'satisfactorem dicit fuisse D. Brutum.' Zumpt has 'subierant.' Klotz gives no example of 'suberant' used in the sense which he would give to the word in this passage.

dealbatas] 'whitened;' but it was more than that. The plaister (tectorium) was taken off, and fresh plaister or cement put on. As to 'tectorium,' see the passages quoted in Forcellini. 'If,' says Cicero, 'I had thought that the cost of whitening columns had been so great, I should certainly never have been a candidate for the aedileship.' Cicero (Act. ii. Lib. 5. c. 14) enumerates, among other duties of the 'aedile,' 'sacrarum aedium procurationem.' The treasury (aerarium) supplied the 'aediles' with some money for the costs of their office, but not enough.

In place of 'dejectum,' the common reading, which Zumpt retains, P. Manutius put 'delitum,' which Orelli has, Klotz, and the Vat. Cod. Most of the MSS. have 'deletum.' 'Deletus' and 'dejectus' are often confounded in the MSS.

visti. Atque in illis columnis dico esse quae a tuo redemptore commotae non sint: dico esse ex qua tantum tectorium vetus delitum sit et novum inductum. Quodsi tanta pecunia columnas dealbari putassem, certe nunquam aedilitatem petivissem. At ut videatur tamen res agi et non eripi pupillo: SI QUID OPERIS CAUSA RESCIDERIS, REFICITO.

LVI. Quid erat quod rescinderet, quum suo quemque loco lapidem reponeret? QUI REDEMERIT, SATISDET DAMNI INFECTI EI QUI A VETERE REDEMPTORE ACCEPERIT. Deridet quum sibi ipsum jubet satisfacere Rabonium. PECUNIA PRAESENS SOLVETUR. Quibus de bonis? Ejus qui, quod tu HS 10LX millibus locasti, HS LXXX millibus effecturum se esse clamavit. Quibus de bonis? Pupilli, cujus aetatem et solitudinem, etiamsi tutores non essent, defendere praetor debuit. Tutoribus defendentibus, non modo patrias ejus fortunas sed etiam bona tutorum ademisti. Hoc opus BONUM SUO CUIQUE FACITO. Lapis aliquis caedendus et appor-Atque] The reading of all the MSS., and of the editions to that of Victorio, which has 'atqui.' 'Male,' says Zumpt. If 'atqui' is properly used to introduce something by way of opposition, it is not the word that is wanted here.

res agi, &c.] Zumpt takes 'res agi' in a general sense: 'ut aliquid publici negotii actum, et non (id quod res erat) praeda tantum a pupillo quaesita videatur;' "that the matter might appear to be treated, &c., with regard to the public interests, and not wrested from the 'pupillus.'"

56. Qui redemerit,] Another clause in the terms of the letting was: "let the contractor give security for 'damnum infectum' to him who shall have the building delivered up to him from the former contractor." 'Damnum infectum' is damage (damnum) not done to a man's property, but damage which there is good reason to expect, if precautions are not taken (Dig. 39. tit. 2). For instance, if one man's building threatened damage to another man, in consequence of its dilapidated state, the owner of the dilapidated property might be required to repair it, or to give security (cautio) for any damage that might be caused by the state of the building. In this, says Asconius, the new contractor was required to give security to the former contractor, if he caused any damage to the building, 'pro necessitate operis;' that is, while doing the necessary repairs. Cicero says that the effect of this clause was, that Rabonius had to give security to himself; for 'qui rede-merit' is Rabonius, and 'ei qui' is Rabonius also, as Manutius shows. Cicero adds, 'he is merely mocking us, when he requires Rabonius to give security to himself.'

acceperit.] 'Accepit:' Klotz. 'Praesens solvetur:' all the MSS. have 'solvetur' (Zumpt); which he takes to be equivalent to 'solvetur,' which is the reading of Klotz and of the Codex Vaticanus. Orelli has 'solvatur.'

Hoc opus—facito.] After these words, Klotz has in his text 'Quid est suo cuique?' added from the Codex Vaticanus. Manutius reads 'bono suo quoque.' But 'suo cuique' is probably right, and correctly explained by Graevius: 'let him make the work good with what is fit and proper for each part.' 'Suo cuique,' says Graevius, 'est quod suum cuique est, illa materia quae ad quodque requiritur, cuique convenit ut bonum fiat.' He compares the expression in Plautus, 'suo sibi victu vivunt,' though, he adds, he is aware that this is explained differently, and 'sibi' is considered to be pleonastic.

Lapis, &c.] Orelli reads 'Lapis aliquis, &c., fuit? Machina sua: nam illo, &c.;' and he explains it thus: "'Lapis . . . apportandus fuit?' Minime. Machina tantum sua apportanda s. apponenda fuit. Nam, &c. Ceterum lego: machina una."—'Lapis aliqui:' Zumpt, from Lag. 29.

This passage is difficult. The words which Klotz adds from the Vatican Codex do not seem to diminish the difficulty. It tandus fuit machina sua. Nam illo non saxum, non materies advecta est: tantum operis in ista locatione fuit quantum paucae operae fabrorum mercedis tulerunt et manupretii machina. Utrum existimatis minus operis esse unam columnam efficere ab integro novam nullo lapide redivivo, an quatuor illas reponere? Nemo dubitat quin multo majus sit novam facere. Ostendam in aedibus privatis, longa difficilique vectura, columnas singulas ad impluvium HS quadragenis millibus non minus magnas locatas. Sed ineptum est de tam perspicua istius impudentia pluribus verbis disputare, praesertim quum iste aperte tota lege omnium sermonem atque existimationem contempserit qui etiam ad extremum adscripserit, REDIVIVA SIBI HABETO. Quasi quidquam redivivi ex opere illo tolleretur, ac non totum opus ex redivivis constitueretur. At enim is true, as Madvig remarks, that Cicero, after citing formal words, often adds a remark upon them. Ernesti placed a note of interrogation after 'machina sua,' which neither Zumpt nor Madvig approves. If 'lapis' and 'saxum' are to be taken as synonymous, which is at least doubtful, Cicero must be understood as speaking ironically, or making a half interrogation; but then there is a difficulty in explaining 'nam,' &c., in the following sentence. If 'lapis' can be taken in the sense of smaller pieces, as opposed to 'saxum,' there is no difficulty in the passage, and 'nam' has its common sense of introducing something which is so obvious, or so well known, as not to require the speaker to dwell on it. 'Some small matter of stone, it is true, had to be cut and brought in his own machine; for, as to large pieces of stone or timber, none was carried there. In that contract of letting, there was just so much labour required as the hire of a few workmen amounted to, and the cost of the machine.' The MSS. have 'mercedes,' but 'mercedis' is required after 'quantum,' for 'paucae operae fabrorum' are the nominative to 'tulerunt.' Besides, 'merces' is properly used in the singular. But, if we have 'mercedis,' we must agree with Madvig in writing 'manupretii machina,' that is, 'quantum manupretii,' or 'manuspretii machina tulit.' Zumpt reads 'manuspretium machinae,' and Orelli 'manupretium machinae.' 'Manupretium' is rightly explained by Asconius, but more exactly by Gaius (Dig. 50. tit. 16. s. 13). A thing is said to be no longer the same thing when its form is altered: 'quoniam plerumque plus est in manuspretio quam in re;' that is, 'the cost of the labour bestowed on a

lapide redivivo,] The context explains the term, which means old materials used for new buildings. Verres added, 'rediviva sibi habeto,' 'let the contractor take the old materials;' just as if he were going to use new materials, whereas all that was done to the building was done with old materials.

columnas singulas] This is correctly explained by Manutius. "It is more expensive to set up one new column, than to take down and set up again four such as those in the temple of Castor. Yet new columns, as large as these, brought a long distance, have been agreed for (locatas) at 'quadragena millia,' whereas Verres has allowed 'quingenta sexaginta millia' for a piece of work, which the 'tutores' of the 'pupillus' say that they could have done for 'octoginta millia.'"

Zumpt asks "why 'ad impluvium?'" Perhaps," he says, "because it was more difficult to place them in a house than outside, as in a portico or porch."

At enim—accedere.] "But it may be urged," says Cicero, "that if the 'pupillus' could not have the contract, there was no necessity for the matter to come into the hands of Verres,"—for 'ipsum' means Verres, not Rabonius, as Hotmann supposes. Cicero means to say that Verres was the real person, not Rabonius, who was his tool.—The objector or supposed objector goes on to say: 'some other person, any other person, might have undertaken the contract.' No, says Cicero, every body was excluded from undertaking the contract by the short si pupillo redimi non licebat, non necesse erat rem ad ipsum pervenire: poterat aliquis ad id negotium de populo accedere. Omnes exclusi sunt non minus aperte quam pupillus. Diem praestituit operi faciundo Kalendas Decembres. Locat circiter Idus Septembres. Angustiis temporis excluduntur omnes.

LVII. Quid ergo, Rabonius istam diem quomodo assequitur? Nemo Rabonio molestus est, neque Kalendis Decembribus, neque Nonis, neque Idibus. Denique aliquanto ante in provinciam iste proficiscitur quam opus effectum est. Posteaquam reus factus est, primo negabat se opus in acceptum referre posse. Quum instaret Rabonius, in me causam conferebat quod tum codicem obsignassem. Petit a me Rabonius, et amicos allegat. Facile impetrat. Iste quid ageret nesciebat. Si in acceptum non rettulisset, putabat se aliquid defensionis habiturum. Rabonium porro intelligebat rem totam esse patefacturum. Tametsi qui poterat esse apertius quam nunc est? Ut uno minus teste haberet, Rabonio opus in acceptum time allowed for doing the work. And we must supply, as Asconius does, that Rabonius was not afraid of those terms, because he was in collusion with Verres. Rabonius (c. 57) did not complete the work at the time fixed.

57. in acceptum, &c.] This expression signifies the approbation of him who had the duty of seeing that the contract was performed. The expression which is generally used to signify giving a man credit for a payment, is also used to signify that a contract of work is completed to the satisfaction of him who agreed to have it done (locator).—‘se opus.’ Orelli omits ‘se,’ which Zumpt supplies from one MS. (Lag. 29). If ‘se’ is properly omitted, the true reading may be ‘referri.’

tum codicem] Zumpt and Klotz have ‘eum codicem;’ and Zumpt supposes the ‘codex’ mentioned in c. 55 to be referred to, which contained the terms of the letting (in tabulas rettulisti).

apertius quam nunc est? Ut, &c.] which Orelli reads: ‘Tametsi, quid . . . apertius quam nunc est, ut uno minus teste haberet? Rabonio opus,’ &c. In place of ‘quid poterat’ Ernesti proposes ‘quid poterat,’ which Zumpt has, and the rest of his text is the same as that of Orelli, except that he puts the interrogation after Rabonio, as Klotz also does. Zumpt’s explanation of the passage, as Madvig observes, is not admissible. Madvig says (Opuscula, p. 325) “Testes dicit (Zumpt) esse et accusatoris et rei. At rei sunt testes qui ab eo pro sua causa producantur: qui igitur dici potest, nihilo apertiore fore fraudem, etiamsi reus uno minus teste ad se defendendum utatur? Nec Habonio teste Verres usus est, sed ejus silentium, ne a Cicerone produceretur, emit.” It is quite clear that the ordinary punctuation gives a sense different from what Cicero means to say. Madvig adds that he has cleared up the passage by a better punctuation in his Ep. ad Orell. p. 89; which I have never seen. Lambinus would read ‘haberem,’ ‘magis proprie enim et convenientius dicat accusator, se habere testes in reum, quam reus se habere testes in se.’ The ‘lemma’ of Asconius is ‘ut uno minus teste haberet,’ and his explanation is ‘ut de tot qui contra se sunt testibus unum Rabonium detraheret.’ The meaning then is that which Asconius gives, ‘in order that he might get rid of a single witness, he accepted the work from Rabonius,’ &c.; so that ‘ut uno’ begins a new sentence. But how is ‘haberet’ to be explained? The usages of this word are very numerous. We have ‘sic habet,’ ‘so it is.’ In c. 45 we have ‘uno signo ut sit minus quam ex lege oportet,’ which Zumpt compares with this passage; whether correctly or not I hardly know. Unless the passage means something like ‘ut uno minus teste se res haberet,’ if that could be said, I don’t know how it is to be explained; or unless it should be equivalent to such an expression as ‘ut uno minus teste ageretur.’

LVIII. Hic etiam priore actione Q. Hortensius pupillum Junium venisse praetextatum in vestrum conspectum et stetisse cum patruo testimonium dicente questus est; et me populariter agere atque invidiam commovere, quod puerum producerem, clamitavit. Quid erat, Hortensi, tandem in illo puero popolare? quid invidiosum? Gracchi, credo, aut Saturnini, aut alicujus hominis ejusmodi produxeram filium ut nomine ipso et memoria patris animos imperitae multitudinis concitarem. P. Junii erat hominis de plebe Romana filius, quem pater moriens cum tutoribus et propinquis, tum legibus, tum aequitati magistratum, tum judiciis vestris commendatum putavit. Hic istius scelerato nefarioque latrocinio bonis patriis fortunisque omnibus spoliatus venit in judicium, si nihil aliud, Hac conditione, &c.] This sentence is correctly explained by Graevius: no other contractor, if any other had offered himself, would have had such favourable terms as Rabonius had. It is true that Verres excluded all others by fixing the time so short; but, besides that, other persons were not willing to bid against Rabonius, and by taking the contract put themselves in the power of a man (Verres) who would have considered that his prey was taken out of his hands if any other than Rabonius were the contractor.

Nunc ne, &c.] Orelli reads: "Nam quid argumentamur . . . pervenerit? fecit ipse judicium." 'Nunc ne,' &c. is the reading of Lag. 29.

quod jam iste, &c.] 'And he could stand his importunity no longer.' 'Quod' refers to 'primum quum vehementius,' &c. Brutus had paid the money to Rabonius, yet Verres remitted 'centum decem millia,' which he could not have done if Rabonius had been a contractor altogether unconnected with him.

58. populariter agere, &c.] This means to act in a way calculated to gain popular power, to please the many, to seek their favour and good opinion. It is a form of 'ambitio,' in the sense in which Cicero sometimes uses that term. Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 3.

Gracchi, &c.] An allusion to the two 'tribuni plebis' and agitators, Tib. and C. Gracchus, whose lives Plutarch has written; and to another 'tribunus plebis,' L. Appuleius Saturninus, a turbulent fellow, who lost his life in a disturbance, B.C. 100. 'Credo' gives its usual ironical sense to the expression. "It was a son of a Gracchus, I suppose, or of a Saturninus, or of somebody of that kind, whom I brought forward."

commendatum] 'Commendandum:' Orelli. — 'Scelerata locatione,' Orelli; on no MS. authority, as Zumpt says, and against Lag. 29.

saltem ut eum cujus opera ipse multos annos est in sordibus paulo tamen obsoletius vestitum videret. Itaque tibi, Hortensi, non illius aetas sed causa, non vestitus sed fortuna, popularis videbatur: neque te tam commovebat, quod ille cum toga praetexta, quam quod sine bulla venerat. Vestitus enim neminem commovebat is quem illi mos et jus ingenuitatis dabat. Quod ornamentum pueritiae pater dederat, indicium atque insigne fortunae, hoc ab isto praedone ereptum esse graviter tum et acerbe homines ferebant. Neque erant illae lacrimae populares magis quam nostrae, quam tuae, Q. Hortensi, quam horum qui sententiam laturi sunt; ideo quod communis est causa, commune periculum, communi praesidio talis improbitas, tamquam aliquod incendium, restinguenda est. Habemus enim liberos parvos; incertum est quam longa cujusque nostrum vita futura sit; consulere vivi ac prospicere debemus ut illorum solitudo et pueritia quam firmissimo praesidio munita sit. Quis est enim qui tueri possit liberum nostrorum pueritiam contra improbitatem magistratuum? Mater, credo. Scilicet magno praesidio fuit Anniae pupillae mater, femina primaria: minus, illa deos hominesque implorante, iste infanti pupillae fortunas patrias ademit. Tutoresne defenderent? Perfacile vero apud istiusmodi praetorem a quo M. Marcelli tutoris in causa pupilli Junii et oratio et voluntas et auctoritas repudiata est.

LIX. Quaerimus etiam quid iste in ultima Phrygia, quid in obsoletius vestitum] Verres is supposed to be present in a mean dress, for it was the Roman fashion for an accused man to neglect his person, and to put on old worn attire, during the time that he was under prosecution. 'Obsoletus' means 'out of use' literally. Horace (Carm. ii. 10) 'obsoleti sordibus tecti.'—'esset in sordibus:' Klotz.

bullae] "The 'bullae' was a circular plate of metal (gold)," says Asconius, "suspended from the neck of children who were born free (ingenui). He adds, that 'infantes libertini' wore them of leather (scortea bullae). But the son of a 'libertinus' was 'ingenuus' if he was not born in servitude. See Smith's Dict. of Antiquities, Bulla, where there is a drawing of one in the British Museum. Cicero represents the child as reduced to such poverty as to be deprived of his 'bullae;' an oratorical exaggeration. Cicero or the boy's friends took care that he should appear without it.—'illae lacrimae:' Vat.; 'haec lacrimae,' the common reading.

ideo quod] 'Ideo' is 'id' and 'eo,' as we see by comparing the use of 'ideo' with that of 'idcirco' and with the use of 'id' by itself. This 'id' denotes nothing more than the general reference to a proposition, which is afterwards particularly enuntiated. The text may be translated: "now this (id), for that (eo quod) the cause is common, the danger common, such a piece of villany ('id' refers to 'improbitas') must be treated like a fire, and quenched by the united efforts of all." Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 4. c. 4, "idcirco nemo superiorum attigit ut hic tolleretur? ideo Claudius Pulcher rettulit ut C. Verres posset auferre?" And Terence, Eunuch, v. 7. 4, "nunc id prodeum ut conveniam Parmenonem:" where 'id' is explained 'propter id;' but 'ideo' is used exactly in the same way as in the passage just quoted. It is no objection to this explanation if it does not suit all the passages in which 'ideo' occurs; for words like this, which perform the office of conjunctions or adverbs, are used without strict regard to their original meaning.—'restinguendum sit:' Klotz, from Vat. Cod.

De quo judicio si velim dicere omnia, multi appellandi laedendique sint, id quod mihi non est necesse. Tantum manubias] The explanation of this word by Asconius, 'praeda imperatoris, pro portione de hostibus capta,' seems to agree well enough with this passage, for L. Metellus Dalmaticus or Delmaticus (Cos. B.C. 119) is said to have decorated the temple with his 'spolia' gained in the Dalmatic war. (See p. 134.) The explanation of 'manubiae' by Gellius (xiii. 24) is different.

59. bello praedonum] See Lib. 5.

Vertumni] It appears that Verres had made a contract for the repair of the street leading from the statue of Vertumnus to the Circus Maximus, and that with his usual dishonesty, according to Cicero, he examined and approved (exegit) the work though it was badly done. Of course it is implied that he sold his approbation for a sum of money. Klotz refers to Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 3, and Lib. 5. c. 72.

thensarum] 'Thensae' or 'tensae' are the sacred vehicles used in the solemn pomp or procession of the Ludi Circenses, to carry certain deities in. There is a passage in the speech of Cicero Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 34 (referred to by Klotz), which seems to show that Laterensis, one of the accusers of Cn. Plancius, had referred to this passage and those quoted in the preceding note, to ridicule Cicero, who defended Plancius.—'ferrent, viderent': 'ferent, videbunt,' Klotz.

60. Judicium publicum] Ferracci, quoted by Klotz, remarks that Verres, as 'praetor urbanus,' acted quite consistently in presiding at this trial, because it did not belong to any of the special cases (quaestiones) in which the other praetors were commissioned to preside. This is true; but Cicero is not finding fault with his presiding: he is blaming the motives for the prosecution.

intercessisset] One of the 'leges' of Sulla deprived the 'tribuni plebis' of the power of doing mischief, as Cicero expresses it (De Leg. iii. 9), but left them the power 'auxilii ferendi,' that is, the 'intercessio;' but under certain limitations, which Opimius by not observing had made himself liable to a penalty.—'Re vera' is not in any MS., and rests on the authority of Priscian only. But if there is no authority except Priscian, and he has 're vera,' why should Orelli follow Hotmann in taking 're,' part of Priscian's reading, and reject the rest?

laedendique sint,] Zumpt and Klotz have 'sunt.' But if the rule for the use of the subjunctive in hypothetical sentences as laid down in Key's Grammar (1213, &c.) is cordicam, paucos homines, ut levissime dicam, arrogantes, hoc adjutore, Q. Opimium per ludum et jocum fortunis omnibus evertisse. Is mihi etiam queritur quod a nobis ix solis diebus prima actio sui judicii transacta sit, quum apud ipsum tribus horis Q. Opimius, senator populi Romani, bona, fortunas, ornamenta omnia amiserit? Cujus propter indignitatem judicii saepissime est actum in senatu, ut genus hoc totum multarum atque ejusmodi judiciorum tolleretur. Jam vero in bonis Q. Opimii vendendis quas iste praedas, quam aperte, quam improbe fecerit, longum est dicere. Hoc dico: nisi vobis id hominum honestissimorum tabulis planum fecero, fingi a me hoc totum temporis causa putatote. Jam qui ex calamitate senatoris populi Romani, quum praetor judicio ejus praefuisset, spolia domum suam referre, et manubias detrahare conatus sit, is ullam ab sese calamitatem poterit deprecari?

LXI. Nam de subsortitione illa Juniana judicium nihil dico. Quid enim, contra tabulas quas tu protulisti audeam dicere? Difficile est: non enim me tua solum et judicium auctoritas, sed etiam rect, and it appears to be so, this is not a case in which an indicative can be used in the second clause. 'Sint' is Ernesti's correction, which is consistent with usage, for Cicero would only have to call on many, in case he should choose to tell all. The passage of Cicero Pro Flac. 5 (quoted by Zumpt), 'oratio mea potest,' &c., does not appear to be properly compared, for 'potest' expresses a possibility dependent on what is said in the other clause 'si mihi libeat'; nor is the other passage, which he cites, aptly compared (Tuscul. iv. 31): "si ridere concessum sit, vituperatur tamen cachinnatio;" where Cicero means to say that 'cachinnatio' is in all cases 'vituperanda.'

senator populi Romani,] Klotz observes that, by one of Sulla's laws, no person could be elected tribune before he was a senator; and he refers to Appian (Civil Wars, i. 100), whose statement is obscure, and to Suetonius (Augustus, c. 10, 40).

manubias] Zumpt and Klotz have 'manubias,' a reading which Orelli does not notice, though it is that of Asconius. Orelli has 'manibus.'—'Conatus sit' is the reading of Priscian, and of the 'lemma' of Asconius. All the MSS. are said to have 'conatus est.' Zumpt observes that Priscian not only writes 'sit,' but explains the use of the word, 'conjunctivum de re indubitabili ἐπιχειρήσεν ἄρα.' It is clear that the MSS. of Priscian had 'conatus sit.' Any person who has read these three orations with care, will not doubt that the true reading is 'sit.' It is much easier to feel the difference between 'est' and 'sit,' than to express it in a grammatical formula, which I do not believe to be practicable. It means: 'Now, a man who could attempt to do such an act as this, is not one who can ask for mercy for himself.'

61. subsortitione] This alludes to the trial of Oppianicus, mentioned before (p. 61). Asconius explains the text: "Verres, as praetor, had to superintend the appointment of the 'judices' at this trial, and, after the 'rejectio,' the appointment of those who had to supply the place of those who were rejected. Some of these 'judices,' and Junius himself, the 'judex quaestionis,' having been prosecuted for corruption in this affair, Verres helped the condemnation, by erasing from his register-books the names of those who were really appointed, and putting other names in their places, in order to give strength to the suspicion that Junius had himself put other 'judices' in the place of those who were appointed under the superintendence of Verres." Klotz refers to Cicero Pro Cluentio, c. 33. This false entry was formally sealed with the ring of the secretary of Verres, by way of giving it the appearance of authenticity. This 'scriba' was probably the person to whom Verres gave a golden ring in Sicily (Lib. 3. c. 80), as Zumpt suggests.—'Difficile est,' &c. All this is clearly ironical and sarcastic.

annulus aureus scribae tui deterret. Non dicam id quod probare difficile est : hoc dicam quod ostendam, multos ex te viros primarios audisse quum diceres, ignosci tibi oportere quod falsum codicem protuleris ; nam qua invidia C. Junius conflagrarit, ea nisi providisses tibi ipsi tum pereundum fuisse. Hoc modo iste sibi et saluti suae prospicere didicit, referendo in tabulas et privatas et publicas quod gestum non esset, tollendo quod esset, et semper aliquid demendo, mutando, interpolando. Eo enim usque progreditur ut ne defensionem quidem maleficiorum suorum sine aliis maleficiis reperire possit. Ejusmodi [sub]sortitionem homo amentissimus pereundum fuisse.] All the MSS., says Zumpt, have 'fuisset;' but 'fuisset' is unnecessary, if we read 'conflagrarit.' Klotz has 'conflagravit . . fuisset.'

demendo, mutando] Orelli inserts in brackets, after 'mutando,' the words 'curando ne litura appareat,' which is in the old texts. But this passage was read by Nonius Marcellus, quoted by Zumpt, as it stands in the text; and the words 'ne litura appareat' are wanting in Lag. 29.

Ejusmodi [sub]sortitionem] The text stands as it does in Klotz, who adds 'suae' after 'quaestionis,' which word 'suae' I have placed in brackets. He also omits the words ['erepta . . eorum']. Q. Curtius is evidently the 'judex' of some other 'quaestio,' and not of this, as Asconius supposes; but the word 'suae' does not for that reason seem necessary. The reading of Klotz is founded on the Vatican palimpsest, which has 'suae.' He translates the whole passage thus: "such a choice by lot the senseless fellow thought that he could accomplish through his comrade, Q. Curtius, the presiding judge of his (that is, his own) court of inquiry; since, if I had not opposed him with the power of the people, and the shouts and cries of the many, he would have taken by lot from the 'decuria,' in which I ought to have the utmost freedom (of choice), those whom Verres indicated to him, into his own 'consilium,' without any (sufficient) reason." The expression 'quos annuerat' is not conformable to the usage of 'annuo.' The passage is very difficult, and apparently corrupted. The reading of Klotz is not altogether satisfactory; but I can propose nothing better.

Zumpt reads, at the beginning of the sentence, 'Ejusmodi sortitionem.' The 'lemma' of Asconius has 'subsortitionem;' and he adds 'obscurus locus, sed, ut opinor, sensus hic est;' and he then proceeds to explain it. His explanation requires 'subsortitionem;'

and if we reject it, which we must do, there is no reason why we should not adopt 'ejusmodi sortitionem,' and refer it to the original choosing by lot, and not to the supplying by lot the places of those who were rejected. Zumpt retains the words 'erepta esset facultas eorum,' and they seem to be genuine, though Klotz thinks that they may be a gloss; but, if these words are retained, it is necessary to add something after 'eorum quos;' and Zumpt has added 'quum.'

This Curtius is probably the Q. Postumius Curtius mentioned in c. 39. He was a 'judex quaestionis,' but not in this case of Verres, for Glabrio presided. Being a 'judex quaestionis' in another case, he attempted to help Verres, by getting the 'judices' for the case before him, his own case, out of the 'decuria,' which was to supply the 'judices' for the trial of Verres; and getting them before the 'consilium' was formed for the trial of Verres. His object was to get the honest men away, and leave the rogues for the 'consilium' of Verres.

Madvig has explained this matter of the 'judex quaestionis,' and Zumpt has given a summary of his explanation. The expression 'judex quaestionis' is only used by Cicero, and in two other passages (Dig. 48. 8. 1; and Collatio Legum Mosaicarum et Romanarum, i. 3), both of which passages refer to the Lex Cornelia de Sicariis. The 'praetor' did not preside in those cases where there was a 'judex quaestionis.' Before the time of Sulla, several 'quaestiones' had been established (see the Excursus, De Repetundis), and, as Ferracci thinks, more than four. There were then six 'praetors,' one of whom was the Praetor Urbanus, and another the Praetor Peregrinus. If there were not 'praetors' enough for all the 'quaestiones,' the easiest way of supplying presidents, without making more 'magistratus,' was to appoint 'judices quaes-suorum quoque judicum fore putavit per sodalem suum, Q. Curtium, judicem quaestionis [suae]; cui ego nisi vi populi et hominum clamore atque convicio restitissem, ex hac decuria vestra, cujus mihi copiam quam largissimam factam oportebat, [erepta esset facultas eorum] quos iste annuerat, in suum consilium sine causa subsortiebatur.

tionum' to preside in particular cases. Sulla increased the number of 'praetors' to eight; but the 'quaestiones' also were increased in his time to the number of eight, or even nine, as some suppose. The number of 'praetors,' however, would still be insufficient for the 'urbana' and 'peregrina jurisdictio,' and for all the 'quaestiones.' For at this time two 'quaestiones' were not given to one person, nor were both the 'urbana' and 'peregrina jurisdictio' given to the same 'praetor.' Accordingly 'judices quaestionum' were appointed for certain 'quaestiones.' It does not appear how they were appointed, though it is probable that it was by the votes of the people. When

C. Julius Caesar or Augustus increased the number of the 'praetors,' the 'judices quaestionum' would not be wanted; and this seems to explain, as Madvig says, why we find no mention of them except within that period when they were required on account of the deficient number of 'praetors.'

decuria vestra,] 'Decuria nostra:.' Orelli.

The words 'desunt multa' are sometimes printed at the end of this oration. But the Cod. Vat. affirms that it is complete by the words 'in C. Verrem explicit feliciter;' and Lag. 29 has 'M. Tullii Ciceronis in C. Verrem liber tertius explicit.'

III. LEX VOCONIA.

THE Lex Voconia has been the subject of many dissertations, and of many contradictory opinions. The scanty notices of it in the Roman writers make the investigation difficult; but the difference of opinion has mainly arisen from the fact that many critics have been more disposed to make guesses than to accept and examine evidence. The substance of what follows is contained in Savigny's Essay on the Lex Voconia (Vermischte Schriften, i. 407, &c.)

Savigny contends that the Lex was prepared and carried by the Tribunus Plebis, Q. Voconius Saxa in B.C. 169, in the consulship of Q. Marcius Philippus and Cn. Servilius Caepio (Cic. De Sen. c. 5). The first and principal provision of the Lex was, that no woman should be instituted 'heres' by a testament, if the testator was registered in the census as having a property of 100,000 Sestertii (Cic. In Verr. Act. i. Lib. i. c. 42; Gaius, ii. 274). According to these passages, which are confirmed by Asconius (In Verr. lib. i. 41), and Augustinus (de Civitate Dei, iii. c. 21), no person could make a woman his 'heres,' either sole 'heres,' or 'heres' as to any part of his property. The prohibition, however, did not extend to all testators, but only to those whose property was of the value of 100,000 Sestertii, as we learn from Asconius, whose testimony agrees with that of Dion Cassius (56, c. 10), who fixes the amount at 25,000 Drachmae, by which he means, as usual, Denarii; and this sum is equivalent to 100,000 Sestertii. In the passage of Gaius, the amount of the property is expressed thus: "item mulier quae ab eo qui centum milia aeris census est per legem Voconiam heres institui non potest." In this passage 'aes' does not mean Asses, but Sestertii, as Savigny contends; and perhaps he is right. If Gaius means Asses, the amount of the property which was within the provision of the Lex would be 25,000 Sestertii, for at the time of the enactment of the Lex the Sestertius was equivalent to four of the reduced Asses. But the smallness of this sum, if we assume the reduced Asses to be meant, is an argument against the correctness of this interpretation; nor can we admit, as one critic at least has assumed, that the As. to which the Lex Voconia refers was the old As; for, though the time when the As was reduced to $\frac{1}{24}$ part is uncertain, we know that it was reduced to $\frac{1}{12}$ before the enactment of the Lex Voconia. The Lex would of course not refer to a denomination of money which was no longer in use, but it would refer to the standard of the time, and the amount would be expressed either in the reduced As, or in Sestertii; and the Leges of this period express amounts of money in Sestertii, not in Asses. That 'aes' was often used as a general term for money, and a legal term, is stated by Ulpian (Dig. 50. 16. 159: "etiam aureos nummos aes dicimus"). And the word 'aes' is perhaps used in this general sense in a passage in the 'De Re Publica' of Cicero (iii. 10). Further, according to the terms of the Lex, the prohibition only applied to a testator who was 'census' (Cic. In Verr. Act. i. Lib. i. c. 41—44), that is to one whose property was ascertained by the census to amount to 100,000 Sestertii. But this does not show what census is meant, whether the last census, or any census after the date of the Lex Voconia¹. If we interpret the Lex strictly, the prohibition did not apply to a testator who was not 'census,' whether this happened in consequence of his own neglect or because a census had not been held. It may appear somewhat singular that the legal efficacy of the prohibition should depend on an accident, or even that a man might render it inoperative by avoiding or neglecting to be 'census.' But the fact is so, according to our authorities, and we must either reject the evidence because we do not fully understand the meaning of this provision of the Lex, which is an uncritical mode of proceeding, or we must accept it, even though we do not understand it.

In the case of the daughter of P. Annius Asellus, Cicero contends that Annius could make his daughter 'heres,' because he was not 'census;' and he complains of the Edict of Verres (c. 41), because it said nothing of the census, and yet the prohibition of the Lex (c. 42), only applied to the case of a man being 'census.' Cicero also complains that the Edict of Verres applied to the case of testators, who died before the Edict was published, and consequently it had a retrospective effect. In both points Cicero's objections are well founded, though Hotmann, not always a safe authority, attempts to justify Verres.

in the text, endeavoured to complete it by stating the amount, and giving an explanation, which is a bad one. He did know, however, that the Lex mentioned 100,000 Sestertii, and, as he could not find this in the text of Cicero, he must have found it somewhere else. Savigny's explanation of the omission of the 100,000 Sestertii by Cicero is satisfactory. The orator's object was not to state minutely the provisions of the Lex. It was enough to show that the Edict of Verres was in opposition to its most important provision. Anniius was notoriously rich; every body knew that he was worth more than 100,000 Sestertii. But the amount of his property was immaterial in this case. He was not 'census,' and therefore the Lex could not apply to the property of such a testator.

The object of the legislator is supposed to have been, to prevent women being enriched by testamentary donations, and so to check the influence which is a consequence of wealth; or, in other terms, to prevent the evils which generally follow from great wealth being at the disposal of women. But this explanation, though it may contain some truth, is not sufficient. Cato the Censor spoke in favour of the Lex at the time when it was proposed to the people; and he was one of those who were for keeping women under proper restraint.

Another clause of the Lex referred to legacies (legata). It declared that no legatee (legatarius) should take more under a testament than the amount which should remain to the 'heres' or to the 'heredes' after he or they had paid the legacy; and this provision also applied only to a testator who was 'census' (Cic. In Verr. Act. i. Lib. 1. c. 43; Gaius, ii. 226). Gaius does not mention the provision as to legacies, and for a good reason; the subsequent Lex Falcidia had entirely repealed this part of the Lex Voconia. In speaking of this clause also of the Lex, Cicero does not mention the 100,000 Sestertii, but we may conclude, that he means a person who was 'census' at 100,000 Sestertii. From these passages it appears that this prohibition of the Lex was not limited to legacies to women; and yet the Lex contained something about legacies to women, as appears from Cicero (De Re Publica, iii. 10): 'de mulierum legatis et hereditatibus.' Indeed the Lex would have been a very imperfect thing, if it had only provided for the case of a female 'heres,' and not for the case of a female legatee. A passage in Quintilian (Declamat. No. 264), if we can rely on it, shows that the Lex did not allow a woman to take as legatee more than one-half of the testator's property.

The prohibitions of the Lex Voconia appear to be very singular, and indeed absurd, when we consider how easily they could be evaded. A man who was 'census,' and whose property was 100,000 Sestertii or upwards, could not make a woman his 'heres,' not even an only daughter; yet, if he died intestate, his daughters had a share in the succession equally with their brothers; and a single daughter, if the only child, would take all. Further, if the testator, who was 'census,' and whose property amounted to 100,000 Sestertii, made (instituit) a daughter 'heres,' the 'institutio' being invalid, made the testament invalid, and the consequence was, that the daughter would be 'heres ab intestato,' that is, she would take the property which it was the object of the Lex to prevent her from taking. Two solutions of this difficulty, or apparent contradiction, are proposed; one by Savigny, and one by Hugo; neither of which is perhaps satisfactory. That this contradiction did exist appears from the words of Philus (Cicero, De Re Publica, iii. 10): "cur—P. Crassi filia posset habere, si unica patri esset, aeris milliens, salva lege, mea triciens non posset." Savigny doubtless has given the right explanation of the words, when he says that they refer to a case of intestacy. The daughter of Crassus, if he had only one daughter, might by his dying intestate succeed to his immense property of one hundred millions of Sesterces; but Philus, who had a much smaller property, and several children, could not give his daughter more than the share that she would take by his intestacy; for he could give her nothing as testamentary 'heres.' The Vestal Virgins could make a testament; and the prohibitions of the Lex Voconia did not apply to them. (Cic. De Re Publica, iii. 10; Gell. i. 12.)

But the Lex was perhaps not so inconsequent as it appears at first sight. The Romans were fond of making testaments, as all people are. The case of intestacy, therefore, though not provided for by the Lex Voconia, would be comparatively rare. The Lex was a limitation of a man's testamentary power, and this would certainly be disliked. The legislator might be satisfied with limiting this power, without venturing to make any innovation on the rights of those who claimed 'ab intestato.' If a rich father, for instance, wished an only daughter to enjoy a larger portion of his property than the Lex allowed him to give by testament, he must be content to die intestate. If he did make a will, and was 'census,' he must observe the rules of the Lex. He could give his daughter a limited legacy, but not make her 'heres.'

The essay of Savigny was written in 1820; and he has added to it a few remarks written in 1849. Numerous writers have attempted to explain this Lex; and he mentions as one of the best, Hasse (Rhein. Mus. für Jurisprud. 3^{er} Jahrgang, 1829, pp. 182—214). The latest essay which I have seen is by Dr. J. J. Bachofen, Basel, 1843.

Zumpt contends that the Lex Voconia was enacted in the early part of B.C. 174, in the consulship of Sp. Postumius Albinus and Q. Mucius, in which same year were elected the censors A. Postumius and Q. Fulvius, who are mentioned in the Edict of Verres (Lib. 1. c. 41).

The operation of the Lex of Voconius would accordingly date from that census, and the Edict of Verres was so formed as to operate also from that census. Zumpt explains the passage in the De Re Publica thus:—“Crassus had two daughters, but Philus supposes the case of his having only one; and he says, that if he had only one, he could give her, in the way of legacy, even ‘milliens,’ provided he gave his ‘heres’ no less. And yet Philus could not give a daughter by his testament even ‘triciens,’ which was all that he had; that is, as we must suppose Zumpt to mean, he could not give her even ‘triciens’ as ‘heres.’”

In the article Voconia Lex, under Lex in Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities, there is an inconsistency, or an error, if any one chooses to call it so, in mentioning the date of the Lex Voconia, as fixed by Cicero at B.C. 169, and shortly after speaking of Postumius and Fulvius as the censors of that year; for they were the censors of the year B.C. 174. I did not believe that B.C. 169 was the date of the Lex, notwithstanding what Cicero says; and I understood the words of the Lex as quoted by Cicero (Lib. 1. c. 42) “qui post eos censores,” &c., to be explained by the words of the Edict of Verres, “Qui ab A. Postumio, Q. Fulvio censoribus” (c. 41). As the omission of this explanation, which ought to have been inserted, makes a difficulty, I take this opportunity of setting that matter straight. I agree with Zumpt, whose note I had not read then, that the date is B.C. 174. Zumpt has given his reasons for this opinion. In that article I have stated the difficulties of this Lex, without removing them, for I did not understand the matter. I had not then read Savigny's essay. Now, after carefully looking at the subject again, I think that the chief difficulties about this Lex still remain unexplained, and must remain so for want of better evidence than we possess.

IV. EDICTA MAGISTRATUUM.

THE development of Roman Law is the most remarkable phaenomenon in the history of civilization. It was the result of free institutions among a people who had a nice sense of justice, and a singular tact for administration; but the mode of its development is unlike any thing else that we know. Various institutions contributed to produce that immense body of law which has had so powerful an influence on the legal systems of all European nations, and forms so large a part of the rules of law under which we all live and exercise our activity. Among these institutions was the office of the Roman Magistratus.

The office of a Roman Magistratus was limited to a fixed period, after the expiration of which he was answerable for misconduct during his administration. There were several Magistratus who exercised the same office at the same time, and each of them could check any misconduct of those who were his colleagues. The administration was also distributed among several classes of Magistratus, each of which had their several independent functions; but, though not subordinate to one another, the Magistratus of the higher class had the power of preventing abuse of power by those of a lower class, or of rendering their acts null. All the Roman institutions were cast in a religious mould, and every Magistratus must discharge his duties in conformity to the will of the gods; the mode of ascertaining which was by the auspices (auspiciis). Thus it is implicitly declared by the Roman system that every Magistratus exercises his power as the minister of heaven: every man employed as a public functionary is an agent of a superior power in the moral government of the world. Magistratus only, consuls, and others, could observe the auspices, the observation of which was called Spectio (Cic. Phil. ii. 32); but, according to the old practice, the Magistratus must have an augur with him, whose function was to declare the auspices to be valid (nuntiatio), or to declare them invalid (obnuntiatio), the effect of which was to prevent something being done. "Nothing of a public nature," says Cicero (De Divin. i. 2), "either in peace or war, was done without auspices." Verres, who cared not for religion, did not regard the auspices: he rose from the bed of his mistress Chelidon, to assume his high office, instead of beginning the day with his religious duties¹." A Magistratus could take the auspices, either to ascertain the will of the gods, as to what he intended to do himself; or he could take them (de caelo servare) with reference to what other and inferior Magistratus were going to do, and he could prevent their acting by declaring the auspices unfavourable (obnuntiatio).

But every Magistratus had not this power against another Magistratus. The Auspicia were Maxima and Minora. Those who had the Maxima Auspicia were Magistratus Majores, and the rest were Minores. Consuls, Praetors, Censors, and the extraordinary Magistratus, Dictators, and Interreges, had the Maxima Auspicia, and could prevent the acts of all other Magistratus who had the Minora Auspicia. Among themselves the Magistratus Majores, who were 'collegae,' could hinder the acts of one another: a Consul could hinder the acts of another Consul; and a Censor of a Censor. But a Consul could not interfere with a Censor, nor a Censor with a Consul, for the Censors were not 'collegae' of the Consuls, nor of the Praetors (Gellius, xiii. 15, on the authority of the augur M. Messala); but the Praetors were 'collegae' of the Consuls. One Tribunus Plebis could declare (obnuntiare) against the act of another, for the Tribuni Plebis were 'collegae.' The Minores Magistratus were Aediles, Tribuni Plebis, Quaestores Aerarii, and some others.

The use of the Auspicia originated in a religious conviction; and it was retained for political reasons after the religious conviction had lost its force. In war, and in the administration of justice, the use of the Auspicia was, in course of time, less regarded; but it was continued for the Comitia. Yet the Auspicia still determined the nature of the power of a Magistratus; and the Imperium and Auspicium went together. The Imperium of a Magistratus was the power by virtue of which he gave effect to his will. Those who were Magistratus had both Imperium and Auspicium: he who had Imperium without Auspicium was only Pro-magistratu, as a Proconsul or a Proprætor, whose Imperium was prolonged² after the expiration of the office during which he had the Auspicium. The Magistratus Minores had the Minora Auspicia, but no Imperium. Whatever a Magistratus Major could do by virtue of his

Imperium, a Magistratus Minor could not do, because he had not the necessary authority. Each Magistratus, whether he had Imperium or not, had his own functions, which he swore to exercise within the limits of the law; but within these limits there was room for the exercise of his own judgment, which, in many cases, he was bound to follow, with such advice and assistance as he could have from those who were competent to give it. It did not often happen that one Magistratus was checked by another in the exercise of his functions, and least of all in the administration of justice. The praetorship of Verres was an exception to the ordinary practice. His illegal conduct was so scandalous and oppressive, that his colleague had often to interfere in order to correct his decisions (In Verr. Lib. 1. c. 46).

The function of a judge is to apply the law to the facts of the case which is brought before him; to give to the general rules of law a living reality by virtue of his particular application of them. The direct effect of the judgment is to decide a particular case; but the decision of a particular case involves the declaration of a rule or rules of law; and if the judge has rightly understood the rule, and applied it right, his decision is a record of what the law is, or is supposed to be: it is a precedent which may be followed in a like case. This is the 'auctoritas rerum judicatarum,' as the Romans called it; and such precedents are one of the means by which the law is made known and declared, particularly in doubtful cases; and, the more precedents there are in like cases, the greater is the certainty that the law is clearly understood and established. But it was not in this way that the Roman Magistratus exercised their influence on the development of law; for it was not the ordinary process for the Magistratus to hear and decide a case. The function of the Magistratus was to prepare the questions for the investigation and decision of a Judex: his was the 'officium jus dicentis;' that of the Judex was the 'officium judicis.' There were many cases in which the Praetor did decide or make decrees (decreta, or interdicta), and principally in matters of possession, or quasi-possession. He then acted (principaliter, Gaius, iv. 139, &c.), or in the first instance; but his authority in making decrees is not that part of his functions which we have to explain here.

In the earlier period of Roman law, the power of the Magistratus was limited by the forms of procedure. All complaints were made by Legis Actiones, the form of which was fixed by the law, and a complainant must make his demand according to the strict letter of it (Gaius, iv. 11), or at least within the limits which the interpretation of the Jurisprudentes had fixed. The Magistratus had, however, a certain discretionary power. He could determine on what days, besides 'dies fasti,' he would allow parties to apply to him; for besides the 'dies fasti,' which were appropriated to legal business, and the 'dies nefasti,' on which the courts did not sit, there were some days on which a Magistratus might sit or not, as he pleased. He could also say what persons he would allow to apply to him, or what persons he would allow to act as attorneys for others. This power was necessary in order to maintain the character of the court. We have an example in the Edict (Ulpian, Lib. vi. Ad Edictum, Dig. 3. tit. 1) of the class of persons who were not allowed to apply to him³. In cases where sureties were required, the Magistratus had to decide on their sufficiency; and in the case of 'vindicationes,' or actions in which the ownership of property was in question, he had to determine who should have possession provisionally, until the right of ownership was ascertained. He could also require the person whom he pronounced to be in possession to give security for the restoration of the thing, with the intermediate profits (praedes litis et vindiciarum), if it should be decided that the ownership belonged to the other party (Gaius, iv. 16). He had then to determine who must be plaintiff and who must be defendant, for he who claims a thing of which another is in possession must prove that he has a better title than the possessor. A Praetor, however, would not give the possession arbitrarily; he would declare that the person actually in possession must be considered as the possessor, if he had not obtained the possession illegally against the other party, as, for instance, by force; and he would further declare that he would protect him in possession, against all violence, until the right was decided. If a person in possession claimed this protection against the attempt of another to disturb his possession, the Magistratus could compel the disturber to make a Sponsio, as it was termed; that is, to acknowledge that he was bound to pay a sum of money if he was guilty of an attempt to disturb the possession. This being done, the possessor could sue upon the Sponsio, and, he would declare that the defendant who had entered into the obligation of the Sponsio was indebted to him in the sum of money named in it, inasmuch as the fact of disturbance had taken place. A Judex was then named by the Praetor, whose duty it was to investigate the facts, and, if he found that the disturbance had taken place, he condemned the defendant. (See Excursus V., Sponsiones.) In this way the Magistratus established a new kind of right—the right of possession. The origin of the right of possession originated in the opinion that possession, when not acquired illegally against the claimant of the ownership, must be regarded as a right, and as a right opposed to the still undetermined right of ownership, which might be either in the possessor or the claimant. Out of this notion of the right of possession grew the

'interdicta retinendae possessionis;' and, again, out of these grew the 'interdicta recuperandae possessionis.' The determination of the fact of possession determined who should sustain the part of plaintiff, and who should sustain the part of defendant; and in the mean time security was taken, as already observed, that the person out of possession should not be a loser, if his right was ultimately acknowledged. This is a simple and natural explanation of the origin of the Roman right of possession⁴. Cicero argues quite consistently with this, when he finds fault with Verres (Act. ii. Lib. 1. 45): "ergo quia possessor est, non moves possessione: si possessor esset, non dares." For a man was not to be maintained in the possession simply because he was in possession, for he might have got the possession against his adversary by illegal means; nor ought the Praetor to refuse him the possession, simply because he had it not, for he might be entitled to have it.

The Lex Aebutia, which is of uncertain date, introduced a new mode of procedure, according to which the claims of a party were drawn up by the Praetor in a written formula, the terms of which were independent of the words of any Lex. The Praetor being thus freed from the ancient forms was enabled to grant actions, which could not be founded on the Jus Civile or the strict law (Gaius, iv. 11), and in this way a class of Actiones called Honorariae, from the honor or office of the Praetor, was introduced. To allow a right of action in cases where no such right has existed, is the same thing as to acknowledge a new right; for a right of action implies the existence of a previous right, or the existence of a wrong or legal injury. It is not to be supposed that a Praetor arbitrarily allowed new rights of action. He was merely the organ to declare what already existed in the common understanding of the people,—the consciousness of a want and the necessity of a remedy.

The Praetor in many cases, while he framed his formula with reference to some old-established rule of law, gave it a wider application. He could direct the Judex to decide in a given case as if certain facts existed which did not exist,—a mode of proceeding which might lead to great abuse in unskilful hands, but might be made useful and just when the purpose of the Magistratus was honest and the law was defective. For the Roman Law must not be viewed as modern systems of law may be, which are the results of the experience of past ages. The Romans had to create what they wanted, and all that we have here to consider is the way in which they satisfied their wants. Circumstances might and did occur, for instance, in which a man was not owner of a thing according to the Jus Civile or strict Roman law, but he was owner so far as concerned the justice of his claim. He might have done all that was necessary to acquire the ownership of a thing, except the observance of some form which the Jus Civile required; and the Praetor might direct the Judex, if he found the facts of the case to be such as stated in the formula, to consider him as owner and decide accordingly, just as if the person had acquired the thing in such a way as would have made him owner by the *Jus Civile*⁵. This mode of treating a given case, as if it were in all respects conformable to another case, to which certain rules of law are applicable, is what the Romans call Fictio. Some modern writers who have made themselves merry over legal fictions, have been more merry than wise. A legal Fiction may be a bad figment or a good one. When it is a good one, it accomplishes its object: it satisfies a want and a necessity. He who by virtue of his office is able to become the interpreter of the common understanding of the people, takes from the people, whose activity is the real generator of law, a material to which his skill gives the proper form and his office the due authority. He legislates in a sense, and is generally a better legislator than a large body of men called a Legislature. How long a Fiction should be allowed to subsist after it has indicated a social want, and shown how it is to be supplied, is a different question. The direct mode of supplying such a want is by legislation, by the act of a sovereign person, or of a number of persons possessed of sovereign power, or who have power delegated to them for that purpose: this is properly called Legislation, the establishment of new rules of law by Statutes, or by Leges, as the Romans called them.

The Lex Aebutia also gave the Praetor the power of assisting a defendant by means of the formula. The simplest defence is a denial of a plaintiff's claim, who must then prove it. But the claim of the plaintiff in itself may be undeniable, and yet there may be some fact that is sufficient to nullify it. The Praetor in his formula could instruct the Judex to decide in favour of the defendant, not only if the claim of the plaintiff could not be established, but also if the fact or facts, which the defendant alleged as a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's demand, should be established by him. This fact, or these facts, which are an answer to a demand, which otherwise would be a valid demand, are an Exceptio, an answer or plea: and this Exceptio protected the defendant against a demand which was valid by the Jus Civile, whenever the Praetor thought fit to give the Exceptio this effect. Here also the Praetor did not act arbitrarily. He would only allow an Exceptio when common opinion had already pronounced in some way that it ought to be allowed, or when the case was such that common opinion could not fail to acquiesce in the rule which had its first distinct expression through the organ of the Praetor. This mode of proceeding, this growth of law out of popular opinion, is neither uncertain nor capricious in those matters which relate to the usual transactions of life. A people will often be bad judges of the logical consequences which flow from an established rule of law; but their sense of justice is clear enough to show them when a new rule of law is wanted, and what it should be. It is the business of one who is expert in Law to give to the rule such a form that it shall be fitted to accomplish its purpose.

Though it is uncertain when the Lex Aebutia was enacted, which led to so great a change, the procedure which originated in consequence of this Lex is much older than Cicero's time, and probably existed a century at least before he was born.

The mode in which a Magistratus made known any new rule that he established, was not by a declaration in a particular case; a mode of proceeding which, however disguised under the form of a declaration of existing law, is an arbitrary mode of proceeding, when it is not really a declaration of law, either in the way of a true deduction from a legal principle or a just interpretation of a Statute (lex), or the recognition of a custom. When a new rule of law is declared in a particular case, which rule has no foundation except in the decision of the court in that case, it is a mode of legislation, the cost of which is borne by one or other of the parties to the suit. It is a mode of legislation imperfect and unjust, because it establishes a rule of law for the first time, and applies it to facts which existed before the rule. Such a mode of making rules of law by precedents has given to the office of judge a character which is quite inconsistent with it.

This was not the mode among the Romans, who had a means of giving publicity to general rules before they were applied. It was an old practice for all the Magistratus to make their will known to the people by official communications, Edicta, which were in writing, and put up in public. The Consuls published Edicta for calling together the assemblies of the people, enrolling troops, and summoning the Senate. The Censors did the same for giving notice of a census and other matters which belonged to their office; and other Magistratus in their several offices did the same. An Edictum might refer either to a single case, as, for instance, an Edictum for the mustering of the army; or it might contain a general rule, according to which the Magistratus declared that he would act in certain cases⁶. Edicta of a general nature were published by those Magistratus who had Jurisdictio: they contained the general rules by which they would be guided during their administration. They were written out on a tablet of a white ground, (album), and put up in a public place, in such a position that any body could read them (unde de plano recte legi possent). The earliest Edictum that relates to the administration of justice is that of Cn. Flavius, Aedilis Curulis, in which he published the Dies Fasti. The Edictiones Aediliciae, which related to sales in the open market, are mentioned by Plautus (Captiv. iv. 2. 43)⁷. Cicero mentions the Edict of the Praetors as long in use before his time (In Verr. Act. i. 44); and in another passage (De Invent. ii. 22), where he is describing the nature of custom or usage (consuetudo), he says that custom comprehends many rules of law (jura) which are now certain or fixed by reason of their antiquity. And he adds: "of this kind there are many other rules of law; and by much the largest part of those which the Praetors are accustomed to publish in their edict (edicere)." Cicero here distinctly declares that the Praetor declared by his Edict that which he found established by usage: he gave to usage the form and character of real law. The Praetor Urbanus and Peregrinus published Edicta, which were called Urbana, by way of distinction from the Edicta published by Provincial governors, which were called Provincialia.

It became then the practice at Rome for those who had the Jus Edicendi (Gaius, i. 2, 6), and particularly the Praetors, not merely to publish Edicta during their year of office, as the occasion might arise, but also to publish Edicta upon entering on their office. These Edicta contained general rules, in accordance with which the Praetor declared that he would administer justice during the year. These Edicta were called Perpetua, because they had an enduring force, like the office of him who published them. This word Perpetuum has been the subject of some difference of opinion. It means continuous, uninterrupted; and it may refer both to the continuity of the office of Praetor, and also to the continuity of the Edictum during the year of a Praetor's office; for it seems that we can speak of the Perpetuum Edictum of any particular Praetor. It is at least certain that the term Perpetuum had no reference to the permanence of the rules contained in the Edict, for these rules were only valid during the office of him who declared them (In Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 1. 42, 'legem annuam'): they might be adopted or rejected by his successor. If a Praetor made an Edictum for a temporary occasion, it is generally stated that such an Edictum was called example of an Edict, the first part of which refers to a particular case, and the latter part of which is general.

⁷ We have in the Digest a long title on the Aedilicium Edictum, Lib. 21. Tit. 1.

Repentinum, and a passage of Cicero (In Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 3. 14) is quoted to prove this; but the passage certainly does not justify the conclusion. It does not appear that Edictum Repentinum occurs as a genuine Roman expression, at least not as a technical expression.

It was the general practice for a Praetor to adopt in his Perpetuum Edictum the rules which had been established by his predecessor. He could not well do otherwise; for a rule when declared in the Edictum was not an arbitrary or capricious rule, as we have seen; it was only an authoritative mode of giving a legal character to something already observed as a rule among the people, or of establishing some rule, the necessity of which was generally felt. A Praetor then could not, consistently with the honest discharge of his office, reject any good rule which was established by his predecessor; but, as he was not bound by his predecessor's practice, he was at liberty to reject that of which he did not approve. If a Praetor had any disposition to declare rules in his Edict which were unjust, he was checked by regard to opinion, and by his responsibility after the expiration of his year of office. It was a ground of complaint against Verres that he made new rules in matters that were already settled by his predecessors, and to which he ought to have made his Edictum conformable (In Verr. Lib. 1. c. 40—47). The general practice of making the new Edictum conformable to what was already established, gave to the Edictum a certain degree of fixedness. Such edictal rules as a Praetor adopted from the Edictum of his predecessor were called Edictum translaticium (In Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 45). By the addition of a new rule, as circumstances called for them, the Edictum was continually enlarged; and old rules that were found to be useless or injurious were dropped. And all this was done before the eyes of a people ever watchful over the conduct of their Magistratus, who were men chosen out of their own body, to which they returned after the expiration of their annual office; and with the advice and assistance of persons learned in the Law (jurisprudentes).

Some Praetors, however, while they escaped the censure of framing a rule for particular occasions, with which Cicero charges Verres, did almost as much mischief in another way. Instead of abiding by their Edictum Perpetuum, they made additions to it from time to time during their year of office, or altered it. But this practice was checked, B.C. 67, by a Cornelia Lex, which required Magistratus to administer justice during their year of office conformably to their Edictum Perpetuum, or the Edict published on entering on their office⁸.

The Edicta of the Magistratus in course of time formed a considerable body of Law, on which we have the comments of the Jurists in the

'excerpta' in Justinian's Digest. That body of Edictal Law which was framed by the Praetors was called Praetorium Jus; and that which was formed by the Edict of the Curule Aediles, Aedilicium Jus. The term Jus Honorarium comprehends both, as the term Honorarium expresses the honor of the Magistratus; though it is generally used as equivalent to Praetorium Jus. This Honorarium Jus is a part of the Jus Civile Romanorum, or the peculiar law of Rome, for it was formed by Roman Magistratus; it was generally applicable only to Roman institutions and Roman usages, and perhaps originally contained only pure rules of Roman law. But Honorarium Jus may also be viewed as opposed to Jus Civile⁹ (the two forming the two great divisions of the whole matter of Roman law), when we look at the Honorarium Jus with reference to its origin in the office of the Magistratus. The Leges and Plebiscita were direct sources of law. "The Praetor on the contrary did not declare in his Edictum what should henceforth be law, to do which he had no authority; but he declared what he would consider and treat as law, so that he merely gave notice of what he should do during his year of office. Accordingly those rules of law which were truly rules of law, were said to exist 'ipso jure,' while the Praetor's rules were said to exist 'jurisdictione, tuitione Praetoris'" (Savigny, System des Heutigen Römischen Rechts, i. 117). The Romans formed a clear distinction between the rights which a man had by the strict Jus Civile, to which rights, when they were disputed or infringed, it was the Praetor's duty to give effect; and the rights which he derived simply from the Praetor's Edictum: and this distinction is often expressed in the clearest terms. The Praetor by virtue of his office had the power of giving effect as fully to the rights which were founded on his Edictum, as to the rights which were founded on the strict Jus Civile.

Those who are accustomed to look only to the direct sources of law, to statutes (leges), and who found their narrow notion of law on the definition of a Lex, may have some difficulty in comprehending the Roman system. But we know that a very large part of the Roman law, that which is of most extensive application, was founded on the Edictum, and developed by the Roman jurists. The system in brief was this. There was no continuous and ever active direct legislation among the Romans as to that part of the law which comprehended Privatum Jus. The changes which were from time to time wanted, were made through the organ of an office which was accessible to most of the citizens, and filled by a different person every year. This person, who had no legislative power, had however a power, by virtue of his office, of engaging in the conflict between new opinions and new wants, and old rules of law and old habits, and of establishing by way of experiment, during his year of office, such new rules as he and his advisers considered to be suited to the time. The Praetor's rules were thus tried and tested during his year of office without being put in the rigid form of a statute (lex): whatever was found to be good, was accepted by his successor; and thus in course of time the rules of the Edictum obtained the sanction of usage, and were respected just as much as if they were a statute (lex). Being promulgated in writing, they belong to the division of Written Law.

Papinianus describes the character of the Jus Praetorium in these words (Dig. i. 1. 7. § 1): "Jus praetorium est quod praetores introduxerunt adjuvandi vel supplendi vel corrigendi juris gratia propter utilitatem publicam." Instances of the several cases here mentioned are easily found; but one of the most striking is the case in which the Praetor gave the Bonorum Possessio of an 'hereditas' to those who were not entitled by the Jus Civile. After laying down the rules of the Twelve Tables as to the 'intestatorum hereditates,' or the succession to the property of intestates, Gaius adds (iv. 25): "sed hae juris iniquitates edicto Praetoris emendatae sunt," and he proceeds to state in what cases the Praetor gave the Bonorum Possessio to those who were not 'heredes ipso jure,' but who by the Edict of the Praetor 'loco heredum constituuntur.' Thus the claims of persons to the property of intestates were extended to persons who had no claim according to the narrow rules of the old law; and this extension was not effected by a Lex, by the people in their legislative capacity; but it was effected by the popular will, through its organ, the Praetor, and not in the way of direct legislation, but by gradual steps, and in an experimental way.

It has been shown in what manner, through the organ of the Praetor, the Jus Praetorium was established. The peculiarity of the Jus Praetorium does not however consist in its form only: it is characterized by other matter also. This character has been shown, to a certain extent, but its character will be seen more clearly by a short statement of the nature of the Jus Gentium, as conceived by the Romans.

Every nation has something peculiar by which it is distinguished from other nations; and it has something in common with all. This is also the case with its law, which, from originally having a strongly marked individual character, assumes one which is more general and more comprehensive. This change is in a great degree effected by the intercourse amongst different people. The peculiar form which this more general and comprehensive law assumed among the Romans, is the Jus Gentium.

In the early history of Rome treaties were made between the Romans and other people, by which, among other things, were regulated the modes in which Romans and Peregrini, who had dealings with one another, must settle their mutual claims in case of dispute. A foreigner at Rome, or a Roman in a foreign country, must of necessity apply to the courts of the country in which he was at the time. The persons at Rome who settled disputes between a Roman and a Peregrinus were called Recuperatores; and at Rome we must assume that they would be Romans. They had not to apply the rules of Roman law to the cases that came before them, for a Peregrinus could have none of the rights of a Roman citizen, and none of the claims founded on those rights, the possession of which was one of the exclusive characteristics of a citizen of Rome. The functions of the Recuperatores were limited to the decision of such cases as arose out of the dealings between Romans and Peregrini, to which the strict rules of Roman law were not applicable. They must, therefore, decide the cases that came before them according to the general notions of equity, which all men have, or in accordance with such usages as they found established and recognized by Peregrini, or Romans and Peregrini, in their mutual dealings; and though Roman notions of law would generally direct the Recuperatores in their judgments, the notions and usages of foreigners also would exercise some influence on them. A set of rules applicable to the dealings between Romans and Peregrini would thus be formed and confirmed by the frequent application of them. As Romans began to visit other countries more frequently, for the purposes of commerce and dealings (mercatores, negotiatores), and Peregrini flocked in greater numbers to Rome, the relations between them would become more numerous and more complicated. This circumstance led to the appointment (B.C. 247) of a Praetor Peregrinus at Rome 'qui inter peregrinos et cives jus diceret,' for the Praetor Urbanus had already sufficient to do; though there are instances, after the appointment of a Praetor Peregrinus, of both functions being exercised by one Praetor (Liv. xxv. 3; xxxvii. 50). Many of these Peregrini were Socii, who stood in some degree of subjection to Rome, and many of them were Provinciales. All these people, though not Roman citizens, were not in the condition of those nations with which Rome had no relations at all¹. They stood in such a relation to Rome that it was necessary to provide for the administration of justice among them at Rome, between them and Romans. The persons who were appointed by the Praetor to hear and decide on such cases as these may have been generally Recuperatores; but a simple Judex was also sometimes appointed both at Rome and in the provinces.

Under these circumstances and by these means was formed a body of Roman law applicable both to Peregrini and to Romans. This law is the Roman Jus Gentium in its original sense ; a law that arose from a practical necessity, and was adapted to cases of dealings between Peregrini and Romans. As the term implies, this law was not limited in its application to a single Gens, but it was a law of a general character, applicable to many Gentes, and a law which grew up within the Roman territory. It was a law formed for those who, not being Cives Romani, could not be made subjects of the Jus Civile, which was 'proprium Romanorum'². This practical notion being established, it was an easy step to view the Jus Gentium as a general law applicable to the Romans and to all people. The Romans, having emerged from the strict and narrow system of their Jus Civile, saw that there was something more general and comprehensive ; that besides a 'civilis ratio,' as they termed it, a Roman law founded on Roman notions, there was a 'naturalis ratio ;' there was something that was common to all law and to all peoples ; and so the Jus Gentium, which was developed without interfering with the Jus Civile, was extended from its original narrow limits to express the idea of law in its more general sense and more extended application. The Jus Gentium did not rise out of any speculative notions ; it had a purely practical origin ; and when we look at the definitions given of it by the Roman jurists, we must remember that they had attained to this generalizing notion by actually contemplating what had been produced in a practical way³.

The Jus Gentium received its efficient form from the Edicta of the Magistratus. It became law for Peregrini by the Edictum of the Praetor Peregrinus and by the Provincial Edicta ; and law for the Romans by the Edicta of the Praetor Urbanus.

Many rules of law were both Juris Gentium and Juris Civilis. Most of the contracts of daily life, such as buying and selling, letting and hiring, delivery and corresponding possession as a mode of acquiring ownership, were common to the Romans and other nations. But the Romans had many positive institutions which were peculiar to them ; marriage, which could only be contracted between Roman citizens ; the Patria Potestas, and Agnatio ; many of the modes of acquiring ownership (Mancipatio, Usucapio) ; certain peculiar forms of contract ; and all that related to testaments and to succession to intestates. But even these positive institutions contain some general principle, and they appear in other systems of law under another form ; for it must be observed that a great part of the peculiar law of all countries is peculiar only in form, not in substance. The Romans, in their intercourse with Peregrini, were led to recognize that which, in substance, but not in form, agreed with Roman institutions. Thus they recognized a marriage as valid by the Jus Gentium, though it was not a Roman marriage, and could not have the effects of a Roman marriage. They recognized an ownership 'in bonis,' as co-existing with the Roman ownership 'ex jure Quiritium.' They recognized forms of contracts which Peregrini used, and gave to them a legal effect. One of the most striking instances of this recognition of general principles is in the case of ownership 'in bonis.' A Roman might have sold a thing to another, and delivered to him the possession of it; but, if the forms of the Jus Civile had not been observed, the seller was still owner by the Jus Civile, and could recover the thing by action. But the Praetor considered the purchaser as owner: he allowed him a defence (exceptio) against the seller, and even an action for the recovery of the thing against any person who was in possession of it. He treated him as owner, because he was owner according to the universal principles of law, and he gave the purchaser all the advantages of ownership so far as his office could give them.

It is clear, from what has been said, that the Jus Gentium became a body of positive law among the Romans. But it must not be viewed as identical with Jus Honorarium; for the Edicta of the Praetor Urbanus contained many rules of strict Roman law. Nor must we view Jus Civile and Jus Gentium as opposed to one another, and Jus Civile again as subdivided into Jus Civile and Jus Honorarium. For the Provincialia Edicta contained both much of the Jus Gentium and much particular law; and the Edictum of the Praetor Peregrinus also. The Jus Honorarium, or the Edicta of the Praetors, were the organ by which the Roman Law received its more general principles; and the chief part of these general principles are founded on the Jus Gentium. The opposition of Jus Civile and Jus Honorarium is strictly an opposition of form; but to this form we must add the material opposition, which consisted in this, that the matter of the Edicta was derived from another principle than the Jus Civile: it was derived from the 'naturalis aequitas,' the characteristic of the Jus Gentium.

The nature of the Roman mode of establishing law by the office of the Praetor is briefly this: every year new Magistratus were appointed, and it was their duty to ascertain what was defective in the law, and to supply it by the Edictum. The Magistratus were not lawyers, but they had the advice and assistance of men who were learned in the law (jurisconsulti, jurisprudentes). Thus there was annually a kind of revision made of all that had been effected by the Edicta. What was found good was retained in the new Edictum; and what was wanting was added⁴. We may assume that law had become a study, and received some kind of systematic development, before the Perpetuum Edictum could have much effect; for the lawyers must have assisted in drawing it up, and putting it in its technical form. This mode of making law for all that concerned the ordinary affairs of life, was well suited to a state which originated in a city with a small territory; and it could be continued without inconvenience, for Rome was still the centre of administration, and the rules of law which were established at Rome were introduced by the governors into the provinces, so far as they were applicable; and though many countries and many cities retained their particular laws under the Roman empire, the tendency of their administration was to extend the rules of Roman law to other countries; not the rules of the strict Jus Civile, for many of these were only applicable to Roman citizens, but that more comprehensive law which grew up at Rome under the name of Jus Honorarium.

The length of these remarks have their explanation in this, that it seemed necessary to show what the Edictum was; which cannot be done in few words. What is said here will be useful to those who read these orations, and generally to those who read other parts of Cicero. This is that peculiar part of Roman law which the Roman jurists chiefly laboured on; but to explain how they did this is entirely beyond the present purpose. I have made no comparisons between the growth of the Roman and of the English law, as is sometimes done, and done very inaccurately. A student who wishes to see how the English law has grown may read some of the chapters of Mr. Spence's "Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery," Vol. i., and particularly chap. ix., "Actions on the Case."

These remarks are founded on Puchta's Cursus der Institutionen, Vol. i. pp. 313—362, and I have adopted, with very slight modifications, all that he has said on the Edicta Magistratum. I have also used Savigny, System des Heutigen Römischen Rechts, Vol. i.

⁴ This implies that the drawing up of an Edictum by a Magistratus, before he entered on his office, was a work of some time and labour; and he must have had the assistance of persons learned in the law. And so it was. Cicero says of himself and his Edictum in his government of Cilicia: "Romae composui edictum: nihil addidi nisi quod publicani me rogarunt, quum Samum ad me venissent, ut de tuo edicto totidem verbis transferrem in meum. Diligentissime scriptum caput est quod pertinet ad minuendos sumptus civitatum" (Ad Div. iii. 8).

V. SPONSIONES.

STIPULATIONES are a Roman form of contract, made by formal words (verbis obligatio fit). The form is by oral question and answer. He who asks the question is said 'stipulari,' and he who replies to the question is said 'promittere.' 'Stipulatio' and 'promissio' are accordingly correlatives. If the person who thus becomes bound does not perform his promise, the 'stipulatio' gives to the 'stipulator' a right of action. These are 'stipulationes conventionales,' which are founded solely on the agreement of the parties.

There are also 'stipulationes judiciales,' which a Judex could in some cases impose on a defendant; and 'stipulationes praetoriae' (Dig. 45. 1. 5; and Dig. 46. 5, De Stipulationibus Praetoriis), which are of various kinds. One kind was used for processual purposes, and this is the kind which will be explained here. These 'stipulationes' were called 'Sponsiones,' because the 'stipulator' used the word 'spondes?', to which the other party replied, 'spondeo.' This form of 'obligatio' was called Sponsio, and could only take place between Roman citizens (Gaius, iii. 92, &c.).

This Sponsio was employed by the Praetor as the foundation of a process. The matter in dispute was made the object of the Stipulatio. The right of the plaintiff is the condition of the promise of the defendant, who binds himself to something, on the condition that the claim of the plaintiff is just. The following is an instance from Cicero (Ad Div. vi. 21): "quum ei dicerem tibi videri sponsionem illam nos sine periculo facere posse, Si bonorum Turpiliae possessionem Q. Caepio Praetor ex Edicto suo mihi dedit." There is another example in the oration Pro P. Quintio, c. 27. The plaintiff could sue on this Sponsio by a Condictio. He declared that the 'conditio' of the Sponsio existed, that is, that he had a right against the defendant. In form then it became an action upon the 'obligatio' of the defendant arising out of the Sponsio; in fact, the foundation of the action was the right of the plaintiff. The action was in form very like the 'actio sacramento,' one of the old 'legis actiones' (Gaius, iv. 11—31). If the object of the Sponsio was merely to give a particular form to the process, it was called 'Sponsio praejudicialis;' and the defendant, if judgment was given against him, did not pay the amount of the Sponsio. The Sponsio was a pure form; and, as Gaius says (iv. 94), 'propter hoc solum fit ut per eam de re judicetur.' In this case the plaintiff only makes the 'stipulatio.' But the object of the Sponsio might be also to mulct the defendant; and in that case the defendant has a 'restipulatio' against the plaintiff, that is, he can say to him 'spondes?' and require the answer 'spondeo.' This would be a 'sponsio poenalis.'

The 'in rem actio,' as the Romans termed it, was when a man claimed the ownership of a corporeal thing, or when he claimed some right with respect to a corporeal thing, as a 'usus fructus,' or a right of road over a piece of land (Gaius, iv. 3). The claim could be made by the 'formula petitoria,' of which we have an example in Cicero (In Verr. Lib. 2. c. 12); and in this case the defendant had to give 'satisfactio judicatum solvi' (In Verr. Lib. 1. c. 45; Gaius, iv. 91). Or the claim could be made by the Sponsio, in which case the plaintiff called upon the defendant in such terms as follow: 'si homo quo de agitur ex jure Quiritium meus est, sestertios cxxv nummos dare spondes?' With reference to this 'stipulatio,' the Formula contained the following 'intentio,' that is, the demand of the plaintiff, converted into a conditional form: 'si paret N. N. A. A. ss. cxxv nummos dare oportere,' and the defendant gave security, in case the plaintiff's right was established, for the restoration of the property and the intermediate profits; that is, there was a 'stipulatio pro praede litis et vindictiarum.' The object of the security in both cases was to give the plaintiff, if his claim was established, and the thing was not given up to him, or the value of it, a right of action against the defendant or his Sponsores founded on the 'satisfactio'. When a man claimed a thing by the Sponsio, he did not claim it directly, as the Formula shows, but he claimed a certain sum of money as due, the amount mentioned in the Sponsio, if the thing was proved to be his. Thus the 'in rem actio' was in form converted into an 'actio in personam,' that is, an 'actio' founded on contract (Gaius, iv. 2).

Part of this has been said before (p. 126, &c.); but the matter will perhaps be better understood after this explanation. Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 57) says "L. Rubrius Q. Apronium sponsione lacesivit, ni Apronius dictitaret te sibi in decumis esse socium." Here 'sponsione lacesere' is said of him who was the plaintiff. The expression 'sponsionem facere' (Lib. 1. c. 45) is said generally of the Sponsio, and is not applied to the act of him who says 'spondeo:' "Sponsio facta est cum cognitore tuo Apronio de fortunis tuis omnibus, ni socium te sibi in decumis sese dictitaret." The expression 'facere sponsionem,' when applied to one of the parties, is said of him 'qui sponsione lacesit,' as the following passage shows (Lib. 3. c. 59): "Cum eodem Apronio postea P. Scandilius, eques Romanus, quem vos omnes nostis, eandem sponsionem de societate fecit quam Rubrius facere voluerat—facta est sponsio HS v millium." The plaintiff, when he accepted the Sponsio, was said 'sponsionem acceptam facere' (Lib. 3. c. 60) ¹.

The expression 'lege ageret' (Lib. 1. c. 45) is thus explained by Savigny (System, &c., v. p. 30, &c.) Gaius (iv. 95) states that in his time there were two modes of proceeding by the Formulae, the Formula Petitoria, and the Sponsio; and there was also the proceeding before the Centumviri: "Ceterum si apud Centumviros agitur, summam sponsionis non per formulam petimus, sed per legis actionem; sacramento enim reum provocamus." In the passage in Lib. i. c. 45, we must suppose that Cicero by 'lege ageret' means a proceeding before the Centumviri, which mode of proceeding, and that by the Sponsio, he considered to be the only two forms applicable to a disputed succession. In Cicero's time there were only two modes of suing in a matter that concerned a succession (hereditas)—'lege' or before the Centumviri; and by the Sponsio. In other actions, where ownership was in dispute, the proceeding was by the Formula Petitoria, of which Cicero (Lib. 2. c. 12) gives the form, which form agrees precisely with that in Gaius. It may be observed that the history and constitution of the court of Centumviri are a very obscure subject. It certainly had cognizance of claims to disputed successions, was an old court, and was in existence even as late as the time of Gaius. It is frequently mentioned in the letters of the Younger Pliny. (See the Article CENTUMVIRI, Dict of Antiqs.) What is said in the note, p. 126, as to the Petitio Petitoria, is not applicable to the case of an 'hereditas,' but to other matters of disputed ownership; and we must understand the whole passage thus: "the claimant would either proceed 'lege,' that is, before the court of Centumviri, to establish his title to the 'hereditas;' or he would proceed by the Sponsio." The application of the Formula Petitoria appears in Lib. 2. c. 12. Zumpt, in his note on the passage 'lege ageret' (Lib. 1. c. 45), simply refers to the passage of Gaius (iv. 91): 'In rem actio duplex est; aut enim per formulam petitoriam agitur aut per sponsionem,' &c. But Savigny's explanation is the true one. 'Lege agere' here seems to refer to a 'legis actio;' for it appears that all the 'legis actiones' were not abolished by the Lex Aebutia. Yet (Lib. 2. c. 16) Cicero says: 'Quis unquam isto praetore, Chelidone invita, lege agere potuit?' where 'lege agere' is certainly not limited to a 'legis actio;' nor is it in Divin. c. 5.

With respect to the 'beati possidentes' (p. 127) of Zumpt, we may compare the vulgar expression, that possession is nine-tenths of the law. There are, in fact, legal essays with the title 'beati possidentes,' or 'de commodis possessionis.' The practical advantage of having the possession of a thing is indeed well known. In the case of the disputed ownership of property, he who is in possession has this advantage, that his opponent must prove a title to the property in order to turn him out; and the possessor gains his cause, that is, he remains undisturbed in possession, if no title can be made out by any other person. This is, however, no special beatitude of a possessor, for every person who makes any claim against another must prove it; and generally, every defendant in any proceeding, civil or criminal, has the beatitude of not being required to prove any thing.

There were two institutions of Roman Law, Usucapio and Interdicta, which presupposed the existence of possession, and rendered it necessary to determine the legal notion of possession. No other right, except these, was derived from possession. He who was in possession of a thing under certain conditions had the capacity of acquiring the ownership of the thing in a given time by Usucapio, or uninterrupted enjoyment. And he who was not in possession might have a right to the possession, or, if he was in possession, and his possession was disturbed, a right to protection. To both these cases the Interdicta applied. A man might be in possession, and yet unable to prove his title to the ownership. If he was ejected by another person, and the ejector was then considered to be in possession (in the legal sense), the party who was ejected would have no remedy; for by the supposition he could show no title to the ownership. All 'possessio,' whatever was its origin, was protected, except when the 'possessio' had been obtained against a former possessor 'vi,' 'clam,' or 'precario,' as the Romans expressed it; but these three excepted cases rendered it necessary in many instances to determine which of two claimants must be considered to be in possession, and to be entitled to the protection of the Interdicta. "In a dispute about ownership, the part which the two parties have to act depends on possession: the present possessor has the advantage of being the defendant, and his opponent has the 'onus petitoris.' If both parties make claim to the possession, this matter must be settled first. According to the oldest law there was no particular process for this purpose, and the Praetor decided according to his judgment; but subsequently he gave the Interdictum retinendae possessionis, in consequence of which, the question, Who is possessor? was decided in a separate trial: this, according to Ulpian, was the first occasion for the introduction of these interdicts" (Puchta, Inst. ii. § 225).

The acknowledgment of a right of possession in the Roman Law led the Roman jurists to the determination of the nature of that possession, which was the foundation of the right. This subject has been explained by Savigny, 'Das Recht des Besitzes,' which, besides explaining what is peculiarly Roman, contains the fundamental principles of the acquisition and loss of possession; an exact acquaintance with which would materially assist a legal student in analysing the confused terminology and the vague language employed on this subject by our judges in their judgments and by our law-writers in their treatises.

IN C. VERREREM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

DE JUDICIIS, S. DE PRAETURA SICILIENSI.

I. Multa mihi necessario, judices, praetermittenda sunt, ut possim aliquo modo aliquando de iis rebus quae meae fidei commissae sunt dicere. Recepi enim causam Siciliae; ea me ad hoc negotium provincia attraxit. Ego tamen hoc onere suscepto, et recepta causa Siciliensi, amplexus animo sum aliquanto amplius. Suscepi enim causam totius ordinis; suscepi causam rei publicae; quod putabam tum denique recte judicari posse si non modo reus improbus adduceretur, sed etiam diligens et firmus accusator ad iudicium veniret. Quo mihi maturius ad Siciliae causam veniendum est, relictis ceteris ejus furtis ac flagitiis, ut et viribus quam integerrimis agere et ad dicendum temporis satis habere possim. Atque adeo, antequam de incommodis Siciliae dicam, pauca mihi videntur esse de provinciae dignitate, vetustate, utilitate dicenda. Nam quum omnium sociorum provinciarumque rationem diligenter habere debetis, tum praecipue Siciliae, judices, plurimis justissimisque de causis: primum, quod omnium nationum exterarum, princeps Sicilia se ad amicitiam fidemque populi Romani applicavit. Prima rei publicae;) From Vat. MS. Zumpt has 'populi Romani.' The abbreviations 'p. r.' and 'r. p.' are often confounded.

The title of this oration is variously given by the old grammarians, and in the MSS. The title is immaterial. Cicero himself speaks of it thus (Orator. c. 62): "ut nos in Accusationis secundo de Siciliae laude diximus."

1. aliquo modo aliquando] Cicero now comes to the real matter of the prosecution, the conduct of Verres in Sicily. Comp. Lib. 1. c. 24, "quo facilius ad Siciliam possum aliquando . . . pervenire."—"his rebus:" Klotz.

Siciliae dicam,] Klotz has 'dico,' from the Vat. MS. Zumpt observes: "antequam rarissime apud Ciceronem, ne dicam unquam, ubi de instantibus rebus dicitur, cum indicativo praesentis conjungitur."

applicavit.] One might suppose that the subjection of Sicily to Rome was altogether voluntary, if Cicero's words were taken literally; but it was a conquered omnium, id quod ornamentum imperii est, provincia est appellata: prima docuit majores nostros quam praeclarum esset exteris gentibus imperare: sola fuit ea fide benevolentiaque erga populum Romanum ut civitates ejus insulae, quae semel in amicitiam nostram venissent, nunquam postea deficerent, pleraeque autem et maxime illustres in amicitia perpetuo manerent. Itaque majoribus nostris in Africam ex hac provincia gradus imperii factus est. Neque enim tam facile opes Karthagini tantae concidissent, nisi illud et rei frumentariae subsidium et receptaculum classibus nostris pateret.

II. Quare P. Africanus, Karthagine deleta, Siculorum urbes signis monumentisque pulcherrimis exornavit, ut, quos victoria populi Romani maxime laetari arbitrabatur, apud eos monumenta victoriae plurima collocaret. Denique ille ipse M. Marcellus, cujus in Sicilia virtutem hostes, misericordiam victi, fidem ceteri Siculi perspexerunt, non solum sociis in eo bello consuluit, verum etiam superatis hostibus temperavit. Urbem pulcherrimam, Syracusas, quae quum manu munitissima esset, tum loci natura terra ac mari claudebatur, quum vi consilioque cepisset, non solum incolumem passus est esse, sed ita reliquit ornatam ut esset idem monumentum victoriae, mansuetudinis, continentiae, quum homines viderent et quid expugnasset et quibus pepercisset et quae reliquisset. Tantum ille honorem habendum Siciliae putavit ut ne hostium quidem urbem ex sociorum insula tollendam arbitraretur. Itaque ad omnes res Sicilia provincia semper usi sumus, ut, quidquid ex sese posset island. Sicily was the first 'provincia,' that is, the first Roman possession beyond the limits of Italy. Messina first came over to the Romans (Polyb. i. 8, &c.); and Sicily became a province B.C. 241.

The word 'provincia' was doubtless used by the Romans before the conquest of Sicily, but not in the same sense. 'Provincia' is a shortened form of 'providentia,' as Hugo suggested; and we have in some MSS. the form 'provintia.' The term properly designates the particular functions of a magistrate. Thus the Praetor Urbanus at Rome was said to have the 'urbana provincia:' "sortem nactus est urbanae provinciae." Lib. i. c. 40.

Zumpt maintains that the form 'applicavit,' not 'applicuit,' is that which is used in the MSS. of Cicero, except in one instance (Ep. Ad Div. iii. 11). Orelli has 'applicuit.' The word has a technical use, and was said of one who came to Rome 'in exsilium,' and attached himself (se appli-cavit) to a 'quasi patronus.' (Cicero, De Or. i. 39.)

2. P. Africanus,] As to P. Africanus, comp. Lib. 4. c. 33.

M. Claudius Marcellus was the conqueror of Sicily (Liv. xxiv. 30; xxv. 23, &c.). His integrity probably could not be called in question, but the Sicilians complained of the severity with which he treated them (Liv. xxvi. 30), and it appears that they had reason to complain. Cicero's 'misericordia' is to be taken 'oratorie,' as the old grammarians would say. The position of Syracuse is described by Cicero, Lib. 4. c. 52, &c. claudebatur,] Zumpt and Klotz have 'clauderetur.' There is nothing unusual in 'quum' with a subjunctive preceding 'tum' with an indicative. Zumpt says: "Conjunctivo intelligimus causam contineri, cur urbem Marcellus vi capere post diuturnam oppugnationem necesse habuerit."

efferre, id non apud eos nasci sed domi nostrae conditum putaremus. Quando illa frumentum quod deberet non ad diem dedit? quando id quod opus esse putaret non ultro pollicita est? quando id quod imperaretur recusavit? Itaque ille M. Cato Sapiens cellam penariam rei publicae nostrae, nutricem plebis Romanae, Siciliam nominabat. Nos vero experti sumus Italico maximo difficillimoque bello Siciliam nobis non pro penaria cella, sed pro aerario illo majorum vetere ac referto fuisse: nam sine ullo sumptu nostro coriis, tunicis, frumentoque suppeditando, maximos exercitus nostros vestivit, aluit, armavit.

III. Quid illa, quae forsitan ne sentiamus quidem, iudices, quanta sunt! quod multis locupletioribus civibus utimur, quod habent propinquam, fidelem, fructuosamque provinciam, quo facile excurrant, ubi libenter negotium gerant; quos illa partim mercibus suppeditandis cum quaestu compendioque dimittit, partim retinet ut arare, ultro pollicita est?] 'Pollicita est' alone would be enough. See the note on the Divin. c. 1 'Ultro,' 'thitherwards,' strengthens the expression. 'Ultro' means towards some point from the subject of the discourse, which point or direction is indicated by the context; consequently it sometimes means 'further,' 'in addition;' and it may be translated here 'did she not even proffer?'

cellam penariam] 'Cella' has the form of a diminutive, like 'sella,' and it may be one. It means a store-place. There was the 'cella penaria' for the 'penus,' or year's stock of useful things; the 'cella olearia,' 'vinaria,' and so forth (De Sen. c. 16). The word 'penus' had a fixed meaning, for the 'penus' was sometimes the matter of a legacy, and therefore the term required to be fixed. There is a title in the Digest (33. tit. 9), 'De Penu Legata,' in which (s. 3) the various opinions of the Roman lawyers on the meaning of a legacy of 'penus' are given. The term comprehends more than things for eating and drinking. See also Gellius, iv. c. 1. Strabo (p. 273. ed. Cas.) says of Sicily: καὶ δὴ καὶ καλοῦσιν αὐτὴν ταμείον τῆς Πρώμης. Compare also Livy, xxvi. 32.

We see what is meant by Sicily being a 'cella penaria' for Rome. The Romans furnished themselves well at the expense of the cultivators of this fertile island, who gave because they could not help giving. In the Italic or Social War (B.C. 90), we are told that it furnished supplies to the Roman army free of cost,—a circumstance which must have greatly assisted Rome in that terrible struggle for the supremacy in Italy. See Polybius (vi. 39) on the mode of supplying the Roman armies.

In place of 'coriis,' Servius (Ad Aen. i. 5), who quotes the passage, reads 'copiis;' at least so it is in the text of Masvicius. But 'coriis' is the right reading. Prepared skins were used for tents, shields, and other military purposes.—The common reading is 'frumentoque suppeditato,' which Orelli and Klotz have.

aerario] See the note on 'fiscos,' p. 58. The Roman 'aerarium' was an artificial person. Livy (xxvi. 32) speaks of Syracuse as 'horreum atque aerarium Populi Romani.' Cicero says with more exactness 'pro aerario.' There were three 'aeraria,' or rather three names for the same thing, the names having reference to particular appropriations. The ordinary 'aerarium' received the ordinary taxes, and supplied the ordinary expenditure. The 'aerarium sanctius' was supplied from the 'vicesima,' and was called 'sanctius,' because it was only resorted to in the greatest need (Liv. xxvii. 10). The third, or Gallicum, was appropriated for a Gallic war, in case there should be one. The Romans had always before their eyes the dangers of a Gallic invasion. For more than two thousand years Rome has never been safe against the Gaul. P. Manutius (Commentary on Cicero, Ad Att. vii. 15) makes this division into three 'aeraria;' others make only two.

ut pascere, ut negotiari libeat, ut denique sedes ac domicilium collocare. Quod commodum non mediocre rei publicae est, tantum civium Romanorum numerum, tam prope ab domo, tam bonis fructuosisque rebus detineri. Et quoniam quasi quaedam praedia populi Romani sunt vectigalia nostra atque provinciae, quemadmodum vos propinquis vestris praediis maxime delectamini, sic populo Romano jucunda suburbanitas est hujusce provinciae. Jam vero hominum ipsorum, judices, ea patientia, virtus, frugalitasque est ut proxime ad nostram disciplinam illam veterem, non hanc quae nunc increbuit, videantur accedere. Nihil ceterorum simile Graecorum: nulla desidia, nulla luxuries; contra summus labor in publicis privatisque rebus, summa parsimonia, summa diligentia. Sic porro nostros homines diligunt ut his solis neque publicanus neque negotiator odio sit. Magistratum autem nostrorum injurias ita multorum tulerunt ut nunquam ante hoc tempus ad aram legum

3. domicilium] 'Domicilium' is a man's usual place of residence. The first part of the word is 'domi'; the second part, if the orthography is correct, contains the same root as 'concilium.' If 'consilium' contains the root 'sed,' 'to sit,' which is probable, we might conjecture that 'domicilium' might be the correct form, which would correspond to 'exsilium.' The term occurs in the Lex Plautia, B.C. 89 (Cic. Pro Archia, c. 4), in the sense of a man's fixed residence. It was important for many purposes to determine where a man's 'domicilium' was; for instance, if a man was bound to pay a sum of money in Italy, and his 'domicilium' was in a province, he might be sued either in Italy or in the 'provincia' (Dig. 5. 1. 19. § 4). In the Digest (50. 1. 27. § 1) there is a definition of 'domicilium.' In modern law 'domicile' is a title of law of some extent and importance, and some of the principles of this title of law are founded on the Roman rules.

increbuit,] It appears from a note of Zumpt (Divin. c. 4), that the authority of the MSS. is rather in favour of 'increbresco.' He observes that a comparison with 'erub-esco' does not help us in this matter, for the root is 'rub,' as in 'rubere.' His argument is, that 'erub-esco' is derived from the verb 'rubere'; but that in the verbs in 'esco,' from the adjectives 'aeger,' 'miser,' 'piger,' 'scaber,' 'taeter,' the letter 'r' is preserved, though it is true that there are not two 'r's' in these verbs, as 'pigresco,' &c. He adds, however, that the double 'r' is not so intolerable, for we have 'cribrum' and 'cribrare.'

The notion of some of these verbs in 'esco' being formed from adjectives, and others, as 'erubesco,' from a verb 'rubere,' is a false etymological view. There might be 'rubr-esco' as well as 'rub-esco,' but the reason why there is not is obvious enough. 'Rub' begins with an 'r,' and 'rubresco' would be as disagreeable to the ear as 'increbresco.' If the Romans did not say 'rubresco,' for the same reason they did not say 'increbresco.' 'Cribrum' is nothing to the purpose, for if the second 'r' was left out we should have an adjective of a neuter form, 'cri-bum,' which would be no word at all. 'Cribrare' may be allowed to Zumpt to support his argument, but he might have added that the diminutive of 'cribrum' is 'cribellum,' not 'cribrellum.' It may be added, that in 'creb-er' the root lies in the part which I have separated from the termination, and the word may be allowed, as Professor Key suggests, to be only another form of 'celeb-er.' Nothing therefore of the root is lost by writing 'in-creb-uit.'

'Hanc . . accedere.' The common reading is 'ad hanc,' &c., but there seems to be no authority for the preposition, and it certainly is not necessary.

aram legum] Hotmann refers to the passage in Aristotle, Rhet. iii. 11: ταὐτὸν εἶναι διατητὴν καὶ βωμὸν, ἐπ' ἄμφω γὰρ τὸ ἀδικούμενον φεύγειν.

praesidiumque vestrum publico consilio confugerint: tametsi et illum annum pertulerant qui sic eos afflixerat ut salvi esse non possent, nisi C. Marcellus quasi aliquo fato venisset, ut bis ex eadem familia salus Siciliae constitueretur; et postea M. Antonii infinitum illud imperium senserant. Sic a majoribus suis acceperant, tanta populi Romani in Siculos esse beneficia ut etiam injurias nostrorum hominum perferendas putarent. In neminem civitates ante hunc testimonium publice dixerunt. Hunc denique ipsum pertulissent, si humano modo, si usitato more, si denique uno aliquo in genere peccasset. Sed quum perferre non possent luxuriam, crudelitatem, avaritiam, superbiam; quum omnia sua commoda, jura, beneficia senatus populi Romani, unius scelere ac libidine perdidissent; hoc statuerunt, aut istius injurias per vos ulcisci ac persequi, aut, si vobis indigni essent visi quibus opem auxiliumque ferretis, urbes ac sedes suas relinquere, quandoquidem agros jam ante istius injuriis exagitati reliquissent.

IV. Hoc consilio a L. Metello legationes universae petiverunt ut quamprimum isti succederet: hoc animo toties apud patronos de suis miseriis deplorarunt; hoc commoti dolore postulata consulibus, illum annum] The allusion, as Asconius remarks, is to M. Aemilius Lepidus, who was praetor of Sicily B.C. 80, and consul B.C. 78. He was the father of the Lepidus who was one of the triumviri with Octavianus Caesar and M. Antonius. He was threatened with a prosecution for his mal-administration in Sicily by the two brothers, Metellus Celer and Nepos, but they gave up the prosecution. Lepidus was succeeded in his Sicilian praetorship by C. Marcellus, a descendant, a great-grandson, of the conqueror of Syracuse. He was now one of the 'judices' on the trial of Verres (Divin. c. 4). Cicero, in these orations, often speaks of his honourable administration of the province.

M. Antonii] This is M. Antonius Creticus, the son of the orator Antonius, and the father of M. Antonius, the colleague of Lepidus and Octavianus Caesar in the triumvirate. (See p. 100, note.) In B.C. 74 he received a commission, with very extensive powers, to carry on the war against the pirates, and he abused his powers. The critics have made a difficulty about the words 'infinitum illud imperium,' for his 'imperium' was limited, as was that which Cn. Pompeius afterwards received by the Manilia Lex, when he was commissioned to clear the Mediterranean of pirates. But Cicero evidently means that his powers were very great, and no more. Ferracci thinks that his 'imperium' was called 'infinitum' because it was not limited by the boundaries of any one province. But there is nothing in this remark. His 'provincia' was the war with the pirates.

relinquere,] Klotz has 'relinquerent: he has put a colon after 'persequi.'

4. L. Metello] L. Caecilius Metellus succeeded Verres as praetor of Sicily B.C. 70, and Cicero commends his administration. Yet he and his brothers, Q. Metellus Creticus and M. Metellus, attempted to save Verres in this prosecution (Act. i. c. 8, 9, 10).—'Succedere' is to come into the place of another, as one governor is the 'successor' of another. The retiring governor was said 'decedere,' or 'decedere de provincia' (Divin. 1); and he was called 'decessor' (Tacit. Agric. 7).

postulata] 'Postulare was a forensic term in use in civil actions, but applied also to demands of a public nature. 'Postulare' is defined by Ulpian (Dig. 3. 1. 1): "postulare autem est desiderium suum vel amici sui in jure apud eum qui jurisdictioni praeest exponere, vel alterius desiderio contradicere." The term was also applied to the demands or claims of the Roman provinces before the Roman senate (Pro Balbo, c. 15).

quae non postulata sed in istum crimina viderentur esse, ediderunt. Fecerunt etiam ut me, cujus fidem continentiamque cognoverant, prope de vitae meae statu dolore ac lacrimis suis deducerent, ut ego istum accusarem, a quo mea longissime ratio voluntasque abhorrebat: quamquam in hac causa multo plures partes mihi defensionis quam accusationis suscepisse videor: postremo homines ex tota provincia nobilissimi primique publice privatimque venerunt, gravissima atque amplissima quaeque civitas vehementissime suas injurias persecuta est.

At quemadmodum, iudices, venerunt? Videor enim mihi jam liberius apud vos pro Siculis loqui debere quam forsitan ipsi velint: saluti enim potius eorum consulam quam voluntati. Ecquem existimatis unquam ulla in provincia reum absentem contra inquisitionem accusatoris tantis opibus, tanta cupiditate esse defensum? Quaestores utriusque provinciae, qui isto praetore fuerant, cum fascibus mihi praesto fuerunt. His porro qui successerunt vehementer istius cupidi, liberaliter ex istius cibariis tractati, non minus acres contra me fuerunt. Videte quid potuerit qui quatuor in una provincia quaestores studiosissimos defensores propugnatoresque habuerit, praetorem vero cohortemque totam sic studiosam, ut facile appareret non tam illis Siciliam, quam inanem offenderant, quam Verrem ipsum qui plenus decesserat provinciam fuisse. Minari Siculis si decressent legationem quae contra istum diceret: minari si qui essent profecti: aliis si laudarent benignissime pro-

quemadmodum . . . venerunt?] 'Venerint' is the reading of Asconius, and Klotz has adopted it. Orelli and Zumpt have 'venerunt.' There are in Cicero instances of 'quemadmodum' being used in the form of direct interrogative, as in Lib. 2. c. 42: 'At quemadmodum corrupisti?' There is not the slightest reason for adopting 'venerint.'—'Ecquem existimatis:' most of the MSS. have 'et quem;' but in such cases 'et' and 'ec' are often confounded (Zumpt).

Quaestores utriusque provinciae,] He means the quaestors of the two divisions of Sicily, the quaestor of the division of Syracuse, and the quaestor of the division of Lilybaeum. Two of the former quaestors of Verres are represented by Cicero as appearing before him when he went to Sicily to collect evidence; for 'praesto esse' may imply either for the purpose of hindrance, as in the Pro Caecina, c. 30, quoted by Klotz, or for any other purpose, as in c. 27.

Gellius (xiii. 12), quoting Varro, says "ut quaestores et ceteri qui neque lictorem habent neque viatorem." This remark applies to the two Urbani Quaestores. Towards the close of the republican period, the quaestors in the provinces had a higher station; they had an Imperium, and of course 'lictors;' yet their Imperium was delegated authority from the Praetor. They had also the 'jurisdictio' of the Curule Aediles (Gaius, i. § 6). Garatoni thinks that Cicero purposely used an ambiguous expression, for he was fond of a joke; "the quaestors were ready to meet me with their fasces;" and a like use of 'praesto' in Q. Curtius (viii. 13) is referred to.

cibariis] The money paid out of the treasury to magistratus on going to their provinces was called 'cibaria.' At the beginning of this sentence Zumpt and Orelli have 'Hi porro;' but 'His porro,' which Klotz has from Lag. 29 and 42, and other MSS., appears to be the true reading.

V. Quae quum omnia facta sint, tamen unam solam scitote esse civitatem Mamertinam quae publice legatos qui istum laudarent miserit. Ejus autem legationis principem, civitatis nobilissimum, C. Heium, juratum dicere audistis isti navem onerariam maximam Messanae esse publice coactis operis aedificatam: idemque Mamertinorum legatus, istius laudator, non solum istum bona sua verum etiam sacra deosque penates a majoribus traditos ex aedibus suis eripuisse dixit. Praeclara laudatio, quum duabus in rebus legatorum una opera consumitur, in laudando atque in repetendo. Atque ea ipsa civitas qua ratione isti amica sit dicetur certo loco. Reperietis enim quae causae benevolentiae sint Mamertinis erga istum, eas ipsas causas satis justas esse damnationis. Alia civitas nulla, judices, publico consilio laudat. Vis illa summi imperii tantum potuit apud perpaucos homines, non civitates, ut aut levissimi quidam ex miserrimis desertissimisque oppidis invenirentur qui injussu populi ac senatus proficiscerentur, aut ii qui contra istum legati decreti erant et testimonium publicum mandataque acceperant vi ac metu retinerentur. Quod ego in paucis tamen usu venisse non moleste tuli, quo reliquae tot et tantae et tam graves civitates, tota denique Sicilia plus auctoritatis apud vos haberet, quum videretis nulla vi retineri, nullo periculo prohiberi potuisse quo minus experirentur ecquid apud vos querimoniae valerent antiquissimorum fidelissimorumque sociorum. Nam, quod fortasse non nemo vestrum audierit, istum a Syracusanis publice laudari, id tametsi priore actione ex Heraclii Syracusani testimonio cujusmodi esset cogno-

5. C. Heium,] There is said to be a 'gemma,' or stone, on which the name HEIOY is cut; and some would take this as evidence that the name on a cameo was sometimes that of the owner, which is very probable. But the Heius of this gemma may have been an artist. See the note in Creuzer and Moser's edition of this oration, Göttingen, 1847.—'noblissimum civem:' Klotz.

coactis operis] 'Operae' has here the sense of 'operarii,' or 'workman.' The passage means that the ship was built by an impressment of workmen by order of the city. The workmen would be the slaves of individuals, such as were employed in ship-building. Comp. Lib. I. c. 56: "paucae operae fabrorum."

repetendo.] Cicero ridicules the 'laudatio' of the Mamertini, for, while they came to do honour to Verres, they charged him with an offence which made him liable to be prosecuted for 'repetundae.' They came to bring their public laudations, and at the same time the members of the deputation severally bore testimony to the misdeeds of Verres.—'atque repetendo:' Klotz.

injussu populi ac senatus] Cicero uses a form of expression applicable to the Roman constitution; but it was also applicable to these Sicilian cities, which, according to Greek fashion, had a senate (βουλή) and a popular body (δῆμος). The words 'Vis illa,' &c., refer to Metellus, the Sicilian praetor, and his brothers at Rome, one of whom was Praetor Urbanus, and the other Consul, with Hortensius.

vistis, tamen vobis alio loco ut se tota res habeat quod ad eam civitatem attinet demonstrabitur. Intelligetis enim nullis hominibus quemquam tanto odio quanto istum Syracusanis et esse et fuisse.

VI. At enim istum Siculi soli persequuntur; cives Romani qui in Sicilia negotiantur defendunt, diligunt, salvum esse cupiunt. Primum, si ita esset, tamen vos in hac quaestione, de pecuniis repetundis, quae sociorum causa constituta est, lege iudicioque sociali sociorum querimonias audire oporteret. Sed intelligere potuistis priore actione cives Romanos honestissimos ex Sicilia plurimos maximis de rebus, et quas ipsi accepissent injurias et quas scirent aliis esse factas, pro testimonio dicere. Ego hoc quod intelligo, iudices, sic confirmo. Videor mihi gratum fecisse Siculis quod eorum injurias meo labore, inimiciis, periculo sim persecutus: non minus hoc gratum me nostris civibus intelligo fecisse, qui hoc existimant, juris, libertatis, rerum fortunarumque suarum salutem in istius damnatione consistere. Quapropter de istius praetura Siciliensi non recuso quin ita me audiat ut, si cuiquam generi hominum sive Siculorum sive nostrorum civium, si cuiquam ordini sive aratorum sive pecuariorum sive mercatorum probatus sit, si non horum omnium communis hostis praedoque fuerit, si cuiquam denique ulla in re unquam temperaverit, ut vos quoque ei temperetis.

Qui simul atque ei sorte provincia Sicilia obvenit, statim Romae et ad urbem antequam proficisceretur quaerere ipse secum et agitare cum suis coepit, quibusnam rebus in ea provincia maximam uno anno pecuniam facere posset. Nolebat in agendo discere, tametsi non provinciae rudis erat et tiro, sed in Siciliam paratus ad aratorum] Cicero here enumerates the different classes of persons in Sicily; the 'aratores,' or cultivators, and the 'pecuarii,' or those who pastured their cattle on the public lands, for which they paid a sum of money called 'scriptura.' He then adds the 'mercatores,' or those who went about with their goods, and trafficked with the natives (Caesar, De Bell. Gall. iv. 3). But his enumeration is incomplete if the 'negotiatores' are omitted, the Romans who were money-lenders, bankers, and merchants on a large scale. Garatoni accordingly makes a very probable conjecture that the words 'sive negotiatorum' have been omitted by the copyists. Compare c. 77.

The repetition of the 'ut' in 'ut vos quoque ei temperetis,' after many words interposed, is common. Zumpt cites several examples. In Lib. 2. c. 37: "Sthenius postulat ut . . ut," &c. In Lib. 4. c. 23: "ei negotium dedit ut . . ut," &c. There is an example from one of Cicero's later writings, Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 13: "sed te illud admoneo ut . . ut," &c.

sorte] The Praetors determined by lot what provinces they should have after they had discharged their year of office at Rome, as we see from the Ep. Ad Attic. (i. 13), and other passages. As to 'ad urbem,' see Act. i. c. 15.

Nolebat in agendo, &c.] The whole passage stands thus in Klotz: "Nolebat in agendo discere, tametsi non provinciae rudis erat et tiro, sed Siciliae: paratus ad praedam," &c. The authority for this reading seems to be the Cod. Metell.

praedam meditatusque venire cupiebat. O praeclare conjectum a vulgo in illam provinciam omen communis famae atque sermonis, quum ex nomine istius quid iste in provincia facturum esset perridicule homines augurabantur. Etenim quis dubitare posset quum istius in quaestura fugam et furtum recognosceret, quum in legatione oppidorum fanorumque spoliationes cogitaret, quum videret in foro latrocinia praeturae, qualis iste in quarto actu improbitatis futurus esset?

VII. Atque ut intelligatis eum Romae quaesisse non modo genera furandi sed etiam nomina, certissimum accipite argumentum, quo facilius de singulari ejus impudentia existimare possitis. Quo die Siciliam tetigit, videte satisne paratus ex illo omine urbano ad everrendam provinciam venerit, statim Messana literas Halesam mittit, quas ego istum in Italia scripsisse arbitror; nam simul atque e navi egressus est, dedit operam ut Halesinus ad se Dio continuo veniret; se de hereditate velle cognoscere quae ejus filio a propinquo homine, Apollodoro Laphirone, venisset. Ea erat, iudices, pergrandis pecunia. Hic est Dio, iudices, nunc beneficio Q. Metelli civis Romanus factus; de quo multis viris primariis testibus multorumque tabulis vobis priore actione satisfactum est, HS decies numeratum esse ut eam causam in qua ne tenuissima quidem dubitatio posset esse isto cognoscente obtineret; praeterea greges nobilissimarum equarum abactos; argenti vestisque stragulae domi quod fuerit esse direptum: ita HS decies Q. Dionem, quod hereditas ei venisset, nullam aliam ob causam perdidisse. Quid haec hereditas, quo praetore Dionis filio venerat? Eodem quo P. Annii ex nomine istius] This miserable pun is explained by the next chapter: "ex illo omine urbano ad everrendam provinciam venerit," where the true reading is 'everrendam,' though most of the MSS. have 'evertendam.' As to the omen from names, see Livy, xxviii. 28.

7. sed etiam nomina,] The names of those whom he designed to plunder.

Halesam] A town on the north coast of Sicily, on the river Halesus, about a mile from the coast. It is mentioned again in Lib. 3. c. 73.

civis Romanus] The Roman 'civitas' was sometimes conferred by a governor; but it does not appear that he could give the 'civitas,' except in conformity to some power that was conferred on him for that purpose. Cn. Pompeius gave the 'civitas' to Cornelius Balbus, pursuant to the provisions of a Lex (Pro Balbo, c. 13). The person on whom the 'civitas' was thus conferred generally seems to have taken the gentile name of his patron, if he was a Greek; thus Dio is called in the next chapter Q. Caecilius Dio. And a Sex. Pompeius Chlorus is mentioned there, also a Greek, who had been made a Roman citizen.—'hereditas ei obvenisset:' Klotz.

Quid haec hereditas,] The pointing of Zumpt is 'Quid? haec hereditas quo praetore . . . venerat?' Our reliance on pointing is one of the causes why we often understand the ancient writers so ill. If we must point in such a case as this, it is easy to see that 'Quid?' &c., is nonsense. The question begins 'Quid haec hereditas.' I do not trouble myself about the grammatical explanation of 'quid' in such a case. It had lost its original meaning. There is a pause after 'hereditas,' and the question is resumed in the words 'quo praetore.' As senatoris filiae, eodem quo M. Liguri senatori, C. Sacerdote praetore. Quid tum nemo molestus Dioni fuerat? Non plus quam Liguri Sacerdote praetore. Quid ad Verrem quis detulit? Nemo: nisi forte existimatis ei quadruplatores ad fretum praesto fuisse.

VIII. Ad urbem quum esset, audivit Dioni cuidam Siculo permagnam venisse hereditatem; statuas jussum esse in foro ponere; nisi posuisset, Veneri Erycinae esse multatum. Tametsi positae essent ex testamento, putabat tamen quoniam Veneris nomen esset causam pecuniae se reperturum. Itaque apponit qui petat Veneri Erycinae illam hereditatem: non enim quaestor petit, ut est consuetudo, is qui Erycum montem obtinebat: petit Naevius Turpio quidam, istius excursor et emissarius, homo omnium ex illo conventu quadruplatorum deterrimus, C. Sacerdote praetore condemnatus injuriarum. Etenim erat ejusmodi causa ut ipse praetor, quum quaereret calumniatorem, paulo tamen considerationem reperire non posset. Hunc hominem Veneri absolvit, sibi con-to the passage 'Quid ad Verrem quis detulit?' I have, as in other cases, put no point after 'Quid.' If the reader does not see that the sense admits a pause there, he may indicate a pause thus: 'Quid, ad Verrem quis detulit?' 'Well, who carried an information to Verres?'

8. Veneri Erycinae—multatum.] There was a 'poena' or penalty in the testament, which, if the 'heres' did not set up certain statues in the forum, he was bound to pay to the temple of Venus at Eryx. The 'poena' might be the whole 'hereditas,' as it is here implied. It appears that, by the law of Sicily, this temple could take testamentary bequests; and it is probable that many temples acquired a large part of their property in this way. According to Roman law (Ulpian, Frag. Tit. xxii.), only certain temples could take as 'heredes,' and such as obtained this capacity by a S. C. or an Imperial Constitutio.—'heredem statuas:' Klotz.

causam pecuniae] 'Some cause or ground for laying hold of the money.' Klotz has 'causam calumniae.'

The words 'Veneris nomen' appear to be an allusion to the Roman game of 'tali,' in which the best throw was called 'Venus.' The sense is: 'As soon as Verres hears the name of Venus, he thinks, like the player, of good luck, and feels sure that he shall make some money out of this affair.' This explanation confirms the reading 'pecuniae' (Creuzer and Moser).

Erycum montem] The old reading is

'Erycinum montem,' which Orelli has. Zumpt contends that the true name is 'Erycus,' as in c. 47. The Greek form is Eryx (Ἐρυξ, Thucyd. vi. 46). "At a little distance to the eastward of Trapani (the ancient Drepanum) is Mount St. Julian, Eryx, on which, at the elevation of 2075 feet, stood a temple dedicated to Venus Erycina. Eryx is at present an abrupt and sterile mountain. There still exist a few granite pillars, and some remains of a Cyclopiian wall" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 242). See Divin. c. 17. p. 29, note.—'Is qui Erycum montem obtinebat' is the Quaestor Lilybaetanus, as Asconius observes.

considerationem] Though 'consideratus' is passive in form, it seems used to indicate a person of thoughtful and serious demeanour; that is, the 'consideratio' seems to mean the 'consideratio' of him who is called 'consideratus.' Pro Caecin. c. 1: "illud considerati hominis esse putavit."

Veneri absolvit, &c.] 'Absolvit' is the technical expression of the formula. See the passage of Gaius cited in the notes to c. 12. The use of the dative seems peculiar, but the sense is plain: 'Verres declared that there was no penalty or forfeiture to the temple of Venus, but he condemned the man to the payment of a sum of money to himself.' 'Hunc hominem' is Dio. It seems strange that there should have been any difficulty about this. See Zumpt's note. Orelli and Klotz have 'Hic hominem.'—'pudentissimi:' Klotz has 'prudentissimi,' from Cod. Vat.

demnat: maluit videlicet homines peccare quam deos; se potius a Dione quod non licebat quam Venerem quod non debebatur auferre. Quid ego hic nunc Sex. Quid ipsius Q. Caecilii Dionis, hominis probatissimi ac pudentissimi? Quid L. Vecilii Liguris, T. Manilii, L. Caleni? quorum omnium testimoniis de hac Dionis pecunia confirmatum est. Dixit hoc idem M. Lucullus, se de his Dionis incommodis pro hospitio quod sibi cum eo esset jam ante cognosse. Quid Lucullus, qui tum in Macedonia fuit, melius haec cognovit quam tu, Hortensi, qui Romae fuisti? ad quem Dio confugit? qui de Dionis injuriis gravissime per literas cum Verre questus es? Nova tibi haec sunt, inopinata? nunc primum aures tuae hoc crimen accipiunt? nihil ex Dione, nihil ex socru tua, femina primaria, Servilia, vetere Dionis hospita, audisti? Sosippus et Philocrates fratres sunt Agyrinenses. legis exceptio?] The Lex under which Verres was prosecuted excluded a 'patronus' from being a witness. Klotz refers to a similar rule which is laid down in the Digest, 22. 5. 25.

The reading of the evidence, as we see, occurs here also in the second Actio, or supposed second Actio, in the middle of the speech. This is also the fashion in the Greek orations.

9. Veneris homo] Zumpt and others have 'Venerius.' Orelli writes both. There is no etymological objection to 'Veneris.' The 'Veneris,' as we have seen, is the name of the slaves and freedmen of the temple of Venus Erycina. The note of Asconius is: "Alludit ad nomen, quod hirundo, quam chelidona Graeci vocant, veri, id est tempori veris, sit amica." There is no sense in this; but if we adopt the almost certain correction of Creuzer and Moser, "veri, id est tempori Veneris," there is sense in the scholium, and probably the true explanation. Such a play on words is quite in Cicero's style. See the note in Creuzer and Moser.

Agyrinenses.] Agyrium was one of the oldest towns of the Siculi, on the river Cyamosorus, north-east of Henna, and north-west of Centuripae. It is mentioned again Lib. 3. c. 27. It had the finest theatre in the island, after that of Syracuse (Diod. xvi. 83).

ipsos xx annos,] The reading of Asconius is 'ipso vicesimo anno;' and his note is 'praescriptio temporis,' by which he appears to mean that if twenty years had elapsed, any claim of the temple would have been barred by time. But there was stores, tot calumniatores in provincia fuissent, hereditas ab his Veneris nomine petita non est. Verres cognoscit: pecuniam per Volcatium accipit, fere HS cccc millia ab duobus fratribus. Multorum testimonia audistis antea. Vicerunt Agyrinenses fratres ita ut egentes inanesque discederent.

X. At enim ad Verrem pecunia ista non pervenit. Quae est ista defensio? utrum asseveratur in hoc an temptatur? mihi enim nova res est. Verres calumniatores apponebat: Verres adesse jubebat: Verres cognoscebat: Verres judicabat: pecuniae maximae dabantur: qui dabant causas obtinebant: tu mihi ita defendas, "non est ista Verri numerata pecunia." Adjuvo te: mei quoque testes idem dicunt: Volcatio dicunt sese dedisse. Quae vis erat in Volcatio tanta ut HS cccc millia a duobus hominibus auferret? Ecquis Volcatio si sua sponte venisset unam libellam dedisset? Veniat nunc: experiatur: tecto recipiet nemo. At ego amplius dico: HS quadringenties cepisse te arguo contra leges: nego tibi ipsi ullum nummum esse numeratum: sed quum ob tua decreta, ob edicta, ob imperia, ob judicia pecuniae dabantur, non erat quaerendum cujus manu numerarentur, sed cujus injuria cogerentur. Comites illi tui delecti manus erant tuae: praefecti, scribae, medici, accensi, haruspices, praecones manus erant tuae: ut quisque te maxime cognatione, affinitate, necessitudine aliqua attingebat, ita no 'praescriptio longi temporis,' either in the time of Cicero, or when the true Asconius wrote. The old editions have 'petita non est' at the end of the sentence; and Zumpt says that he does not know whether the 'non' is omitted in any good MS. The word 'viginti' may be expressed in most of the MSS. by the abbreviation xx. In Lag. 29. it is 'xx°,' but in Lag. 42, 'vigesimo expressis litteris' (Zumpt).

If 'ipso vicesimo anno' is the true reading, we must read 'petita est.' But the reading of Manutius, which I have adopted, requires 'non petita est:' "for twenty whole years, though during that time so many praetors, so many quaestors, so many 'calumniatores' had been in the province, the 'hereditas' was not claimed of them in the name of Venus." Zumpt, Orelli, and Klotz have 'ipso vicesimo anno . . petita est.'

cognoscit:] 'Causam cognoscit' in the common texts; but, as Zumpt observes, 'causam' is often omitted when 'cognosco' is used.—'ad HS,' &c.: Klotz.

10. an temptatur?] 'Is this a serious defence, or is it merely by way of making a show of saying something?' Comp. in this chapter: 'in Verre defensionis temptare rationem.' The MSS. orthography is 'temptatur,' as it seems; and the Romans may have used the form for the sake of euphony. But we must not therefore lose sight of the genuine form, which is 'tenta-re,' and contains the root of 'tend-o.'

Verres judicabat:] This does not mean that Verres was 'judex.' It was the praetor's function, 'dare judicia' (c. 12), which is expressed formally in the edict, as for instance in the Title De Dolo Malo (Dig. 4. 3. 1): "Quae dolo malo facta esse dicentur, si de his rebus alia actio non erit et justa causa esse videbitur iudicium dabo." The praetor was also said 'dare judicem' (c. 12). The word 'judicabat' has caused the commentators some difficulty. Zumpt takes it to be said 'invidiosius:' "significare volebat Verrem iudicibus sententia sua praevisse quid iudicaret."

cujus manu] See 'tua manu numeratum,' a little further on. It seems that this must be rendered here, 'into whose hand the money was paid.'

maxime manus tua putabatur: cohors tota tua illa, quae plus mali Siciliae dedit quam si centum cohortes fugitivorum fuissent, tua manus sine controversia fuit. Quidquid ab horum quopiam captum est, id non modo tibi datum, sed tua manu numeratum judicari necesse est. Nam si hanc defensionem probabitis, "Non accepit ipse," licet omnia de pecuniis repetundis judicia tollatis: nemo unquam reus tam nocens adducetur qui ista defensione non possit uti. Etenim quum Verres utatur, quis erit unquam posthac reus tam perditus qui non ad Q. Mucii innocentiam referatur, si cum isto conferatur? Neque nunc tam mihi isti Verrem defendere videntur quam in Verre defensionis temptare rationem. Qua de re, iudices, magno opere vobis providendum est: pertinet hoc ad summam rem publicam et ad existimationem ordinis salutemque sociorum. Si enim innocentes existimari volumus, non solum nos abstinentes sed etiam comites nostros praestare debemus.

XI. Primum omnium opera danda est ut eos nobiscum educamus qui nostrae famae capitique consulant: deinde, si in hominibus eligendis nos spes amicitiae fefellerit, ut vindicemus, missos faciamus, semper ita vivamus ut rationem reddendam nobis arbitremur. Africani est hoc, hominis liberalissimi: verumtamen ea liberalitas est probanda quae sine periculo existimationis est, ut in illo fuit: quum ab eo quidam vetus assectator ex numero amicorum non impetraret uti se praefectum in Africam duceret et id ferret moleste: Noli, inquit, mirari, si tu a me hoc non impetras: ego jam pridem ab eo cui meam existimationem caram fore arbitror fugitivorum] 'Fugitivus' is a runaway slave. The allusion, as Asconius says, is probably to Athenio, who headed the insurgents in Sicily in the second Servile War, and was killed by the consul M'. Aquillius B.C. 101. Comp. Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 26, 54.

reus tam nocens] 'Tam reus,' &c., seems to be the reading of nearly all the MSS. But 'tam reus' is doubtful Latin. Klotz has 'nemo unquam tam convictus tam nocens,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m).

Q. Mucii] See Divin. c. 17, note. Q. Mucius Scaevola. The Greeks of Asia commemorated his beneficent administration by the institution of a festival day, Dies Mucia. 'Referatur,' with 'ad,' means that the thing spoken of is to be referred to another, as its measure and standard. Cicero says (De Legg. i. 1): "leges in historia ad veritatem referuntur, in poemate ad delectationem."

ad summam rem publicam] Zumpt shows that this is the genuine expression. The old reading is 'ad summam rei publicae.' He refers to Cicero, Ad Att. i. 16; Pro Cn. Plancio, c. 27; Phil. iii. 15. See c. 61 of this oration. He denies that 'summa rei publicae' is used by the writers of Cicero's time.—'ordinis nostri:' Klotz.

sed etiam comites] Cicero said nearly the same thing some time afterwards in a letter to his brother Quintus (i. 1. c. 3), who was then governor of the province of Asia: 'circumspiciendum diligenter ut in hac custodia provinciae non te unum sed omnes ministros imperii tui sociis et civibus et rei publicae praestare videare.' Compare also the beginning of the following chapter. The 'comites' were, properly, the persons of higher rank immediately about the praetor, who formed his 'cohors.' The inferior personages, 'apparitores,' were 'quasi ex cohorte' (Cic. Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 3, 4).

peto ut mecum praefectus proficiscatur, et adhuc impetrare non possum. Etenim re vera multo magis est petendum ab hominibus, si salvi et honesti esse volumus, ut eant nobiscum in provinciam quam hoc illis in beneficii loco deferendum. Sed tu, quum et tuos amicos in provinciam quasi in praedam invitabas et cum his ac per eos praedabare et eos in contione annulis aureis donabas, non statuebas tibi non solum de tuis sed etiam de illorum factis rationem esse reddendam?

XII. Quum hos sibi quaestus constituisset magnos atque uberes ex his causis, quas ipse instituerat cum consilio, hoc est, cum sua cohorte, cognoscere, tum illud infinitum genus invenerat ad innumerabilem pecuniam corripendam. Dubium nemini est quin omnes omnium pecuniae positae sint in eorum potestate qui judicia dant et eorum qui judicant: quin nemo vestrum possit aedes suas, nemo fundum, nemo bona patria obtinere, si, quum haec a quopiam vestrum petita sint, praetor improbus, cui nemo intercedere possit, det quem velit judicem, judex nequam et levis quod praetor jusserit judicet. Si vero illud quoque accedet ut in ea verba praetor iudicium det, ut vel L. Octavius Balbus judex, homo et juris et officii nemo intercedere] ‘In provincia scilicet; nam Romae appellari tribuni possunt contra omnem potestatem.’ This is a sample of the better part of the Asconian commentary. Compare Cicero, Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 7, where he says of the province of Asia, “ubi nullum auxilium (no appeal to the tribunes), nulla conquestio, nullus Senatus, nulla contio.” In a province the governor was not checked by any ‘intercessio’ of a ‘tribunus,’ or of any ‘magistratus’ of equal rank with himself.

11. annulis aureis] Gold rings were worn at Rome by the senators and equites, and it appears that it became usual for governors of provinces to give gold rings to those whom they delighted to honour. Comp. Lib. 3. c. 76. 80.—‘et cum his ac per eos,’ &c.: Zumpt has ‘cum his’ in place of ‘cum illis,’ on the authority of Lag. 42 (pr. m.), because ‘eos’ follows. ‘His autem est quod vulgo dicunt iis, nihil aliud.’—‘de tuis:’ ‘de te,’ Orelli.

12. nemo fundum,] These words are omitted by Zumpt, without any observation, though they are in Orelli, Klotz, and I suppose in all the old editions, and in the MSS. The omission seems to be an error of the press, which error occurs in the English reprint of Zumpt’s edition.

L. Balbus judex,] He was one of the ‘judices,’ and Cicero ingeniously pays him a compliment for his legal knowledge and his integrity; and yet even Balbus, if he had been a ‘judex’ appointed by Verres, could not have done otherwise than follow the directions contained in the praetor’s formula. The words ‘L. Octavius,’ &c., are taken from the Formulae, examples of which we are now better acquainted with from Gaius (iv.). The formula, as it is here supposed by Cicero, is correct in expression, but unjust in the substance. Klotz supposes the formula to have been perverted by Cicero, but the orator merely gives it as an example of what Verres did or might have done, and what a ‘judex’ must obey. If, says the formula, it appears that the land belongs to Servilius, and he does not give it up to Catulus, who was not the owner, then the ‘judex’ must compel him to do so, or mulct him in damages. This is absurd enough, and palpable injustice; but it is what Cicero represents Verres as doing. Puchta supposes (Inst. ii. § 166) that Catulus was the attorney (procurator) of Servilius; and in such a case, though the ‘intentio’ or demand is made in the name of the plaintiff, the ‘condemnatio’ is expressed in favour of the attorney or agent, as in the example in Gaius (iv. 86): “Qui autem alieno nomine agit, intentionem quidem ex persona domini sumit, condemnationem autem in suam personam convertit: nam si peritissimus, non possit aliter judicare; si judicium sit ejusmodi: L. OCTAVIUS JUDEX ESTO: SI PARET FUNDUM CAPENATEM, QUO DE AGITUR, EX JURE QUIRITIUM P. SERVILII ESSE, NEQUE IS FUNDUS Q. CATULO RESTITUETUR—non necesse erit L. Octavio judici cogere P. Servilium Q. Catulo fundum restituere, aut condemnare eum quem non oporteat? Ejusdemmodi totum jus praetorium, ejusdemmodi omnis res judiciaria fuit in Sicilia per triennium Verre praetore. Decreta ejusmodi: si non accipit quod te debere dicis, accuses; si petit, ducas. C. Fuficius duci jussit petitorem, L. Suetium, L. Racilium. Judicia hujusmodi: qui cives verbi gratia Lucius Titius (pro) Publio Maevio agat, ita formula concipitur: Si paret N. N. Publio Maevio sestertium x milia dare oportere, judex N. N. Lucio Titio sestertium x milia condemna; si non paret, absolve. In rem quoque si agat, intendit, Publii Maevii rem esse ex jure Quiritium et condemnationem in suam personam convertit." Puchta observes that Cicero complains of this formula of Verres as of something unusual, though there is no doubt that it was of daily application in the case of 'procuratores.' He adds, however, that Cicero means only its application by a wicked praetor like Verres. But this explanation is quite inconsistent with what follows: "non necesse erit," &c., where Cicero says that the 'judex' must compel Servilius, the owner, to give up the land to Catulus. It is singular that most persons have missed the sense of the passage. Cicero takes the usual formula, and shows how Verres applied it in the most extravagant and absurd way; or rather, he supposes a case as extravagant as the one that he puts, a case that we must not suppose to be a real case; but he adds, even a Balbus must have followed the praetor's order. And this extravagant instance is made a kind of sample of the proceedings of Verres in Sicily: 'Ejusdemmodi totum jus praetorium' &c.

On this formula Savigny remarks (System, &c., v. 30. note (c)): "Cicero manifestly selects an established, generally known formula; and what he remarks thereupon as a crying piece of injustice consists simply in this, that, according to this mode of drawing up the formula, the restitution of the land (fundus) must be made to another person than the one already designated as owner." Catulus is the plaintiff, Servilius is the owner; and, if the property is proved to belong to Servilius, he must be compelled to give it up to Catulus. This explanation by Voorda (Creuzer and Moser, 5th Excursus), and that of Savigny, are the same as that which I have given. If Servilius did not obey the unjust order, he was to be mulcted in damages.

si non accipit, &c.] Klotz reads 'patitur,' in the place of 'petit,' which he says is in no MS. He has a note on the passage, which he explains in a curious way.—Cicero says: 'if he (the creditor) does not receive what you say that you owe, bring a charge against him: if he sues for it, carry him off' as an 'addictus.' Comp. the use of 'duci' in c. 26. This is plain enough: 'if the creditor won't be satisfied with what the debtor admits to be due, bring a charge against him,' says Verres, 'and I will help you: if he should sue for it, I will let you put him in chains.' Manutius understood it correctly. It is merely an extravagant way of showing the iniquity of Verres, who sold his justice. Cicero mentions instances of creditors (petitores) who were treated in this way. 'Patitur' appears to be a corruption of 'petitur,' which itself must be supposed to be a corruption of 'petit,' if that is the true reading. If 'patitur' is the true reading, the explanation of Asconius is as good as any. He makes 'patitur' equivalent to 'accipit.' But 'duci jussit petitorem' confirms the reading 'petit.'

Judicia hujusmodi:] This passage stands thus in Klotz's edition: "Judicia hujusmodi: qui cives Romani erant, si Siculi essent, tum si eorum legibus dari oporteret. Qui Siculi, si cives Romani essent." But the reading is not certain; and I cannot see what is the explanation of the text of Klotz. That which he very confidently gives is opposed to the interpretation of Asconius and of Donatus on Terence (Phormio, ii. 1, 36), whom Klotz, being in a merry mood when he wrote his note, calls a pair of kindred souls.

The explanation of these old commenta-

Romani erant, si Siculi essent, quum Siculos eorum legibus dari oporteret; qui Siculi, si cives Romani essent. Verum, ut totum genus amplectamini judiciorum, prius jura Siculorum, deinde istius instituta cognoscite.

XIII. Siculi hoc jure sunt, ut quod civis cum civi agat domi certet suis legibus; quod Siculus cum Siculo non ejusdem civitatis, ut de eo praetor judices ex P. Rupilii decreto, quod is de decem legatorum sententia statuit, quam illi legem Rupiliam vocant, sortiatur. Quod privatus a populo petit, aut populus a privato, senatus ex aliqua civitate qui judicet datur, quum alternae civitates rejectae sunt. Quod civis Romanus a Siculo petit, Siculus judex datur; quod Siculus a civi Romano, civis Romanus datur: ceterarum rerum selecti judices ex civium Romanorum conventu proponi solent. Inter aratores et decumanos lege frumentaria, quam Hieronicam appellant, judicia fiunt. Haec omnia isto praetore non modo perturbata sed plane et Siculis et civibus Romanis erepta sunt: primum suae leges; quod civis cum civi ageret, aut eum judicem tors, which has been hitherto followed, requires the word 'rei,' or 'defendants,' to be supplied in the clauses, 'si Siculi essent,' 'si cives Romani essent,' and Klotz objects to this. In the words 'judicia hujusmodi (fuerunt)' the word 'judices' is implied. The passage may then be translated thus: "Those who were Roman citizens were (erant) 'judices,' if Siculi were defendants, though by their laws Sicilians ought to have been appointed: those who were Sicilians were appointed (judices), if Roman citizens were defendants." Asconius supposes that after 'qui cives Romani erant,' 'addebantur' was to be supplied, in which case 'qui' would be the nominative to 'erant.' But the position of 'erant' and 'essent' is against this interpretation; and 'qui cives Romani' is only a more general form of expression than 'cives Romani.'

13. P. Rupilii] P. Rupilius, consul B.C. 132, and proconsul of Sicily, B.C. 131, with the advice of ten commissioners (de decem legatorum sententia) settled the administration of Sicily, and his regulations and ordinances are often spoken of under the term Lex Rupilia; not that his ordinances were a 'lex' in the strict sense, for a 'lex' is that 'quod populus Romanus jubet,' but they were so called as having the substantial character of a 'lex,' though not the formal. There are several instances mentioned of the Romans regulating a conquered country by sending there a commission of Ten (Cic. Ad Att. xiii. Epp. 4, 5, 6; Livy, xxxvii. 55: "Decem legatos more majorum senatum missurum ad res Asiae disceptandas componendasque"). Rupilius was consul with P. Popilius Laenas, and conducted the enquiry which followed the death of Ti. Gracchus (Cic. De Am. c. 11).

Cicero cites mainly such parts of the Lex Rupilia as related to the administration of justice, and we may suppose that Roman institutions were to some extent thus introduced into Sicily. The following chapters of this oration (c. 15. 17, 18) in addition to this chapter contain some of his rules. See also Lib. 3. c. 10. 12, 13, 14. 28. 40.

alternae civitates] This is somewhat obscure. An individual might have a claim on his own 'civitas' or on another; and a 'civitas' might have a claim on one of its own citizens or on a citizen of another state. The case of a claim by or against a 'civitas' against or by a citizen of that 'civitas' seems to be excluded; and the case proposed is perhaps that of a citizen of one 'civitas' and another 'civitas'; and, if both parties objected to give either of the 'civitates' jurisdiction in the matter, the senate of a third 'civitas' was made 'judex.' Asconius explains the passage thus. If this is not the right explanation, we may take it thus: each party could propose a 'civitas,' and each party could reject the 'civitas' proposed by the other. If this was so, the praetor then named a 'civitas.'

quem commodum erat praeconem, haruspicem, medicum suum dabat, aut, si legibus erat iudicium constitutum, et ad civem suum iudicem venerant, libere civi iudicare non licebat. Edictum enim hominis cognoscite, quo edicto omnia iudicia redegerat in suam potestatem: SI QUI PERPERAM JUDICASSET, SE COGNITURUM; QUUM COGNOSSET, ANIMADVERSURUM: idque quum faciebat, nemo dubitabat quin, quum iudex alium de suo iudicio putaret iudicaturum seque in eo capitis periculum aditurum, voluntatem spectaret ejus quem statim de capite suo putaret iudicaturum. Selecti e conventu aut propositi ex negotiatoribus iudices nulli: haec copia, quam dico, iudicum, cohors, non Q. Scaevolae, qui tamen de cohorte sua dare non solebat, sed C. Verris. Cujusmodi cohortem putatis hoc principe fuisse? Sicuti videtis edictum: SI QUID PERPERAM JUDICARIT SENATUS. Eum quoque ostendam, si quando sit datus, Si qui perperam] The first part of the edict is probably not that which Cicero finds fault with. The praetor in a province often decided cases 'extra ordinem,' without appointing a 'iudex;' and he could annul the sentence of a 'iudex,' and restore the parties to their original condition. The words at the end 'quum cognosset, animadversurum,' are the part that is blamable.

Selecti e conventu aut, &c.] Cicero has just said that in certain cases 'iudices' ought to be selected from the 'conventus' of Roman citizens, that is, from those Romans who used to meet at a certain place at certain times, for the settlement of all legal matters and the transacting of other business, for which the people within a certain district resorted to a fixed place. The word 'conventus,' which literally means 'a coming together,' was used also to denote the place of meeting; the 'forum' (c. 15), to which the inhabitants of a given district must resort (convenire). The word 'conventus' also means the whole district, the inhabitants of which used to meet at a fixed place.

When Cicero says that no 'iudices' were selected from the 'conventus' or from the 'negotiatores,' he may mean such 'negotiatores' as were present only accidentally, and were not considered as a part of the 'conventus,' that is, as permanently residing within the district. When he afterwards says 'de conventu ac negotiatoribus,' the two are still distinguished, though spoken of as being together.

There has been much discussion about this passage. The question is, what is the 'conventus' to which 'selecti' applies. The 'conventus civium Romanorum,' says Manutius. Not the 'conventus civium Romanorum,' says Zumpt, but 'Sicularum civitatum;' and he gives his reason for his opinion at some length. 'Conventus' is a general term, as every body admits, and, as already shown, it has several senses. I see no reason why 'conventus' may not be taken in its most general sense here without limiting it to 'cives Romani' or Sicilians. In certain cases, as Cicero has said, 'selecti iudices' were taken from the 'civium Romanorum conventus;' in other cases mentioned before, a 'civis Romanus' or a Sicilian might be a 'iudex,' and nothing is there said of the 'conventus.' The plain interpretation of the words 'selecti e conventu' requires the 'conventus' and the 'negotiatores' to be considered as two bodies, from which 'iudices' might be taken. Why the 'negotiatores' are thus opposed to the 'conventus,' I do not see, any further than I have already suggested; though there is something in Ernesti's remark, that the 'negotiatores' were Roman 'equites,' and are accordingly distinguished from simple 'cives Romani,' as in Paterculus (ii. 110). Creuzer and Moser in their edition give the various commentators' opinions, but not their own very positively,—a mode of commenting which is by no means satisfactory.

Sicuti videtis] The expression seems a little strange, but not so very obscure. The question is, 'What kind of a "cohors" do you suppose that there was under such a head?' The answer: 'Such a one as you see that his edict is,' &c. coactu istius quod non senserit judicasse. Ex lege Rupilia sortitio nulla, nisi quum nihil intererat istius. Lege Hieronica judicia plurimarum controversiarum sublata uno nomine omnia: de conventu ac negotiatoribus nulli iudices. Quantam potestatem habuerit videtis: quas res gesserit cognoscite.

XIV. Heraclius est Hieronis filius, Syracusanus, homo in primis domi suae nobilis, et ante hunc praetorem vel pecuniosissimus Syracusanorum: nunc nulla alia calamitate nisi istius avaritia atque injuria pauperrimus. Huic hereditas facile ad HS tricies venit testamento propinqui sui Heraclii: plena domus caelati argenti optimi, multaeque stragulae vestis, pretiosissimorumque mancipiorum, quibus in rebus istius cupiditates et insanias quis ignorat? Erat in sermone res, magnam Heraclio pecuniam relictam; non solum Heraclium divitem, sed etiam ornatum supellectile, argento, veste, mancipiis futurum. Audit haec etiam Verres: et primo, illo suo leviori artificio Heraclium aggredi conatur ut eum roget inspicienda quae non reddat. Deinde a quibusdam Syracusanis admonetur—hi autem quidam erant affines istius, quorum iste uxores nunquam alienas existimavit, Cleomenes et Aeschrio, qui quantum apud istum et quam turpi de causa potuerint ex reliquis criminibus intelligetis—hi, ut dico, hominem admonent rem esse praeclaram, refertam omnibus rebus: ipsum autem Heraclium hominem esse majorem natu, non promptissimum; et eum praeter Marcellos patronum quem suo jure adire aut appellare posset habere neminem: esse in eo testamento, quo ille heres esset scriptus, ut statuas in palaestra deberet ponere: faciemus ut palaestritae negent coactu istius] An instance of this expression is quoted from the spurious Ep. Ad Brut. i. 17, 'coactu tuo.' I call them spurious, notwithstanding a recent attempt to maintain their authority.

Lege Hieronica] The note of Hotmann makes a difficulty where there is none. 'Lege Hieronica judicia' are the 'judicia ex lege H.,' which were 'sublata' by Verres.

14. stragulae vestis,] 'Stragula vestis est picta,' says Asconius, whose commentary on the Verrine orations goes no further, as we have it. See Martial, xiv. 147: 'stragula purpureis lucent villosa tapetis,' &c. affines] 'Affines' are the cognati of the husband or wife. Cicero calls these two Syracusans 'affines' of Verres, as if Verres were a kinsman of their wives; the kinship being his intimacy with the women.

rem—refertam omnibus rebus:] Klotz observes that 'res' is first used here in the general sense, and then as comprehending many things (res). It is first spoken of as the 'res hereditaria,' 'hereditas,' or a 'universitas,' and then as comprehending many several things. The conjecture of Lambinus 'domum refertam' is unnecessary.

suo jure] 'Jure suo,' Orelli, contrary to Roman usage.—'esset, scriptum, ut,' &c., Orelli. The reading 'scriptus' is only in Lag. 42; but it is the true reading.

palaestritae] The guardians or superintendents of the 'palaestra' or exercise place, such as Greek towns generally had. The 'palaestra' was probably an artificial person, in whose name the 'palaestritae' would claim the 'hereditas,' as forfeited (commissa) by non-compliance with the terms of the testament. In this case the 'palaestra' belonged to the Syracusani (c. 15); and the question was between an individual and the 'civitas.'

ex testamento esse positas; petant hereditatem quod eam palaestrae commissam esse dicant. Placuit ratio Verri. Nam hoc animo providebat, quum tanta hereditas in controversiam venisset iudicioque peteretur, fieri non posse ut sine praeda ipse discederet. Approbat consilium: auctor est ut quam primum agere incipiant, hominemque id aetatis, minime litigiosum, quam tumultuosissime adoriantur. Scribitur Heraclio dica.

XV. Primo mirantur omnes improbitatem calumniae: deinde qui istum nossent partim suspicabantur, partim plane videbant, adjectum esse oculum hereditati. Interea dies advenit, quo die sese ex instituto ac lege Rupilia dicas sortituum Syracusis iste edixerat: paratus ad hanc dicam sortiendam venerat. Tum eum docet Heraclius non posse eo die sortiri, quod lex Rupilia vetaret diebus xxx sortiri dicam quibus scripta esset. Dies xxx nondum fuerant. Sperabat Heraclius, si illum diem effugisset, ante alteram sortitionem Q. Arrium, quem provincia tum maxime exspectabat, successurum. Iste omnibus dicis diem distulit, et eam diem constituit ut hanc Heraclii dicam sortiri post dies xxx ex lege posset. Posteaquam ea dies venit, iste incipit simulare se velle sortiri. Heraclius cum advocatis adit, et postulat ut sibi cum palaestritis, hoc est, cum populo Syracusano, aequo jure disceptare liceat. Adversarii postudica.] Cicero uses a Greek term, to express the formal demand of the 'palaestritae,' as Terence does (Phormio, i. 1. 77): "ego te cognatum dicam, et tibi scribam dicam." In the next chapter there is 'dicas sortituum,' which means 'sortiri iudices,' for that case. Comp. c. 13, at the beginning.

15. adjectum esse oculum] "That he had an eye on the 'hereditas.'" Cicero has the same expression Pro Lege Agraria (ii. 10): "quum ad omnia vestra pauci homines cupiditatis oculos adjecissent."

diebus xxx—quibus] The ablative 'diebus' is used in conformity with a general Latin usage, to express a measure of time between two limits, and 'quibus' is put in the same case by a kind of attraction. The meaning is that there could be no 'sortitio' until the thirty days had elapsed—"ut hanc dicam sortiri post dies xxx ex lege posset." Garatoni observes that when 'diebus' stands without a number, as 'paucis diebus,' it means 'post paucos dies;' but if a number is coupled with it as here, it means 'intra xxx dies,' and that is the old form in legislation, as in the Tab. Herac. (p. 453, ed. Mazochi—"diebus LX proxumeis quibus sciet"). The remark of Garatoni is not quite exact; at least it is not well expressed. The meaning of 'intra,' which he chooses to give in this passage of Cicero, and in the Tab. Herac., depends on the word 'quibus.' A formula of this kind was used in Roman testaments (Gaius, ii. 165): "cernitoque in centum diebus proxumis quibus scies poterisque." See c. 26, note.

aequo jure] Klotz has a note here, the whole of which I do not understand. The statement of Cicero is clear. Verres first declared that he would appoint 'judices' according to the Lex Rupilia on a certain day. Heraclius makes no objection to the mode of appointing the 'judices,' but he claims the benefit of the thirty days fixed by the 'lex,' between the commencement of the suit (dica scripta) and the trial. He hoped by availing himself of this time to put off the trial till a new 'praetor' came. But the thirty days elapsed, and Heraclius appeared, and claimed a fair trial (aequo jure) between himself and the 'palaestritae,' that is, the city of Syracuse. He demanded that the 'judices' should be appointed according to the Lex Rupilia. His opponents demanded that they should be appointed in another way. Verres declared that he would not follow the Lex Rupilia (c. 16); and he lant ut in eam rem iudices dentur ex iis civitatibus quae in id forum convenirent, electi qui Verri viderentur. Heraclius contra ut iudices e lege Rupilia dentur, ut ab institutis superiorum, ab auctoritate senatus, ab jure omnium Siculorum ne recedatur.

XVI. Quid ego istius in jure dicundo libidinem et scelera commonstrem? quis vestrum non ex urbana jurisdictione cognovit? quis unquam isto praetore, Chelidone invita, lege agere potuit? Non istum ut nonneminem provincia corrumpit: idem fuit qui Romae. Quum id quod omnes intelligebant diceret Heraclius, jus esse certum Siculis inter se quo jure certarent, legem esse Rupiliam quam P. Rupilius consul de decem legatorum sententia dedisset; hanc omnes semper in Sicilia consules praetoresque servasse; ne-appointed five 'judices' according to his own pleasure, as Cicero says. For the purpose of understanding the text, it is enough to see that Cicero affirms that Heraclius claimed the appointment of 'judices' according to the Lex Rupilia, and that a selection 'ex iis civitatibus . . . quae,' &c., was not conformable to the Lex Rupilia. Cicero says that the claim against Heraclius was by the 'palaestritae,' and that was the same thing as a claim by the city of Syracuse. The 'judices' then in this case should have been appointed according to the terms mentioned in c. 13: "quod privatus a populo petit," &c. In the note on that chapter I have supposed that the rule 'quod privatus' did not apply when a 'civitas' had a claim against one of its own citizens; and Heraclius was a Syracusan. But that explanation may not be correct. Besides, it is immaterial whether it is correct or not. Cicero founds his statement on the fact of the claim being made by the 'civitas' of Syracuse against a citizen of Syracuse. The citizen appealed to the Lex Rupilia, rightly or wrongly, I know not. Verres appointed five 'judices' at his pleasure. This is all clear; and the real truth of the matter, which we perhaps cannot reach, is perfectly immaterial for the understanding of the passage. If commentators would be satisfied with ascertaining what an author really says, they would often save themselves and others much trouble. Zumpt has a note on the merits of the case, and a very bad one. Heraclius claimed the appointment of 'judices' according to the Lex Rupilia; and, if I understand Cicero right, these would be 'selecti iudices ex civium Romanorum conventu.' The 'adversarii' contended that they should be chosen 'ex his civitatibus quae in id forum convenirent,' that is, from the 'conventus Syracusanus,' but not from Roman citizens. But here comes a difficulty which Madvig has noticed. The common text is 'quae in id forum convenirent. Electi qui Verri viderentur.' The sentence, beginning 'adversarii postulant,' expresses the claim of one party. 'Heraclius contra' expresses the claim of Heraclius. If we interpose something about those who were finally chosen, it is obviously out of place. Besides that, the fact of the selection of the 'judices' is mentioned in its proper place at the end of the next chapter. Madvig also says, that if the sentence 'electi,' &c. expresses the fact of selection, it should be 'videbantur,' and not 'viderentur.' Accordingly he removes the 'interpunctio major' before 'electi,' and the sentence will stand as it does in the text; and the word 'electi' must be referred to 'judices dentur.' This is a simple remedy, and the only remedy, unless we expunge the words 'electi . . . viderentur.'

convenirent,] Klotz has 'convenerant,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m.); and the adoption of this reading renders unnecessary the removal of the full stop after 'convenirent,' as Creuzer and Moser say.

16. P. Rupilius consul] The reading 'praetor,' in place of 'consul,' cannot be admitted; for Rupilius was in Sicily as 'consul,' and during his consulship he defeated the insurgent slaves. Garatoni observes that 'praetor' has arisen from a misunderstanding of the letter P (Publius).

hanc omnes] This is the reading of Lag. 42 (pr. m.), which Zumpt has. Orelli has 'hoc omnes,' where 'hoc' must refer to 'jus.'—'negavit se iudices e lege,' &c., Orelli; but 'judices' is not necessary, and is omitted in the best MSS. Klotz also has 'judices e lege.'

gavit se lege Rupilia sortituro: quinque iudices quos commodum ipsi fuit dedit. Quid hoc homine facias? quod supplicium dignum libidine ejus invenias? Praescriptum tibi quum esset, homo deterime et impudentissime, quemadmodum iudices inter Siculos dares; quum imperatoris populi Romani auctoritas, legatorum decem summorum hominum dignitas, senatus consultum intercederet, cujus consulto P. Rupilius de x legatorum sententia leges in Sicilia constituerat; quum omnes ante te praetorem Rupilias leges et in ceteris rebus et in iudiciis maxime servassent; tu ausus es pro nihilo prae tua praeda tot res sanctissimas ducere? tibi nulla lex fuit? nulla religio? nullus existimationis pudor? nullus iudicii metus? nullius apud te gravis auctoritas? nullum exemplum quod sequi velles? Verum, ut institui dicere, quinque iudicibus nulla lege, nullo instituto, nulla rejectione, nulla sorte, ex libidine istius datis, non qui causam cognoscerent, sed qui quod imperatum esset iudicarent, eo die nihil actum est: adesse iubentur postridie.

XVII. Heraclius interea, quum omnes insidias fortunae suis a praetore fieri videret, capit consilium de amicorum et propinquorum sententia non adesse ad iudicium: itaque illa nocte Syracusis profugit. Iste postero die mane, quum multo maturius quam unquam antea surrexisset, iudices citari iubet: ubi comperit Heraclium non adesse, cogere incipit eos ut absentem Heraclium condemnent. Illi eum commonefaciunt ut, si ei videatur, utatur instituto suo, nec cogat ante horam decimam de absente secundum praesentem iudicare. Impetrant. Interea sane perturbatus et ipse et ejus amici et consilarii moleste ferre coeperunt Heraclium profugisse: putabant absentis damnationem praesertim tantae pecuniae multo invidiosiore fore quam si praesens damnatus esset. Eo accedebat quod iudices e lege Rupilia dati non erant; multo etiam rem turpiorem et iniquiorem visum iri intelligebant. Itaque hoc dum corrigere vult, apertior ejus cupiditas improbitasque facta est. Nam illis quinque iudicibus uti se negat: iubet, id quod initio lege Rupilia fieri oportuerat, citari Heraclium et eos qui dicam scripserant: ait se iudices ex lege velle sortiri. Quod ab eo pridie, quod supplicium—libidine] Orelli has 'libidini,' which is intended for the dative.

servassent;] 'Observassent:' Orelli.—
'nulla rejectione:' 'nulla religione:' Orelli.

17. ut, si ei videatur,] 'Ut si sibi videatur,' Klotz, on the authority of two of the best MSS. But 'ei' is probably right; a case of 'ei' equivalent to 'sibi.'

turpiorem] Zumpt has 'fore' after 'turpiorem.'

ex lege velle] Klotz has 'lege velle' from the Cod. Vat. Either expression is right; and a little further 'cum multis lacrimis quom oraret atque obsecraret Heraclius.'

quum multis lacrimis oraret Heraclius, impetrare non potuerat, id ei postridie venit in mentem, ex lege Rupilia sortiri dicas oportere. Educit ex urna tres; iis ut absentem Heraclium condemnent imperat: itaque condemnant. Quae, malum, ista fuit amentia? ecquando te rationem factorum tuorum redditurum putasti? ecquando his de rebus tales viros audituros existimasti? Petatur hereditas ea quae nulla debetur in praedam praetoris? interponatur nomen civitatis? imponatur honestae civitati turpissima persona calumniae? neque hoc solum, sed ita res agatur ut ne simulatio quidem aequitatis ulla adhibeatur? Nam, per deos immortales, quid interest utrum praetor imperet vique cogat aliquem de suis bonis omnibus decedere, an hujusmodi iudicium det, quo iudicio, indicta causa, fortunis omnibus everti necesse sit?

XVIII. Profecto enim negare non potes te ex lege Rupilia sortiri iudices debuisse, quum praesertim Heraclius id postularet. Sin illud dices, te Heraclii voluntate ab lege recessisse, ipse te ex urna tres;] This explains the expression 'dicas sortiturum' (c. 15), and 'sortiri dicas.' The 'sortes' were thrown into an 'urna' or vessel; and, after being shaken, the required number of lots was drawn out by the 'praetor,' or by such other person (c. 18) as was empowered to draw them out. 'Urna' is a Roman term for a vessel of capacity, but generally for liquids.

quae nulla debetur] "What, shall an 'hereditas' be claimed, one too (ea) which is subject to no claim at all, and become booty to the 'praetor?'" Creuzer and Moser compare Cicero (Ad Att. xi. 24): 'Philotimus non modo nullus venit, sed,' &c.

If the reader prefers striking out all the notes of interrogation from this sentence, as Klotz has done, there will be no harm in it, provided he does not read with Klotz 'sed ita res agitur.'

turpissima persona] It is said by Creuzer and Moser, that it is an expression derived from the stage; but this is not a complete view of the matter. 'Persona,' a word of doubtful etymology, is certainly used to signify a mask; and Gabius Bassus (Gell. v. 7) derived it 'a personando.' Whatever may be the original meaning of the word, it had a common use to signify a certain 'status' or condition. A 'person' or 'persona' is not simply a human being, but a human being as invested with some particular character, as a husband, father, and the like. There is no histrionic allusion in the passage of Cicero Pro Murena (c. 3) referred to by C. and M., nor in this passage, nor in Cicero De Am. (c. 1): 'idonea mihi Laelii persona visa quae de amicitia . . . dissereret.' This notion of 'persona,' as opposed to 'res,' is the foundation of the division of law by Gaius (Dig. 1. 5. 1): "omne jus quo utimur vel ad personas pertinet vel ad res vel ad actiones."

18. sortiri iudices] 'Sortiri iudicium:' Orelli; but 'sortiri iudices' is the common form, though the other is also correct. A little further on there is 'dicas omnes . . . sortitus est.'

te Heraclii voluntate, &c.] Klotz perversely explains this to mean that Heraclius had at first protested against the 'iudices' being appointed according to the Lex Rupilia, though he had afterwards required it. Cicero says nothing of the kind. He says to Verres, "You can't deny that you ought to have appointed 'iudices' according to the Lex Rupilia, particularly as Heraclius claimed it as his right. If you shall say that you departed from the Lex with the consent of Heraclius, you will involve yourself in a difficulty; for, first, why did he not appear on the day for trial, if he had, as you say, the 'iudices' appointed in the way which he demanded? and, if that answer is not enough for you, will you tell me why you appointed other 'iudices' after he had fled, if those who were first appointed were appointed with the consent of both parties?"

impedies; ipse tua defensione implicabere. Quare enim primum ille adesse noluit, quum ex eo numero iudices haberet quos postulare? deinde tu cur post illius fugam iudices alios sortitus es, si eos qui erant antea dati utriusque dederas voluntate? deinde ceteras dicas omnes illo foro M. Postumius quaestor sortitus est: hanc solam tu illo conventu reperire sortitus. Ergo, inquiet aliquis, donavit populo Syracusano illam hereditatem? Primum, si id confiteri velim, tamen istum condemnetis necesse est: neque enim permissum est ut impune nobis liceat quod alicui eripuerimus id alteri tradere. Verum ex ista reperietis hereditate ita istum praedatum ut perpauca occulte fecerit: populum quidem Syracusanum in maximam invidiam, sua infamia, alieno praemio, pervenisse; paucos Syracusanos, eos qui se nunc publice laudationis causa venisse dicunt, et tunc participes praedae fuisse, et nunc non ad istius laudationem sed ad communem litium aestimationem venisse. Posteaquam damnatus est absens, non solum illius hereditatis de qua ambigebatur, quae erat HS tricies, sed omnium bonorum paternorum ipsius Heraclii, quae non minor erat pecunia, palaestrae Syracusanorum, hoc est, Syracusanis, possessio traditur. Quae est ista praetura? Eripis hereditatem quae venerat a propinquo, venerat testamento, venerat legibus; quae bona is qui testamentum fecerat huic Heraclio, ante aliquanto quam est mortuus, omnia utenda ac possidenda tradiderat; cuius hereditatis, quum ille aliquanto ante te praetorem esset mortuus, controversia fuerat nulla, mentionem fecerat nemo.

XIX. Verum esto: eripe hereditatem propinquis, da palaestritis; praedare in bonis alienis nomine civitatis; evertre leges, testamenta, voluntates mortuorum, jura vivorum: num etiam patriis Heraclium bonis exturbare oportuit? Qui simulac profugit, quam

foro . . . conventu] 'Dixit bis de eadem re, alterum enim loci est, alterum temporis' (Zumpt). The 'conventus,' of course, is the 'temporis,' for the 'forum,' which has a local meaning, cannot be. But Cicero, in fact, has only varied the expression in oratorical fashion. M. Postumius, a quaestor, presided in all the cases tried at this forum, except one. The praetor could delegate certain of his powers to others, as, in this instance, 'jurisdictio' to a quaestor. See Cicero, Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 7.

participes praedae . . . aestimationem] "You will find," says Cicero, "that the city of Syracuse has incurred the greatest odium in this affair, and that a few of the Syracusani, those who profess that they have been commissioned by the city to uphold the character of Verres, as they were then participators in his crime, so now have they come, not to honour their praetor, as they suppose, but to be present at the assessment of damages, to the payment of which they will have to contribute a part." The provisions of the Lex Cornelia de Pecuniis Repetundis extended to those to whose hands money came that had been got contrary to the Lex.

impudenter, quam palam, quam acerbe, dii immortales, illa bona direpta sunt! quam illa res calamitosa Heraclio, quaestuosa Verri, turpis Syracusanis, miseranda omnibus videbatur! Nam illud quidem statim curatur ut quidquid caelati argenti fuit in illis bonis ad istum deferatur, quidquid Corinthiorum vasorum, stragulae vestis: haec nemo dubitabat quin non modo ex illa domo capta et oppressa verum ex tota provincia ad istum comportari necesse esset. Mancipia quae voluit abduxit; alia divisit: auctio facta est in qua cohors istius invicta dominata est. Verum illud est praeclarum: Syracusani qui praefuerant his Heraclii bonis, verbo, redigendis, re, dispertiendis, reddebant eorum negotiorum rationem in senatu: dicebant scyphorum paria complura, hydrias argenteas, pretiosam vestem stragulam, multa mancipia pretiosa, Verri data esse: dicebant quantum cuique ejus jussu nummorum esset datum. Gemebant Syracusani, sed tamen patiebantur. Repente recitatur, uno nomine HS ccl millia jussu praetoris data. Fit maximus clamor omnium, non modo optimi cujusque, neque eorum quibus indignum semper visum erat privata bona, populi nomine, per summam injuriam erepta, verum etiam ipsi illi auctores injuriae et ex aliqua particula socii praedae ac rapinarum clamare coeperunt, sibi ut haberet hereditatem. Tantus in curia clamor factus est ut populus concurreret.

XX. Res ab omni conventu cognita celeriter isti domum nuntiatum. Homo inimicus his qui recitassent, hostis omnibus qui acclamassent, exarsit iracundia ac stomacho. Verumtamen fuit tum sui dissimilis. Nostis os hominis, nostis audaciam: tamen tum rumore et clamore populi et manifesto furto grandis pecuniae perturbatus est. Ubi se collegit, vocat ad se Syracusanos: qui non posset negare ab illis pecuniam datam, non quaesivit procul

19. auctio] The goods were sold by 'auctio,' that is, by public sale, and to the highest bidder. The English auction is in its essentials the same as the Roman 'auctio.' But the 'cohors' of Verres was 'invicta,' was not outbid, for their bidding was only a show, and the real object was to secure every thing for the praetor. Those who are not called upon to pay can always outbid those who know that they must pay. dispertiendis,] 'Dissipandis:' Zumpt, from Lag. 42 (pr. m.).

privata bona,] Klotz has 'privati bona.' sibi ut haberet] "Even those who were to share in the plunder began to call out that Verres might keep it to himself, they would have none of it." In c. 31 there is "habeatis sane . . vobiscum," perhaps not quite the same thing. But in c. 25: "sibi habere jussit;" and in Lib. 4. c. 67: "tibi habe."

20. celeriter isti] 'Isti' is added by Zumpt on good authority, and it is wanted.

qui non posset] Verres could not deny that money had been given by them, that is, by those 'qui praefuerant,' &c. (c. 19.) He did not, however, look for strangers, or persons unconnected with him, as the receivers, for he could not have proved that; but he charged his son-in-law with receiving it, and professed that he would make him restore it. The 'proximum, paene alterum alicunde, (neque enim probaret,) sed proximum, paene alterum filium, quem illam pecuniam diceret abstulisse: ostendit se reddere coacturum. Qui posteaquam id audivit, habuit et dignitatis et aetatis et nobilitatis suae rationem: verba apud senatum fecit: docuit ad se nihil pertinere: de isto id quod omnes videbant neque ille quidem obscure locutus est. Itaque illi Syracusani statum postea statuerunt: et is ubi primum potuit, istum reliquit, de provinciaque decessit. Et tamen aiunt eum queri solere nonnunquam, se miserum quod non suis sed suorum peccatis criminibusque prematur. Triennium provinciam obtinuisti: gener electus adolescens unum annum tecum fuit: sodales, viri fortes, legati tui, primo anno te reliquerunt: unus legatus P. Tadius qui erat reliquus non ita multum tecum fuit; qui si semper una fuisset, tamen summa cura quum tuae tum multo etiam magis suae famae pepercisset. Quid est quod tu alios accuses? quid est quamobrem putes te tuam culpam non modo derivare in aliquem sed communicare cum altero posse? Numerantur illa HS ducenta quinquaginta Syracusanis. Ea quemadmodum ad istum postea per pseudothyrum revertantur, tabulis vobis testibusque, iudices, planum faciam.

XXI. Ex hac iniquitate istius et improbitate, iudices, quod praeda ex illis bonis ad multos Syracusanos, invito populo senatue Syracusano, venerat, et illa scelera, quae per Theomnastum et Aeschrionem et Dionysodorum et Cleomenem, invitissima civitate illa, facta sunt, primum ut urbs tota spoliaretur, qua de re alius mihi locus ad dicendum est constitutus; ut omnia signa iste filium,' is the son-in-law of Verres. Orelli has 'quia non posset.'

sed suorum] Klotz adds 'comitum.'

gener electus] Orelli and Klotz have 'gener electus adolescens.' Zumpt, who has 'lectus,' from Lag. 42, refers to Divin. c. 9; Lib. 1. c. 37; and Lib. 4. c. 36; but in these cases the superlative is used. Servius Sulpicius (Ad Div. iv. 5) has the expression, "ex hac juventute generum deligere." 'Gener electus adolescens' is certainly Latin, and 'gener, lectus adolescens,' may be so too.

per pseudothyrum] Verres paid back the HS CCL millia, but Cicero says that it returned to him through a false door, a back-door; it was publicly repaid by Verres, and privately came back to him.

21. et illa scelera,] The reading of Klotz and Zumpt is 'et illa scelera.' The reading of Lambinus is 'etiam illa scelera sunt.' The text may be understood if we take 'et' in the sense of 'etiam.' Zumpt takes it so, but refers the 'et' to what follows in the next sentence. 'Per eosdem istius . . . socios;' an explanation which seems to me inadmissible. The sense of the passage appears to be this: "Of the same kind as this iniquity and improbity of Verres, Iudices, in that out of that property of Heraclius a share of the plunder came to many of the Syracusani, contrary to the will of the community and the senate of Syracuse, are those crimes also which were committed with the help of Theomnastus," &c.; and he then proceeds to enumerate them, 'primum ut urbs,' &c. The emphatic words 'et illa scelera' make the omission of 'sunt' tolerable.—'invitissima civitate illa:' 'illa' is added by Zumpt from Lag. 42.

per eos homines quos nominavi, omne ebur ex aedibus sacris, omnes undique tabulas pictas, deorum denique simulacra quae vellet auferret; deinde ut in curia Syracusis, quem locum illi buleuterion nomine appellant, honestissimo loco et apud illos clarissimo, ubi illius ipsius M. Marcelli, qui eum Syracusanis locum quem eripere belli ac victoriae lege posset conservavit ac reddidit, statua ex aere facta est, ibi inauratam istius et alteram filio statuam ponerent; ut, dum istius hominis memoria maneret, senatus Syracusanus sine lacrimis et gemitu in curia esse non posset. Per eosdem istius furtorum, injuriarum, uxorumque socios, istius imperio Syracusis Marcellia tolluntur maximo gemitu luctuque civitatis: quem illi diem festum quum recentibus beneficiis C. Marcelli debitum redderant, tum generi, nomini, familiae Marcellorum maxima voluntate tribuebant. Mithridates in Asia, quum eam provinciam totam occupasset, Mucia non sustulit. Hostis, et hostis in ceteris rebus nimis ferus et immanis, tamen honorem hominis deorum religione consecratum violare noluit: tu Syracusanos unum diem festum Marcellis impertire noluisti, per quos illi adepti sunt ut ceteros dies festos agitare possent. At vero praeclarum diem illis reposuisti, Verria ut agerent, et ut ad eum diem quae sacris epulisque opus essent in complures annos locarentur. Jam in tanta istius impudentia remittendum aliquid videtur, ne omnia contendamus, ne omnia cum dolore agere videamur. Nam me dies, vox, latera deficient, si hoc nunc vociferari velim, quam miserum indignumque sit istius nomine apud eos diem festum esse qui sese istius opera funditus extinctos esse arbitrentur. O Verria praeclara! Quo accessisti, quaeso, quo non attuleris tecum istum diem? Etenim quam tu domum, quam urbem adisti, quod fanum denique, quod non eversum atque extersum reliqueris? Quare appellentur sane

statuam ponerent;] 'Ponerent' is the reading of Zumpt, from Lag. 42 (p. m.). Klotz retains 'posuerunt,' the reading of the other MSS.; but, if this reading be accepted, Cicero has deviated from the regular construction which the sentence requires.

C. Marcelli] This is the C. Marcellus who succeeded Lepidus in the government of Sicily (c. 3). 'Mithridates' is Mithridates Eupator, or the Great, who B.C. 88, was in possession of the province of Asia. The MSS. vary between the forms 'Marcellia' and 'Marcellaea.' The Greek termination would be -εἰα, which seems to have

locarentur.] Verres, in place of the festal day which he abolished, established one in honour of himself, and made provision for letting to contractors the care of providing what was necessary for celebrating the new festival.—'Jam in tanta:' Orelli has 'Sed jam,' &c., but there is no authority for the 'sed.' Zumpt observes that 'sed' would denote an interruption of what the orator is speaking of, and a transition to something else, which is not the case. 'Jam' introduces the conclusion, which is further explained by 'Nam me dies.'

eversum, &c.] Here we have again a miserable pun on the name of Verres. To the word 'eversum' Cicero adds 'extersum,' ista Verria, quae non ex nomine sed ex manibus naturaque tua constituta esse videantur.

XXII. Quam facile serpat injuria et peccandi consuetudo, quam non facile reprimatur, videte, iudices. Bidis oppidum est, tenue sane, non longe a Syracusis. Hujus longe primus civitatis est Epicrates quidam. Huic hereditas HS quingentorum millium venerat a muliere quadam propinqua, atque ita propinqua ut ea etiamsi intestata esset mortua Epicratem Bidinorum legibus heredem esse oporteret. Recens Syracusana erat illa res quam ante demonstravi de Heraclio Syracusano, qui bona non perdidisset, nisi ei venisset hereditas. Huic quoque Epicrati venerat, ut dixi, hereditas. Cogitare coeperunt ejus inimici nihilo minus eodem praetore hunc everti bonis posse quo Heraclius esset eversus. Rem occulte instituunt: ad Verrem per ejus interpretes deferunt. Ita causa componitur ut item palaestritae Bidini peterent ab Epicrate hereditatem, quemadmodum palaestritae Syracusani ab Heraclio petissent. Nunquam vos praetorem tam palaestricum vidistis. Verum ita palaestritas defendebat ut ab illis ipse unctior abiret; qui statim quum praesensisset jubet cuidam amicorum suorum numerari HS LXXX. Res occultari satis non potuit. Per quemdam eorum qui interfuerant fit Epicrates certior. Primum con-

'wiped out;' in illustration of which Garatoni cites Cicero's Paradoxa, v. 2: "qui tergunt, qui verrunt." Graevius thinks that there is no allusion in 'eversum' to the name of Verres, but that Cicero gives the explanation of what he means in the following words: 'ex manibus naturaque,' 'quasi is natus et manus ejus factae sint ad omnia evertenda et extergenda.'

22. Bidis] The Ethnic name is Bidini or Bidenses. The modern church of S. Giovanni di Bidini, not far from Syracuse, seems to indicate the site of this little place.

everti bonis] As 'eversum,' in the preceding chapter, contains an allusion to the name of Verres, it has been proposed to read 'everri bonis.' But we have in Lib. I. c. 51, 'fortunis patriis . . evertere;' and 'voluntatem defuncti evertere' is a legal expression, which is used here in c. 19.

palaestricum] This word, Klotz remarks, expresses better what Cicero means than 'palaestritam,' which Zumpt has; and 'palaestricum' has the authority of the best MSS. The word 'unctior' is a manifest allusion to the anointing of the wrestlers; and it also contains a double meaning, for 'unctus' is applied to one who is rich.

Comp. Horace, 1 Ep. xvii. 12, and the other examples in Forcellini. Verres gave his protection to the Bidini, but on such terms that he was well paid for it.—'unctior discederet:' Orelli. Comp. Lib. I. c. 50: "opimum praeda discedere."

praesensisset] As soon as Verres got a hint of this new booty, he came upon the Bidini for a sum of money, a kind of fee to be paid beforehand, in consideration of what he was going to do for them. See c. 23: "aestuarie illi qui dederant pecuniam." Orelli has 'Res . . non posse.' Klotz has 'qui statim, quod statim praesensisset,' &c. The commentators have found a difficulty in this passage, and much has been said upon it. The explanation of Massé is in substance the same as this, except that he incorrectly places a comma after 'statim:' "As soon as Verres got notice of this (palaestritas Bidenses litem moturos contra Epicratem), he requires the 'palaestritae' to pay a sum of money to one of his friends (tanquam judicii pretium)."—Verres was acquainted with the whole matter, from the beginning, by his 'interpretes,' who in this and some other passages are not 'interpreters,' but 'agents,' or 'emissaries.' The 'qui statim' of Klotz is perhaps a misprint.

temnere et negligere coepit, quod causa prorsus quod dubitari posset nihil habebat. Deinde quum de Heraclio cogitaret, et istius libidinem nosset, commodissimum putavit esse de provincia clam abire: itaque fecit: profectus est Rhegium.

XXIII. Quod ubi auditum est, aestuare illi qui dederant pecuniam: putare nihil agi posse absente Epicrate. Nam Heraclius tamen affuerat quum primum dati sunt iudices: de hoc, qui antequam in jus aditum esset, antequam mentio denique controversiae facta esset ulla, discessisset, putabant nihil agi posse. Homines Rhegium proficiscuntur: Epicratem conveniunt: demonstrant id quod ille sciebat se HS LXXX dedisse: rogant eum ut sibi id quod ab ipsis abisset pecuniae curet; ab sese caveat quemadmodum velit de illa hereditate cum Epicrate neminem esse acturum. Epicrates homines multis verbis male acceptos ab se dimittit: redeunt illi Rhegio Syracusas: queri cum multis, ut fit, incipiunt sese HS LXXX nummum frustra dedisse. Res percrebuit et in ore atque sermone omnium coepit esse. Verres refert illam suam Syracusanam: ait se velle de illis HS LXXX cognoscere. Advocat multos: dicunt Bidini Volcatio se dedisse: illud non addunt, jussu istius. Volcatium vocat: pecuniam referri jubet. Volcatius animo aequissimo nummos affert qui nihil amitteret: reddit inspectantibus multis: Bidini nummos auferunt. Dicit aliquis, Quid ergo in hoc Verrem reprehendis, qui non modo ipse fur non est, sed ne alium quidem passus est esse? Attendite: jam intelligetis hanc pecuniam, qua via modo visa est exire ab isto, eadem semita revertisse.

quod causa] 'Quod in caussa prorsus quod disputari posset nihil habebat:' Klotz. For 'disputari' there is good authority, though it is not the word that is wanted here. But 'in causa' has no authority except Cod. Vat., and it manifestly spoils the sense. 'Causa' is the nominative to 'habebat.'

23. in jus aditum] Klotz has 'in jus aditum, postulatum esset,' which is from the Cod. Vat., of which, however, the reading is 'aditum postulatum in jus,' where 'postulatum' seems as manifest an interpolation as any example that can be found.

curet;) The impudent demand was, that Epicrates should pay, or see that they were paid (curet), the amount that they had given to Verres, and take such security from them (ab sese caveat) as he should think proper, that nobody should raise any question about the 'hereditas.' This use of 'curo' is common in Cicero: 'me cui jussisset curaturum' (Ad Fam. xvi. 9).

ut fit,] Klotz, from Vat. Cod. Zumpt has 'ita ut fit.'

Syracusanam;) 'Verres resorts to his old trick.' There seems no occasion to suppose with Hotmann, that there is any error in the text. Manutius supplies 'malitiam;' and Gruter 'cantilenam.' But the word to be supplied is the universal 'res,' which means any thing. Zumpt refers to a similar omission of 'res' in Cicero, De Nat. Deorum, i. 8: "sed illa palmaris," where Davis unnecessarily proposes to read 'sed illud palmare.' Klotz adds 'rem' after 'Syracusanam;' but there is a difference between mentally supplying the word, and writing it in the text.

referri jubet.] Zumpt, from Lag. 42 (pr. m.); and Klotz. Orelli, and the previous editors, have 'imperat.'

via] The contrast between 'via' and 'semita' is obvious enough. A 'via' was the largest kind of road, a carriage-road, as in the case of a 'servitus,' and its width

Quid enim debuit praetor facere—cum consilio cognita causa, quum comperisset suum comitem juris, decreti, iudicii corrumpendi causa, qua in re ipsius praetoris caput existimatioque ageretur, pecuniam accepisse, Bidinos autem pecuniam contra praetoris famam ac fortunas dedisse—non et in eum qui accepisset animadvertisse, et in eos qui dedissent? Tu qui institueras in eos animadvertere qui perperam judicassent, quod saepe per imprudentiam fit, hos pateris impune discedere qui ob tuum decretum ob tuum iudicium pecuniam aut dandam aut accipiendam putarant. Volcatius idem apud te postea fuit, eques Romanus, tanta accepta ignominia.

XXIV. Nam quid est turpius ingenuo, quid minus libero dignum, quam in conventu maximo cogi a magistratu furtum reddere? qui si eo animo esset quo non modo eques Romanus, sed quivis liber debet esse, aspicere te postea non potuisset, inimicus, hostis esset, tanta contumelia accepta, nisi tecum tum collusisset et tuae potius existimationi servisset quam suae. Qui quam tibi amicus non modo tum fuerit, quamdiu tecum in provincia fuit, verum etiam nunc sit, quum jam a ceteris amicis relictus es, et tu intelligis et nos existimare possumus. An hoc solum argumentum est nihil isto imprudente factum, quod Volcatius ei non succensuit, quod iste nec in Volcatium nec in Bidinos animadvertit? Est magnum argumentum: verum illud maximum, quod illis ipsis Bidinis quibus iratus was fixed by the Twelve Tables (Dig. 8. 3. 8). It is also the term for a public or high road, as Via Appia. Among the various examples cited of the contrast of 'via' and 'semita' is one from Ennius (Cic. De Divin. i. 58):

"Qui sibi semitam non sapiunt alteri monstrant viam."

The old reading is 'qua via . . eadem semita,' the objection to which, as Zumpt states it, is this: 'intellegi nequit, quomodo, quae via sit, eadem e contrario semita dici possit.' But, as the money was not really repaid by a 'via,' so neither did it return by a 'semita.' It was repaid openly: it was returned privately. If the word 'semita' were omitted, nobody could doubt about the reading; for it is plain that the sentence does not require the relative (qua) to refer to 'pecunia,' but to the antecedent which follows. "Jam intelligetis hanc pecuniam . . revertisse:" "and how did it return? why, in the same direction that it went out; but with this difference, that the 'via' became a 'semita.'" The expression in Latin is not so awkward as in a modern version; and it is to me more intelligible than Zumpt's reading: 'quae via . . eam semita,' &c. Hotmann made the alteration first, but he wrote 'quae via . . eandem semita;' but for 'eandem' Zumpt writes 'eam,' from Lag. 42. The reading of Klotz is the same as Zumpt's, except that he has 'eandem.' The various opinions on this passage are given in the note of Creuzer and Moser.

Quid enim debuit praetor] After 'praetor' Zumpt and Klotz have 'facere,' which is found in some MSS. Orelli omits it. He has also the reading 'cum consilio recognita.'—Klotz writes 'animum advertisse,' and 'animum advertere.'

ob tuum decretum,] Zumpt omits, on the authority of Lag. 42 (pr. m.); and for 'putarant' he has 'putabant.'

24. quum . . relictus es,] It does not appear that any MS. has 'es,' except Lag. 42; the rest appear to have 'sis.' This is a case somewhat doubtful; but perhaps the indicative is preferable. Orelli has 'sis relictus.'

esse debuit, a quibus comperit, quod jure agere cum Epicrate nihil possent, etiamsi adesset, idcirco suum decretum pecunia esse temptatum; his, inquam, ipsis non modo illam hereditatem quae Epicrati venerat, sed, ut in Heraclio Syracusano, item in hoc, paulo etiam atrocius, quod Epicrates appellatus omnino non erat, bona patria fortunasque ejus Bidinis tradidit. Ostendit enim novo modo, si quis quid ab absente peteret se auditurum. Adeunt Bidini, petunt hereditatem: procuratores postulant ut se ad leges suas rejiciat, aut ex lege Rupilia dicam scribi jubeat. Adversarii non audebant contra dicere: exitus nullus reperiabatur. Insimulant hominem fraudandi causa discessisse: postulant ut bona possidere jubeat. Debebat Epicrates nummum nullum nemini: amici, si quis quid peteret, judicio se passuros, judicatum solvi satisdaturus esse dicebant.

ab absente, &c.] 'De absente peteret auditurum:' Klotz, from Lag. 42 (pr. m.), and Cod. Vat.—'adeunt Bidini, qui petunt,' &c.: Klotz, from Cod. Vat.

procuratores postulant] The 'procuratores' of Epicrates; those who represented him and acted for him. See Divin. c. 4. They offered to give security that their principal would comply with the terms of the decision (judicatum solvi satisdaturus).

fraudandi causa] One of the cases in which the praetor's edict permitted possession to be taken of a person's property was that of his concealing himself, or keeping out of the way, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. Klotz refers to the terms of the edict (Pro P. Quintio, c. 19): "Qui fraudationis causa latitant;" and to the Digest, 42. 4: "quibus ex causis in possessionem eatur." The creditors were said 'in possessionem mitti.' The case resembles that of the English Bankrupt Law (6 Geo. IV. c. 16. s. 3), by which, if a trader "shall depart from his dwelling-house, or otherwise absent himself, or begin to keep his house, &c., with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, he shall have committed an act of bankruptcy." When the trader has been adjudged to be a bankrupt, the commissioners sign a warrant directed to a person called a messenger, who is empowered to seize the bankrupt's property for the benefit of his creditors.—'possidere liceat:' Orelli.

nullum nemini:] An instance of a double negation which does not produce an affirmative. The reading 'ullum' of some MSS. cannot be accepted. Klotz omits 'nullum,' which is not in Cod. Vat. If a reader had heard nothing about two negatives producing an affirmative,—an expression which is incapable of any exact meaning,—he would find no difficulty here, and he would translate it: "Epicrates owed not a sesterce to no man." The instances in which the Latin writers use such a mode of negation are not common; nor do they seem to use it in a sentence like this, if Cicero had said 'non debebat.' Other cases of a different kind of double negation are not uncommon, as Zumpt shows. After a general negation in the principal sentence, there may be negation of the several parts, as Cicero, Pro Murena, c. 29: "viri non esse neque exorari neque placari," where, in fact, the omission of the 'neque' would give quite a different meaning; also c. 40: "si nemini nec domi nec militiae odio fuit." Zumpt quotes also the following instances from these orations of the use of 'ne—quidem': Lib. 1. c. 60: "non enim praetereundum est ne id quidem;" and Lib. 3. c. 90: "non fugio ne hos quidem mores."

judicio se passuros,] This is said to be the reading of the best, perhaps all the MSS., for which 'judicium se passuros,' 'judicio secum agi passuros,' have been substituted. Klotz refers to Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 28, where also he reads 'judicio se passuros,' from Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat. Klotz also refers to Pro P. Quintio, c. 28. Zumpt has it thus: 'si quis quid peteret in judicio, se passuros,' from Lag. 42.

The technical legal expression in the Lex and in the Digest is 'judicium accipere:' "Qui non cogitur defendere absentem, tamen si judicatum solvi satisdedit defendendi absentis gratia, cogendus procurator judi-Iste amplam occasionem calumniae nactus, ubi videt esse aliquid quod amici absente Epicrate nollent defendere, asseverat se ejus rei in primis actionem daturum. Quum omnes perspicerent ad istum non modo illos nummos qui per simulationem ab isto exierant revertisse, sed multo etiam plures eum postea nummos abstulisse, amici Epicratem defendere destiterunt: iste Epicratis bona Bidinos omnia possidere et sibi habere jussit. cium accipere, ne decipiatur is qui satis accepit" (Dig. 3. 3. 43). Now 'judicium passuros' presents no difficulty; and as Cicero uses this expression in Lib. 3. c. 28, where Zumpt keeps the reading, we may conclude that it was a technical expression in his time for what was expressed by 'judicium accipere' at a later time. Zumpt seems to doubt if 'petere judicio' can be said, and with good reason. It is not a Roman expression, simply because the 'petitor' did not make his claim 'in judicio,' but 'in jure.' The accepting of the 'judicium' was the formal conclusion of the 'Litis Contestatio,' or 'the proceedings of the litigant parties before the praetor,' in which both parties, by their mutual statements, determine the matter in dispute in such way that it is ready to be carried before the 'judex.' These proceedings are the last act 'in jure,' that is to say, of the preliminary proceedings before the praetor: they are contemporaneous with the Formula which is given by the praetor and presupposes the naming of a 'judex,' for his name is mentioned in the formula (Savigny, System des Heut. Röm-Rechts, vi. 9, Litis contestatio). I have allowed 'judicio se passuros' to stand, for it may be right, even though Zumpt cannot understand it (quod intelligi nequit). But in his Appendix he says of 'judicio se passuros,' "nescio an verum sit, ut illud ipsum agisecum cogitatione addatur."—This was a case of 'negotiorum gestio,' as the Romans called it (Dig. 3. tit. 5), where a man undertook to defend the interests of an absent person, and thus constituted himself an attorney without any authority. If the self-constituted agent was condemned, there could be no 'actio judicati' against the person whom he represented, and the agent was accordingly required to give security that he would abide by the judgment, 'satisfacere judicatum solvi.' The Roman doctrine was 'publice utile est absentes a quibuscunque defendi' (Dig. 3. 3. 33. § 2). A reader would hardly suppose that Horace, when he says 'absentem qui rodit amicum, Qui non defendit,' &c., (1 Sat. iv. 81), was using the legal language of the day, the same that the jurist Ulpian uses two centuries later; 'si amicus quum absentem defenderet.'

25. Quum omnia consilia frigerent,] Orelli has 'quum omnia [judicia] frigerent.' But 'judicia' is a gloss.—'ne qua ipsius:' Orelli, Klotz.

absente Epicrate] The MSS., with the exception of three, are said to have 'absentem Epicratem,' but, as Zumpt observes, a double accusative after 'defendo' cannot be found.

antiqua . . pecunia.] 'His former property,' for that is the meaning of 'antiquus' (ant-icus), which is opposed to 'post-icus.' 'Pecunia,' in its proper and larger sense, means a whole property (Gaius, ii. 104).

XXVI. Hic nunc de miseria Siculorum, iudices, audite. Et Heraclius ille Syracusanus et hic Bidinus Epicrates expulsi bonis omnibus Romam venerunt: sordidati, maxima barba et capillo, Romae biennium prope fuerunt. Quum L. Metellus hinc profectus in provinciam est, tum isti bene commendati cum Metello una proficiscuntur. Metellus simulac advenit Syracusas, utrumque rescidit et de Epicrate et de Heraclio. In utriusque bonis nihil erat quod restitui posset, nisi quod moveri loco non poterat. Fecerat haec egregie primo adventu Metellus ut omnes istius injurias quas modo posset rescinderet et irritas faceret. Quod Heraclio restitui jusserat ac non restituebatur, quisquis erat eductus senator Syracusanus ab Heraclio, duci jubebat. Itaque permulti ducti sunt. Epicrates quidem continuo est restitutus. Alia judicia Lilybaei, alia Agrigenti, alia Panhormi restituta sunt. Census qui isto praetore sunt habiti non servaturum se Metellus ostenderat: decumas quas iste contra legem Hieronicam venderat sese venditurum Hieronica lege edixerat. Omnia erant Metelli ejusmodi ut non tam suam praeturam gerere quam istius praeturam retexere videretur. Simul atque ego in Siciliam veni, mutatus est. Venerat ad eum illo biduo Letilius quidam, homo rescidit] 'Rescindo' is to undo, to declare null. "Praeses provinciae rescindi venditionem . . jussit" (Dig. 18. 5. 9).

moveri loco] All was gone except the land and what was attached to the land, as buildings. Cicero's expression has a reference to a natural and legal division of corporeal things into 'res mobiles,' things which can be moved without any alteration in their nature (moveables) and 'res immobiles,' as the ground (solum) and things attached to it (res soli). "Labeo scribit: edictum Aedilium curulium de venditionibus rerum esse tam earum quae soli sint quam earum quae mobiles aut se moventes" (Dig. 21. 1. 1. pr.).

eductus—duci] Whatever senator Heraclius brought before Metellus (educeret) for non-compliance with the order, Metellus ordered to be taken to prison (duci). 'Quod' is the relative. 'Quod jusserat . . quisquis,' &c., is a form of expression altogether unlike any thing in English. Nor is there any real difference between this expression and 'Quod erant mihi . . constitui,' &c., in

judicia . . restituta] Metellus seems to have proceeded in the case of Epicrates and Heraclius 'extra ordinem,' that is, he decreed the restitution of his property without a new 'judicium.' In other cases he appears after examining the matter (causa cognita) to have instituted a new 'judicium' (judicium restitutum), that is, to have sent the cases before a 'judex' to be heard again in the ordinary way. Comp. Dig. 4. 4. 13. § 1: "potest desiderare interdum adversus possessorem restitui ne rem suam perdat vel re sua careat, et hoc vel cognitione praetoria vel rescissa alienatione dato in rem judicio." See Puchta, Inst. ii. § 177; and Savigny, System, &c., vii. § 315, where the real nature of the doctrine of 'restitutio' is explained, which it would be out of place to examine here.—The reading 'Panhormi' is in conformity to the best MSS., and to the general usage of coins and inscriptions (Zumpt).

illo biduo] 'Biduo ante quam ego adveni,' Zumpt, who compares 'paucis illis diebus' in Lib. 4. c. 18, and De Sen. c. 14: "qui his diebus paucis Pontifex Maximus factus est." See Lib. 2. c. 41, note.

Repente coepit dicere se omnia Verris causa velle: sibi cum eo amicitiam cognationemque esse. Mirabantur omnes hoc ei tum denique in mentem venisse, posteaquam tam multis eum factis decretisque jugulasset. Erant qui putarent Letilium legatum a Verre venisse, qui gratiam, amicitiam, cognationemque commemoraret. Ex illo tempore a civitatibus laudationes petere, testes non solum detertere verbis sed etiam vi retinere coepit. Quod ego nisi meo adventu illius conatus aliquantum repressissem, et apud Siculos non Metelli sed Glabrionis literis ac lege pugnassem, tam multos huc evocare non potuissem. Verum, quod institui dicere, miserias cognoscite sociorum. Heraclius ille et Epicrates longe mihi obviam cum suis omnibus processerunt: venienti Syracusas egerunt gratias flentes: Romam decedere mecum cupiverunt. Quod erant mihi oppida complura etiam reliqua quae adire vellem, constitui cum hominibus quo die mihi Messanae praesto essent. Eo mihi nuntium miserunt se a praetore retineri. Quibus ego testimonium denuntiavi, quorum nomina edidi Metello, cupidissimi veniendi, maximis injuriis affecti, adhuc non venerunt. Hoc jure sunt socii ut iis ne deplorare quidem de suis incommodis liceat.

a literis: . . tabellario] A frigid joke. 'Literae' is used for 'letters' or 'literature'; and a 'tabellarius' carries 'literae' or epistles.

Quod ego nisi . . illius conatus] 'Quod' pro 'sed' says Manutius; and he compares Act. 1. Lib. 1. c. 46: 'Quod vos oblitos esse,' &c. But he is mistaken. 'Quod' is the relative, and it relates to the preceding sentence, and 'illius conatus' is its exponent, or epexegetis, or whatever other name may be used. The 'literae' of Glabrio are the written authority from him to summon witnesses and so forth. Zumpt observes on 'Quod nisi ego,' which is his reading: "sic verba collocantur in Lag. 42 (p. m.) rectius quam vulgo 'quod ego nisi.'" But why 'rectius?' Klotz in this case has 'Quod nisi ego,' in conformity with Cod. Vat. But he has (Lib. 1. c. 61) 'cui ego nisi,' where Orelli has 'cui nisi ego.' By way of compensation Orelli has in this passage 'Quod constitui cum] Zumpt has 'tum' from a single MS. Both the dative is used, and the ablative with 'cum.' Nor do I think that the examples of the use of this word justify Zumpt's remark: 'neque cum aliquo constituo, quando quid ille facere debeat, alicui potius.'—'praesto adessent:' Klotz.

Centuripini,] Centuripa (Κεντόριπα, Thucyd. vi. 94), was originally a town of the Siculi, on the road from Catina to Panormus, near the Simaethus, at the foot of Aetna. It is now Centorbi, a place situated on a steep height. It was at this time one of the richest towns in the island, and had a senate and a municipal constitution. The inhabitants carried on an extensive cultivation of corn and trade in corn in various parts of Sicily. See Lib. 2. c. 68; 3. c. 45; 4. c. 23. 50; 5. c. 27.

Quae istius auctoritas tantum valuit ut neque illum pulsaret quisquam, quum praetor in provincia sua verbo permetteret, re hortaretur; neque quisquam ab eo quidquam peteret, quum iste calumniae licentiam sua auctoritate ostendisset: ignominia autem illa gravis tamdiu in illo homine fuit quamdiu iste in provincia mansit. Hoc injecto metu iudicibus, novo more, nullo exemplo, ecquam rem putatis esse in Sicilia nisi ad nutum istius iudicatam? ties and terms.' The 'compromissum' is the terms of the agreement of two persons to refer the matter in dispute between them to an arbiter, and in these terms was contained a penalty (poena) if either party did not abide by the award. The terms of the edict were: "Qui arbitrium poena compromissa receperit" (Dig. 4. 8. s. 3. § 2).—Klotz has 'iste ad praesens poenis,' &c., from Cod. Vat.—'de compromisso:' Klotz omits 'de,' with Cod. Vat.—'eumque iudicio,' &c.: 'eumque iudicem falso iudicasse:' Zumpt.

injuriarum] The 'actio,' or 'iudicium injuriarum,' was for assault and beating, for abusive words, and for other matters (Gaius, iii. 220, &c.). When Verres declared that he would allow any action against the 'iudex,' but would not allow him to sue any person, he was putting this innocent man in a worse condition than those who were 'infames' (Dig. 3. tit. 1 and 2). 'Ignominia' is a technical term. See Smith's Dict. of Antiqs., INFAMIA.

in provincia mansit.] Zumpt omits 'mansit.'—'novo more:' Klotz has 'novo jure,' which is probably the reading of the Cod. Vat., and perhaps the better reading.

in istius . . essent potestate?] One MS. at least has 'potestatem.' I take this opportunity of explaining, with the aid of Zumpt's note, what I did not explain before (Divin. c. 20, 'in amicitiam . . essent'). This use of 'in' with 'esse' is Ciceronian, and it is remarked on by Gellius (i. 7). There is another example in these orations, Lib. 5. c. 38, 'in eorum potestatem . . futurum.' It seems to have been an old form of expression, but Zumpt is perhaps right in rejecting it in those cases in which the MSS. have not preserved it. In the Lex Thoria (Zeitschrift für Geschichtl. Rechtsw. vol. x. by Rudorff), at the beginning of the first chapter, there is "Quei ager poplicus populi Romanei in terram Italiam P. Muucio L. Calpurnio cos. fuit." The words 'cos. fuit' are supplied from conjecture. But a little further, in the same chapter, there is the same passage complete, with the variation 'in terra Italia;' and again in c. 3 and 5, the same; and in other places also. The expression 'quei ager in Africa est' also occurs frequently. It might be concluded that 'in terram Italiam,' which I think occurs only once in this Lex, is a mistake; but that conclusion would not be certain.

sumam quae maxime improbitate excellere videbuntur. Sopater quidam fuit Halicyensis, homo domi suae cum primis locuples atque honestus. Is ab inimicis suis apud C. Sacerdotem praetorem rei capitalis quum accusatus esset, facile eo iudicio est liberatus. Huic eidem Sopatro iidem inimici ad C. Verrem, quum is Sacerdoti successisset, ejusdem rei nomen detulerunt. Res Sopatro facilis videbatur, et quod erat innocens, et quod Sacerdotis iudicium improbare istum ausurum non arbitrabatur. Citatur reus: causa agitur Syracusis: crimina tractantur ab accusatore ea quae erant antea non solum defensione verum etiam iudicio dissoluta. Causam Sopatri defendebat Q. Minucius, eques Romanus in primis splendidus atque honestus, vobisque, iudices, non ignotus. Nihil erat in causa quod metuendum aut omnino quod dubitandum videretur. Interea istius libertus et accensus idem Timarchides, qui est, id quod ex plurimis testibus priore actione didicistis, rerum huiusmodi omnium transactor et administer, ad Sopatrum venit: monet hominem ne nimis iudicio Sacerdotis et causae suae confidat; accusatores inimicosque ejus habere in animo pecuniam praetori dare; praetorem tamen ob salutem malle accipere; et simul malle si fieri posset rem iudicatam non rescindere. Sopater, quum hoc illi improvisum atque inopinatum accidisset, commotus est sane, neque in praesentia Timarchidi quid responderet habuit nisi se consideraturum quid sibi de ea re esset faciendum: et simul ostendit se in summa difficultate esse nummaria. Post ad amicos rettulit; qui quum ei fuissent auctores redimendae salutis, ad Timarchidem venit: expositis suis difficultatibus hominem ad HS LXXX perducit, eamque ei pecuniam numerat.

XXIX. Posteaquam ad causam dicendam ventum est, tum vero sine metu, sine cura omnes erant qui Sopatrum defendebant. Crimen nullum erat: res iudicata: Verres nummos acceperat.

28. Halicyensis,] Halicyae was a 'libera civitas' (Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 6), but it appears that the privileges of a 'libera civitas' did not extend to the exclusion of the criminal jurisdiction of the Praetor. Halicyae (Ἀλικύαι, Steph.) lay between Entella and Lilybaeum.

Huic eidem Sopatro] This is the MSS. reading. Such a use of a dative with 'de-fero' is not common, but it is intelligible. Some grammarians oddly enough call it a dative 'incommodi,' but it is a dative of frequent use, especially with pronouns. See Pro Caelio, c. 23: "Si hic nemini nomen detulisset."

agitur Syracusis:] Sopater was summoned to Syracuse where the Praetor 'conventus agebat.' Garatoni cites a passage from Livy (xxxi. 29): "Siculorum civitatibus Syracusas aut Messanam aut Lilybaeum indicitur concilium. Praetor Romanus conventus agit," &c. ob salutem] The old editions and MSS. have 'absolute.' Orelli has 'ab salute,' which is hardly intelligible. The omission of a final m is so common, even in the best MSS., that it is a very small correction to add it, especially as we see that the next word begins with m. We must then change 'ab' into 'ob.'

Quis posset dubitare quidnam esset futurum? Res illo die non peroratur: dimittitur iudicium. Iterum ad Sopatrum Timarchides venit: ait accusatores ejus multo majorem pecuniam praetori polliceri quam quantam hic dedisset; proinde, si saperet, videret quid sibi esset faciendum. Homo, quamquam erat et Siculus, et reus, hoc est, et jure iniquo et tempore adverso, ferre tamen atque audire diutius Timarchidem non potuit: Facite, inquit, quod vobis libet, daturus non sum amplius. Idemque hoc amicis ejus et defensoribus videbatur: atque eo etiam magis quod iste, quoquo modo se in ea quaestione praebebat, in consilio tamen habebat homines honestos e conventu Syracusano, qui Sacerdoti quoque in consilio fuerant tum quum est idem hic Sopater absolutus. Hoc rationis habebant, facere eos nullo modo posse ut eodem crimine, eisdem testibus, Sopatrum condemnarent iidem homines qui antea absolvissent. Itaque hac una spe ad iudicium venit. Quo posteaquam ventum est, quum in consilium frequentes convenissent iidem qui solebant, et hac una spe tota defensio Sopatri niteretur, consilii frequentia et dignitate, et quod erant, ut dixi, iidem qui antea Sopatrum eodem illo crimine liberarant, cognoscite hominis apertam ac non modo non ratione sed ne dissimulatione quidem tectam improbitatem et audaciam. M. Petilium, equitem Romanum, quem habebat in consilio, jubet operam dare quod rei privatae iudex esset. Petilius recusabat, quod suos amicos quos sibi in consilio esse vellet ipse Verres retineret in consilio. Iste homo liberalis negat se quemquam retinere eorum qui Petilio vellent adesse. Itaque discedunt omnes: nam ceteri quoque impetrant ne retineantur, qui se velle dicebant alterutri eorum qui tum illud iudicium habebant adesse. Itaque iste solus cum sua cohorte nequissima relinquitur. Non dubitabat Minucius qui Sopatrum

29. quantam hic] 'Quantum hic' in the English reprint of Zumpt, and in Klotz; but Zumpt says nothing about 'quantum.'—Klotz omits 'quid sibi esset faciendum.' est . . absolutus.] 'Esset . . absolutus:' Orelli. The imperfect 'absolveretur,' says Zumpt, might be endured, but 'esset . . absolutus' is contrary to the sense.

operam dare quod] M. Petilius was a 'iudex' in a 'privatum iudicium' which was pending, and Verres, in order to get rid of him, told him to go and attend to his function of 'iudex' in the 'res privata,' or matter in suit between two parties.—'quos sibi in consilio esse vellet:' a 'iudex' in a 'res privata' was often assisted by the advice of his friends, but he gave the judgment himself. This 'quasi consilium' must not be confounded with the 'consilium' in a Judicium Publicum.

alterutri eorum . . adesse.] 'Adesse' is a word of technical use, to accompany a person to court, there to give him your aid and advice, Horace (1 Sat. ix. 38):

"Si me amas, paulum hic ades. Inteream si Aut valeo stare aut novi civilia jura;"

and Heindorf's note. A little further on there is 'ut sibi in consilio essem,' where Orelli has 'adessem.' 'Alterutri' is 'either of the two parties;' 'qui illud iudicium habebant,' 'who had this suit.' The passage is wrongly explained by Orelli, and rightly by Ernesti.

defendebat quin iste, quoniam consilium dimisisset, illo die rem illam quaesiturus non esset, quum repente jubetur dicere. Respondet, Ad quos? Ad me, inquit, si tibi idoneus videor qui de homine Siculo ac Graeculo judicem. Idoneus es, inquit: sed per vellem adessent ii qui affuerant antea causamque cognorant. Dic, inquit: illi adesse non possunt. Nam hercule, inquit Minucius, me quoque Petilius ut sibi in consilio essem rogavit. Ut simul a subselliis abire coepit, iste iratus hominem verbis vehementioribus prosequitur, atque ei gravius etiam minari coepit quod in se tantum crimen invidiamque conflaret.

XXX. Minucius qui Syracusis sic negotiaretur ut sui juris dignitatisque meminisset, et qui sciret ita se in provincia rem augere oportere ut ne quid de libertate deperderet, homini quae visa sunt et quae tempus illud tulit et causa respondit: causam sese dimisso atque ablegato consilio defensurum negavit, itaque a subselliis discessit: idemque hoc praeter Siculos ceteri Sopatri amici advocatique fecerunt. Iste, quamquam est incredibili importunitate et audacia, tamen subito solus destitutus pertimuit et conturbatus est. Quid ageret, quo se verteret, nesciebat. Si dimisisset eo tempore quaestionem, post illis adhibitis in consilium quos ablegaverat absolutum iri Sopatrum videbat: sin autem hominem miserum atque innocentem ita condemnasset, quum ipse praetor sine consilio, reus autem sine patrono atque advocatis fuisset, iudiciumque C. Sacerdotis rescidisset, invidiam se sustinere non posse tantam arbitrabatur. Itaque aestuabat dubitatione: versabat se in utramque partem non solum mente verum etiam corpore, ut omnes qui aderant intelligere possent in animo ejus metum cum cupiditate pugnare. Erat hominum conventus maximus, summum silentium, summa expectatio quonam esset ejus cupiditas eruptura: crebro se accensus demittebat ad aurem Timarchides. Tum iste aliquando, Age, dic, inquit. Reus orare atque obsecrare ut cum consilio cognosceret. Tum repente iste testes citari jubet: dicit unus et alter breviter: nihil interrogatur: praeco Dixisse pronuntiat. Iste quasi metueret ne Petilius, privato illo iudicio transacto aut dilato, cum ceteris in consilium reverteretur, ita XXXI. Retinete, retinete hominem in civitate, judices: parcite et conservate ut sit qui vobiscum res judicet, qui in senatu sine ulla cupiditate de bello et pace sententiam ferat. Tametsi minus id quidem nobis, minus populo Romano laborandum est, qualis istius in senatu sententia futura sit. Quae enim ejus auctoritas erit? quando iste sententiam dicere audebit aut poterit? quando autem homo tantae luxuriae atque desidiaei nisi Februario mense adspirabit in curiam? Verum veniat sane: decernat bellum Creten-sibus; liberet Byzantios; regem appellet Ptolemaeum; quae vult Hortensius omnia dicat et sentiat: minus haec ad nos, minus ad vitae nostrae discrimen, minus ad fortunarum nostrarum periculum pertinent. Illud, illud est capitale, illud formidolosum, illud optimo cuique metuendum, quod iste si ex hoc judicio aliqua vi se eripuerit, in iudiciis sit necesse est, sententiam de capite civis Romani ferat, sit in ejus exercitu signifer qui imperium iudiciorum tenere vult. Hoc populus Romanus recusat, hoc ferre non potest: clamat permittitque vobis ut, si istis hominibus delectemini, si ex isto genere splendorem ordini atque ornamentum curiae constituere velitis, habeatis sane istum vobiscum senatorem, etiam de vobis iudicem, si vultis, habeatis: de se homines, si qui extra istum ordinem sunt, quibus ne rejiciundi quidem amplius quam trium

"non ita mulum tecum fuit."—"exsilit:" Orelli and Klotz. "He hurried from his seat, to take the votes of his 'consilium.'"

31. sententiam ferat.] Hotmann observes that 'sententiam ferre' is said of a 'judex,' but a senator was said 'sententiam dicere' in the senate. Yet the expression 'sententiam ferre' was sometimes used in its most general sense, and applied even to a senator giving his opinion in the Senate. Ernesti refers to Cic. Ad Fam. xi. 21. In the Tab. Herac. (ii. p. 422, ed. Mazochi) both forms occur, as usual in legal language, which, from the time of the Romans to our own, delights in a superfluity of words: 'neve sententiam rogato, neve dicere neve ferre jubeto.'

Februario mense] See Lib. i. c. 35. Cicero insinuates that Verres would attend the senate-house (curia) in February, in the hope of getting something from the deputations which came from the provinces. (See Cic. Ad Q. Fr. ii. 3.) Various important matters, which Cicero alludes to, were under discussion at this time. L. Metellus, the colleague of Hortensius (B.C. 69), had declared war against the Cretans, and Byzantium was made a 'libera civitas.' Ptolemaeus is probably Auletes or Ptolemaeus XII., who succeeded Alexander or Ptolemaeus XI. At this time Alexander was king, but he was ejected a few years afterwards, and died at Tyre. Auletes reigned in his stead.

aspirabit in curiam?] Cicero is fond of this poetic expression. Lib. i. c. 54: "ad meam pecuniam . . adspirat." Virgil has it (Aen. xii. 352) with a dative.

istum vobiscum] 'Vobis istum:' Orelli. See c. 19.

quibus ne rejiciundi quidem] It appears that the Lex Cornelia did not allow those who were not senators to challenge more than three 'judices' in a criminal trial; but Verres, as a senator, had the right of challenging more, and had challenged six at least, as Zumpt shows by reference to Act. ii. Lib. i. c. 7; Lib. 3. c. 41; and Lib. 5.

XXXII. Etenim si illud est tam flagitiosum quod mihi omnium rerum turpissimum maximeque nefarium videtur ob rem judicandam pecuniam accipere, pretio habere addictam fidem et religionem; quanto illud flagitiosius, improbius, indignius, eum a quo pecuniam ob absolvendum acceperis condemnare, ut ne praedonum quidem praetor in fide retinenda consuetudinem conservaret? Scelus est accipere ab reo: quanto magis ab accusatore? quanto etiam sceleratius ab utroque? Fidem quum proposuisses venalem in provincia, valuit apud te plus is qui pecuniam majorem dedit. Concedo: forsitan aliquis aliquando ejusmodi quidpiam fecerit. Quum vero fidem ac religionem tuam jam alteri addictam pecunia accepta habueris, post eandem adversario tradideris majore pecunia, utrumque falles, et trades cui voles, et ei quem fefelleris ne pecuniam quidem reddes? Quem mihi tu Bulbum, quem Stalenum, quod unquam hujusmodi monstrum aut prodigium audivimus aut vidi-

c. 44. The conjecture of Antonio Agustin, that the 'trium judicum rejectio' was enacted only by the Cornelia Lex de Repetundis, will, as Zumpt observes, explain 'si qui extra istum ordinem sunt,' for few except senators were likely, as experience showed, to act in such manner as to come within the penalties of the Lex de Repetundis. Orelli has 'qui extra,' &c.

trium judicum] Zumpt refers to his Grammar (§ 661) for four other examples from Cicero of a genitive in the place of an accusative when coupled with a gerund. In Cicero, De Invent. ii. 2, there is "ex majore enim copia nobis quam illi fuit exemplorum eligendi potestas." A reference to the host of critics who have discussed this subject is given in the fifteenth Excursus in Creuzer and Moser's edition of this oration.

32. tam flagitiosum] All the MSS. have 'tam,' it appears; and why it should be rejected nobody has yet explained. Orelli thought it should be 'jam,' and Klotz has adopted his suggestion. In the letter of Cicero, Ad Q. Fr. i. 1, Ernesti thinks that 'tam fideles' should be 'jam fideles.' If a man will carefully read these orations, he will easily dispense with such suggestions.

pretio—addictam] Forcellini explains it under the head "Translate addictus est obstrictus, devinctus, obnoxius." But this is not the exact meaning. 'Addico,' in one of its usages, is a word used in selling, and signifies the declaration of him who sells as to the transfer of the thing to the buyer.

'Pretium' is 'price,' that which the buyer gives. The passage means: "to have his good faith and conscience bargained and sold for money." There is a use of 'addicere' in Lib. 5. c. 63, which shows the sense of the word; and it is common in the law-writers. See also Lib. 3. c. 33.

Quem mihi tu Bulbum, &c.] These were two of the mercenary 'judices' in the trial of Oppianicus. See the oration Pro Cluentio, c. 26, 28, &c. A note of interrogation is usually placed after Stalenus or Staienus (perhaps the true name), which spoils the sentence, for 'Bulbum Stalenum' depend on 'audivimus' and 'vidimus.' Zumpt, who places a note of interrogation after 'Stalenum,' supplies 'dicis.' But this artifice will not always answer. The 'mihi tu,' so placed, marks the contrast of the two persons, 'I, Cicero,' and 'you, Verres.' The original form of expression may have had a verb on which 'mihi' would depend, but usage established the formula without the verb, and it means as much as this: "What Bulbus, tell me if you can, what Stalenus, what monster ever of this kind, or what prodigious thing have we heard of or have we seen, that comes to terms with the accused, and then finally compromises with the accuser?" Compare "Tu mihi, quum circumsessus es," &c., Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 32. 'Transigat' and 'decidat' are both forensic words. 'Transigere' is to settle a matter with a person. Dig. 2. tit. 15, De Transactionibus.

mus, qui cum reo transigat, post cum accusatore decidat? honestos homines qui causam norint ableget a consilioque dimittat? ipse solus reum absolutum a quo pecuniam acceperit condemnet pecuniamque non reddat? Hunc hominem in iudicum numero habebimus? hic alteram decuriam senatoriam iudex obtinebit? hic de capite libero iudicabit? huic iudicialis tabella committetur? quam iste non modo cera verum etiam sanguine, si visum erit, notabit.

XXXIII. Quid enim horum se negat fecisse? Illud videlicet unum quod necesse est, pecuniam accepisse. Quidni iste neget? At eques Romanus qui Sopatrum defendit, qui omnibus ejus consiliis rebusque interfuit, Q. Minucius, juratus dicit pecuniam datam: juratus dicit Timarchidem dixisse majorem ab accusatoribus pecuniam dari: dicent hoc multi Siculi, dicent omnes Halicyenses, dicet etiam praetextatus Sopatri filius qui ab isto homine crudelissimo patre innocentissimo pecuniaque patria privatus est. Verum, si de pecunia testibus planum facere non possem, illud negare posses aut nunc negabis, te consilio tuo dimisso, viris primariis qui in consilio C. Sacerdoti fuerant tibi que esse solebant remotis, de re iudicata iudicavisse? teque eum quem C. Sacerdos, adhibito consilio, causa cognita, absolvisset, eundem, remoto consilio, causa incognita, condemnasse? Quum haec confessus eris quae in foro palam Syracusis, in ore atque in oculis provinciae gesta sunt, negato tum sane, si voles, pecuniam accepisse: reperies, credo, aliquem qui, quum haec quae palam gesta sunt videat, quaerat quid tu occulte egeris, aut qui dubitet utrum malit meis testibus an tuis defensoribus credere.

in iudicum numero] Zumpt has a note on this passage, in which he contends that 'in' is necessary; for the meaning is, as the context shows, "shall we allow this man to be one of the 'judices?' but, if 'in' were omitted, then the sense ought to be "to consider him as a 'iudex.'" Now, if this were the meaning, he contends that it ought to be 'numero iudicis.' He cites two examples where the plural is used in this sense, one from the Life of Agesilaus, by Nepos: "mirari se non sacrilegorum numero haberi," "he wondered that he was not considered a sacrilegious person;" and another from Suetonius (Caesar, c. 11). But he finds no such instance in Cicero, who uses such a phrase as (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 4) "accensus sit eo numero quo eum majores nostri esse voluerunt;" or he says 'numero aliquo,' and the like.

decuriam] There were, it is said, three 'decuriae,' each consisting of one hundred senators, out of which the 'judices' were chosen. The 'decuria,' says Gruter, is only another name for the 'album,' as Casaubon showed in his note on Sueton., August. c. 32.

The meaning of the word 'cera' is explained by reference to the coloured tablets mentioned in the Divinatio. Verres would colour his with human blood.

si visum erit,] 'Si usus erit:' Klotz. Two of the best MSS. have 'visus erit,' which may be a corruption of 'usus erit.'

33. Quid enim] 'Enim' merely marks the transition to another part of the subject. "Now what is there here that he will deny? Why, the one thing which he must deny, for it is his only defence—he will deny that any money has come to his hands. I should indeed be surprised if he did not deny it." The supposed defence of Verres is, that it could not be proved that he received the money.

Dixi jam antea me non omnia istius quae in hoc genere essent enumeraturum, sed electurum ea quae maxime excellerent.

XXXIV. Accipite nunc aliud ejus facinus nobile et multis locis saepe commemoratum, et ejusmodi ut in uno omnia maleficia inesse videantur. Attendite diligenter; invenietis enim id facinus natum a cupiditate, auctum per stuprum, crudelitate perfectum atque conclusum. Sthenius est, is qui nobis assidet, Thermitanus, antea multis propter summam virtutem summamque nobilitatem, nunc propter suam calamitatem atque istius insignem injuriam omnibus notus. Hujus hospitio Verres quum esset usus, et quum apud eum non modo Thermis saepenumero fuisset sed etiam habitasset, domo ejus omnia abstulit quae paulo magis animum cujuspian aut oculos possent commovere. Etenim Sthenius ab adolescentia paulo studiosius haec compararat, supellectilem ex aere elegantiores et Deliacam et Corinthiam, tabulas pictas, etiam argenti bene facti, prout Thermitani hominis facultates ferebant, satis. Quae quum esset in Asia adolescens studiose, ut dixi, compararat, non tam suae delectationis causa quam ad invitationes adventusque nostrorum hominum, suorum amicorum atque hospitem. Quae posteaquam iste omnia abstulit, alia rogando, alia poscendo, alia sumendo, ferebat Sthenius ut poterat;angebatur animi necessario quod domum ejus exornatam et instructam fere jam iste reddiderat nudam atque inanem. Verumtamen dolorem suum nemini imperiebat: praetoris injurias tacite, hospitis placide ferendas arbitrabatur. Interea iste cupiditate illa sua nota atque apud omnes

34. supellectilem] ‘Supellex’ was frequently the matter of a legacy, and accordingly the word obtained a legal signification (Dig. 33. tit. 10, De Supellectile Legata). Paulus (s. 3) gives a list of what is included in ‘supellex,’ namely, ‘mensae,’ ‘trapezophora,’ ‘delphica,’ and many other things. But the lawyers do not seem to have been quite agreed as to the extent of the meaning of the term. Alfenus says “supellectilis eas res esse puto quae ad usum communem patrisfamilias paratae essent, quae nomen sui generis separatim non haberent.” Alfenus was a contemporary of Cicero, though younger than Cicero. Labeo gives an absurd etymology of the word. The original nominative was ‘supellectilis,’ and the word means that which lies on the surface (super, leg), and it is the negative of that which is ‘solum,’ or fixed to the ‘solum.’ ‘Lectilis,’ a possible word, differs not in form from ‘fictilis.’ Originally, perhaps, ‘supellex’ denoted all the moveables; but, however this may be, it did not, in Cicero’s time and later, comprehend things which were included under other names, as ‘argentum,’ ‘vestis.’

Deliacam, &c.] Bronze vessels made at Delos and at Corinth, household utensils. As to these Delian and Corinthian bronzes, see Pliny, H. N., Lib. xxxiv. c. 2, &c., ed. Hard., and Cicero, Pro Sex. Roscio, c. 46. Pliny observes: “antiquissima aeris gloria Deliaco fuit, mercatus in Delo concelebrante toto orbe, et ideo cura officinis, tricliniorum pedibus fulcrisque.”

prout] This appears an odd juxtaposition of words, but it arose from an elliptical expression, ‘pro eo ut.’ See Lib. 3. c. 54.

angebatur] ‘Tangebatur tamen animi dolore necessario:’ Orelli. Zumpt has the same, except that he has ‘angebatur;’ but in his Appendix he approves of the omission of ‘tamen’ and ‘dolore.’ The reading in the text is that of Klotz and of the Cod. Vat.

pervagata, quum signa quaedam pulcherrima atque antiquissima Thermis in publico posita vidisset, adamavit; a Sthenio petere coepit ut ad ea tollenda operam suam profiteretur seque adjuvaret. Sthenius vero non solum negavit, sed etiam ostendit id fieri nullo modo posse, ut signa antiquissima, monumenta P. Africani, ex oppido Thermitanorum, incolumi illa civitate imperioque populi Romani, tollerentur.

XXXV. Etenim, ut simul Africani quoque humanitatem et aequitatem cognoscatis, oppidum Himeram Karthaginienses quondam ceperunt; quod fuerat in primis Siciliae clarum et ornatum. Scipio, qui hoc dignum populo Romano arbitraretur, bello confecto socios sua per nostram victoriam recuperare, Siculis omnibus, Karthagine capta, quae potuit restituenda curavit. Himera deleta, quos cives belli calamitas reliquos fecerat, ii se Thermis collocarant, in isdem agri finibus neque longe ab oppido antiquo. Hi se patrum fortunas ac dignitatem recuperare arbitrabantur, quum illa majorum ornamenta in eorum oppido collocabantur. Erant signa ex aere complura: in his eximia pulchritudine ipsa Himera, in muliebrem figuram habitumque formata, ex oppidi nomine et fluminis. Erat etiam Stesichori poëtae statua senilis, incurva, cum libro, summo, 35. arbitraretur,] Zumpt has 'arbitratur,' from a single MS., Lag. 42. He says: 'neque interest, quomodo dicatur, utrum de Scipionis voluntate an simpliciter narrandi causa.' Cod. Vat. has 'arbitraretur;' and 'sua et sua sponte.'

Himera deleta,] Himera, on the north coast of Sicily, near the mouth of the river Himera, was founded by Chalcidians from Zancle or Messina (B.C. 649). In B.C. 467, after a great civil commotion, it received a large accession of citizens, Dorians and others, from Theron, tyrant of Agrigento (Agrigentum), and became a very flourishing place. In B.C. 409 it was destroyed by the Carthaginians, and never rebuilt (Diodorus, xi. 48). After the destruction of their city, the Carthaginians founded a new city at the hot springs (Thermae) in the neighbourhood, on the east side of the river; but the name of the former city was also retained, for the place was called Thermae Himeraeae (Polyb. i. 24). There is also an inscription: HIMERAEORVM THERMIT. The figure of a female, the symbol of Himera, appears on some of the coins of this city. A coin of the Principe of Torremuzza exhibits on one side Himera, the goddess of the river and the city, with a veil on the back part of the head, and with a mural crown; behind the head is a cornucopia. On the other side is the bald-headed, stooping old man, Stesichorus, resting on a strong staff, and reading in a roll. The inscription is ΘΕΡΜΙΤΩΝ ΙΜΕΡΑΙΩΝ. Visconti, Iconographie Grecque, quoted by Creuzer and Moser. The modern name is Termini. "The chalybeate sulphureous spring raises Fahrenheit's thermometer to 121°." Smyth's Sicily, p. 95.

eximia pulchritudine] Orelli has 'mira pulchritudine.' The Vat. Cod. has 'pulchritudine,' but in the preceding chapter 'pulcherrima.' This is probably one of the numerous words, the orthography of which was unsettled in Cicero's time, as appears from the passage (Orat. c. 48): "Quin ego ipse quum scirem ita majores locutos esse ut nusquam nisi in vocali adspiratione uterentur, loquebar sic, ut pulcros, Cetegos, triumphos, Kartaginem dicerem: aliquando idque sero convicio aurium quum extorta mihi veritas esset, usum loquendi populo concessi, scientiam mihi reservavi."

Stesichori] One of the oldest Greek lyric poets was born, as it appears, some time in the seventh century, B.C., in Sicily, but the place of his birth is not stated. Stesichorus lived at Himera some part of his life, as Cicero says, and Pausanias (iii.

ut putant, artificio facta; [ab eo] qui fuit Himerae, sed et est et fuit tota Graecia, summo propter ingenium honore et nomine. Haec iste ad insaniam concupiverat. Etiam, quod paene praeterii, capella quaedam est, ea quidem mire ut etiam nos qui rudes harum rerum sumus intelligere possimus, scite facta et venuste. Haec et alia Scipio non negligenter abjecerat ut homo intelligens Verres auferre posset, sed Thermitanis restituerat: non quo ipse hortos, aut suburbanum, aut locum omnino ubi ea poneret nullum haberet; sed quod, si domum abstulisset, non diu Scipionis appellarentur sed eorum ad quoscunque illius morte venissent: nunc his locis posita sunt ut mihi semper Scipionis fore videantur itaque dicantur.

XXXVI. Haec quum iste posceret, agereturque ea res in senatu, Sthenius vehementissime restitit; multaque, ut in primis Sicularum in dicendo copiosus est, commemoravit: urbem relinquere Thermitanos esse honestius quam pati tolli ex urbe monumenta majorum, spolia hostium, beneficia clarissimi viri, indicia societatis populi Romani atque amicitiae. Commoti animi sunt omnium: repertus est nemo quin mori diceret satius esse. Itaque hoc adhuc oppidum Verres invenit prope solum in orbe terrarum, unde nihil ejusmodi rerum de publico per vim, nihil occulte, nihil imperio, nihil gratia, nihil precario posset auferre. Verumtamen 19): but it is uncertain if it was his birth-place.

The words 'ab eo' make a difficulty. It is clear, as Klotz observes, that they are not to be connected with 'facta,' for 'qui fuit' undoubtedly refers to Stesichorus. Cicero means to connect Stesichorus with Himera in some way, but there is probably some corruption in the text. Klotz finds no difficulty in explaining 'ab eo:': "Cicero says, according to a Latin form of expression, used in common life, the more particular explanation of which we naturally cannot here enter upon—I mean that Stesichorus who resided at Himera," &c. Zumpt omits the words 'ab eo,' though it seems that the MSS., with few exceptions, have them. There seems no way of explaining 'ab eo.' The attempt of Klotz is ridiculous. The words 'qui fuit' seem in themselves insufficient: we want something more positive; and this which is wanted seems to lie in the corrupted words 'ab eo.' But if we observe that 'qui fuit Himerae' may be connected with 'summo . . . nomine,' we have only to consider the words interposed as a rapid parenthesis.

reading, who has no note on it; and it is affirmed (Creuzer and Moser) that there is not a single MS. authority in favour of it: but still I keep it. Klotz and Orelli have 'possumus.' The expression 'mire—scite facta et venuste' has also caused difficulty. But there is none. Cicero stops at 'mire' and introduces a passing remark, and then he resumes by a word, which is not a repetition of 'mire,' but apt enough for the purpose.

sed quod, si] Orelli and Klotz omit 'quod,' which is only in one MS.; but one is enough, when it supplies what is manifestly wanted.

36. Thermitanos] 'Thermitanis,' Zumpt, from Lag. 42 (pr. m.), a reading to which in itself there is no objection.

nihil precario] Zumpt and Orelli have 'nihil pretio.' Klotz has 'nihil precario' from several MSS. and Lag. 42; and there is some reason for preferring it. Verres wished to get the statues into his possession, but not by purchase. Cicero adds that he found he could not do it either by force, by stealth, nor by entreaty in the way of 'precario.' The passage seems to be an allusion to the three 'vitia possessionis,' or hasce ejus cupiditates exponam alio loco: nunc ad Sthenium revertar. Iratus iste vehementer Sthenio et incensus hospitium renuntiat: domo ejus emigrat atque adeo exit: nam jam ante migrarat. Eum autem inimicissimi Sthenii domum suam statim invitant ut animum ejus in Sthenium inflammarent ementiendo aliquid et criminando. Hi autem erant inimici Agathinus, homo nobilis, et Dorotheus, qui habebat in matrimonio Callidamam, Agathini ejus filiam de qua iste audierat. Itaque ad generum Agathini migrare maluit. Una nox intercesserat quum iste Dorotheum sic diligebat ut diceret omnia inter eos esse communia; Agathinum ita observabat ut aliquem affinem ac propinquum. Contemnere etiam signum illud Himeræ jam videbatur, quod eum multo magis figura et lineamenta hospitæ delectabant.

XXXVII. Itaque hortari homines coepit ut aliquid Sthenio periculi crearent criminisque confingerent. Dicebant se illi nihil habere quod dicerent. Tum iste his aperte ostendit et confirmavit eos in Sthenium quidquid vellent simul atque ad se detulissent probaturos. Itaque illi non procrastinant: Sthenium statim educunt: aiunt ab eo literas publicas esse corruptas. Sthenius postulat ut quum secum sui cives agant de literis publicis corruptis, ejusque rei legibus Thermitanorum actio sit; senatusque et populus Romanus Thermitanis, quod semper in amicitia fideque mansissent, urbem, agros, legesque suas reddidisset; Publiusque Rupilius postea leges ita Siculis ex senatus consulto de decem legatorum wrongful modes of obtaining possession, as in Pro Caecina, c. 32: 'ut nec vi nec clam nec precario possederit;' and Terence, Eunuch. ii. 3. 27: 'hanc tu mihi vel vi vel clam vel precario fac tradas.' Ulpian says (Dig. 43. 26. 2), "habere precario videtur qui possessionem vel corporis vel juris adeptus est, ex hac solummodo causa, quod preces adhibuit et impetravit ut sibi possidere aut uti liceat." See Savigny, Das Recht des Besitzes, Interdictum de precario.

emigrat, &c.] Cicero corrects the expression 'emigrat' by the words 'adeo exit.' "Verres moves off from his house with bag and baggage, or rather simply quits it, for he had moved off all his baggage, his plunder, before." Garatoni explains 'migrare' to signify a man's sending his goods from a house which he is going to quit to another house which he is going to inhabit, and this is called 'migrare,' though the man has not yet quitted the house which he intends to leave. Perhaps 'emigrat' ought to be 'migrat,' as in Lag. 42, for the difference is made by the tense of the verb, and not by the preposition in 'emigrat.'

affinem, &c.] The insinuation is that Verres lay with Callidama, and accordingly looked on her father as an 'affinis,' as if he had become his daughter's husband. Comp. c. 14.

37. ostendit et confirmavit] The reading of this passage is doubtful. It stands thus in Klotz: "tum iste his aperte ostendit et confirmavit eos: in Sthenium quidquid vellent dicerent: simul atque ad se detulissent, probaturos;" which I do not believe to be the genuine text. The word 'dicerent' is not in Cod. Metell. nor in Lag. 42.

ejusque rei] Half a dozen of the older editors have 'ejusce' for 'ejusque,' and this false reading is in Cod. Metell. Zumpt correctly remarks of 'ejusce'—'verbum ipsum nullum est, nec possis h. l. copula egere.'

sententia dedisset ut cives inter sese legibus suis agerent; idemque hoc haberet Verres ipse in edicto—ut de his omnibus causis se ad leges rejiceret. Iste, homo omnium aequissimus atque a cupiditate remotissimus, se cogniturum esse confirmat: paratum ad causam dicendam venire hora VIII jubet. Non erat obscurum quid homo improbus ac nefarius cogitaret: neque enim ipse satis occultarat nec mulier tacere potuerat. Intellectum est id istum agere ut, quum Sthenium sine ullo argumento ac sine teste damnasset, tum homo nefarius de homine nobili, atque id aetatis, suoque hospite, virgis supplicium crudelissime sumeret. Quod quum esset perspicuum, de amicorum hospitumque suorum sententia Thermis Sthenius Romam profugit: hiemi sese fluctibusque committere maluit quam non istam communem Siculorum tempestatem calamitatemque vitare.

XXXVIII. Iste homo certus et diligens ad horam VIII praesto est: Sthenium citari jubet. Quem posteaquam videt non adesse, dolore ardere atque iracundia furere coepit: Venereos domum Sthenii mittere, equis circum agros ejus villasque dimittere. Itaque dum exspectat quidnam sibi certi afferatur, ante horam tertiam noctis de foro non discedit. Postridie mane descendit: Agathinum ad se vocat: jubet eum de literis publicis in absentem Sthenium dicere. Erat ejusmodi causa ut ille ne sine adversario quidem apud inimicum judicem reperire posset quid diceret. Itaque tantum verbo posuit, Sacerdote praetore Sthenium literas publicas corrupisse. Vix ille hoc dixerat quum iste pronuntiat, Sthenium literas publicas corrupisse videri: et hoc praeterea addit homo Venereus, haberet] So in Lag. 42. Orelli and Klotz have 'habuerit,' which is wrong.

ad leges rejiceret.] Sthenius claimed to be tried by the 'leges' of his own city, which Cicero expresses by a usual 'formula': he called on Verres to bring the matter to issue in the way provided by law, to refer (rejicere) the decision to a properly constituted court. Cicero says (Ad Div. xiii. 14): "ea res a Volcatio qui Romae jus dicit rejecta in Galliam est."

a cupiditate] 'A cupiditate omnium remotissimus:' Klotz. In place of 'omnium' we may read 'omni,' with two good MSS.

sine ullo argumento] 'Nulla ratione, nulla causa,' says P. Manutius, and he compares c. 45: 'Quid tandem habuit argumenti,' &c. The translation of 'argumentum' by 'argument' will not always do. The use of the word in Lib. 4. c. 56, id aetatis,] The expression has occurred before, c. 14, and Act. ii. Lib. 1. c. 36. 'Id temporis' occurs in the next chapter.

'ex ebori . . perfecta argumenta,' is worth notice.

38. Venereos] These Venerei were 'viatores' and 'apparitores.'—'equis circum agros,' &c., 'on horseback he sends them in various directions.' Most of the MSS. and Orelli have 'equites circum,' &c.

corrupisse videri:] Klotz refers to a note of Hotmann on this word 'videri.' Hotmann refers to Cicero, Academ. ii. 47: "quaeque jurati judices cognovissent, ea non ut esse facta, sed ut videri pronuntiarent." The form, then, in which the 'judex' pronounced his judgment, and the 'praetor' also, as it appears from this passage, was not 'Fecit,' but 'Fecisse videtur.' The Roman jurists, in giving their 'responsa,' used the word 'videtur,' as in Dig.

novo modo, nullo exemplo, ob eam rem HS 10 Veneri Erycinae de Sthenii bonis exacturum: bonaque ejus statim coepit vendere: et vendidisset, si tantulum morae fuisset quo minus ei pecunia illa numeraretur. Ea posteaquam numerata est, contentus hac iniquitate iste non fuit: palam de sella ac tribunali pronuntiat, si quis absentem Sthenium rei capitalis reum facere vellet, sese ejus nomen recepturum: et simul ut ad causam accederet nomenque deferret, Agathinum, novum affinem atque hospitem, coepit hortari. Tum ille clare, omnibus audientibus, se id non esse facturum, neque se usque eo Sthenio esse inimicum ut eum rei capitalis affinem esse diceret. Hic tum repente Pacilius quidam, homo egens et levis, accedit: ait, si liceret, nomen absentis deferre se velle. Iste vero et licere et fieri solere et se recepturum: itaque defertur. Edicit statim ut Kalendis Decembr. adsit Sthenius Syracusis. Hic, qui Romam pervenisset, satisque feliciter anni jam adverso tempore navigasset, omniaque habuisset aequiora et placabiliora quam animum praetoris atque hospitis, rem ad amicos suos detulit; quae, ut erat acerba et indigna, sic videbatur omnibus.

XXXIX. Itaque in senatu continuo Cn. Lentulus et L. Gellius consules faciunt mentionem, placere statui, si patribus conscriptis videretur, ne absentes homines in provinciis rei fierent rerum capitalium: causam Sthenii totam et istius crudelitatem et iniquitatem senatum docent. Aderat in senatu Verres, pater istius, et flens unumquemque senatorem rogabat ut filio suo parceret; neque tamen multum proficiebat: erat enim summa voluntas senatus.

15. 3. 16. It was not the Roman fashion either for 'judex' or jurist to pronounce absolutely, but to express opinion; not that the opinion was doubtful: it was a form of expression considered more suitable to the fallibility of human judgment. It appears, from the passage of the 'Academica' just referred to, that a witness did not affirm absolutely, but used the word 'arbitrari.' Klotz refers also to the oration Pro M. Fonteio, c. 9: "qui primum illud verbum consideratissimum nostrae consuetudinis, Arbitror, quo nos etiam tunc utimur quum ea dicimus jurati quae comperta habemus, quae ipsi vidimus, ex toto testimonio suo sustulit atque omnia se scire dixit." Comp. also Pro A. Caecina, c. 25, and the use of 'videbatur' at the end of this chapter, and 'videretur' in the following chapter.

HS 10] The common reading is 'HS quingenties,' for which Zumpt has substituted what stands in the text, 'quingenties' being manifestly too large a sum. Hotmann's conjecture is 'quingenta,' i. e. 'millia,' and so Zumpt intends his symbols to be read, but he has preferred giving the symbols, in order that the origin of the corruption may appear.

rei capitalis affinem] 'Affinis' here means 'guilty of,' 'implicated.' Forcellini gives other examples: In Cat. iv. 3, &c. Some of the critics have laboured to show that 'affinem' is a blunder in the MSS., but their labour is unnecessary.

quae, ut erat, &c.] Orelli has 'erant,' 'videbantur.'

39. summa voluntas] This expression means 'heartly good-will or mind towards a purpose,' which, in this case, was to rescind the act of Verres. Hotmann compares another expression of Cicero: "summa accusatoris voluntate."

Itaque sententiae dicebantur, Quum Sthenius absens reus factus esset, de absente iudicium nullum fieri placere, et si quod esset factum id ratum esse non placere. Eo die transigi nihil potuit, quod et id temporis erat, et ille, pater istius, invenerat homines qui dicendo tempus consumerent. Postea senex Verres defensores atque hospites omnes Sthenii convenit: rogat eos atque orat ne oppugnent filium; de Sthenio ne laborent; confirmat his curaturum se esse ne quid ei per filium suum noceretur; se homines certos ejus rei causa in Siciliam et terra et mari esse missurum. Et erat spatium dierum fere triginta ante Kalendas Decembr. quo die iste ut Syracusis Sthenius adesset edixerat. Commoventur amici Sthenii; sperant fore ut patris literis nuntiisque filius ab illo furore revocetur. In senatu postea causa non agitur. Veniunt ad istum domestici nuntii, literasque a patre afferunt ante Kalendas Decembr., quum isti etiam tum de Sthenio in integro tota res esset: eodemque ei tempore de eadem re literae complures a multis ejus amicis ac necessariis afferuntur.

XL. Hic iste, qui prae cupiditate neque officii sui neque periculi neque pietatis neque humanitatis rationem habuisset unquam, neque in eo quod monebatur auctoritatem patris, neque in eo quod rogabatur voluntatem anteponendam putavit libidini suae, mane Kalendis Decembr., ut edixerat, Sthenium citari jubet. Si abs te istam rem parens tuus alicujus amici rogatu, benignitate aut ambitione adductus, petisset, gravissima tamen apud te voluntas patris esse debuisset: quum vero abs te tui capitis causa peteret, hominesque certos domo misisset, hique eo tempore ad te venissent quum tibi in integro tota res esset, ne tum quidem te potuit, si non pietatis, at salutis tuae ratio ad officium sanitatemque reducere? Citat id temporis] 'So late in the day.' Ernesti misunderstood it. The senate did not sit after sun-set, or, at least, did not come to any formal resolution after sun-set, as a general rule.

homines certos] 'Certus,' which is the same as 'cretus,' 'separated,' 'determined,' and so forth, is sometimes used like the pronoun 'quidam,' as in this passage, and some other passages of Cicero.

in integro] 'Integra:' Orelli, for which also there is good authority. But see the next chapter, and Livy, iii. 10.

40. rogatu, benignitate, &c.] Cicero supposes three motives or inducements, the request of a friend, good intention, or a desire to get good-will or good opinion. The word 'ambitio,' which had the original signification of going about, came to signify means of conciliating opinion, popularity, and so forth. A word of the same origin, 'ambitus,' was used to signify the legal offence of getting votes by bribery and improper means. Comp. the use of 'ambitio' in c. 55, and in the letter Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 3.

tui capitis causa] 'Out of regard to your own personal interest and danger;' for the acts of Verres made him liable to a prosecution in which his 'caput' or civil 'status' was in peril, not his life. In this chapter Cicero uses the expression 'cum periculo capitis,' at the risk or hazard of life, in a different and not in a technical sense.

reum: non respondet. Citat accusatorem. Attendite, quaeso, iudices, quanto opere istius amentiae fortuna ipsa adversata sit, et simul videte qui Sthenii causam casus adjuverit. Citatus accusator, M. Pacilius, nescio quo casu non respondit; non affuit. Si praesens Sthenius reus esset factus, si manifesto in maleficio teneretur, tamen, quum accusator non adesset, Sthenium condemnari non oporteret. Etenim, si posset reus absente accusatore condemnari, non ego a Vibone Veliam parvulo navigio inter fugitivorum ac praedonum ac tua tela venissem; quo tempore omnis illa mea festinatio fuit cum periculo capitis ob eam causam ne tu ex reis eximerere, si ego ad diem non affuissem. Quod igitur tibi erat in tuo iudicio optatissimum, me quum citatus essem non adesse, cur id Sthenio non putasti prodesse oportere, quum ejus accusator non affuisset? Itaque fecit ut exitus principio simillimus reperiretur: quem absentem reum fecerat, eum absente accusatore condemnat.

XLI. Nuntiabatur illi primis illis temporibus, id quod pater quoque ad eum pluribus verbis scripserat, agitatum rem esse in senatu: etiam in contione tribunum plebis de causa Sthenii M. Palicanum esse questum: postremo me ipsum apud hoc collegium tribunorum plebis, quum eorum omnium edicto non liceret Romae quemquam esse qui rei capitalis condemnatus esset, egisse causam Sthenii: et quum ita rem exposuissem quemadmodum nunc apud vos, docuissemque hanc damnationem duci non oportere, x tribunos plebis hoc statuuisse idque de omnium sententia pronuntiatum esse, Non videri Sthenium impediri edicto quo minus ei liceret Romae esse. Quum haec ad istum afferrentur, pertimuit aliquando et commotus est: vertit stilum in tabulis suis, quo facto causam omnem evertit Vibone, &c.] The orator is alluding to his return from Sicily, and says that he went in a small vessel from Vibo (Monte Leone) to Velia (Castellamare della Bruca), and ran the risk of being captured by pirates, or assassinated by the emissaries of Verres.

cur id Sthenio] I have adopted 'id' from the text of Creuzer and Moser. There is some authority for it, and a careful reader will feel that it is wanted.

41. primis illis] Within the time immediately after the condemnation of Sthenius; like 'paucis illis diebus,' c. 26.—'in contione,' with t, 'omnes Lagom.' (Zumpt).

edicto non liceret] It appears that the 'tribuni plebis' had the power of making 'edicta' or general orders, as the Praetors and the Aediles Curules had in their several jurisdictions. Cicero here represents himself as defending the cause of Sthenius before the 'collegium' or body of 'tribunes,' which shows that they held a court for matters within their jurisdiction, which were either cases of appeal, or cases in which they had original jurisdiction.—'quum eorum omnium:' Klotz has 'quod,' &c., from Cod. Vat.

damnationem duci] 'That Sthenius should not be considered as condemned,' says Hotmann, and this seems to be the meaning.—'ad decem tribunos plebis,' &c.: Klotz, following the Cod. Vat., which, however, has 'at,' and not 'ad.' But there is no occasion to follow a good MS. when the reading is absurd. Klotz in his note repents of what he did in the text.

vertit stilum] Verres erased with the upper or flat end of the 'stilus' what he suam. Nihil enim sibi reliqui fecit quod defendi aliqua ratione posset. Nam si ita defenderet: recepi nomen absentis; licet hoc fieri in provincia; nulla lex vetat; mala et improba defensione verum aliqua tamen uti videretur. Postremo illo desperatissimo perfugio uti posset, se imprudentem fecisse, existimasse id licere: quamquam haec perditissima defensio est, tamen aliquid dici videretur. Tollit ex tabulis id quod erat: facit coram esse delatum.

XLII. Hic videte in quot se laqueos induerit, quorum ex nullo se unquam expediret. Primum ipse in Sicilia saepe et palam de loco superiore dixerat et in sermone multis idem demonstrarat, licere nomen recipere absentis: se exemplo multorum fecisse quod fecisset. Haec eum dictitasse priore actione et Sex. Pompeius Chlorus dixit, de cujus virtute antea commemoravi, et Cn. Pompeius Theodorus, homo et Cn. Pompeii clarissimi viri iudicio plurimis maximisque in rebus probatissimus et omnium existimatione ornatissimus, et Posides Macro Soluntinus, homo summa nobilitate, existimatione, virtute: et hac actione quam voletis multi dicent, et qui ex isto ipso audierunt, viri primarii nostri ordinis, et alii qui interfuerunt quum absentis nomen reciperetur. Deinde Romae, quum haec acta res esset in senatu, omnes istius amici, in his etiam pater ejus hoc defendebat licere fieri; saepe esse factum; iste quod fecisset, aliorum exemplo institutoque fecisse. Dicit praeterea testimonium tota Sicilia, quae in communibus pos-had written with the lower or pointed end on his 'tabulae.' 'Tollit ex tabulis id quod erat: facit coram esse delatum.' Horace has the expression, "Saepe stilum vertas iterum quae digna legi sunt Scripturus" (Hor. 1 Sat. x. 72). There is obviously a play on the words 'vertit' and 'evertit.'

Postremo illo] Zumpt adds 'tamen' after 'illo,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m.).—'et facit:' Orelli, Klotz.

42. expediret.] 'Expediet:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat. Either reading may be explained.

de loco superiore] This may be either the 'Rostra,' as when an orator addresses the people, or the tribunal, from which the 'magistratus' declares his will; as in Lib. 4. c. 40: "de sella ac de loco superiore." Creuzer and Moser refer to Cic. Ad Fam. iii. 8: "et ex superiore et ex aequo loco." In the senate a man spoke 'ex aequo loco.'

idem demonstrarat,] This 'idem' and 'multorum' (exemplo multorum) are added by Klotz from the Cod. Vat.

Soluntinus,] The form in Zumpt's text is 'Soluntinus,' which is according to analogy, for the name of the place is Solus (Σολοῦς, Σολοῦντος), like Opus, of which the Latin Ethnic name is Opuntius. From Solus we should have Soluntii. The coins of Solus have the legend Σολοντίων. The place was on the north coast of Sicily, between Panhormus and Thermae, now Castello di Solanto.—Zumpt has 'Macros,' and Orelli 'Matro.' Klotz has 'Posidius.'

quam voletis multi] 'As many as you please.' This form of expression must be compared with the like uses of 'quamvis.' See Forcellini. Act. i. c. 8: "quantam velent pecuniam;" Lib. 2, c. 58: "quam volent magnas;" and c. 62, "quem voles eorum."—'isto ipso:' 'ipso' om. Cod. Vat.

audierunt . . interfuerunt] The common reading is 'audierint . . interfuerint.' Zumpt adds 'sed ejus conjunctivi vereor ut quis rationem reddere possit, immo si verus esset, oratoris de ea re certitudinem minuere videretur.' This points to the true reason for the indicative. Cicero means to make a substantive affirmation. The Cod. Vat. has the indicatives.

tulatis civitatum omnium consulibus edidit, Rogare atque orare patres conscriptos, ut statuerent ne absentium nomina reciperentur. Qua de re Cn. Lentulum, patronum Siciliae, clarissimum adolescentem, dicere audistis, Siculos, quum se causam quae sibi in senatu pro his agenda esset docerent, de Sthenii calamitate questos esse, propterque hanc injuriam quae Sthenio facta esset eos statuuisse, ut hoc quod dico postularetur. Quae quum ita essent, tantane amentia praeditus atque audacia fuisti ut in re tam clara, tam testata, tam abs te ipso promulgata, tabulas publicas corrumpere auderes? At quemadmodum corrupisti? nonne ita ut omnibus nobis tacentibus ipsae te tuae tabulae condemnare possent? Cedo, quaeso, codicem: circumfer, ostende. Videtisne hoc totum nomen, coram ubi facit delatum, esse in litura? Quid fuit istic antea scriptum? quod mendum ista litura correxit? Quid a nobis, iudices, exspectatis argumenta hujus criminis? Nihil dicimus: tabulae sunt in medio quae se corruptas atque interlitas esse clamant. Ex his etiam tu rebus effugere te posse confidis, quum te nos non opinione dubia sed tuis vestigiis persequamur, quae tu in tabulis publicis expressa ac recentia reliquisti? Is mihi etiam Sthenium literas publicas corrupisse causa incognita judicavit, qui defendere non potuerit se non ex ipsius Sthenii nomine literas publicas corrupisse?

XLIII. Videte porro aliam amentiam: videte ut, dum expedire sese vult, induat. Cognito rem adscribit Sthenio—quem? cognatum promulgata,] The MSS. have 'pervulgata,' except Lag. 42 (pr. m.), which has 'promulgata' (Zumpt). The corruption of 'promulgata' into 'peruulgata,' which Orelli has, is very simple. As to 'promulgare,' see c. 71. The word here refers to what Verres had declared: 'saepe et palam de loco superiore.'

Cedo, quaeso, &c.] "Give me, I pray, the 'codex.'" This word occurs in the form 'cedo' and 'cede' only. 'Cedo' has also the sense of 'dic,' as in c. 43. Cicero addresses some officer of the court in the same manner as the Greek orators often call for the production of some documentary evidence. Demosth. περὶ παραπρεσβείας, c. 40: καὶ μοι λέγε τὸ ψήφισμα καὶ τὰ γράμματα καὶ τοὺς μάρτυρας κάλει.

Is mihi etiam Sthenium] As to the position of 'is' and 'mihi,' and the meaning thus given to the sentence, compare Lib. 1. c. 60: "Is mihi queritur;" and Lib. 2. c. 32. Hotmann proposed 'judicabit' in place of 'judicavit,' but without any reason.

Zumpt translates the passage thus into German: "und der hat mir noch einen andern verurtheilt, der sich jetzt selbst nicht hat rechtfertigen können." The English language can no more express the German 'mir' than the Latin 'mihi,' except by several words.

43. amentiam:] The reading of the better MSS. Orelli has 'dementia.' Zumpt says: "dementia mentis repentina perturbatio est, amentia perpetua hebetudo et stultitia." These attempts to distinguish Latin words which are near akin are often unsuccessful; and perhaps we attempt sometimes to make distinctions where the Romans themselves would not have found it easy to do so. How these two words are distinguished in Cicero, I do not know. The law-writers sometimes use 'demens' as equivalent to 'furiosus' (Dig. 27. 10. 7), which is the technical term in the Twelve Tables for a person of unsound mind.

Cognito rem adscribit] Verres made an entry in the 'tabulae,' among other false aliquem aut propinquum? Non. Thermitanum aliquem, honestum hominem ac nobilem? Ne id quidem. At Siculum in quo aliquis splendor dignitasque esset? Neminem. Quid igitur? Civem Romanum. Cui hoc probari potest? Quum esset Sthenius civitatis suae nobilissimus, amplissima cognatione, plurimis amicitiiis; quum praeterea tota Sicilia multum auctoritate et gratia posset; invenire neminem Siculum potuit qui pro se cognitor fieret? hoc probabis? An ipse civem Romanum maluit? Cedo, cui Siculo, quum is reus fieret, civis Romanus cognitor factus unquam sit. Omnium praetorum literas qui ante te fuerunt profer, explica: si unum inveneris, ego hoc tibi quemadmodum in tabulis scriptum habes, ita gestum esse concedam. At, credo, Sthenius hoc sibi amplum putavit, eligere e civium Romanorum numero, ex amicorum atque hospitum suorum copia, quem cognitorem daret. Quem delegit? quis in tabulis scriptus est? C. Claudius, C. F. Palatina. Non quaero, quis hic sit Claudius, quam splendidus, quam honestus, quam idoneus propter cuius auctoritatem et dignitatem Sthenius ab omnium Siculorum consuetudine discederet et civem Romanum cognitorem daret. Nihil horum quaero. Fortasse enim Sthenius non splendorem hominis sed familiaritatem secutus est. Quid si omnium mortalium Sthenio nemo inimicior quam hic C. Claudius quum semper tum in his ipsis rebus et temporibus fuit? si de literis corruptis contra venit? si contra omni ratione pugnavit? utrum potius pro Sthenio inimicum cognitorem esse factum an te ad Sthenii periculum inimici ejus nomine abusum esse credemus?

entries, after the erasure above mentioned, that he had named a 'cognitor' or attorney to represent Sthenius in his absence. See Divin. 4: 'cognitorem.'

Neminem. Quid igitur?] 'Minime. Quid igitur?' is the common reading; but there is good authority for 'Neminem.'

probabis?] This is clearly the true reading, and not 'probabit.' 'Probo' means not only to 'approve,' as we say, but to 'prove,' to 'make people accept and believe.' See the use of 'probabilis,' p. 33. — 'gestum esse concedo.' Zumpt.

Palatina.] C. Claudius, Claudii Filius, Palatina. The last word is in the ablative case, and is equivalent to 'ex tribu Palatina.' The letters C. F. are the usual Roman form of abbreviation in inscriptions, and in formally describing a person.

contra venit?] This is a court phrase, or judicial expression, as Manutius observes, and he gives other instances. Comp. Pro Q. Rosc. c. 6: "Quid tu, Saturi, qui contra hunc venis, existimas aliter?" This C. Claudius 'contra venit;' he was the enemy of Sthenius in the matter of the 'literae corruptae,' with which Sthenius was charged.

utrum potius, &c.] If all this is so, "which must we rather believe, that the enemy of Sthenius was made his 'cognitor,' or that you, in the record of his condemnation, falsely inserted the name of his enemy?" Either conclusion is against Verres: we must either believe that the enemy of Sthenius was made his 'cognitor,' or that Verres falsely recorded him as such. Zumpt and Klotz explain 'periculum' in this passage, following Ernesti, to be the record or the register of the fact of condemnation; and they compare the use of 'pericula' in Lib. 3. c. 79: "tabulae publicae periculae magistratuum." Klotz also refers to Cujas on the Cod. Theod. 7. tit. 44: "De sententiis ex periculo recitandis." The common reading is 'in Sthenii periculo.'

XLIV. Ac ne quis forte dubitet cujusmodi hoc totum sit negotium, tametsi jamdudum omnibus istius improbitatem perspicuam esse confido, tamen paulum etiam attendite. Videtis illum subcrispo capillo, nigrum, qui eo vultu nos intuetur ut sibi ipsi peracutus esse videatur, qui tabulas tenet, qui scribit, qui monet, qui proximus est? Is est Claudius, qui in Sicilia sequester istius, interpretes, confector negotiorum, prope collega Timarchidi numerabatur, nunc obtinet eum locum ut vix Apronio illi de familiaritate concedere videatur, et qui se non Timarchidi sed ipsius Verris collegam et socium esse dicebat. Dubitate etiam, si potestis, quin eum iste potissimum ex omni numero delegerit cui hanc cognitoris falsi improbam personam imponeret, quem et huic inimicissimum et sibi amicissimum esse arbitraretur? Hic vos dubitabitis, iudices, tantam istius audaciam, tantam crudelitatem, tantam injuriam vindicare? dubitabitis exemplum iudicum illorum sequi qui, damnato Cn. Dolabella, damnationem Philodami Opuntii resciderunt, quod is non absens reus factus esset, quae res iniquissima et acerbissima est, sed quum ei legatio jam Romam a suis civibus esset data? Quod illi iudices multo in leviori causa statuerunt aequitatem secuti, vos id statuere in gravissima causa, praesertim aliorum auctoritate jam confirmatum, dubitabitis?

XLV. At quem hominem, C. Verres, tanta, tam insigni injuria affecisti? quem hominem absentem de literis corruptis causa incognita condemnasti? cujus absentis nomen recepisti? quem absentem non modo sine crimine et sine teste verum etiam sine accusatore damnasti? Quem hominem? dii immortales! non dicam amicum tuum, quod apud homines carissimum est, non hospitem, quod sanctissimum est; nihil enim minus libenter de Sthenio commemoro, nihil aliud in eo quod reprehendi possit invenio, nisi quod legatio jam Romam] The ambassador or 'legatus' in this case was not absent when he was prosecuted; for, if he had been, his case would have been the same as that of Sthenius; but he had received his commission of ambassador, and during the time of his holding this function he enjoyed protection, even though he had not left his city for Rome. It was a general rule of Roman law that no man could be prosecuted while he was absent on business of the state; to confirm which Klotz refers to Dig. 48. 2. 12. The rule of Roman law, it appears, was applied to the city of Opus.

44. Timarchidi numerabatur, &c.] 'Timarchidi' is intended for the genitive. See c. 54. Zumpt observes that Garatoni proposes to write 'socium esse dicit,' which shows that he mistook the meaning. Claudius was reckoned (numerabatur) almost a colleague of Timarchides, but he used to call himself a colleague of Verres.

45. At quem hominem,] This is a favourite formula with Cicero, for which he had the example of Terence:

"At quem virum? quem ego optimum in vita viderim."—Phorm. iii. 2. 20.

The ? in this case is of no use.

The words after 'affecisti'—'quem hominem . . . condemnasti?' are omitted by Orelli and Zumpt. Klotz has admitted them; and there is good authority for it. Comp. c. 37, 38.

homo frugalissimus atque integerrimus te plenum stupri, flagitii, sceleris, domum suam invitavit, nisi quod, qui C. Marii, Cn. Pompeii, C. Marcelli, L. Sisennae, tui defensoris, ceterorum virorum fortissimorum hospes fuisset atque esset, ad eum numerum clarissimorum hominum tuum quoque nomen adscripsit. Quare de hospitio violato et de tuo isto nefario scelere nihil queror: hoc dico, non iis qui Sthenium norunt, hoc est, nemini eorum qui in Sicilia fuerunt: nemo enim ignorat quo hic in civitate sua splendore, qua apud omnes Siculos dignitate atque existimatione sit: sed ut illi quoque qui in ea provincia non fuerunt intelligere possint, in quo homine tu statueris exemplum ejusmodi, quod quum propter iniquitatem rei, tum etiam propter hominis dignitatem, acerbum omnibus atque intolerandum videretur.

XLVI. Estne Sthenius is qui omnes honores domi suae facillime quum adeptus esset, amplissime ac magnificentissime gessit? qui oppidum non maximum maximis ex pecunia sua locis communibus monumentisque decoravit? cujus de meritis in rem publicam Thermitanorum Siculosque universos fuit aenea tabula fixa Thermis in curia, in qua publice erat de hujus beneficiis scriptum et incisum; quae tabula tum imperio tuo revulsa nunc a me tamen deportata est, ut omnes ejus honores inter suos et amplitudinem possent cognoscere. Estne hic qui apud Cn. Pompeium, clarissimum virum, quum accusatus esset, quod propter C. Marii familiaritatem et hospitium contra rem publicam sensisse eum inimici et accusatores ejus dicerent, quumque magis invidioso crimine quam vero arcesseretur,

C. Marii, &c.] C. Marius, who was seven times consul; Cn. Pompeius Magnus, who was at this time (B.C. 70) consul; C. Marcellus, who had been ‘praetor’ of Sicily, and was a ‘judex’ at this trial; L. Cornelius Sisenna, an orator (Brutus, c. 64).

hoc dico,] ‘Id quod subjungitur,’ observes Manutius: ‘Estne Sthenius is,’ &c., c. 46.—‘tu statueris:’ Zumpt omits ‘tu.’

46. Estne Sthenius is, &c.] ‘Is not this the Sthenius?’ &c. This is the proper translation of ‘ne’ thus placed with the principal verb; as in Cic. Pro Mil. c. 14: “potuitne, quum domum ac deos penates suos illo oppugnante defenderet, jure se ulcisci?” But, when ‘ne’ is added to a noun or particle, it is that interrogative form which implies a negative answer; as in Lib. 3. c. 77: “his civitatibus omnisne pecunia . . . dissoluta est?” It is also used in sentences which express admiration or surprise, as if a thing were scarcely possible; Lib. 1. c. 18: “Apollinemne tu Deilium spoliare ausus es?” (Zumpt).

aenea tabula] His services were recorded on a tablet of bronze, which in Italy and Sicily was much used for public records, and for the preservation of ‘leges.’ The Tabula Heraclaea, the fragment of the Lex Servilia, and other ‘leges,’ have been thus preserved. Ovid, Metam. i. 91:

—“nec verba minacia fixo

apud Cn. Pompeium,] When Cn. Pompeius was sent into Sicily after Carbo, one of the partizans of Marius, whom he put to death. Plutarch, Pomp. c. 10.—‘statuerit:’ Klotz. The MSS. are said to have ‘statuerit,’ which Ernesti altered to ‘statueret.’

ita a Cn. Pompeio absolutus est ut in eo ipso iudicio Pompeius hunc hospitio suo dignissimum statueret? ita porro laudatus defensusque ab omnibus Siculis ut idem Pompeius non ab homine solum sed etiam a provincia tota se hujus absolute inire gratiam arbitraretur? Postremo estne hic qui et animum in rem publicam habuit ejusmodi, et tantum auctoritate apud suos cives potuit, ut perficeret in Sicilia solus, te praetore, quod non modo Siculus nemo sed ne Sicilia quidem tota potuisset, ut ex oppido Thermis nullum signum, nullum ornamentum, nihil ex sacro, nihil de publico attingeres; quum praesertim et essent multa praeclara, et tu omnia concupisses? Denique nunc vide quid inter te, cujus nomine apud Siculos dies festi agitantur et praeclara illa Verria celebrantur, cujus statuæ Romae stant inauratae, a communi Siciliae, quemadmodum inscriptum videmus, datae; vide, inquam, quid inter te et hunc Siculum, qui abs te est patrono Siciliae condemnatus, intersit. Hunc civitates ex Sicilia permultae testimonio suo legationibusque ad eam rem missis publice laudant: te omnium Siculorum patronum una Mamertina civitas, socia furtorum ac flagitiorum tuorum, publice laudat; ita tamen, novo more, ut legati laedant, legatio laudet; ceterae quidem civitates publice literis, legationibus, testimoniis accusant, queruntur, arguunt; si tu absolutus sis, funditus eversas se esse arbitrantur.

XLVII. Hoc de homine ac de hujus bonis etiam in Eryco monte monumentum tuorum flagitiorum crudelitatisque posuisti, in quo Sthenii Thermitani nomen adscriptum est. Vidi argenteum Cupidinem cum lampade. Quid tandem habuit argumenti aut rationis res quamobrem in eo potissimum Sthenianum praemium poneretur? utrum hoc signum cupiditatis tuae an tropaeum necessitudinis atque hospitii an amoris indicium esse voluisti? Faciunt hoc homines quos in summa nequitia non solum libido et voluptas animum . . . ejusmodi,] Zumpt thinks that 'animum ejusmodi' for 'tali animo' is rare. He refers to 'fuit ejusmodi,' c. 57. There seems nothing very peculiar in this expression, which, if I understand it right, is the same as 'praerogativam . . . ejusmodi,' &c., Act. i. c. 9; 'ejusmodi literas,' Lib. 2. c. 70; and corresponding to 'ejusmodi,' there is, Lib. 2. c. 75, 'cujusmodi praedo . . . fuerit,' Lib. 3. c. 74, 'frumentum ejusmodi . . . ut.' A dozen other examples will easily be found in these orations, in some of which 'ejusmodi' is used alone, and in other cases followed by 'ut.'

agitantur] 'Aguntur:' Zumpt. He has also 'cui statuæ,' with Orelli.

legati laedant, &c.] The embassy was sent to do Verres honour, but the members of whom it was composed still complained of his robberies and acts of violence.—'se eversas funditus esse arbitrantur' is the order in the Vat. Cod. followed by Klotz. There is no rule to determine such matters as these.

47. potissimum] 'Potissimum Veneri' Klotz. 'Potissimum' in this position Creuzer and Moser take as an adjective.

verum etiam ipsius nequitiae fama delectat, ut multis in locis notas ac vestigia suorum flagitiorum relinqui velint. Ardebat amore illius hospitae propter quam hospitii jura violarat. Hoc non solum sciri tum verum etiam commemorari semper volebat. Itaque ex illa ipsa re quam accusante Agathino gesserat, Veneri potissimum deberi praemium statuit, quae illam totam accusationem judiciumque conflarat. Putarem te gratum in deos, si hoc donum Veneri non de Sthenii bonis dedisses sed de tuis; quod facere debuisti, praesertim quum tibi illo ipso anno a Chelidone venisset hereditas. Hic ego si hanc causam non omnium Siculorum rogatu recepissem, si hoc a me muneris non universa provincia poposcisset, si me animus atque amor in rem publicam existimatioque offensa nostri ordinis ac judiciorum non hoc facere coëgisset, atque haec una causa fuisset, quod amicum atque hospitem meum Sthenium, quem ego in quaestura mea singulariter dilexissem, de quo optime existimassem, quem in provincia existimationis meae studiosissimum cupidissimumque cognossem, tam crudeliter, scelerate, nefarieque tractasses; tamen digna causa videretur cur inimicitias hominis improbissimi susceperem, ut hospitis salutem fortunasque defenderem. Fecerunt hoc multi apud majores nostros: fecit etiam nuper homo clarissimus Cn. Domitius, qui M. Silanum, consularem hominem, accusavit propter Aegritomari Transalpini hospitis injurias. Putarem me idoneum qui exemplum sequeretur humanitatis atque officii, proponeremque spem meis hospitibus ac necessariis, quod tutiorem sese vitam meo praesidio victuros esse arbitrarentur. Quum vero in communibus injuriis totius provinciae Sthenii quoque

Hic ego si, &c.] “Apodosis non respondet principio periodi Hic ego, cui aptius esset ‘tamen hanc causam dignam existimarem,’ si orator accurate componere verba voluisset” (Zumpt). This strange misconception seems to arise solely from the practice of putting a comma after ‘ego;’ thus, ‘hic ego, si.’ I suppose that if Cicero had said, which however he would not say, ‘hic si ego,’ Zumpt’s remark would hardly have been made. Compare Lib. 1. c. 61, where, however, Zumpt has ‘cui nisi ego,’ instead of ‘cui ego nisi.’ In Divin. c. 9, there is ‘Eum ego si putem, &c., facile intelligo,’ where ‘facile intelligo’ is not necessarily the form, because of the ‘eum ego si.’ The fact is, that ‘hic ego si’ is Cicero’s general form of expression, and not ‘hic si ego;’ for, if the ‘ego’ is used, it ought to come either first in the sentence, or as near the beginning as the claims of another word will allow. Examples are abundant: Divin. c. 8, ‘huic ego homini;’ ‘in quo ego quid,’ &c., not ‘in quo quid ego;’ c. 9, ‘hic ego de te;’ c. 13, ‘cujus ego ingenium.’ Act. i. c. 7, ‘quae ille si,’ &c., where, following a vicious practice, I have inadvertently allowed a comma to stand after ‘ille,’ as if ‘ille’ belonged to ‘dixisset,’ whereas it belongs to ‘noluisset.’ And again, Act. i. c. 10, read ‘quem ego hominem si,’ &c.

Creuzer and Moser fell into the same mistake as Zumpt. The pointing of Klotz shows that he understood it rightly.

Cn. Domitius,] See Divin. c. 20.—‘Transalpini hominis:’ Zumpt, from Lag. 42 (pr. m.) only; which reading we might prefer, if it were good criticism simply to take what we like best.

causa contineatur, multique uno tempore a me hospites atque amici publice privatimque defendantur, profecto vereri non debeo ne quis hoc, quod facio, non existimet me summi officii ratione impulsus coactumque suscepisse.

XLVIII. Atque ut aliquando de rebus ab isto cognitis iudicatisque et de iudiciis datis dicere desistamus, et, quoniam facta istius in his generibus infinita sunt, nos modum aliquem et finem orationi nostrae criminibusque faciamus, pauca ex aliis generibus sumemus. Audistis ob jus dicendum Q. Varium dicere procuratores suos isti centum triginta millia nummum dedisse: meministis Q. Varii testimonium, remque hanc totam C. Sacerdotis, hominis ornatissimi, testimonio comprobari: scitis Cn. Sertium, M. Modium, equites Romanos, sexcentos praeterea cives Romanos multosque Siculos dixisse se isti pecuniam ob jus dicendum dedisse. De quo crimine quid ego disputem quum id totum positum sit in testibus? quid porro argumenter qua de re dubitare nemo possit? An hoc dubitabit quisquam omnium quin is venalem in Sicilia jurisdictionem habuerit, qui Romae totum edictum atque omnia decreta vendiderit, et quin is ab Siculis ob decreta interponenda pecunias ceperit, qui M. Octavium Ligurem pecuniam ob jus dicendum poposcerit? Quod enim iste praeterea genus pecuniae cogendae praeteriit? quod non ab omnibus aliis praeteritum excogitavit? Ecqua res apud civitates Siculas expetitur in qua aut honos aliquis sit, aut potestas, aut procuratio, quin eam rem tu ad tuum quaestum nundinationemque hominum traduxeris?

XLIX. Dicta sunt priore actione et privatim et publice testimonia: legati Centuripini, Halesini, Catinenses, Panhormitanique dixerunt, multarum praeterea civitatum, jam vero privatim plurimi:

48. de iudiciis datis] To prevent a possible mistake, the reader may be reminded that 'iudicia dare' is the same as 'iudices dare.' Cicero has said before that the fortunes of all persons are in the power of those 'qui iudicia dant, et eorum qui iudicant.'

Cn. Sertium,] 'Sertium,' as Ernesti remarked, is an unknown gentile name. The MSS. have 'Sergium' and other varieties.

ob decreta interponenda] Of which Cicero has given instances in the cases of the 'bonorum possessio' of Heraclius and Epicrates. Gaius says (iv. 139): "Certis igitur ex causis Praetor aut Proconsul principaliter (in the first instance) auctoritatem suam finiendis controversiis praeponit; quod tum maxime facit cum de possessione aut quasi possessione inter aliquos contenditur." In this passage it has been suggested that we should read 'interponit' in place of 'praeponit.' The general distinction between the Decreta and the Interdicta is given by Gaius (iv. 140): "vocantur autem decreta cum fieri aliquid jubet, &c.; interdicta vero cum prohibet fieri," &c. aut honos aliquis, &c.] Cicero alludes to the universal venality which existed under the administration of Verres, when every 'honos,' such as the election of a senator; every 'potestas,' such as the office of a magistrate; every 'procuratio,' such as the discharge of any function, was to be bought. Instances are given in the following chapters. See 'curationes,' c. 51, and 'aliquem curatorem praeficere,' c. 58.

quorum ex testimoniis cognoscere potuistis tota Sicilia per triennium neminem ulla in civitate senatorem factum esse gratis, neminem, ut leges eorum sunt, suffragiis, neminem nisi istius imperio aut literis; atque in his omnibus senatoribus cooptandis non modo suffragia nulla fuisse, sed ne genera quidem spectata esse ex quibus in eum ordinem cooptari liceret, neque census, neque aetates, neque cetera Siculorum jura valuisse: quicumque senator voluerit fieri, quamvis puer, quamvis indignus, quamvis ex eo loco ex quo non liceret, si is pretio apud istum fieret idoneus ut vinceret, factum esse semper; non modo Siculorum nihil in hac re valuisse leges, sed ne ab senatu quidem populoque Romano datas. Quas enim leges sociis amicisque dat is qui habet imperium a populo Romano, auctoritatem legum dandarum ab senatu, hae debent et populi Romani et senatus existimari. Halesini pro multis ac magnis suis majorumque suorum in rem publicam nostram meritis atque beneficiis, suo jure nuper, L. Licinio Q. Mucio consulibus, quum haberent inter se controversias de senatu cooptando, leges ab senatu nostro petiverunt. Decrevit senatus honorifico s. c. ut his C. Claudius Appii filius Pulcher, praetor, de senatu cooptando leges conscriberet. C. Claudius, adhibitis omnibus Marcellis qui tum erant de eorum sententia leges Halesinis dedit; in quibus multa sanxit de aetate hominum ne qui minor triginta annis natu; de quaestu

49. cooptandis] 'Opto,' as already observed, is a word of selection; and 'co-optare' is said of bodies who, by election of the remaining members, supply the places which become vacant by death or otherwise. Cicero, De Divin. ii. 9, says of Caesar, "in eo senatu quem majore ex parte ipse cooptasset."—"atque in iis omnibus senatoribus:" Klotz, from Cod. Vat.—"quicumque senator voluerit:" the MSS. (two excepted) and Klotz have 'voluerat.'

si is pretio, &c.] The true reading is very doubtful. Klotz takes that of the Cod. Vat.: 'si is pretio apud istum idoneus, et vinceret,' and he has no difficulty in explaining it.

leges, . . datas.] 'Leges latas,' or 'per-latas,' is the term of Roman legislation, when a 'lex' was enacted in the proper form, on the proposal of some 'magistratus' ('qui tulit ad populum,' or 'qui tulit,' simply): but 'dare leges,' or 'conscribere leges,' is the term used when the Roman people, or those whom they empowered, made a 'lex' for the subject states.

ne qui minor, &c.] The common reading is 'ne quis.' The Romans seem to have used both forms in their 'leges.' 'Ne quis' is certainly used in the Lex Thoria. Garatoni proposes to change 'natu' into 'natus,' but Zumpt has proved that this change is not necessary. He says that, in all the cases where 'natus' occurs, the accusative is required. He gives various instances, to which may be added the following from the Lex Thoria: "quaeque ex eis (pequidibus) minus annum gnatae erunt post ea quam gnatae erunt." In such cases 'quam' may be omitted or inserted, as in Livy, 45. c. 32: "quos cum liberis majoribus quam quindecim annos natis praecedere in Italiam placeret." The Romans said 'minor quinque et triginta annis' (Liv. 32. c. 11): and they also often added 'natu,' as in this passage, and in the Praetor's Edict (Dig. 4. 4. 1): "Praetor edicit, quod cum minore quam quinque et viginti annorum natu gestum esse dicetur, uti quaeque res erit, animadvertam." The addition of 'quam' in this instance is no argument against the text of Cicero, for Ulpian adds this remark: "apparet minoribus annis xxv eum opem polliceri." Thus the text of Cicero is fully justified. Klotz has quem qui fecisset, ne legeretur; de censu, de ceteris rebus. Quae omnia ante istum praetorem et nostrorum magistratum auctoritate et Halesinorum summa voluntate valuerunt. Ab isto et praeco qui voluit illum ordinem pretio mercatus est, et pueri annorum senum septenumque denum senatorium nomen nundinati sunt: et quod Halesini, antiquissimi et fidelissimi socii atque amici, Romae impetrarant ut apud se ne suffragiis quidem fieri liceret, id pretio ut fieri posset effecit.

L. Agrigentini de senatu cooptando Scipionis leges antiquas habent, in quibus et illa eadem sancta sunt, et hoc amplius: quum Agrigentinarum duo genera sint, unum veterum, alterum colonorum, quos T. Manlius praetor ex s. c. de oppidis Siculorum deduxit Agrigentum, cautum est in Scipionis legibus ne plures essent in senatu ex colonorum numero quam ex vetere Agrigentinarum. Iste qui omnia jura pretio exaequasset omniumque rerum delectum atque discrimen pecunia sustulisset, non modo illa quae erant aetatis, ordinis, quaestusque permiscuit, sed etiam in his duobus generibus civium novorum veterumque turbavit. Nam quum esset ex veterum numero quidam senator demortuus, et quum ex utroque genere par numerus reliquus esset, veterem cooptari necesse erat legibus ut is amplior numerus esset. Quae quum ita se res haberet, tamen ad istum emptum venerunt illum locum senatorium non solum veteres verum etiam novi. Fit ut pretio novus vincat literasque a praetore auferat. Agrigentini ad istum legatos mittunt qui eum leges doceant consuetudinemque omnium annorum demonstrent, ut iste intelligeret ei se illum locum vendidisse, cui ne commercium

'natus.' These rules as to age, occupation, and fortune, were taken from the Roman practice.

50. T. Manlius] Zumpt says that this is the same person who is called in Livy (xxvii. 36) C. Mamilius, and that this colonization took place B.C. 207. He does not, however, alter the reading of the text.

demortuus,] This word is used when the discourse is of a person or thing that has died or perished, and another is to be put in its place; as in an example cited by Forcellini (Dig. 7. 1. 18): "in locum demortuarum arborum aliae substituendae." See Verr. Lib. 4. c. 5; and Mazochi, Tab. Herac. p. 407, and his note on the words 'nisi in demortui damnative locum.' It seems that the Romans did not say 'in mortui locum.' Mazochi's explanation of the reason for using the word 'demortuus'

litterasque, &c.] 'Litterasque a praetore adferat Agrigentum. Agrigentini:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat.; which reading may by some be preferred.

commercium] This term is perhaps hardly used by Cicero with strict propriety here. In its legal or political sense it signifies generally the power or capacity to buy and sell, not to buy and sell generally, but the symbolical buying and selling which the Romans called 'mancipatio.' In this case a thing was sold which was not vendible, and Cicero's expression means, that, admitting it to be a purchase, the purchaser was a man who was incapacitated from acquiring.—Klotz has 'cui neque commercium quidem esse oporteret.' But the Cod. Vat. has 'esset;' and, if we take that, we may reject 'oporteret.' See Lib. 3. c. 40.

quidem esse oporteret. Quorum oratione iste, quum pretium jam accepisset, ne tantulum quidem commotus est. Idem fecit Heracliae. Nam eo quoque colonos P. Rupilius deduxit, legesque similes de cooptando senatu et de numero veterum ac novorum dedit. Ibi non solum iste ut apud ceteros pecuniam accepit, sed etiam genera veterum ac novorum numerumque permiscuit.

LI. Nolite expectare dum omnes obeam oratione mea civitates. Hoc uno complector omnia, neminem isto praetore senatorem fieri potuisse nisi qui isti pecuniam dedisset. Hoc idem transfero in magistratus, curationes, sacerdotia: quibus in rebus non solum hominum jura sed etiam deorum immortalium religiones omnes repudiavit. Syracusis lex est de religione quae in annos singulos Jovis sacerdotem sortito capi jubeat, quod apud illos amplissimum sacerdotium putatur; quum suffragiis tres ex tribus generibus creati sunt, res revocatur ad sortem. Perfecerat iste imperio ut pro suffragio Theomnastus familiaris suus in tribus illis renuntiaretur: in sorte cui imperare non poterat expectabant homines quidnam acturus esset. Homo, id quod erat facillimum, primo vetat sortiri: jubet extra sortem Theomnastum renuntiari. Negant id Syracusani per religiones sacrorum ullo modo fieri posse: fas denique negant esse. Jubet iste sibi legem recitari. Recitatur, in qua scriptum erat, Ut quot essent renuntiati, tot in hydriam sortes conjicerentur: cujus nomen exisset ut is haberet id sacerdotium. Iste, homo ingeniosus et peracutus, Optime, inquit: nempe scriptum ita est, quot renuntiati erunt. Quot ergo, inquit, sunt renuntiati? Respondent, tres. Numquid igitur oportet nisi Heracliae.] Zumpt gives 'Heracliae' in place of the common reading 'Heracleae,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m.); and he says that the best MSS. always have 'Heraclienses.' The terminations -ia and -ea may have been used indifferently by the Romans to represent the Greek εἰα.

51. Jovis sacerdotem] Diodorus (xvi. 70) says that "Timoleon, after having made the younger Dionysius retire from Syracuse (B.C. 356), established the annual most honourable office, which the Syracusans call the ministry (ἀμφιπολία), of Zeus Olympius, and the first who was chosen minister of Zeus Olympius was Callimenes, and from this time the Syracusans reckoned their years by these magistrates (ἄρχοντες), until the writing of this history, and the change in their political condition; for, when the Romans made the Siceliots participators of the citizenship, the office of the ministers was lowered, having continued more than three hundred years." It lasted then till the Sicilians got the Latinitas or Jus Latii, in B.C. 44 (Ad Att. xiv. 12).

The word 'capere' is a Latin expression applied to the election of the Vestals and ministers of religion. See Gellius, i. 12.—'capi jubeat' was the reading of Gruter, which thence passed into other editions; but it was, according to Zumpt, merely a typographical error. Ernesti restored 'jubeat.' Compare 'oporteat' at the beginning of the next chapter.

pro suffragio] This means 'in the voting,' as Zumpt observes; and it is like the expression 'pro testimonio,' which Cicero has often used.

per religiones, &c.] 'Per religionem' would be the usual form.—'jubet ille:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat. and Lag. 42 (pr. m.). tres sortes conjici, unam educi? Nihil. Conjici jubet tres in quibus omnibus esset inscriptum nomen Theomnasti. Fit clamor maximus quum id universis indignum ac nefarium videretur. Ita Jovis illud sacerdotium amplissimum per hanc rationem Theomnasto datur.

LII. Cephaloedi mensis est certus quo mense sacerdotem maximum creari oporteat. Erat ejus honoris cupidus Artemo quidam, Climachias cognomine, homo sane locuples et domi nobilis. Sed is fieri nullo modo poterat si Herodotus quidam adesset: ei locus ille atque honos in illum annum ita deberi putabatur ut ne Climachias quidem contra diceret. Res ad istum defertur et istius more deciditur: toreumata sane nota ac pretiosa auferuntur. Herodotus Romae erat: satis putabat se ad comitia tempore venturum si pridie venisset. Iste ne aut alio mense ac fas erat comitia haberentur aut Herodoto praesenti honos adimeretur, id quod iste non laborabat, Climachias minime volebat, excogitat—dixi jamdudum, non est homo acutior quisquam nec fuit—excogitat, inquam, quemadmodum mense illo legitimo comitia haberentur nec tamen Herodotus adesse posset. Est consuetudo Siculorum ceterorumque Graecorum, quod suos dies mensesque congruere volunt cum solis lunaeque ratione, ut nonnunquam si quid discrepet eximant unum aliquem diem aut summum biduum ex mense, quos illi ἐξαιρεσίμους dies nominant; item nonnunquam uno die longiorem mensem faciunt aut biduo. Quae iste quum cognosset, novus astrologus qui non tam caeli rationem quam caelati argenti duceret, eximi jubet non diem ex mense sed ex anno unum dimidiatumque mensem; hoc modo ut quo die, verbi causa, esse oporteret Idus Januarias, eo die Kalendas Martias proscribi juberet. Itaque toreumata, &c.] 'Toreumata' is explained afterwards by 'caelatum argentum,' 'silver chased;' though the toreutic art (τορευτική) appears to have comprehended more than cutting and ornamenting the surface of silver. Some further remarks on these terms are made in Lib. 4. 'Auferuntur,' 'are carried off,' is an invidious mode of saying that Verres was paid for his services in this matter.

52. Cephaloedi] Cephaloedium (Κεφαλοῖδιον) was a small place, with a port, on the north coast of Sicily, east of Thermae. It is now Cefali or Cefalo.

summum] 'At the most:' 'höchstens,' as the Germans say. Zumpt observes, that in the passage of Cicero, Pro Mil. c. 5, instead of 'ad summum quinque,' we must ἐξαιρεσίμους] Those who wish to understand the Greek Calendar may consult the article Calendarium, in Smith's Dict. of Antiqs. Nothing further is necessary to understand the text of Cicero than what he says himself. The people set the matter right by intercalating forty-five days, or making an 'intercalarium,' which the Greeks called ἐμβόλιμον. Hotmann refers to a like trick of Alexander, but for another purpose (Plutarch, Alex. c. 16).

astrologus] This word generally meant astronomer in our sense of the term, and not astrologer in our sense of that term. So Astrologia (De Divin. ii. 42). See Forcellini.

fit omnibus recusantibus et plorantibus: dies is erat legitimus comitiis habendis: eo modo sacerdos Climachias renuntiatus est. Herodotus quum Roma revertitur diebus, ut ipse putabat, quindecim ante comitia, offendit eum mensem qui consequitur mensem comitiale, comitiis jam abhinc diebus xxx factis. Tunc Cephaloeditani decrerunt intercalarium xlv dies longum ut reliqui menses in suam rationem reverterentur. Hoc si Romae fieri posset, certe aliqua ratione expugnasset iste ut dies xlv inter binos ludos tollerentur, per quos solos iudicium fieri posset.

LIII. Jam vero censores quemadmodum in Sicilia isto praetore creati sint operae pretium est cognoscere. Ille enim est magistratus apud Siculos qui diligentissime mandatur a populo propter hanc causam, quod omnes Siculi ex censu quotannis tributa conferunt: in censu habendo potestas omnis aestimationis habendae summaeque faciendae censori permittitur. Itaque et populus cui maximam fidem suarum rerum habeat maxima cura deligit; et qui consequitur mensem] Gruter affirms that Lambinus added these words from conjecture, but it is more probable that he found them in some MS., for Zumpt says that they are in Lag. 42. Cicero explains all this trickery as to the election-day by substituting the Roman for the Greek Calendar, to make it intelligible. And it is easily understood, if the reader will look at it in Cicero's way.

ut dies xlv] See Act. i. c. 10. Cicero means the time between the Ludi Romani and the Ludi Victoriae, which was not forty-five days, though he chooses to call it so, unless the Ludi Victoriae commenced later than is stated at p. 63. Lag. 42 has xxxv; but this is nothing: Cicero clearly means to say forty-five days.

53. Jam vero censores quemadmodum, &c.] All the MSS. are said to have 'creati sunt,' but the confusion between 'sunt' and 'sint' in the MSS. is very common. Lambinus made the correction 'sint,' the propriety of which cannot be disputed. 'Quemadmodum' may be used in a direct interrogative, as in Lib. 5. c. 47, and other passages. We might then write 'Jam vero censores &c. creati sunt? Operae pretium est cognoscere.' But I prefer the text as it stands.

These 'censores' were provincial 'magistratus,' appointed by the provincials themselves (c. 55). They made a census or rating for the purpose of the taxation for provincial purposes; for the Romans took for themselves the 'vectigalia,' which con-

mandatur] 'Mandare' is a word that signifies the intrusting of something to another to perform, with the addition of the proper authority. Accordingly 'mandatum' is that Roman contract which expresses the relation of principal or person empowering and agent or person empowered, but the person empowered (mandatarius) acted gratuitously. The word was therefore applicable enough to the conferring of an office by the people, an office of honour, but of no emolument, and important duties. Horace uses the word in the same sense that Cicero here does (1 Sat. vi. 18):

"Namque esto, populus Laevino mallet
Quam Decio mandare novo;"

and Liv. iv. 3. The old reading, 'cui mandatur,' needs no refutation.

aestimationis habendae, &c.] This refers to the censor's rating of each person according to the estimate of his property, and to his fixing the amount that each had to pay (summae faciendae), as Manutius explains it. The expression 'cui maximam fidem suarum habeat' is unusual. Zumpt is only acquainted with one other instance, which is Plautus, Persa, v. 2. 8: "Quia ei fidem non habui argenti, eo mihi eas machinas molitu 'st;" but Creuzer and Moser add another from Caesar, Bell. Gall. i. 19.

propter magnitudinem potestatis hic magistratus a populo summa ambitione contenditur. In ea re iste nihil obscure facere voluit, non in sortitione fallere neque dies de fastis eximere: nihil sane vafre, nec malitiose facere conatus est: sed, ut studia cupiditatesque honorum atque ambitiones ex hominibus civitatibusque tollerentur, quae res evertendae rei publicae solent esse, ostendit sese in omnibus civitatibus censores esse facturum. Tanto mercatu praetoris indicto, concurritur undique ad istum Syracusas. Flagrabat domus tota praetoria studio hominum et cupiditate: nec mirum omnibus comitiis tot civitatum unam in domum revocatis, tantaque ambitione provinciae totius in uno cubiculo inclusa. Exquisitis palam pretiis, et licitationibus factis, describebat censores binos in singulas civitates Timarchides. Is suo labore suisque accessionibus, hujus negotii atque operis molestia consequencebatur ut ad istum sine ulla sollicitudine summa pecuniae referretur. Jam hic Timarchides quantam pecuniam fecerit plane adhuc cognoscere non potuistis: verumtamen priore actione quam varie, quam improbe praedatus esset multorum testimoniis cognovistis.

LIV. Sed ne miremini qua ratione hic tantum apud istum libertus potuerit, exponam vobis breviter quid hominis sit, ut et istius nequitiam qui illum secum habuerit, eo praesertim numero ac loco, et calamitatem provinciae cognoscatis. In mulierum corruptelis et in omni ejusmodi luxuria atque nequitia, mirandum in evertendae rei publicae] Some MSS. add 'causa,' which is the addition of a copyist. Zumpt refers to Cort's Sallust Cat. c. 6, for this use, which does not occur elsewhere in Cicero, as Zumpt observes. But he takes the words to be in the genitive. Garatoni takes them for the dative, and I think that he is right.

suisque accessionibus] Manutius explains this to mean the personal applications of Timarchides to the individuals who wished to purchase the office of censor. Klotz takes it the other way, to signify the audiences or interviews which Timarchides granted to these persons. The difference is not great, and 'suis' may perhaps be taken either way; but I prefer the interpretation of Manutius.—'Hujus negotii atque operis molestia' must be taken as the explanation of what precedes, 'by the trouble that he took in this affair and business: he saved Verres all the trouble, and Verres got the money. The reading of nearly all the MSS. is 'molestiam,' which can hardly be explained.—'summa pecuniae:' the reading of Lag. 42 (pr. m.) only, according to Zumpt. Orelli has 'pecunia.'—'quam varie:' Klotz writes 'quam vafre,' without informing the reader that he has altered the text without any authority.

54. Quid hominis sit,] Creuzer and Moser compare Terence, Hecyra, iv. 4. 22: "Quid mulieris;" Hauton., iv. 8. 7: "Quid hominis es;" Plaut. Rud. i. 2. 60: "Quid illuc est hominum?" If this be the only instance in Cicero, as it is supposed to be, that is no argument against it. The phrases of common life occur in Terence and Plautus, and Cicero uses the expressions of Terence very often.

eo praesertim numero, &c.] 'Especially if we consider in what estimation and rank Verres held this fellow.' 'Numerus' and 'locus,' 'number' and 'place,' mean the confidence which Verres placed in this freedman. In Divin. c. 19, Cicero has both the expression 'parentis loco' and 'parentis numero.' Phil. iii. 6: "homo nullo numero."

modum reperiēbam hunc Timarchidem ad istius flagitiosas libidines singularemque nequitiam natum atque aptum fuisse: investigare, adire, appellare, corrumpere, quidvis facere in ejusmodi rebus, quamvis callide, quamvis audacter, quamvis impudenter; eundem mira quaedam excogitare genera furandi. Nam ipsum Verrem tantum avaritia semper hiantē atque imminente fuisse, ingenio et cogitatione nulla; ut quidquid sua sponte faciebat, item ut vos Romae cognovistis, eripere potius quam fallere videretur. Haec vero hujus erat ars et malitia miranda, quod acutissime tota provincia, quid cuique accidisset, quid cuique opus esset, indagare et odorari solebat: omnium adversarios, omnium inimicos diligenter cognoscere, colloqui, attentare; ex utraque parte voluntates perspicere, facultates et copias; quibus opus esset metum offerre; quibus expediret spem ostendere: accusatorum et quadruplatorum quidquid erat habebat in potestate: quod cuique negotii conflare volebat nullo labore faciebat: istius omnia decreta, imperia, literas peritissime et callidissime venditabat. Ac non solum erat administrator istius cupiditatum, verum etiam ipse sui meminerat: neque solum nummos si qui isti exciderant tollere solebat, ex quibus pecuniam maximam fecit, sed etiam voluptatum flagitiorumque istius ipse reliquias colligebat. Itaque in Sicilia non Athenionem, qui nullum oppidum cepit, sed Timarchidem fugitivum omnibus oppidis per triennium scitote regnasse: in Timarchidi potestate sociorum populi Romani antiquissimorum atque amicissimorum liberos, matresfamilias, bona, fortunasque omnes fuisse. Is igitur, ut dico, Timarchides in omnes civitates accepto pretio censores dimisit: comitia, isto praetore, censorum ne simulandi quidem causa fuerunt.

LV. Jam hoc impudentissime: palam, licebat enim videlicet legibus, singulis censoribus denarii trecenti ad statuam praetoris imperati sunt. Censores cxxx facti sunt: pecuniam illam ob cen-tollere] 'To take up, in order to keep.' See what is said of 'sublevare,' p. 10, and Heindorf, Horat. 1 Sat. iv. 11, on the ambiguity of this word.

Athenionem,] A Cilician, the leader of the rebels in the western part of Sicily in the second servile war. He fell by the hand of the consul M'. Aquilius, B.C. 101. Diodorus, Excerpt. xxxvi.

55. denarii trecenti] 'Trecenti' ought to be 'treceni.' But no variation is noted. Compare Act. i. c. 56: "columnas singulas . . . quadragenis millibus;" and Divin. c. 10: "in modios singulos duodenos sestertios;" and Lib. 4. c. 26.—After 'impudentissime,' Klotz has 'statuam datam,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m.).—Creuzer and Moser follow Klotz, who writes 'in singulis censoribus,' following Lag. 42, and with 'singulis' they understand 'civitatibus,' and make 'censoribus' the dative. I cannot adopt this explanation.

suram contra leges clam dederunt; haec denarium xxxix millia palam salvis legibus contulerunt in statuam. Primum quo tantam pecuniam? Deinde quamobrem censores ad statuam tibi conferebant? Ordo aliqui censorum est, collegium, genus aliquod hominum. Nam aut publice civitates istos honores habent, aut generatim homines, ut aratores, ut mercatores, ut navicularii. Censores quidem qui magis quam aediles? Ob beneficium? Ergo hoc fatebere abs te haec petita esse; nam empta non audebis dicere: te eos magistratus hominibus beneficii non rei publicae causa permisisse? Hoc quum tute fateare, quisquam dubitabit quin tu istam apud populos provinciae totius invidiam atque offensionem, non ambitionis, neque beneficiorum collocandorum, sed pecuniae conciliandae causa susceperis? Itaque illi censores fecerunt idem quod in nostra re publica solent ii qui per largitionem magistratus adepti sunt: dederunt operam ut ita potestatem gererent ut illam lacunam rei familiaris explerent. Sic census habitus est te praetore ut eo censu nullius civitatis res publica posset administrari. Nam locupletissimi cujusque censum extenuarant, tenuissimi auxerant. Itaque in tributis imperandis tantum oneris plebi imponebatur ut, etiamsi homines tacerent, res ipsa illum censum repudiaret: id quod intelligi facillime re ipsa potest.

LVI. Nam L. Metellus qui, posteaquam ego inquirendi causa in Siciliam veni, repente Letilii adventu istius non modo amicus verum etiam cognatus factus est; is quod videbat istius censu stari nullo modo posse, eum censum observari jussit qui viro fortissimo atque Ordo aliqui, &c.] Orelli's pointing is, 'Ordo aliquis censorum est collegium? genus aliquod hominum?' which Zumpt rightly rejects. But no note of interrogation is necessary. It is a matter of indifference. Cicero says 'I suppose,' but he does not mean to admit that the 'censores' are an 'ordo,' or a 'collegium,' or 'genus hominum:' and this proves that the demand just mentioned was imposed on the censors, and that 'in' ought to be omitted.

Nam aut publice, &c.] 'Why, it is either cities in their capacity of communities that confer those honours, or men according to their classes, as cultivators, as merchants, as masters of ships.' Klotz reads 'aut si generatim, homines ut aratores,' &c. The MSS. have 'aut si,' except Lag. 6. Klotz's explanation of his reading is sufficient to condemn it.—'navicularii.' A 'navicularius' is the same as a 'nauclerus,' master of a ship (Cod. Just. xi. tit. 1), and Forcelini's Lexicon.

largitionem] This word is peculiarly applied to the offence of 'ambitus,' or the soliciting votes by illegal means. It is a name for bribery. Cic. De Or. ii. 25.

censum extenuarant,] Klotz has 'census,' from Cod. Vat. These censors rated the rich too low, and the poor too high. They were dishonest men. The rating of people in respect of land, houses, and the like, for the purposes of taxation, is one of the things that are faulty in most countries, partly from dishonesty, partly from a bad system.

homines tacerent,] Klotz has 'omnes.' These words are often confounded.

56. istius censu, &c.] The common reading is 'istius censum stare.' Klotz has adopted 'censu—stari,' from Cod. Vat. But it is not certain that this is an improvement.

innocentissimo Sex. Peducaeo praetore habitus esset. Erant enim tum censores legibus facti, delecti a suis civitatibus; quibus si quid commisissent poenae legibus erant constitutae. Te autem praetore, qui censor aut legem metueret qua non tenebatur, quoniam creatus lege non erat, aut animadversionem tuam, quum id quod abs te emerat vendidisset? Teneat jam sane meos testes Metellus; cogat alios laudare sicut in multis conatus est; modo haec faciat quae facit. Quis enim unquam tanta a quoquam contumelia, quis tanta ignominia affectus est? Quinto quoque anno Sicilia tota censetur. Erat censa praetore Peducaeo: quintus annus quum in te praetorem incidisset, censa denuo est. Postero anno L. Metellus mentionem tui census fieri vetat: censores dicit de integro sibi creari placere: interea Peducaeanum censum observari jubet. Hoc si tuus inimicus fecisset, tamen, si aequo animo provincia tulisset, inimici iudicium grave videretur. Fecit amicus recens et cognatus voluntarius: aliter enim, si provinciam retinere, si salvus ipse in provincia vellet esse, facere non potuit.

LVII. Exspectas etiam quid hi judicent? Si tibi magistratum abrogasset, minore ignominia te affecisset quam quum ea quae in magistratu gessisti sustulit atque irrita jussit esse. Neque in hac re sola fuit ejusmodi, sed, antequam ego in Siciliam veni, in maximis rebus ac plurimis: nam et Heraclio Syracusanos tuos illos palaestritas bona restituere jussit, et Epicrati Bidinos, et pupillo Drepanitano A. Claudium: et nisi mature Letilius in Siciliam cum literis venisset, minus xxx diebus Metellus totam triennii praeturam tuam rescidisset.

Et quoniam de ea pecunia quam tibi ad statuam censores contulerunt dixi, non mihi praetermittendum videtur ne illud quidem in te praetorem] This is the reading of Klotz, and apparently the right reading. Orelli and Zumpt have 'quum te praetore.'

tamen, si . . animo, &c.] The common reading is 'tamen etsi' or 'tametsi,' which are the same. Zumpt shows that 'tametsi' is wrong, for it spoils the sense. It would introduce something adversative or opposed to his argument, and it would require to be followed by another 'tamen,' as in Divin. c. 4: "tametsi utrumque esse arbitror perspicuum, tamen de utroque dicam."—"si animo aequo," &c., 'if the province were pleased with it.' If 'tametsi' is used, the sense must be 'though the province cared not about it;' and few people will venture on such a version. Besides, the text has good MSS. authority for it.

cognatus voluntarius:] Metellus now professed to be a kinsman of Verres, but Cicero means to say that he was not. Klotz understands it as if he were a 'cognatus.'

57. magistratum abrogasset,] 'Abrogare,' a word of Roman legislation, is used to express the repeal of a 'lex,' and also to deprive a 'magistratus' of his office, which it appears could only be done by a proceeding as formal as that by which he was appointed. An instance occurred in the time of Ti. Gracchus, who deprived a colleague of the tribuneship (Plut. Tib. Gracch. c. 12). As to the expression, compare Cic. De Off. iii. 10: 'magistratum' is the office.

genus pecuniae conciliatae, quam tu a civitatibus statuarum nomine coëgisti. Video enim ejus pecuniae summam esse pergrandem, ad HS tricies: tantum conficitur ex testimoniis et literis civitatum. Et iste hoc concedit, nec potest aliter dicere. Quare cujusmodi putamus esse illa quae negat quum haec tam improba sint quae fatetur? Quid enim vis constitui? consumptam esse omnem istam pecuniam in statuis? Fac ita esse: tamen hoc ferendum nullo modo est, tantam ab sociis pecuniam auferri ut in omnibus angiporis praedonis improbissimi statua ponatur, qua vix tuto transiri posse videatur.

LVIII. Verum ubi tandem aut in quibus statuis ista tanta pecunia consumpta est? Consumetur, inquires. Scilicet expectemus legitimum illud quinquennium; si hoc intervallo non consumpserit, tum denique nomen ejus de pecuniis repetundis statuarum nomine deferemus. Reus est maximis plurimisque criminibus in judicium vocatus: HS tricies ex hoc uno genere captum videmus. Si condemnatus eris, non, opinor, id ages ut ista pecunia in quinquennio consumatur in statuis: sin absolutus eris, quis erit tam amens qui te ex tot tantisque criminibus elapsum post quinquennium statuarum nomine arcessat? Ita si neque adhuc consumpta est ista pecunia et est perspicuum non consumptum iri, licet jam intelligamus inventam esse rationem, quare et iste HS tricies ex hoc uno genere conciliarit et ceperit, et ceteri, si hoc a vobis erit ad HS tricies:] The real amount is immaterial. It was a very large sum, and therefore more than HS cxx millia, or cxxx, as some MSS. have it. There is always confusion in the MSS. in these numerals. One state alone, as Zumpt observes, Centuripa, contributed ccc millia; but we perhaps should read 'HS cc millia' in c. 58, with Cod. Vat. Zumpt gives his reasons for writing 'triciens.' Garatoni would have 'vicies,' founded on the reading of one MS. (c. 69), which has ωω, and that is the same as κτκτ, or vicies, that is, a thousand times a thousand repeated, or, in other words, 'decies, decies.'—'tantum conficitur:' Klotz.

quum haec tam improba sint] Here again the MSS. have 'sunt.' Nobody can doubt which it should be, if he has read so far in these orations with any care. 'Sint' is Gruter's correction.

58. legitimum] We collect from this passage that one of the 'leges de repetundis' allowed a period of five years within which statues in honour of a governor might be erected out of the money contributed or raised for that purpose. If this time elapsed, then the legal presumption would be that the statues were merely a pretext for raising money; for we must assume that no governor could be prosecuted 'repetundarum nomine,' in the instance under consideration, 'statuarum nomine,' unless it could be proved that the money raised for statues came to his hands, or to the hands of his agents.

arcessat?] This word signifies to 'summon,' to 'send for,' as in Cicero, De Sen. c. 16; and the summoning may be for one thing or for another, to receive an honourable commission, or to answer a charge. As to the form 'arcesso,' see p. 60, note. Cod. Vat. and Klotz have 'accersat,' which is not a Latin word. See Forcellini, Arcesso.
neque . . et] 'Neque' and 'et,' and also 'nec' and 'et,' are sometimes thus placed; like οὔτε and τε.

ex hoc uno] 'HS viciens ex hoc uno:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'tricies' 'uno.'

comprobatum, quam volent magnas hoc nomine pecunias capere possint; ut jam videamur non a pecuniis capiendis homines abstinere, sed, quum genera quaedam pecuniarum capiendarum comprobarimus, honesta nomina turpissimis rebus imponere. Etenim, si C. Verres HS cxx millia populum, verbi gratia, Centuripinum poposcisset, eamque ab iis pecuniam abstulisset, non, opinor, esset dubium quin eum, quum id planum fieret, condemnari necesse esset. Quid si eundem populum HS ccc millia poposcit, eaque coëgit atque abstulit? num idcirco absolvetur quod adscriptum est, eam pecuniam datam statuarum nomine? non, opinor: nisi forte id agimus non ut magistratibus nostris moram accipiendi sed ut sociis causam dandi afferre videamur. Quod si quem statuæ magno opere delectant, et si quis earum honore aut gloria ducitur, is hæc tamen constituat necesse est: primum, averti pecuniam domum non placere; deinde, ipsarum statuarum modum quendam esse oportere; deinde illud, certe ab invitis exigere non oportere.

LIX. Ac de avertenda pecunia quaero abs te utrum ipsae civitates solitae sint statuas tibi faciundas locare ei cui possent optima conditione locare, an aliquem curatorem praeficere qui statuis faciundis praeesset, an tibi, an cui tu imperasses, annumerare pecuniam. Nam si per eos statuæ fiebant a quibus tibi iste honos habebatur, audio: sin Timarchidi pecunia numerabatur, desine, quaeso, simulare te, quum in manifestissimo furto teneare, gloriae studiosum ac monumentorum fuisse.

Quid vero modum statuarum haberi nullum placet? Atqui habeatur necesse est. Etenim sic considerate. Syracusana civitas, ut eam potissimum nominem, dedit ipsi statuam; est honos: et patri; bella hæc pietatis et quaestuosa simulatio: et filio; ferri hoc potest; hunc enim puerum non oderant: verum quoties et quot nominibus a Syracusanis statuas auferes? Ut in foro statuerent abstulisti: ut in curia coëgisti: ut pecuniam conferrent in eas statuas quae Romae ponerentur imperasti: ut iidem darent homines aratorum nomine; dederunt: ut iidem pro parte in comune Siciliae conferrent; etiam id contulerunt. Una civitas quum tot nominibus pecuniam contulerit, idemque hoc civitates ceterae fecerint, nonne res ipsa vos admonet ut putetis modum aliquem huic abstinere,] The common reading is 'absterrere.' Zumpt has 'abstinere,' from Lag. 42 (pr. m.).

non oderant:] Hotmann detected, and perhaps rightly, an odious insinuation in these words.

Ut . . . statuerent abstulisti:] 'You extorted from them the placing of a statue in the forum.' The words which follow, 'coëgisti,' &c., make the meaning plain enough. The correction 'statuisti' of a Vir d., recorded by Orelli, is certainly a mistake.

cupiditati constitui oportere? Quod si hoc voluntate sua nulla civitas fecit, si omnes imperio, metu, vi, malo adductae, pecuniam statuarum nomine contulerunt, per deos immortales, num cui dubium esse poterit quin, etiamsi statuerit accipere ad statuas licere, idem tamen statuatur eripere certe non licere? Primum igitur in hanc rem testem totam Siciliam citabo, quae mihi una voce statuarum nomine magnam pecuniam per vim coactam esse demonstrat. Nam legationes omnium civitatum in postulatis communibus, quae fere omnia ex tuis injuriis nata sunt, etiam hoc ediderunt, Ut statuas ne cui, nisi quum is de provincia decessisset, pollicerentur.

LX. Tot praetores in Sicilia fuerunt, toties apud majores nostros Siculi senatum adierunt, toties hac memoria, tamen hujusce novi postulati genus atque principium tua praetura attulit. Quid enim tam novum, non solum re sed genere ipso postulandi? Nam cetera, quae sunt in iisdem postulatis de injuriis tuis, sunt nova, sed tamen non novo modo postulantur. Rogant et orant Siculi patres conscriptos "Ut nostri magistratus posthac decumas lege Hieronica vendant." Tu primus contra vendideras. Audio. "Ne in cellam quod imperatur aestiment." Hoc quoque propter tuos ternos denarios nunc primum postulatur: sed genus ipsum postulandi non est novum. "Ne absentis nomen recipiatur." Ex Sthenii calamitate Quod si hoc] Two MSS., Lag. 29 and another, have 'Quid si hoc;' but Zumpt will not listen to them. 'Quod si est pro si vero,' he says. But 'Quod si' is what it is. The Romans fell into this form of expression when 'quod' lost by use its strict demonstrative meaning; for such it is originally. The true English translation is, 'The which if no state did this of its own free will.' There is no objection now to our writing 'Quodsi,' and taking it for what it corresponds to in our language: 'now if no state did this;' but the origin of the expression should be looked to. 'Quod si quem statuae delectant,' c. 58, is not different from this: 'statuae' explains 'quod.' Ter. And. i. 5, 54: 'Quod ego te,' &c.

vi, malo] The old reading 'modo,' for 'malo,' is nonsense. 'Malo,' thus used absolutely, ought to have some specific meaning, and as it follows 'vi, metu,' Zumpt supposes that it may mean 'plagis ac verberibus;' not that they were actually whipped to make them pay; but there was the fear of the scourge before their eyes. It seems to mean some harm generally, as in Lib. 3. c. 41: "malo dignus judicaretur;"

and also in Lib. 3. c. 23; and in c. 60 of this oration: "metu ac malo coactos."

Primum igitur] 'Primam igitur,' &c.: Klotz, according to most MSS.

postulatis] It was in the month of February, as we have already seen, in which the 'legati' of the provincials received an audience of the Roman senate, and brought their 'postulata,' claims or petitions, before them. The 'postulata' appear to have been handed in to the consuls (c. 64), who brought the matters contained in them before the senate.

60. postulantur. Rogant] 'Postulant, sed rogant,' &c.: Klotz, which will hardly be preferred to the text.

in cellam, &c.] "That the praetors should not fix a money value on the contributions in kind which were required for the consumption of their household," that is, should not have the power of demanding a money payment instead of the contributions in kind to which they were entitled for the use of their household. See c. 2. The 'cella' here is the praetor's 'cella.'

et tua natum est injuria. Cetera non colligam. Sunt omnia Siculorum postulata ejusmodi ut crimina collecta in unum reum te esse videantur; quae tamen omnia novas injurias habent, sed postulationum formulas usitatas. Hoc postulatum de statu is ridiculum esse videatur ei qui rem sententiamque non perspiciat. Postulant enim, non uti ne cogantur statuere. Quid igitur? "Ut ipsis ne liceat." Quid est hoc? petis a me quod in tua potestate est ut id tibi facere ne liceat: pete potius ne quis te invitum polliceri aut facere cogat. Nihil egero, inquit: negabunt enim omnes se coëgisse: si me salvum esse vis, mihi impone istam vim ut omnino mihi ne liceat polliceri. Ex tua praetura primum haec est nata postulatio; qua quum utuntur hoc significant atque adeo aperte ostendunt, sese ad statuas tuas pecuniam metu ac malo coactos invitissimos contulisse. Quid, si hoc non dicant, tibi non necesse sit ipsi id confiteri? Vide et perspice qua defensione sis usus. Jam intelliges hoc tibi de statu is confitendum esse.

LXI. Mihi enim renuntiatur ita constitui a tuis patronis, hominibus ingeniosis, causam tuam, et ita eos abs te institui et doceri: ut quisque ex provincia Sicilia gravior homo atque honestior testimonium vehementius dixerit, sicuti Siculi multi primarii viri multa dixerunt, te statim hoc istis tuis defensoribus dicere—inimicus est propterea quod arator est. Itaque uno genere, opinor, circumscribere habetis in animo genus hoc aratorum, quod eos infenso animo atque inimico venisse dicatis quia fuerit in decumis iste vehementior. Ergo aratores inimici omnes et adversarii sunt: nemo eorum est quin perisse te cupiat. Omnino praeclare te habes, Quid est hoc?] 'Quid enim? petis?' Klotz.—'nihil egero' means, 'I shall gain nothing by that.' Klotz has 'nihil rogo.'

atque adeo] 'They hint this, and, indeed, openly show that,' &c. 'Adeo,' a word compounded of 'ad' and a form of the accusative, which has probably lost its final letter, is often used by Cicero in these orations in the sense of 'moreover,' 'further,' 'even,' and the like. Comp. Lib. 1. c. 34: "hujus improbissimi furti sive adeo nefariae praedae;" Lib. 2. c. 65: "ex Sicilia decedendum atque adeo fugiendum;" Lib. 3. c. 61: "si qui pudor in te atque adeo si qui metus fuisset," that is, 'if you had any sense of shame, nay, if you had any fear;' and Lib. 2. c. 35: "adducitur a Venereis atque adeo attrahitur Lollius."

61. circumscribere] This word, which signifies to inclose within a circle, has various derived meanings, among which is that of 'limiting and confining.' Hotmann observes on this passage: 'modo significat rejicere et excludere;' but, though this is the result of what Cicero expresses by 'circumscribere,' it is not the true explanation of the term. The meaning of the passage is this: 'Accordingly it is your intention, as I suppose, to comprehend the cultivators under one class, by virtue of the assertion (quod dicatis) that they have come to Rome with a hostile and unfriendly disposition;' and, as such, would not be impartial witnesses. Zumpt's explanation is like Hotmann's, and he refers to Lib. 1. c. 16: "hoc omni, &c., circumscripto."

Omnino praeclare te habes,] Said sarcastically, 'you are in an excellent plight or condition.' Zumpt compares Cicero, Ad Att. vii. 2: "quamquam videbatur se non graviter habere."—"a quo . . . continetur" seems to mean 'by which class is proquum is ordo atque id hominum genus, quod optimum atque honestissimum est, a quo uno et summa res publica et illa provincia maxime continetur, tibi est inimicissimum. Verum esto: alio loco de aratorum animo et injuriis videro: nunc quod mihi abs te datur, id accipio, eos tibi esse inimicissimos. Nempe ita dicis, propter decumas. Concedo; non quaero jure an injuria sint inimici. Quid ergo illae sibi statuæ equestres inauratae volunt, quæ populi Romani oculos animosque maxime offendunt propter aedem Vulcani? Nam inscriptum esse video quandam ex his statuam aratores dedisse. Si honoris causa statuam dederunt, inimici non sunt: credamus testibus; tum enim honori tuo, nunc jam religioni suae consulunt. Sin autem metu coacti dederunt, confiteare necesse est te in provincia pecunias statuarum nomine per vim ac metum coëgissee. Utrum tibi commodum est elige.

LXII. Equidem libenter hoc jam crimen de statuīs relinquam ut mihi tu illud concedas, quod tibi honestissimum est, aratores tibi ad statuam honoris tui causa voluntate sua contulisse. Da mihi hoc: jam tibi maximam partem defensionis præcideris. Non enim poteris aratores tibi iratos esse atque inimicos dicere. O tected,' but a similar example does not appear to be known.

Nempe ita dicis,] Klotz reads 'nempe id ait' (from Lag. 42), and observes that such changes from one person to another, as from addressing Verres (praeclare te habes) to addressing the 'judices' (nempe id ait), are not uncommon in Cicero. The word 'nempe' generally stands at the beginning of a sentence, but not always. The word apparently is 'nam,' with the addition of 'pe,' as 'quippe;' for the change of 'nam' into 'nem,' after the addition of 'pe,' presents no difficulty, and is in accordance with a law of euphony. It is that use of 'nam' at the beginning of a sentence, by which a thing is introduced to our notice, when there is no intention to dwell upon it; when we intend to affirm or to assume something that cannot be disputed, and requires no argument: 'Well, then, you say it is on account of the tenths.' Horace (1 Sat. x. 1) has an example:

"Nempe in composito dixi pede currere versus Lucili."

'It is true, I did say that the verses of Lucilius move with ill-assorted step; but that is all that I said.' Heindorf, on this passage, observes that 'nempe' is always a particle of affirmation, in the form of a half interrogation. He denies that it is ever used as a word of concession, as one of the scholiasts explains it; wherein he is perhaps not quite correct. As to this word being a compound of 'nam' and 'pe,' this view is confirmed by some of the uses of the word 'namque.'

Quid ergo, &c.] 'Quid ergo illae, quid sibi statuæ,' &c.: Klotz, from Cod. Metell. The reading of Lag. 42 is the same, for 'ille' is merely a blunder. Creuzer and Moser adopt this reading, and spoil it by their pointing: 'Quid ergo? illae quid,' &c.

aedem Vulcani?] This temple was, according to tradition, founded by Romulus, who there assembled the senate with his partner King Tatius (Plutarch, Quaest. Rom. c. 47). The temple was out of the old city, but became included within it by the extension of the 'pomoerium.' These gilded statues have been mentioned before, c. 46 (Creuzer and Moser, from Garatoni).

62. relinquam ut] This use of 'ut' seems to have arisen from the omission of 'ita' before 'relinquam,' for the passage means: 'for my part, I will now willingly give up this charge about the statues, if you will make me this admission, that,' &c. causam singularem! O defensionem miseram ac perditam! nolle hoc accipere reum ab accusatore, et eum reum qui praetor in Sicilia fuerit, aratores ei statuam sua voluntate statuuisse; aratores de eo bene existimare, amicos esse, salvum esse cupere: metuit ne hoc vos existimetis; obruitur enim aratorum testimoniis. Utar eo quod datur. Certe hoc vobis ita judicandum est eos qui isti inimicissimi sunt, ut ipse existimari vult, ad istius honores atque monumenta pecunias voluntate sua non contulisse. Atque ut hoc totum facillime intelligi possit, quem voles eorum testium quos produxero qui e Sicilia testes sint, sive togatum sive Siculum, rogato, et eum qui tibi inimicissimus esse videbitur, qui se spoliatum abs te dicet, ecquid suo nomine in tuam statuam contulerit. Neminem reperies qui neget; etenim omnes dederunt. Quemquam igitur putas dubitaturum quin is, quem tibi inimicissimum esse oporteat, qui abs te gravissimas injurias acceperit, pecuniam statuae nomine dederit vi atque imperio adductus, non officio ac voluntate? Hujus ego pecuniae, iudices, quae permagna est impudentissimeque coacta ab invitis, non habui rationem, neque habere potui, quantum ab aratoribus, quantum a negotiatoribus qui Syracusis, qui Agrigenti, qui Panhormi, qui Lilybaei negotiantur, esset coactum: quoniam intelligitis ipsius quoque confessione ab invitissimis coactam esse.

LXIII. Venio nunc ad civitates Siciliae de quibus facillime iudicium fieri voluntatis potest. An etiam Siculi inviti contulerunt? non est probabile. Etenim sic C. Verrem praeturam in Sicilia gessisse constat ut, quum utrisque satisfacere non posset, et Siculis et togatis, officii potius in socios quam ambitionis in cives rationem salvum esse cupere:] Klotz, on the authority of Lag. 42 (pr. m.), omits 'esse.' As far as concerns the language, we know that it can be omitted, and the Romans could say 'salvum te cupio' or 'volo' (Hor. 1 Sat. i. 84). But it would seem pretty clear to any person that the repetition of 'esse' is emphatic here. The omission of it in a single MS. is a presumption that the omission is accidental, especially as 'esse' has just been used. The conclusion is, that the omission of 'esse' is a proof of bad judgment in the estimation of evidence, and of the force of the passage.

e Sicilia—sint,] Klotz has 'sunt,' from Cod. Vat. It is difficult to lay down a rule in these cases. In the preceding sentence 'eos qui isti inimicissimi sunt' is the better reading, which Zumpt in that case prefers for the following reason: 'hoc moneo, esse h. l. aratores intelligendos, non in universum quicumque Verrem persequantur;' and this is a sufficient reason. But in this passage the meaning is: 'ask any of the witnesses you please, among those whom I shall produce, witnesses from Sicily;' not 'the witnesses who are from Sicily.'

sive togatum, &c.] The reading of the MSS., all or most, instead of 'togatum,' is 'civem Romanum,' which Klotz has retained, from Cod. Vat. See c. 63: "et Siculis et togatis;" and c. 65: "et Siculorum et civium Romanorum."—'spoliatum abs te:' 'spoliatum esse:' Cod. Vat. and Klotz.

Hujus—pecuniae, &c.] That is, 'hujus pecuniae quantum &c. non habui rationem.' Zumpt has 'Et hujus.'

63. officii . . ambitionis] This, of course, is said ironically, or assumed for the purpose of the argument. 'Ambitio' means duxerit. Itaque eum non solum PATRONUM illius insulae sed etiam SOTERA inscriptum vidi Syracusis. Hoc quantum est? ita magnum est ut Latine uno verbo exprimi non possit. Is est nimirum SOTER qui salutem dedit. Hujus nomine etiam dies festi agitantur, pulchra illa Verria, non quasi Marcellia, sed pro Marcelliis, quae illi istius jussu sustulerunt. Hujus fornix in foro Syracusis est in quo nudus filius stat, ipse autem ex equo nudatam ab se provinciam prospicit. Hujus statuae locis omnibus: quae hoc demonstrare videntur prope-modum non minus multas statuas istum posuisse Syracusis quam abstulisse. Huic etiam Romae videmus in basi statuarum maximis literis incisum, 'a communi Siciliae datas.' Quamobrem qui hoc probari potest cuiquam tantos honores habitos esse ab invitis?

LXIV. Hic tibi etiam multo magis quam paulo ante in aratoribus videndum et considerandum est quid velis. Magna res est. Utrum tibi Siculos publice privatimque amicos an inimicos existimari vis? Si inimicos, quid te futurum est? quo confugies? ubi nitere? Modo aratorum honestissimorum hominum ac locupletissimorum, et Siculorum et civium Romanorum, maximum numerum abs te abalienasti: nunc de Siculis civitatibus quid ages? Dices tibi Siculos esse amicos? qui poteris? qui quod nullo in homine antea fecerunt, ut in eum publice testimonium dicerent, quum praesertim ex ea provincia condemnati sint complures, qui ibi praetores fuerunt, duo soli absoluti, hi nunc veniunt cum literis, veniunt cum sotera] Klotz remarks that the Latin 'servator' would not express the force of σωτήρ, for 'servator' would refer to a single act. I don't know if this is quite exact; but there is another reason why 'servator' would not do, for the notion contained in it is different, as Manutius shows, from that contained in 'soter,' for which Cicero only finds an equivalent in 'salus.' The adjective 'salvus,' which contains the same element as 'salus,' had not produced the word 'salvator' in Cicero's time.

inscriptum] Klotz adds 'esse,' from Cod. Vat., which rarely adds superfluous words, though it does sometimes.—'magnum est,' Cod. Vat., is perhaps better than Zumpt's 'magnum' without 'est.'—From the Cod. Vat. Klotz takes 'is est enim nimirum,' which has the recommendation of being something uncommon.

fornix] An arch in honour of Verres, like the Fabianus at Rome, which Cicero often mentions. It seems that an equestrian statue of Verres was placed upon the arch, which is the only intelligible explanation of the passage.

demonstrare videntur] Some few MSS., and perhaps Cod. Vat., have 'videntur.' 'Videantur,' as Zumpt observes, is 'subtilis sermonis elegantia.' Of the same kind is 'quae . . . soleat' at the beginning of c. 66. But 'videntur' seems more suitable here.

Quamobrem qui, &c.] The old editors understood this right. The later editors, as Zumpt observes, spoiled the sense by a note of interrogation after 'quamobrem.' The reading of Klotz, from the Cod. Vat., is 'quam ob rem qui hoc probare potes' &c.

64. existimari vis?] The whole passage stands thus in Klotz: 'considerandum est quid velis: magna res est: utrum tibi . . . existimari velis?' In place of 'vis,' the Vat. Cod. and Lag. 42 have 'velis.'

quid te futurum est?] Compare Lib. 1. c. 16, 'Quid hoc homine faciat?' and the note.—'ubi nitere? Quomodo? aratorum' &c.: Klotz.

mandatis, veniunt cum testimoniis publicis; qui si te publice laudarent, tamen id more potius suo quam merito tuo facere viderentur; hi quum de tuis factis publice conqueruntur, nonne hoc indicant tantas esse injurias ut multo maluerint de suo more decedere quam de tuis moribus non dicere? Confitendum est igitur tibi necessario, Siculos inimicos esse qui quidem et in te gravissima postulata consulibus ediderint, et me ut hanc causam salutisque suae defensionem susciperem obsecrarint; qui quum a praetore prohiberentur, a quatuor quaestoribus impedirentur, omnium minas atque omnia pericula prae salute sua levia duxerint; qui priore actione ita testimonia graviter vehementerque dixerint ut Artemonem Centuripinum legatum et publice testem Q. Hortensius accusatorem non testem esse diceret. Etenim ille quum propter virtutem et fidem cum Androne, homine honestissimo et certissimo, tum etiam propter eloquentiam, legatus a suis civibus electus est, ut posset multas istius et varias injurias quam apertissime vobis planissimeque explicare.

LXV. Dixerunt Halesini, Catinenses, Tyndaritani, Hennenses, Herbitenses, Agyrinenses, Netinenses, Segestani; enumerare omnes non est necesse. Scitis quam multi et quam multa priore actione dixerint: nunc et illi et reliqui dicent. Omnes denique hoc in hac causa intelligent, hoc animo esse Siculos ut, si in istum animadversum non sit, sibi relinquendas domos ac sedes suas, et ex Sicilia decedendum atque adeo fugiendum esse arbitrentur. Hos homines tu persuadebis ad honorem atque amplitudinem tuam pecunias maximas voluntate sua contulisse? credo, qui te in tua civitate incolumem esse nollent, hi monumenta tuae formae ac nominis in ediderint, &c.] Klotz has 'ediderunt,' 'obsecrarunt,' 'duxerunt,' 'dixerunt,' from Cod. Vat. Creuzer and Moser, who adopt the indicatives, say: "Cicero urges the facts against Verres; he does not urge him to think of the ground or cause of the hatred, and to consider it as in a manner justified by the four clauses 'ediderint,' &c." I think that these editors are mistaken, and that Cicero does not place his positive affirmations in this form in a sentence. His affirmation is 'Siculos inimicos esse,' after which, according to my understanding of his fashion, he drops into the subjunctive, that is, the subjoined, subordinate, dependent form of expression.—'prae salute sua: 'pro salute sua: 'Klotz.

In c. 38 Verres is called 'homo certus,' in a different sense.

65. Hennenses,] The Roman coins and the best MSS. have this word with the aspirate. Eckhel, Doctr. Num. i. p. 206, says that there is a very old Greek coin on which the aspirate is marked by a 'littera singularis' (Zumpt).

'Segestani' is the common orthography, but there is authority for the form 'Egestani' (Eckhel, T. i. p. 236). The Greek word is always without the aspirate.

enumerare] The MSS. appear to have 'numerare,' but this word means to tell, or count a certain number, and hence to pay money. One MS. has 'et numerare,' and we may therefore safely accept 'enumerare,' the conjecture of Lambinus.

suis civitatibus esse cupiebant. Res declarabit ut cupierint. Jamdudum enim mihi nimium tenuiter Siculorum erga te voluntatis argumenta colligere videor, utrum statuas voluerint tibi statuere an coacti sint. De quo homine auditum est unquam, quod tibi accidit, ut ejus in provincia statuae, in locis publicis positae, partim etiam in aedibus sacris, per vim, et per universam multitudinem dejicerentur? Tot homines in Asia nocentes, tot in Africa, tot in Hispania, Gallia, Sardinia, tot in ipsa Sicilia fuerunt: ecquo de homine hoc unquam audivistis? Novum est, judices; in Siculis quidem et in omnibus Graecis monstri simile. Non crederem hoc de statu is nisi jacentes revulsasque vidissem, propterea quod apud omnes Graecos hic mos est, ut honorem hominibus habitum in monumentis ejusmodi nonnulla religione deorum consecrari arbitrentur. Itaque Rhodii, qui prope soli bellum illud superius cum Mithridate rege gesserunt, omnesque ejus copias acerrimumque impetum moenibus, littoribus, classibusque suis exceperunt, tamen, quum ei regi inimici praeter ceteros essent, statuam ejus, quae erat apud ipsos in celeberrimo urbis loco, ne tum quidem in ipsis urbis periculis attigerunt. Ac forsitan vix convenire videretur quem ipsum hominem cuperent evertere, ejus effigiem simulacrumque servare: sed tamen videbam, apud eos quum essem, et religionem esse quandam in his rebus a majoribus traditam, et hoc disputari, cum statua se ejus habuisse temporis rationem quo posita esset, cum homine vero quo gereret bellum atque hostis esset.

LXVI. Videtis igitur consuetudinem religionemque Graecorum quae monumenta hostium in bello ipso soleat defendere, eam summa in pace praetoris populi Romani statu is praesidio non fuisse. Tauromenitani, quorum est civitas foederata, homines quietissimi, qui monstri simile.] 'Patris similis:' Lib. 3. c. 68; 'sui similes:' Lib. 3. c. 9; and there are other examples. 'Monstri simile' is not 'like a monstrum,' but the 'very similitude or copy of a monstrum.'

Rhodii, . . superius] Cicero alludes to the war declared against Mithridates, B.C. 88. In this year the Rhodii bravely defended themselves against Mithridates (Appian, Mithrid. c. 24). In B.C. 87 Sulla was sent by the Romans against Mithridates, with whom he made peace B.C. 84. This was the 'bellum superius.' In B.C. 74 the war begun again, and L. Lucullus had the command against Mithridates.

66. civitas foederata,] A 'civitas foede-rata' was a community connected with Rome by the terms of a 'foedus' or treaty. The term was applied to the Italian Socii before B.C. 90 (see p. 11, note), whose 'foedus' with Rome implied a kind of political subjection. There were also 'civitates foederatae' out of Italy, as Massilia in Gaul, the city of Tauromenium in Sicily, and others. This matter is further explained, Lib. 3. c. 6. As to the various kinds of 'foedera,' see Livy, 34. c. 57.

Tauromenium, which is the genuine orthography, not Taurominium, is now Taormina, on the east coast of Sicily, between Messana and Catina. Naxos, the first Greek colony in Sicily, was founded on the south side of a rock called Taurus, by the Chalcidians. It was destroyed by Dionysius, maxime ab injuriis nostrorum magistratuum remoti consuerant esse praesidio foederis, hi tamen istius evertere statuam non dubitaverunt. Qua abjecta basim tamen in foro manere voluerunt; quod gravius in istum fore putabant, si scirent homines statuam ejus a Tauromenitanis esse dejectam, quam si nullam unquam positam esse arbitrarentur. Tyndaritani dejecerunt in foro; et eadem de causa equum inanem reliquerunt. Leontinis, misera in civitate atque inani, tamen istius in gymnasio statua dejecta est. Nam quid ego de Syracusanis loquar, quod non est proprium Syracusanorum, sed et illorum et commune conventus illius ac prope totius provinciae? Quanta illic multitudo, quanta vis hominum convenisse dicebatur tum quum statuae sunt illius dejectae atque eversae? At quo loco? Celeberrimo ac religiosissimo, ante ipsum Serapim, in primo aditu vestibuloque templi. Quod nisi Metellus hoc tam graviter egisset atque illam rem imperio edicto-que prohibuisset, vestigium statuarum istius in tota Sicilia nullum esset relictum. Atque ego hoc non vereor ne quid horum non modo impulsu verum omnino adventu meo factum esse videatur. Omnia ista ante facta sunt non modo quam ego Siciliam verum etiam quam iste Italiam attigit: dum ego in Sicilia sum, nulla

B.C. 403 (Diodorus, xiv. 15), and in B.C. 358 the remnant of the Naxians were settled by Andromachus near the ruins of the old town, on a spot which had been already occupied by the Siculi, and was called Tauromenium. The place became flourishing and populous, an evidence of which is the magnitude of the theatre, partly cut in the rock, which is nearly entire, and capable of containing many thousand persons.

Leontinis,] This means 'in Leontini,' for 'Leontini' was the name both of the people and of the place, both in the Greek and the Latin writers. The words 'misera in civitate' are explained by Lib. 3. c. 46.

sed et illorum, &c.] The reading of this passage is not certain, and various attempts have been made to amend it. The text is that of Zumpt, and it is intelligible. Cicero says, "Why should I speak of the Syracusani in a matter which is not peculiar to them, but is both their affair and common to that 'conventus,' and almost to the whole province?"—'de Syracusis loquar.' Zumpt.

Serapim,] 'Codd. vulgares vel sepim, vel sepī, vel sepini, vel saepe.' Zumpt. But there is good MSS. authority for 'Serapim.' The history of this divinity I do not propose to trace. He got a footing in Egypt, and kept it there till a bold hand demolished his idol. Serapis is said to be an importation into Egypt from Pontus. Whether he came into Greece and Sicily from Egypt, or was imported direct, I do not know. Gibbon, c. 28, has told his story.—A 'celeberrimus locus' is a much-frequented place. See p. 103, 'celebratur—convivium.' The following will serve as an instance of the proper meaning of this word:

"Colle sub aprico celeberrimus ilice lucus Stabat et in ramis multa latebat avis."
Ovid, Am. iii. 5. 3.

where the poet might have said 'creberrimus,' for he does say it in another passage, 'creber arundinibus tremulis ibi surgere lucus' (Met. xi. 190). Thus the usage of the language confirms the conclusion as to the relationship of 'creber' and 'celebris,' Lib. 2. c. 3.

'Religiosissimo:' Gaius (ii. 1): 'sacrae sunt quae Diis superis consecratae sunt; religiosae, quae Diis manibus relictæ sunt.' A 'locus' could be made 'religiosus' by burying a dead body in it: 'si modo ejus mortui funus ad nos pertineat.' I doubt if Cicero is using the word here in a technical sense; for, if he were, he seems not to have the right word, which ought to be 'sacer.'

statua dejecta est. Posteaquam illinc discessi, quae sunt gesta cognoscite.

LXVII. Centuripinorum senatus decrevit populusque jussit ut, quae statuae C. Verris ipsius et patris ejus et filii essent, eas quaestores demoliendas locarent, dumque ea demolitio fieret senatores ne minus xxx adessent. Videte gravitatem civitatis ac dignitatem. Neque eas in urbe sua statuas esse voluerunt quas inviti per vim atque imperium dedissent; neque ejus hominis in quem ipsi cum gravissimo testimonio publice, quod nunquam antea, Romam mandata legatosque misissent: et id gravius esse putarunt, si publico consilio quam si per vim multitudinis factum esse videretur. Quum hoc consilio statuas Centuripini publice sustulissent, audit Metellus: graviter fert: evocat ad se Centuripinorum magistratus et decemprimos: nisi restituissent statuas, vehementer minatur. Illi ad senatum renuntiant: statuae quae istius causae nihil prodessent reponuntur: decreta Centuripinorum quae de statu is erant facta non tolluntur. Hic ego aliud alii concedo: Metello, homini sapienti, prorsus non possum ignoscere si quid stulte facit. Quid ille hoc putabat Verri criminosum fore, si ejus statuae essent dejectae, quod saepe vento aut aliquo casu fieri solet? Non erat in hoc neque crimen ullum neque reprehensio. Ex quo igitur crimen atque accusatio nascitur? Ex hominum judicio et voluntate.

LXVIII. Ego, si Metellus statuas Centuripinos reponere non coëgisset, haec dicerem: Videte, judices, quantum et quam acerbum dolorem sociorum atque amicorum animis inusserint istius quae sunt gesta cognoscite.] 'Hear what happened.' If the reading were 'quae gesta sint cognoscite,' we could hardly express the meaning differently from the translation which I have given. But the Latin language has two forms of expression, one of which, the indicative, affirms distinctly that something was done which the speaker is going to mention; the other, the subjunctive, which indirectly states that something was done, but lays the chief emphasis on the other verb. Both forms may occur in one sentence, and there is no reason to doubt the genuineness of such expressions. Servius says, in a letter to Cicero (Ad Div. iv. 5): "de iis rebus quae hic geruntur quemadmodumque se provincia habeat certiore faciam." Comp. c. 72: "tantum mihi licet dicere quantum possum, tantum judici suspicari quantum velit." The better translation of the text would be something like this: 'After I left the island, what happened next, I will tell you.'

67. populusque jussit] The term applied to the formal voting of the Roman people. See Gellius, v. 19. Senatus 'decernit,' 'censet,' 'mandat.' Populus 'jubet.'

decemprimos:] The first ten in rank of the Senate or of the 'decuriones,' a body which in a municipal town corresponded to the Senate of Rome. Cicero says, Pro Sex. Roscio Am. c. 9: "itaque decurionum decretum statim fit ut decem primi profiscantur ad L. Sullam."

aliud alii concedo:] This means, says Hotmann, 'I excuse the Centuripini;' and this may be implied; but it is not said. Cicero says, 'I can make different allowances for different persons. Metellus, who is a man of judgment, I cannot altogether excuse, if he does a foolish thing.'

68. reponere—coëgisset,] Comp. c. 59: "ut in curia coëgisti." This verb admits both forms of expression.

injuriae, quum Centuripinorum amicissima et fidelissima civitas, quae tantis officiis cum populo Romano conjuncta est ut non solum rem publicam nostram sed etiam in quovis homine privato nomen ipsum Romanum semper dilexerit, ea publico consilio atque auctoritate judicari C. Verris statuas esse in urbe sua non oportere. Recitarem decreta Centuripinorum: laudarem illam civitatem, id quod verissime possem: commemorarem decem millia civium esse Centuripinorum, fortissimorum fidelissimorumque sociorum; eos omnes hoc statuuisse, monumentum istius in sua civitate nullum esse oportere. Haec tum dicerem, si statuas Metellus non reposuisset. Velim quaerere nunc ex ipso Metello quidnam sua vi et auctoritate mihi ex hac oratione praeciderit. Eadem opinor omnia convenire. Neque enim, si maxime statuae dejectae essent, eas ego vobis possem jacentes ostendere. Hoc uno uterer, civitatem tam gravem statuas judicasse C. Verris demoliendas. Hoc mihi Metellus non eripuit: hoc etiam addidit ut quereretur, si mihi videretur, tam iniquo jure sociis atque amicis imperari, ut iis ne in suis quidem beneficiis libero judicio uti liceret; ut vos rogarem ut conjecturam faceretis, qualem in iis rebus in me L. Metellum fuisse putaretis, in quibus rebus obesse mihi posset, quum in hac re tam aperta cupiditate fuerit, in qua nihil obfuit. Sed ego Metello non irascor, neque ei suam purgationem eripio qua ille apud omnes utitur, ut nihil malitiose neque consulto fecisse videatur.

LXIX. Jam igitur est ita perspicuum ut negare non possis, nullam tibi statuam voluntate cujusquam datam, nullam pecuniam statuarum nomine nisi vi expressam et coactam. Quo quidem in crimine non illud solum intelligi volo, te ad statuas HS tricies coëgis; sed multo etiam illud magis, quod simul demonstratum est, quantum odium aratorum, quantum omnium Siculorum sit et fuerit. In quo quae vestra defensio futura sit conjectura assequi non queo. "Oderunt Siculi; togatorum enim causa multa feci." At hi quidem acerrimi inimicissimique sunt. "Inimicos habeo cives Romanos, quod sociorum commoda ac jura defendi." At ea publico, &c.] 'Ea' is not the correlative of 'quae' in 'quae tantis officiis.' It is the repetition of 'civitas,' a long expression being interposed.

si maxime] 'Si maximae' in Zumpt's large edition is merely a misprint.

qualem in iis rebus] Zumpt has 'qualem in his rebus,' and this note: 'Sic Gruterus: priores omnes in iis rebus, et miror cur Gruterus mutarit. Verum nihil ab eo diversum e codd. nostris enotatum est.'

It is a matter of no great importance, but 'iis' seems preferable.

suam purgationem] The reading of most MSS. is 'suam vacationem.' 'Purgationem,' apparently an emendation of Naugerius, is very doubtful. Klotz has 'culpa vacationem,' a piece of Latin that is hardly justified by the genuine Latin expression, 'culpa vacare.'

69. HS tricies] The usual reading is cxx millia or milia. See c. 57, note.

socii in hostium numero sese abs te habitos queruntur. “Aratores inimici sunt propter decumas.” Quid qui agros immunes liberosque arant, cur oderunt? cur Halesini? cur Centuripini? cur Segestani? cur Halicyenses? Quod genus hominum, quem numerum, quem ordinem proferre possis, qui te non oderit, sive civium Romanorum sive Siculorum? ut etiamsi causam cur te oderint non possim dicere, tamen illud dicendum putem, quem omnes mortales oderint, eum vobis quoque odio esse oportere. An hoc dicere audebis, utrum de te aratores, utrum denique Siculi universi bene existiment aut quo modo existiment, ad rem id non pertinere? Neque tu hoc dicere audebis, nec si cupias licebit. Eripiunt enim tibi istam orationem contemnendorum Siculorum atque aratorum statuæ illæ equestres, quas tu paulo ante quam ad urbem venires poni inscribi-que jussisti, ut omnium inimicorum tuorum animos accusatorumque tardares. Quis enim tibi molestus esset, aut quis appellare te auderet, quum videret statuas ab negotiatoribus, ab aratoribus, a communi Siciliae? Quod est aliud in illa provincia genus hominum? Nullum. Ergo ab universa provincia, generatimque a singulis ejus partibus, non solum diligitur sed etiam ornatur. Quis hunc attingere audeat? Potes igitur dicere, nihil tibi obesse oportere aratorum, negotiatorum, Siculorumque omnium testimonia, quum eorum nominibus in statuarum inscriptione oppositis omnem te speraris invidiam atque infamiam tuam posse extinguere? an quorum tu auctoritate statuas cohonestare tuas conatus es, eorum ego dignitate accusationem meam comprobare non potero? Nisi forte quod apud publicanos gratosus fuisti, in ea re spes te aliqua consolatur. Quæ gratia ne quid tibi prodesse posset ego mea diligentia perfecit:

aut quo modo existiment,] ‘Primus inseruit e Cd. Nann. Steph.’ (Orelli.) Hotmann conjectured ‘bene an male existiment.’ The words probably ought to be omitted. Zumpt says that they are omitted in the old editions and the MSS., except Lag. 42 (et Fabric.).

nec si cupias] ‘Nec si cupies:’ Klotz, from Cod. Vat. and the old editions.

orationem contemnendorum Siculorum] The word ‘contemnendorum’ seems very doubtful. Ursini says that one MS. has in its place ‘negotiatorum.’ ‘Contemnendorum’ has a kind of meaning, if we refer back to the words ‘An hoc dicere audebis,’ &c.; and it may mean ‘these Sicilians, whose opinions you affect to despise.’ We must perhaps connect the genitives ‘contemnendorum Siculorum’ with ‘statuæ.’ But see Lib. 3. c. 44, note.

omnium inimicorum] This reading of the Cod. Vat. is perhaps preferable to Zumpt’s ‘iniquorum,’ which may however be defended by Lib. 5. c. 69.—‘appellare te:’ Zumpt omits ‘te.’

quorum tu, &c.] This order of the words, adopted by Klotz from Cod. Vat., is recommended by several reasons, and by the following words: ‘eorum ego,’ &c. Zumpt has ‘quorum auctoritate tu.’

apud publicanos] The Cod. Vat. has ‘apud adversus publicanos;’ and one of these words is evidently a gloss of the other, or the copyist had two readings before him, and took both. Though ‘apud’ is common in such a formula as this, ‘adversus’ is also used; for ‘adversus’ is simply ‘turned towards,’ and may be a friendly or a hostile movement. Klotz has ‘adversus.’

ut etiam obesse deberet tu tua sapientia curasti. Etenim rem totam, iudices, breviter cognoscite.

LXX. In scriptura Siciliae pro magistro est quidam L. Carpinatius, qui et sui quaestus causa, et fortasse quod sociorum interesse arbitrabatur, bene penitus in istius familiaritatem sese dedit. Is quum praetorem circum omnia fora sectaretur neque ab eo unquam discederet, in eam jam venerat familiaritatem consuetudinemque in vendendis istius decretis et iudiciis transigendisque negotiis ut prope alter Timarchides numeraretur. Hoc erat etiam capitalior, quod idem pecunias his qui ab isto aliquid mercabantur fenori dabat. Ea autem feneratio erat ejusmodi, iudices, ut etiam is quaestus huic cederet. Nam quas pecunias ferebat his expensas

70. scriptura] The 'scriptura,' one of the oldest sources of Roman revenue, consisted of the payments made by those who pastured their cattle on the public lands. The name is derived from the circumstance of those who pastured their cattle on these lands being required to register (scribere) their names, and the number and kind of their animals, in respect of which they paid a certain sum of money. At this period this source of revenue, like others, was let to the Publicani, who paid the state a sum of money, and collected the payments for themselves.

The Publicani formed 'societates' or partnerships for the farming of this and other sources of revenue; and, as it was the object of the state to have the money paid at once, the members of these 'societates' must have taken shares in these undertakings, and paid down their money. The affairs of such a 'societas' were managed by a 'magister' or 'director' at Rome, and a 'pro magistro' or deputy director in the province or place where the money was to be collected (comp. Cic. Ad Att. xi. 10). A person employed in the collection was said 'operas dare': "Canuleius—qui in portu Syracusis operas dabat." In Cicero, Ad Att. xi. 10: "P. Terentius operas in portu et scriptura Asiae pro magistro dedit;" where the 'pro magistro' is said 'operas dare.' A passage of Valerius Maximus (vi. 9. n. 8) is quoted by Garatoni, where 'operas dare' is contrasted with 'publicanum agere': "P. Rupilius non publicanum in Sicilia egit, sed operas publicanis dedit;" and the note in the edition of Torrenius.

The two following extracts from the Lex Thoria will illustrate the text. Cap. 42: "Mag. prove mag. queive pro eo imperio iudicio suo quae publica Populi Romani in Africa sunt eruntve vectigalia fruenda locabit vendetve," &c.; and "ex lege dicta quam L. Caeci. Cn. Dom. cens. quom eorum agrorum vectigalia fruenda locaverunt legem deixerunt, neve quod in eis agreis pequs pascetur scripturae pecoris legem deicito," &c.

fora sectaretur] A 'forum' is a small community, as Forum Julii in Italy, and others. "'Fora,' 'conciliabula,' 'castella,' were places which, in extent and importance, stood between towns and villages (vici); they also belonged to the territory of some town, and had corporate rights" (Savigny, System, &c., ii. 251). This is the meaning of 'forum' as a town; but it may mean here all the 'fora,' that is, all the towns in which there were 'fora.'

familiaritatem] Cod. Met. and Lag. 42 omit this word and the 'que' after 'consuetudinem.' Zumpt retains the words, and Klotz omits them.

capitalior,] Klotz observes, after Zumpt, that 'capitalis,' in the sense of 'perniciosus,' is applied also to persons (Phil. v. 12; De Offic. iii. 21); and he adds, that in this word 'capitalis' Cicero also alludes to the 'capita' or capital which Carpinatius employed in money-lending. Such a play on words is quite in Cicero's fashion.

Nam quas, &c.] "For the sums which he entered in his books against those with whom he contracted, those very sums he also entered as received either from a 'scriba' of Verres, or from Timarchides, or from Verres himself." See Lib. 1. c. 36. Verres, with the aid of this knave, lent money on interest to those who borrowed it to bribe Verres. This ingenious way of charging a man with an annual payment of interest in respect of money of which he never had quibuscum contrahebat, eas aut scribae istius aut Timarchidi aut etiam isti ipsi referebat acceptas. Idem praeterea pecunias istius extraordinarias grandes suo nomine fenerabatur. Hic primo Carpinatius, antequam in istius tantam familiaritatem pervenisset, aliquoties ad socios literas de istius injuriis miserat. Canuleius vero, qui in portu Syracusis operas dabat, furta quoque istius permulta nominatim ad socios perscripserat, ea quae sine portorio Syracusis erant exportata: portum autem et scripturam eadem societas habebat. Ita factum est ut essent permulta quae ex the use, is a device that none but a Roman could have hit on.

extraordinarias] Such sums as were not entered in the books of accounts. See Lib. 1. c. 39.

portorio] The 'pro magistro' informed his associates of some of the thievery (furta) of Verres, namely, as to those articles which Verres sent from Sicily, from the port of Syracuse. The 'pro magistro' had no complaint to make about the 'furta;' but he complained that Verres did not pay the duties on articles exported (portorium); for, adds Cicero, the same 'societas' or company farmed the 'portoria' and the 'scriptura.' Cicero, in a passage in the Manilian oration, enumerates the three kinds of dues or payments to the state: "Cum hostium copiae non longe absunt, etiam si irruptio facta nulla sit, tamen pecora relinquuntur, agricultura deseritur, mercatorum navigatio conquiescit: ita neque ex portu, neque ex decumis, neque ex scriptura vectigal conservari potest." The 'portoria' were levied at ferries, bridges, and certain barriers, as well as in the ports. Probably they were always levied on goods which passed from one province to another, and they were also claimed sometimes on goods carried from one part of the same province to another, as we see from Cicero (Ad Att. ii. 16). This oppressive system of taxation was abolished in Italy B.C. 60 (Cic. Ad Q. Frat. i. 1. c. 11). The 'portitores' or 'collectors' lay in wait for the unfortunate merchant and his goods, and eased him of some of his money before they would let him pass. A twentieth of the value, it appears, was payable at Syracuse (c. 75). In France, before the revolution of '89, the same system of organised plunder existed. On the banks of the Loire, for instance, there was a series of toll-houses, from which the collectors pounced upon the traveller, and took money from him under the name of 'droits de traite' for the use of the state, and 'péages' in the name of communities or some great lord (L. Blanc, Hist. de la Révol. Française, i. 513). A collector was 'portitor.' The 'portitor Orci' (Virg. Georg. iv. 502) was a kind of personage with whom a Roman was very familiar in his lifetime.

societas] This is the Roman word for a partnership, the fundamental rules of which are the same in the Roman and in the English law. It was one of those 'obligationes' which were formed 'consensu' (Gaius, iii. 135). Gaius says (iii. 148): "societatem coire solemus aut totorum bonorum aut unius alicujus negotii, veluti mancipiorum emendorum aut vendendorum." Some of the Roman 'societates' were considered as artificial persons, a term not unknown in the English law, and a better term than 'corporations.' Savigny observes: "Also, commercial undertakings, in which individuals are united, appear in the form of juristical (artificial) persons, and the general name of such associations is 'societas;' but most of these had merely a contractual character, produced 'obligationes,' and were subject to be dissolved by notice, and also by the death of a single member. Some of them, however, obtained the powers of corporations, without on that account abandoning the name of 'societates:' to these belonged partnerships for the working of mines, salines, and contracts for farming the taxes." The Romans did not allow all 'societates' to have a 'corpus,' to be in corporations (Dig. 3. 4. 1). Those which were merely of a contractual nature were called 'privatae societates' (Dig. 17. 2. 59): "Paucis admodum in causis concessa sunt hujusmodi corpora; ut ecce vectigalium publicorum sociis permissum est corpus habere, vel auri fodinarum, vel argenti fodinarum, et salinarum. Item collegia (corporations) Romae certa sunt, quorum corpus senatusconsultis atque constitutionibus principalibus conformatum est, veluti pistorum, et quorundam aliorum, et navi- culariorum, qui et in provinciis sunt." It societatis literis dicere in istum et proferre possemus. Verum accidit ut Carpinatius, qui jam cum isto summa consuetudine, praeterea re ac ratione conjunctus esset, crebras postea literas ad socios de istius summis officiis in rem communem beneficiisque mitteret. Etenim quum iste omnia quaecunque Carpinatius postulabat facere ac decernere solebat, tum etiam ille plura scribebat ad socios, ut si posset ea quae antea scripserat plane extingueret. Ad extremum vero, quum iste jam decedebat, ejusmodi literas ad eos misit ut huic frequentes obviam prodirent, gratias agerent, facturos se si quid imperasset studiose pollicerentur. Itaque socii fecerunt, vetere instituto publicanorum, non quo istum ullo honore dignum arbitrarentur, sed quod sua interesse putabant se memores gratosque existimari: gratias isti egerunt: Carpinatium saepe ad se de ejus officiis literas misisse dixerunt.

LXXI. Iste quum respondisset ea se libenter fecisse, operasque Carpinatii magno opere laudasset, dat amico suo cuidam negotium, qui tum magister erat ejus societatis, ut diligenter caveret atque prospiceret ne quid esset in literis sociorum, quod contra caput suum aut existimationem valere posset. Itaque ille, multitudine sociorum remota, decumanos convocat: rem defert. Statuunt illi appears that the Romans gave facilities for the incorporation of persons who were united in any great commercial undertakings. The Romans knew the value of this privilege, as a mode of making the capitals of individuals efficient by combination, an advantage which the law of England has not yet given in an equal degree to the industry and capital of its citizens, who must run all the hazards of an unlimited partnership, and of a law most limited and inefficient for the purposes of the combination of many individuals.

The real nature of a corporate body, or of an artificial person, has been obscured and made almost unintelligible by a careless use of words, and the loose language of modern law-writers. Those who wish to understand what the notion is may read Savigny, System des Heut. Röm. Rechts, Juristische Personen, vol. ii.

non quo . . . arbitrarentur,] Zumpt observes that Lambinus, Gruter, Graevius, edited 'non quod,' apparently a correction. Ernesti edited 'non quo,' only because he thought that 'quod' could not go with the subjunctive, of which, however, we have abundant examples, and also of 'quia' with the subjunctive: "neque enim quod solum, sed etiam quia in hac structura, ubi, quid non sit, significatur, cum conjunctivo apud Ciceronem ponitur" (Zumpt). It would be strange if 'qui' and 'quum' could go with the subjunctive, and 'quod' and 'quia' could not. In another place, 'non quo . . . haberet' is followed by 'quod non—appellarentur.' To reduce to rules the usages of all the forms of 'quo,' is not easy.

sua interesse] Above, 'sociorum interesse,' which we must consider an elliptical expression. In 'sua interesse,' 'sua' must be the accusative, and there is good reason for taking it to be equivalent to 'suam.' Key's Latin Grammar, § 910.

71. decumanos] Cicero explains the sense in which he uses the word; they were the leading men, the farmers of the 'decumae.' But if the 'decumani' are the farmers of the 'decumae,' as they are, and this 'societas' for which Carpinatius acted, farmed only the 'scriptura et portoria' (c. 70), it may be asked, how did the 'decumani' come to interfere in the matter? The 'magister' of the 'societas' kept the body of his partners out of the way and called a meeting of the 'decumani,' who had a general interest in the affair, and did not wish that any evidence against Verres should appear on the books of the atque decernunt ut eae literae quibus existimatio C. Verris laederetur removerentur, operaque daretur ne ea res C. Verri fraudi esse posset. Si ostendo hoc decrevisse decumanos, si planum facio hoc decreto remotas esse literas, quid exspectatis amplius? possumne rem magis judicatam afferre, magis reum condemnatum in iudicium adducere? At quorum iudicio condemnatum? nempe eorum quos ii qui severiora iudicia desiderant arbitrantur res iudicare oportere, publicanorum iudicio; quos videlicet nunc populus iudices poscit, de quibus, ut eos iudices habeamus, legem ab homine non nostri generis, non ex equestri loco profecto, sed nobilissimo promulgatam videmus. Decumani, hoc est, principes et quasi senatores publicanorum, removendas de medio literas censuerunt. Habeo ex iis qui affuerunt, quos producam, quibus hoc committam, homines honestissimos ac locupletissimos, istos ipsos principes equestris ordinis; quorum splendore vel maxime istius qui legem promulgavit oratio et causa nititur. Venient in medium; dicent quid statuerint. Profecto, si recte homines novi, non mentientur: literas enim communes de medio remove potuerunt, fidem suam et religionem remove non possunt. Ergo equites Romani, qui te suo iudicio condemnarunt, horum iudicio condemnari noluerunt. Vos nunc utrum illorum iudicium an voluntatem sequi malitis considerate.

LXXII. Ac vide quid te amicorum tuorum studium, quid tuum consilium, quid sociorum voluntas adjuvet. Dicam paulo promptius: neque enim jam vereor ne quis hoc me magis accusatorie ‘publicani.’ They could not properly, one may assume, interfere in the affairs of this ‘societas;’ but the ‘magister’ got them together for this purpose, and they came to the resolution that the evidence must be destroyed.

removerentur,] The meaning of ‘remove,’ ‘to put out of the way,’ is clear from this chapter. Cic. Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 12, ‘remoto imperio ac vi potestatis et fascium;’ and Ulpian (Dig. 14. 3. 11. § 3), ‘non in loco remoto sed evidenti.’ In this instance ‘multitudine sociorum remota’ is what we call jobbing. The directors kept the shareholders away while they perpetrated the scandalous job.

legem . . . promulgatam] The Lex of L. Aurelius Cotta, the praetor, which was enacted under the name of the Lex Aurelia, was promulgated in this year, B.C. 70. The expression ‘legem promulgare,’ that is, ‘provulgare’ is not quite correct, for ‘promulgare’ signified to put up notice of a proposed ‘lex,’ or ‘rogatio,’ as a ‘lex’ was called before it was enacted. The correct expression ‘rogationem promulgare’ is used by Sallust. Festus correctly considers ‘promulgare’ the same as ‘provulgare.’

Cotta was not a patrician, but he was ‘nobilis,’ for his ancestors long before him had filled curule magistracies. The ‘nostri generis’ refers to Cicero’s equestrian rank.

quibus hoc committam,] These words are omitted in the Variorum edition. (See the note.) Graevius cannot see what these words do here; but they may be explained. Cicero had no evidence for what he affirmed except the ‘decumani:’ the written evidence was destroyed. Yet he says, “I will produce men who were present when the order (decretum) for destroying the written evidence was made. I will trust to them for the proof (iis hoc committam), for they will not lie.” Zumpt understood it; he says ‘quorum religioni rem permittam.’

72. paulo promptius:] ‘A little more boldly or confidently.’ In c. 14, ‘Heraclium—non promptissimum;’ and Divin. c. 13:

quam libere dixisse arbitretur. Si istas literas non decreto decumanorum magistri removissent, tantum possem in te dicere quantum in literis invenissem: nunc, decreto isto facto, literisque remotis, tantum mihi licet dicere quantum possum; tantum judici suspicari quantum velit. Dico te maximum pondus auri, argenti, eboris, purpurae, plurimam vestem Melitensem, plurimam stragulam, multam Deliacam supellectilem, plurima vasa Corinthia, magnum numerum frumenti, vim mellis maximam Syracusis exportasse: his pro rebus quod portorium non esset datum, literas ad socios misisse L. Canuleium qui in portu operas daret. Satisne magnum crimen hoc videtur? Nullum, opinor, majus. Quid defendet Hortensius? postulabit ut literas Canuleii proferam? crimen ejusmodi, nisi literis confirmetur, inane esse dicet? Clamabo literas remotas esse de medio; decreto sociorum erepta mihi esse istius indicia ac monumenta furtorum. Aut hoc contendat nunquam esse factum, aut omnia tela excipiat necesse est. Negas esse factum? Placet mihi ista defensio, descendo: aequa enim contentio, aequum certamen proponitur. Producam testes et producam plures eodem tempore: quoniam tum quum actum est una fuerunt, nunc quoque una sint: quum interrogabuntur, obligentur non solum jurisjurandi atque existimationis periculo sed etiam communi inter se conscientia. Si planum fit hoc ita quemadmodum dico esse factum, num poteris dicere, Hortensi, nihil in istis fuisse literis quod Verrem laederet? Non modo id non dices, sed ne illud quidem tibi dicere licebit, tantum quantum ego dicam non fuisse. Ergo hoc vestro consilio et gratia perfecistis ut, quemadmodum paulo ante dixi, et mihi summa facultas ad accusandum daretur et judici libera potestas ad credendum.

"quo paratior ad usum forensem promptiorque esse possim." 'Accusatorie' is as an accuser, that is, one who has the licence of saying any thing, or may be supposed to say any thing that criminales a defendant.

vestem Melitensem,] See Lib. 4. c. 46.

magnum numerum frumenti,] The form 'magna vis frumenti' also occurs in Tacit. Hist. v. 12.

vim mellis] Honey was one of the products of Sicily. The inhabitants, who were very industrious, probably paid great attention to bees, which were considered, as we see from Virgil (Georg. Lib. iv.), to belong to the economy of agriculture.

Quid defendet] 'Qui id defendet,' Klotz from Lag. 42. Zumpt will not have it, because 'defendere crimen non videtur dici posse.' But, though he is mistaken in this, I think that he is right in reading 'quid defendet,' which means, 'What will Hortensius say in defence?'

omnia tela] 'Omnium tela:' Klötz.

descendo:] This is an acceptance of the challenge. 'Your defence is this: well, I accept it. I descend to the contest.' L. Valla (Eleg. v. 36), quoted by Creuzer and Moser, says, "Descendo in praelium, in forum, in campum dicimus, non quia de loco superiore in inferiorem descendimus, sed quia de loco tuto in locum discriminis."

potestas ad credendum.] 'Potestas ad discernendum:' Klotz, because Cod. Fabr. and Lag. 42 have 'ad cernendum,' which seems, as Garatoni suggests, like a blunder for 'credendum.'

LXXIII. Quod quum ita sit, nihil fingam tamen. Meminero me non sumpsisse quem accusarem, sed recepisse quos defenderem; vos ex me causam non a me prolatam sed ad me delatam audire oportere; me Siculis satis esse facturum si, quae cognovi in Sicilia, quae accepi ab ipsis, diligenter exposuero; populo Romano, si nullius vim, nullius potentiam pertimuero; vobis, si facultatem vere atque honeste judicandi fide et diligentia mea fecero; mihi met, si ne minimum quidem de meo curriculo vitae quod mihi semper propositum fuit decessero. Quapropter nihil est quod metuas ne quid in te confingam: etiam quod laetere habes. Multa enim quae scio a te esse commissa, quod aut nimium turpia aut parum credibilia sunt, praetermittam: tantum agam de hoc toto nomine societatis. Ut jam scire possis, quaeram decretumne sit: quum id invenero, quaeram remotaene sint literae: quum id quoque constabit, vos jam hoc me tacito intelligetis; si illi, qui hoc istius causa decreverunt, equites Romani, nunc iidem in eum judices essent, istum sine dubio condemnarent de quo literas eas, quae istius furta indicarent, et ad se missas et suo decreto remotas scirent esse—quem igitur ab iis equitibus Romanis, qui istius causa cupiunt omnia, qui ab eo benignissime tractati sunt, condemnari necesse esset, is a vobis, judices, ulla vi aut ratione absolvi potest? Ac ne forte ea quae remota de medio atque erepta nobis sunt, omnia ita condita fuisse atque ita abdite latuisse videantur ut haec diligentia, quam ego a me expectari maxime puto, nihil eorum

73. nihil fingam tamen.] 'Though this is so, I will use no invention, all the same as if it were not so.' Examples of 'tamen' placed in a like position occur Lib. 2. c. 41, 'aliqua tamen;' Lib. 4. c. 20, 'testimonium tamen;' Lib. 4. c. 35, 'religionem tamen.' In the present passage it appears to have the same force as the Greek word ὅμως has in a like position.

nullius potentiam] 'Nullius potestatem:' Klotz from Lag. 42.—'jam hoc me tacito:' Zumpt omits 'hoc.'

in eum judices essent,] I find no MS. variations noted. The text is intelligible.—'intelligetis . . . istum condemnarent.' Zumpt makes an anacolouthon of this. I think that Ernesti is right in making a greater pause after 'intelligetis.' But Zumpt refuses the 'hoc' which his favourite Lag. 29 offers, and also other MSS., whom he considers to be untrustworthy here, because they omit the 'hoc' which precedes 'istius.'

qui—cupiunt, &c.] It would be a mistake to make a literal and stiff translation of an expression which is borrowed from the polite formulae of common life; as we see from Horace, 1 Sat. ix. 5: "Suaviter ut nunc est . . . et cupio omnia quae vis." See Heindorf's note. Creuzer and Moser quote other examples from Cicero, Ad Fam. x. 19; xiii. 6, 64, and 75.

ulla vi] The old reading is 'nulla vi' without an interrogation. Hotmann saw the feebleness of this, and he made the emendation 'ulla,' which is confirmed by the MSS. since collated. Hotmann did mischief sometimes; but sometimes he did well. Ernesti could not understand how 'vis' could be used in the acquittal of Verres; but Zumpt explains it by 'opes adversariorum,' and correctly. To remove the supposed difficulty, Ernesti thought that we should write 'via,' which Lag. 29 has. But we cannot accept it. The origin of the blunder is palpable.

ut haec diligentia, &c.] The common reading is 'ut hac diligentia . . . investigari—assequi;' and a reader is rather inclined investigare, nihil assequi potuerit, quae consilio aliquo aut ratione inveniri potuerunt, inventa sunt, iudices; manifestis in rebus hominem jam teneri videbitis. Nam quod in publicanorum causis vel plurimum aetatis meae versor vehementerque illum ordinem observo, satis commode mihi videor eorum consuetudinem usu tractandoque cognosse.

LXXIV. Itaque ut hoc comperi remotas esse literas societatis, habui rationem eorum annorum per quos iste in Sicilia fuisset: deinde quaesivi, quod erat inventu facillimum, qui per eos annos magistri illius societatis fuissent apud quos tabulae fuissent. Sciebam enim hanc magistrorum qui tabulas haberent consuetudinem esse ut, quum tabulas novo magistro traderent, exempla literarum ipsi habere non nollent. Itaque ad L. Vibium, equitem Romanum, virum primum, quem reperiēbam magistrum fuisse eo ipso anno, qui mihi maxime quaerendus erat, primum veni. Sane homini praeter opinionem improvise incidi. Scrutatus sum quae potui, et quaesivi omnia: inveni duos solos libellos a L. Canuleio missos, sociis ex portu Syracusis, in quibus erat ratio scripta mensium complurium rerum exportatarum istius nomine sine portorio. Itaque obsignavi statim. Erant haec ex eo genere quod ego maxime genus ex sociorum literis reperire cupiebam; verum tantum inveni, iudices, quod apud vos quasi exempli causa proferre possem. Sed tamen quidquid erit in his libellis, quantumcunque videbitur esse, hoc quidem certe manifestum erit: de ceteris ex hoc conjecturam facere debetis. Recita mihi, quaeso, hunc primum libellum: deinde to expect 'hac diligentia.' But then 'assequi' must have a passive sense; and it does not appear that an example can be found (Zumpt).

74. exempla] 'Copies.' There are examples in Forcellini.—'quaesivi omnia:' 'vidi omnia:' Klotz, from Cod. Met.

mensium complurium] Zumpt finds a difficulty in deciding if we should write 'mensium' or 'mensum,' for the MSS. don't agree. He takes no notice of the fact, that 'mensi-s' should regularly have 'mensi-um.' It is true that Ovid has 'mensum' (Met. viii. 500), as the editors write it; but we may make 'mensium' a dissyllable. There are several words of this declension that drop the 'i' in the genitive plural, and 'mensis' may be one of them. See Key's Grammar, p. 14, 'Remarks on the Third or I Declension;' and the note of Creuzer and Moser, who give seven reasons for 'mensum.'

obsignavi statim.] It appears that the accuser had authority to put a seal on such written testimony as he could find, and, as it seems, to carry it off with him; or, at any rate, to call upon the person in whose possession the papers were to produce them with the seals. An excepted case, as to carrying written evidence to Rome, is mentioned at the end of c. 76.

Erant haec, &c.] There seems no occasion to adopt the suggestion of Hotmann, 'Nec erant haec.' The sense is clear enough. Cicero found something that he was looking for, but it was not much. It was enough, however, to serve as a sample. Again, Zumpt would mend 'ex eo genere.' 'Vellem erat aliud ex eodem genere, sive erant alia vel plura ex eodem genere.' It is singular that a good critic should take such pains to spoil what is so clear. All that the MSS. could justify us in doing is, to change 'eo' into 'eodem,' which seems no improvement. Klotz has 'erant haec ex eodem.'

illum alterum. LIBELLI CANULEIANI. Non quaero, unde cccc amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitensium, unde quinquaginta tricliniorum lectos, unde tot candelabra: non, inquam, jam quaero unde haec habueris; sed quo tantum tibi opus fuerit, id quaero. Mitto de melle: sed tantum Melitensium, quasi etiam amicorum uxores—tantum lectorum, quasi omnium istorum villas ornaturus esses.

LXXV. Et quum haec paucorum mensium ratio in his libellis sit, facite ut vobis triennii totius veniat in mentem. Sic contendo; ex his parvis libellis, apud unum magistrum societatis repertis, vos jam conjectura assequi posse cujusmodi praedo iste in illa provincia fuerit, quam multas cupiditates, quam varias, quam infinitas habuerit; quantam pecuniam non solum numeratam verum etiam hujusmodi in rebus positam confecerit: quae vobis alio loco planius explicabuntur. Nunc hoc attendite. His exportationibus, quae recitatae sunt, scribit HS LX socios perdidisse ex vicesima portorii Syracusis. Pauculis igitur mensibus, ut hi pusilli et contempti libelli indicant, furta praetoris quae essent HS duodecies ex uno oppido solo exportata sunt. Cogitate nunc, quum illa Sicilia sit, hoc est insula, quae undique exitus maritimos habeat, quid ex ceteris locis exportatum putetis; quid Agrigento, quid Lilybaeo, quid Panhormo, quid Thermis, quid Halesa, quid Catina, quid ex ceteris oppidis; quid vero Messana, quem iste sibi locum maxime tutum arbitrabatur, ubi animo semper soluto liberoque erat, quod sibi iste Mamertinos delegerat, ad quos omnia quae aut diligentius servanda aut occultius exportanda erant deportaret. His inventis amicorum uxores] Cicero suggests that the Malta vests were intended as presents for the wives of those whom Verres honoured with his dubious friendship.—‘mitto:’ compare Lib. 4. c. 3: ‘mitto jam rationem.’ Zumpt has ‘omitto,’ from Lag. 42 (pr. m.). On the same authority he omits ‘ne’ after ‘tantum,’ but his reason is not worth much. It is not, however, wanted: “I say nothing of the honey: but such a quantity of Malta vests—as if you were going to dress out even your friends’ wives—such a number of couches, as if you were going to furnish the ‘villae’ of all of them.” Klotz has ‘tantumne.’

furta praetoris quae essent] ‘Things stolen by the praetor to the amount of,’ &c. This is the proper translation of ‘quae essent.’ The HS LX is clearly meant for sixty thousands. Orelli has ‘LX millia;’ but ‘millia’ is often omitted ‘HS duodecies’ is rightly explained by the addition of ‘centena millia,’ as appears from the amount of the tax, which was a twentieth of the value. For twenty times sixty thousand make twelve times a hundred thousand. The abbreviation of ‘duodecies’ in Lag. 42 is ∞ cc. The horizontal stroke denotes a thousand, but the stroke is often omitted. Klotz has ‘HS ∞ cc.’

It appears that the export duty was a twentieth. A twentieth on goods was a common charge; and, if they were not valued too high, five per cent. is a more moderate duty than many modern nations have been content with. See Thucydides, vii. 28.

libellis, ceteri remoti et diligentius sunt reconditi: nos tamen, ut omnes intelligant hoc nos sine cupiditate agere, his ipsis libellis contenti sumus.

LXXVI. Nunc ad sociorum tabulas accepti et expensi, quas remove honeste nullo modo potuerunt, et ad amicum tuum Carpinatium revertemur. Inspiciebamus Syracusis a Carpinatio confectas tabulas societatis, quae significabant multis nominibus eos homines versuram a Carpinatio fecisse qui pecunias Verri dedissent. Quod erit vobis luce clarius, iudices, tum quum eos ipsos produxero qui dederunt. Intelligetis enim illa tempora per quae, quum essent in periculo, pretio sese redemerunt, cum societatis tabulis non solum consulibus verum etiam mensibus convenire. Quum haec maxime cognosceremus et jam in manibus tabulas haberemus, repente aspicimus lituras ejusmodi, quasi quaedam vulnera tabularum recentia. Statim suspicione offensi ad ea ipsa nomina oculos animumque transtulimus. Erant acceptae pecuniae C. VERRUTIO C. F. sic tamen ut usque ad alterum R literae constarent integrae, reliquae omnes essent in litura. Alterum, tertium, quartum, permulta erant ejusdemmodi nomina. Quum manifestares, tum flagitiosa litura tabularum atque insignis turpitudine tenebatur, quaerere incepimus de Carpinatio, quisnam is esset Verrutius quicum tantae pecuniae rationem haberet. Haerere homo, versari, rubere. Quod lege excipiuntur tabulae publicanorum quominus Romam deportentur, ut res quam maxime clara ac testata esse posset, in jus ad Metellum Carpinatium voco, tabulasque societatis in forum defero. Fit maximus concursus hominum; et quod erat

76. versuram] ‘Versuram facere’ means no more than ‘to borrow.’ ‘Versura solvere,’ ‘to pay by borrowing,’ means that a debt still exists, though the creditor is changed. Cic. Ad Att. v. 21: ‘Salaminii quum Romae versuram facere vellent;’ and Tacit. Ann. vi. 16: ‘postremo vetita versura.’ The phrase ‘versuram facere’ is incorrectly explained by the writer of the article FENUS in Smith’s Dict. of Antiqs.; and the passage of Festus cited in support of the explanation, that it means to borrow money to pay off an old debt, proves that ‘versuram facere’ is simply to borrow; and then the text of Festus attempts to explain how the phrase originated. See Savigny, Vermischte Schriften; Zinswucher des M. Brutus; Forcellini, Versura.

acceptae, &c.] Orelli reads ‘erant acceptae pecuniae A. C. Verrutio C. F.,’ and so does the Variorum edition. Zumpt and Klotz omit the preposition, for the full expression is ‘alicui acceptum ferre’ or ‘referre,’ where the dative depends on the verb. But it appears from Cicero that the preposition was also used: “una praepositio est abs, eaque nunc tantum in acceptis tabulis manet, et ne iis quidem omnium: in reliquo sermone mutata est” (Orat. c. 47). See the note in Goeller’s edition.

versari,] Most of the MSS. and the older editions have ‘aversari,’ which is the reading of Orelli and Klotz. Zumpt has ‘versari,’ from Cod. Metell. and Lag. 42. There is also a reading ‘adversari.’ ‘Versari’ is supposed to be equivalent to ‘versat se,’ Lib. i. c. 51.

defero.] The best MSS. are said to have ‘defert,’ which Klotz has. But there is no sense in this reading unless we also write ‘tabulas’ without ‘que.’

Carpinatii nota cum isto praetore societas ac feneratio, summe exspectabant omnes quidnam in tabulis teneretur.

LXXVII. Rem ad Metellum defero, me tabulas perspexisse sociorum, in his tabulis magnam rationem C. Verrutii permultis nominibus esse; meque hoc perspicere ex consulum mensiumque ratione, hunc Verrutium neque ante adventum C. Verris neque post decessionem quidquam cum Carpinatio rationis habuisse: postulo ut mihi respondeat qui sit iste Verrutius, mercator, an negotiator, an arator, an pecuarius; in Sicilia sit an jam decesserit. Clamare omnes ex conventu, neminem unquam in Sicilia fuisse Verrutium. Ego instare ut mihi responderet quis esset, ubi esset, unde esset; cur servus societatis qui tabulas conficeret semper in Verrutii nomine certo ex loco mendosus esset. Atque haec postulabam, non quo illum cogi putarem oportere ut ad ea mihi responderet invitus, sed ut omnibus istius furta, illius flagitium, utriusque audacia perspicua esse posset. Itaque illum in jure metu conscientiaque peccati mutum atque exanimatum ac vix vivum relinquo: tabulas in foro summa hominum frequentia exscribo: adhibentur in exscribendo de conventu viri primarii: literae lituraeque omnes assimulatae, expressae, de tabulis in libros transferuntur. Haec omnia summa cura et diligentia recognita et collata, et ab hominibus honestissimis obsignata sunt. Si Carpinatius mihi tum respondere noluit, responde mihi nunc tu, Verres, quem esse hunc tuum paene gentilem Verrutium putes. Fieri non potest ut, quem video te praetore in Sicilia fuisse et quem ex ipsa ratione intelligo locupletem fuisse, eum tu in tua provincia non cognoveris. Atque adeo, ne hoc aut longius aut obscurius esse possit, procedite in servus] There is no reason why this should not be taken literally to signify a slave who was employed in keeping accounts. Hotmann supposes the 'servus societatis' to be one who 'Syracensis operam dabat societati,' as opposed to the 'magister,' an absurd explanation. Manutius says the same, and adds that the 'servus' is Carpinatius. Cave credideris. — 'qui tabulas confecerit:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat.; but incorrectly, I think.

77. mercator, an negotiator, &c.] See Lib. 2. c. 3: "mercibus suppeditandis," &c.

certo ex loco] 'Beginning from a certain place in the entries.' Klotz, from Cod. Vat., has 'certo in loco,' which Creuzer and Moser take to be the true reading. But 'certo ex loco' is quite as consistent with Cicero's statement, and more intelligible, I

in jure] "Before the praetor." See Lib. 3. c. 15.

in exscribendo] This passage is worthy of note, as showing the way in which documentary evidence was secured when the originals could not be produced at the trial. In this case there was an exception in favour of the 'publicani.' Accordingly copies were made and attested.—'de conventu' seems better than 'ex conventu,' which Klotz has from Cod. Vat.

gentilem] The resemblance between Verres and Verrutius is the foundation of this remark of Cicero, though Verres was not a gentile name.

Atque adeo,] Comp. Lib. 2. c. 1: "Atque adeo, ante quam," &c.

ipsa cubilia] Creuzer and Moser compare Cicero, In Pisonem, c. 34: "An vero tu parum putas," &c.

78. caudam] The end of the name of Verres. There is a delicious note of Hotmann on this passage, which I copy out, for fear that it should be lost: "extremi-tatem. Sumpta videtur translatio a bestia cujus cauda extra cubile extans index est eam ibi delitescere." Did Hotmann ever see a beast in its 'cubile,' with its tail on the outside, keeping watch, instead of the head? Cicero could not refrain from a joke on the name of Verres, on which Nannius acutely remarks: "festive autem Verrem caudatum fecit, alludens ad id quod Verres suem significat." There is, however, an objection to this explanation, for a pig's tail is too short to trail in the mud. But this difficulty may be removed by comparing another passage, in which Verres is a hog wallowing in the mire (Lib. 4. c. 15): "luto volutatum."

The genuine reading appears to be 'coda,' and not 'cauda.' The reading of Klotz, 'Verrinam' for 'Verris,' is an improvement, and what is intended in Cod. Vat., though the real reading there is 'Verris nam.'

exhibeas] 'Exhibere' is a word of art, to produce for various purposes. The title of the Digest (10. 4), Ad exhibendum, is the best comment upon it. The following passage from Gaius (Dig. 10. tit. 4. s. 13) will explain the text: "si liber homo detineri ab aliquo dicatur, interdictum adversus eum qui detinere dicitur de exhibendo eo potest quis habere." The person who detained the free man was obliged to produce him, that the question of freedom might be tried. See also Dig. 48. tit. 3, De Custodia et exhibitione reorum, an instructive title, from which we learn that accused persons could be out on bail, but the bail must produce them or pay (s. 4): "si quis reum criminis, pro quo satisdedit, non exhibuerit, poena pecuniaria plectitur." We have the name 'exhibit' in chancery proceedings, which is the Roman name, but not the thing.

Crassi—et Antonii,] The orators M. Antonius and L. Lucinius Crassus.

nemo ita vivebat . . . negaret.] These words are quoted by Gellius, xiii. 20, who observes that he found 'peccatu' written 'in uno atque altero antiquissimae fidei libro Tironiano;' and he defends the form 'peccatu' by like instances. 'Peccatu' is also in Lag. 42 (Zumpt).

At hominem] This passage is thus quoted by Gellius (vi. 16): "Nunc vero quid faciat Hortensius? Avaritiaene crimina, &c. An hominem . . . defendat," which variation may be either owing to the carelessness of Gellius, in not looking further, or to his copyists. It is an instance, however, of the care nosissimum, nequissimumque defendit. An ab hac ejus infamia, nequitia, vestros animos in aliam partem fortitudinis commemoratione traducat? At homo inertior, ignavior, magis vir inter mulieres, impura inter viros muliercula proferri non potest. At mores commodi. Quis contumacior? quis inhumanior? quis superbior? At haec sine cujusquam malo. Quis acerbior? quis insidiosior? quis crudelior unquam fuit? In hoc homine atque in ejusmodi causa quid facerent omnes Crassi et Antonii? Tantum, opinor, Hortensi: ad causam non accederent, neque in alterius impudentia sui pudoris existimationem amitterent. Liberi enim ad causas solutique veniebant; neque committebant ut, si impudentes in defendendo esse noluissent, ingrati in deserendo existimarentur.

that we should take in adopting the readings of single passages which are quoted by ancient writers; for they were often misquoted. Here the context disproves the reading in the text of Gellius. As to the omission of 'patronus,' the text of Gellius cannot be decisive; but it seems from Zumpt's remark to be only in Lag. 42 (p. m.).

Liberi, &c.] Klotz observes that this is an allusion to the relationship that subsisted between Verres and Hortensius, who is said to have received from Verres many costly works of art, and he was therefore not 'liber et solutus,' being under obligations to him. He also came within the terms of the Lex Cincia de donis et muneribus, at least if he had received any presents for defending Verres. Among other things, Hortensius is said to have received a sphinx of excellent workmanship, about which a joke of Cicero's is recorded by Plutarch (Cicero, c. 7); Quintilian (Inst. Or. vi. c. 3. § 93); and Pliny (H. N. xxxiv. 18).

In place of 'noluissent,' some editions have 'voluissent;' and 'voluissent' is the reading of Lag. 29 and 42. These two words have sometimes been interchanged in the MSS.; but 'noluissent' is clearly the right reading here. 'These old orators used to come to a case perfectly free and unshackled, and they took care not to act in such a way that, if they had not chosen to be shameless enough to undertake a defence, they could be charged with ingratitude for declining it.'

ACTIONIS SECUNDAE IN C. VERREM

LIBER TERTIUS.

DE FRUMENTO.

I. Omnes qui alterum, iudices, nullis impulsu inimicitiiis, nulla privatim laesi injuria, nullo praemio adducti, in iudicium rei publicae causa vocant, providere debent non solum quid oneris in praesentia tollant, sed etiam quantum in omnem vitam negotii suscipere Frumentum.] This oration is entitled 'Frumentaria,' or 'De Frumento,' and treats of the mal-administration of Verres with respect to the products of Sicily, which are included under the term 'Frumentum.' In the last chapter of this oration, Cicero enumerates the various kinds of imposts which related to the 'Frumentum' in Sicily: "Quum unae decumae lege et conditione detrahantur, alterae novis institutis propter annonae rationem imperentur, ematur praeterea frumentum quotannis publice, postremo etiam in cellam magistratibus et legatis imperetur." The nature of these several imposts is explained by Cicero (c. 5, &c.). The oration treats (c. 6—69) of the Frumentum decumanum; then (c. 70—80) of the Frumentum emptum; and lastly (c. 81—97) of the Frumentum aestimatum.

The word 'Frumentum' contains the same element as 'fruges' and 'fructus.' A word like this must have had a legal or technical meaning, for it would occur both in testaments and contracts, and accordingly its meaning must be settled. Gallus (Dig. 50. 16. 77), quoted by Paulus, explains "frumentum id esse quod arista in se teneat: lupinum vero et fabam fruges potius dici, quia non arista sed siliqua continentur, quae Servius apud Alfenum in frumento contineri putat." Pliny (H. N. xviii. 7. ed. Harduin) makes 'fruges' a general term, and divides 'fruges' into two kinds: "sunt autem duo prima earum genera: frumenta, ut triticum, hordeum; et legumina, ut faba, cicer. Differentia vero notior quam ut indicari deceat." The Greek word σῖτος corresponds to 'frumentum;' for under the general term σῖτος is placed πυροί (wheat) and κριθαί (barley), as species. We have no English word which distinctly represents the grasses which contain cereal products. The word 'grain' is perhaps the nearest.

The word 'triticum,' which Cicero often uses in this oration, is 'wheat,' and 'hordeum' is 'barley.' That the 'triticum' is the same as our wheat, and that it has not been essentially changed in the course of many centuries, is proved by the grains that have been found in Egypt in the tombs of Thebes; and there is the same evidence for the permanence of the character of the 'hordeum' or barley. Cicero does not mention any other cerealia in this oration than the 'triticum' and the 'hordeum.'

1. in praesentia] Zumpt refers to Cicero, Ad Fam. ii. 10, for an example of 'in praesenti:' "hoc ad te in praesenti scripsi," where the reading may be wrong. As to the Latinity of 'in praesentia,' see Forcellini.—'sed etiam:' Klotz, following Cod.

conentur. Legem enim sibi ipsi dicunt innocentiae virtutumque omnium qui ab altero rationem vitae reposcunt; atque eo magis, si id, ut ante dixi, faciunt nulla re commoti alia nisi utilitate communi. Nam qui sibi hoc sumpsit ut corrigat mores aliorum ac peccata reprehendat, quis huic ignoscat, si qua in re ipse ab religione officii declinarit? Quapropter hoc etiam magis ab omnibus ejusmodi civis laudandus ac diligendus est, quod non solum ab re publica civem improbum removet, verum etiam se ipsum ejusmodi fore profitetur ac praestat ut sibi non modo communi voluntate virtutis atque officii, sed etiam vi quadam magis necessaria recte sit honesteque vivendum. Itaque hoc, judices, ex homine clarissimo atque eloquentissimo, L. Crasso, saepe auditum est, quum se nullius rei tam poenitere diceret quam quod C. Carbonem unquam in judicium vocavisset; minus enim liberas omnium rerum voluntates habebat, et vitam suam pluribus quam vellet observari oculis arbitrabatur. Atque ille his praesidiis ingenii fortunaeque munitus tamen hac cura continebatur, quam sibi nondum confirmato consilio sed ineunte aetate susceperat. Quo minus etiam praecipitur eorum virtus et integritas, qui ad hanc rem adolescentuli quam qui jam firmata aetate descendunt. Illi enim, antequam potuerunt existimare quanto liberior vita sit eorum qui neminem accusarint, gloriae causa atque ostentationis accusant: nos, qui jam et quid facere et quantum judicare possemus ostendimus, nisi facile cupiditates nostras teneremus, nunhoc . . quod] The common reading is 'qui,' for which Zumpt, I think properly, writes 'quod,' which refers to 'hoc.'—'ab re publica . . removet.' This use of the preposition with 'removet' is doubtful in Cicero, according to Zumpt. But there is 'removent ab oculis' (De Off. i. 35).

L. Crasso,] C. Papirius Carbo was prosecuted for Repetundae B.C. 119, by the then youthful orator L. Lucinius Crassus. He was only one-and-twenty. Carbo escaped condemnation by committing suicide. 'Cantharides sumpsisse dicitur,' says Cicero (Ad Fam. ix. 21). The passages relating to the prosecution of Carbo are collected by Meyer, Orat. Rom. Fragm. p. 295, 2nd ed. See the note, p. 35, as to these youthful prosecutors at Rome.

praecipitur] The common reading is 'perspicitur,' which does not suit the sense. An expression of Cicero (De Off. i. 23) helps to explain 'praecipitur.' He says:

"illud etiam ingenii magni est, praecipere cogitatione futura," &c. Here he means to say: "for this reason, it is not so easy to form a conjecture of the integrity of young men who become accusers, for they have not lived long enough to be tried, as to form a conjecture of the integrity of those who become accusers at a more advanced time of life." Klotz has 'perspicitur.'

et quid facere] 'Facere, non ad onus accusandi, sed ad universae vitae rationem refero:' P. Manutius. The meaning of 'quantulum judicare' is not so clear, and the commentators say nothing about it. There is a reading 'quantillum dicere,' which would give a sense, and express what Cicero could do, and what he could say. But 'facere' appears to refer to his past life, and, as Hotmann says, probably to his conduct in Sicily as quaestor, under Sex. Peducaeus, his praetor. 'Judicare,' then, must refer to his judgment or discretion.

II. Atque ego hoc plus oneris habeo quam qui ceteros accusarunt, si onus est id appellandum quod cum laetitia feras ac voluptate, verumtamen ego hoc amplius suscepi quam ceteri, quod ita postulatur ab hominibus ut his abstineant maxime vitiis in quibus alterum reprehenderint. Furem aliquem aut rapacem accusaris. Vitanda tibi semper erit omnis avaritiae suspicio. Maleficum quempiam adduxeris aut crudelem. Cavendum erit semper ne qua in re asperior aut inhumanior fuisse videare. Corruptorem, adulterum. Providendum diligenter ne quod in vita vestigium libidinis appareat. Omnia postremo quae vindicaris in altero tibi ipsi vehementer fugienda sunt. Etenim non modo accusator sed ne objurgator quidem ferendus est is qui, quod in altero vitium reprehendit, in eo ipse deprehenditur. Ego in uno homine omnia vitia quae possunt in homine perduto nefarioque esse reprehendo; nullum esse dico indicium libidinis, sceleris, audaciae, quod non in istius unius vita perspicere possitis. Ego in isto reo legem hanc mihi, iudices, statuo, vivendum ita esse ut isti non modo factis dictisque omnibus sed etiam oris oculorumque illa contumacia ac superbia quam videtis dissimillimus esse ac semper fuisse videar. Patior, non moleste fero, iudices, eam vitam, quae mihi sua sponte antea jucunda fuerit, nunc jam mea lege et conditione necessariam quoque futuram.

III. Et in hoc homine saepe a me quaeris, Hortensi, quibus inimiciis aut qua injuria adductus ad accusandum descenderim. Mitto jam rationem officii mei necessitudinisque Siculorum: de ipsis tibi inimiciis respondeo. An tu majores ullas inimicitias putas esse quam contrarias hominum sententias ac dissimilitudines studiorum et voluntatum? Fidem sanctissimam in vita qui putat potest ei non inimicus esse, qui quaestor consulem suum, consiliis

2. Atque ego hoc] Orelli has the vicious order, 'Atque hoc ego,' &c.; and, again, he has 'veruntamen hoc ego.'

Furem . . . accusaris.] It is usual to place a note of interrogation in such cases, as Zumpt here does after 'accusaris,' 'crudelem,' and 'adulterum.' But these notes of interrogation are used much too freely in our Latin texts, and they are not wanted here. Klotz omits them. It may be rendered, 'suppose you accuse a man of theft or robbery,' for 'rapacem' contains the notion of 'rapina' (Gaius, iii. 209: "Qui res alienas rapit, tenetur etiam furti," &c.).

In the passage of Terence (Eunuch. ii. 2, 21), quoted by Cicero (De Am. c. 25), "Negat quis; nego: ait; aio;" it is usual to place a note of interrogation after 'quis' and after 'ait;' but incorrectly. See Seyffert's note on the passage of Cicero in his edition of the De Amicitia.

Ego in isto reo] 'When I undertake to be the prosecutor of this man whom I bring before you, I am imposing these terms on myself.' This use of 'in' with the ablative is easily learnt by examples: "Et in hoc homine," c. 3. There are many other examples in these orations.

commissis, pecunia tradita, rebus omnibus creditis, spoliare, relinquere, prodere, oppugnare ausus sit? Pudorem ac pudicitiam qui colit potest animo aequo istius quotidiana adulteria, meretriciam disciplinam, domesticum lenocinium videre? Qui religiones deorum immortalium retinere vult, ei, qui fana spoliavit omnia, qui extensarum orbitis praedari sit ausus, inimicus non esse qui potest? Qui jure aequo omnes putat esse oportere, is tibi non infestissimus sit quum cogitet varietatem libidinemque decretorum tuorum? Qui sociorum injuriis provinciarumque incommodis doleat, is in te non expilatione Asiae, vexatione Pamphylicae, squalore et lacrimis Siciliae concitetur? Qui civium Romanorum jura ac libertatem sanctam apud omnes haberi velit, is non tibi plus etiam quam inimicus esse debeat, quum tua verbera, quum secures, quum cruces ad civium Romanorum supplicia fixas recordetur? An, si qua in re contra rem meam decrevisset aliquid injuria, jure ei me inimicum esse arbitrare: quum omnia contra omnium bonorum rem, causam, rationem, utilitatem, voluntatemque fecerit, quaeris cur ei sim inimicus cui populus Romanus infestus est? qui praesertim plus etiam quam pars virilis postulat pro voluntate populi Romani oneris ac muneris suscipere debeam?

IV. Quid illa quae leviora videntur esse, non cujusvis animum possunt movere, quod ad tuam ipsius amicitiam ceterorumque hominum magnorum atque nobilium faciliorem aditum istius habet nequitia et audacia quam cujusquam nostrum virtus et integritas?

haberi velit,] Most of the MSS. have 'vult,' and yet there is good authority for 'velit,' which Zumpt and Klotz have. The use of 'qui' with the indicative, 'qui putat,' 'qui colit,' &c., and the transition to the subjunctive form, 'qui doleat,' &c., are perfectly intelligible. Cicero begins with speaking of himself, and, as he becomes more animated, he transfers the same opinion to others; he becomes general. Zumpt's explanation is right: "nimirum conjunctivus cujusvis hominis est, indicativus ad unum Ciceronem pertinet, neque male ab uno ad plures et omnes transitus fit."

pars virilis] Cicero explains this Lib. 4. c. 37: "est aliqua mea pars virilis," &c. Here he says, that out of regard to the good wishes of the Roman people towards him, shown by their raising him to the Curule Aedileship, he, as one of those, as one of the all, who hate Verres, imposes on himself even more than his share of the burden of punishing this scoundrel. Every Roman, every man, must hate him, for he has injured every body (contra omnium bonorum rem, &c.). It is the duty of all to punish him; and Cicero imposes on himself more than his share of this duty. We may now see why, after beginning in the earlier part of this chapter with his own personal dislike of Verres, he imperceptibly makes all other persons of the same mind as himself (qui doleat, &c.). 'Pars virilis' is well explained by Forcellini, as usual. The law-writers make the matter still plainer. Paulus (Sext. Recep. iii. tit. 2) says: "si unius patroni duo sint liberti, et alterius quatuor, singuli viriles, id est, aequales portiones habebunt."

4. Quid illa, &c.] 'Quid? illa, quae,' &c.: Zumpt and Klotz, as usual.

nostrum . . hominum novorum] Cicero is here showing his soreness at the contempt with which the old 'nobiles' looked

Odistis hominum novorum industriam; despicitis eorum frugalitatem; pudorem contemnitis; ingenium vero et virtutem depressam extinctamque cupitis. Verrem amatis. Ita credo: si non virtute, non industria, non innocentia, non pudore, non pudicitia; at sermone, at literis, at humanitate ejus delectamini. Nihil eorum est; contraque sunt omnia cum summo dedecore ac turpitudine, tum singulari stultitia atque inhumanitate oblita. Huic homini si cujus domus patet, utrum ea patere an hiare ac poscere aliquid videtur? Hunc vestri janitores, hunc cubicularii diligunt: hunc liberti vestri, hunc servi ancillaeque amant: hic cum venit, extra ordinem vocatur: hic solus introducitur; ceteri, saepe frugalissimi homines, excluon the 'novi homines,' of whom he was one. The speech of Marius (Sallust, Jug. 63) may serve as a comment on this passage. The precise signification of the term 'novus homo' is well explained by W. A. Becker, in his excellent work, "Handbuch der Röm. Alterthümer" (2^{er} Th. 1^{ste} Abth. p. 225): "he who was the first man of his family to obtain a 'curule' magistracy, was, as Cicero says, 'princeps nobilitatis,' or 'auctor generis;' that is, with him begins the 'nobilitas' of his family. He is the first who has the 'jus imaginis ad posteritatis memoriam prodendae' (Cic. Pro Rab. Post. c. 7; Verr. v. 14); but he has no 'imagines' himself, not even 'suam,' as it is often incorrectly said; for it is natural and certain that his bust would not be set up until after his death (Polyb. vi. 53). He is not yet 'nobilis' in the full sense; it is a 'nova nobilitas;' he himself is and is called 'homo novus,' and thus 'novitas' is placed between 'ignobilitas' and 'nobilitas.' From this it follows that a patrician could never be a 'homo novus,' but only a plebeian, and that L. Sextius, the first plebeian consul, was also the first 'homo novus' (Liv. vii. 1)." at sermone, &c.] See p. 116, note on 'At.' This use of 'si . . at' is common in these orations.

humanitate] Gellius (xiv. 16) says: "humanitatem appellaverunt id propemodum quod Graeci παιδείαν vocant; nos eruditionem institutionemque in bonas artes dicimus: quas qui sinceriter cupiunt appetuntque, hi sunt vel maxime humanissimi, &c. Sic igitur eo verbo vel veteres esse usos et cum primis M. Varronem Marcumque Tullium omnes ferme libri declarant." The juxta-position of 'literis' assists the explanation of 'humanitas.' In the letter Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 9, Cicero says of the inhabitants of the province of Asia: "quum vero ei generi hominum praesimus, non modo in quo ipsa sit sed etiam a quo ad alios pervenisse putetur humanitas," where the word has the same sense as in this passage. But there are passages in which it seems to be used in the wider sense of the general feeling of benevolence or good-will to others, which is one of the characteristics of men as distinguished from brutes: "tametsi nullus in te sensus humanitatis, nulla ratio unquam fuit religionis," Lib. 1. c. 18; and in De Am. c. 13: "Quamobrem si cadit in sapientem animi dolor, qui profecto cadit, nisi ex ejus animo extirpatam humanitatem arbitramur," where the word means the natural feelings and affections generally.

poscere aliquid] As if every noble's house were gaping for what it could get from Verres to put into its mouth.

janitores.] For the various functions of slaves, see the article "Servus," Smith's Dict. of Antiqs. — 'servi ancillaeque,' 'slaves, male and female;' which remark may not be useless, when we recollect how we are taught to translate 'ancilla.' Gaius (i. 85): "ex diverso ex ancilla et libero poterant liberi nasci: nam ea lege cavetur ut si quis cum aliena ancilla, quam credebatur liberam esse, coierit," &c.

extra ordinem] This hardly needs an explanation. Cicero, it is likely enough, had often made his calls on great men, and had seen those who came after him introduced to the great man's presence before him. Good honest folks, poor it is true,—a thing which cannot always be helped,—had the mortification of seeing a rich rogue called out of his turn by the obsequious slave. Horace gives the right rule (Carm. iii. 14) in another case:

"Si per invisum mora janitorem

duntur. Ex quo intelligi potest eos vobis esse carissimos qui ita vixerint ut sine vestro praesidio salvi esse non possint. Quid hoc cuiquam ferendum putas esse, nos ita vivere in pecunia tenui ut prorsus nihil acquirere velimus, ut dignitatem nostram populi Romani beneficia non copiis sed virtute tueamur; istum, rebus omnibus undique ereptis, impune eludentem circumfluere atque abundare? hujus argento dominia vestra, hujus signis et tabulis forum comitumque ornari? praesertim quum vos vestro Marte his rebus omnibus abundetis? Verrem esse qui vestras villas suis manubiis ornet? Verrem esse qui cum L. Mummio certet? ut plures hic sociorum urbes quam ille hostium spoliasset videatur; plures hic villas ornamentis fanorum quam ille fana spoliis hostium ornasse; et is erit ob eam rem vobis carior ut ceteri libentius suo periculo vestris cupiditatibus serviant?

V. Verum haec et dicentur alio loco, et dicta sunt: nunc proficiscemur ad reliqua, si pauca ante fuerimus a vobis, iudices, deprecati. Superiore omni oratione perattentos vestros animos habuimus: id fuit nobis gratum admodum. Sed multo erit gratius si reliqua voletis attendere: propterea quod in his omnibus quae antea dicta sunt erat quaedam ex ipsa varietate ac novitate rerum et criminum delectatio. Nunc tractare causam instituimus frumentariam, quae magnitudine injuriae fere criminibus ceteris antecellit, jucunditatis in agendo et varietatis minus habebit: vestra autem auctoritate et prudentia dignissimum est, iudices, in audiendi diligentia non minus religioni tribuere quam voluptati. In hac causa frumentaria cogdominia vestra,] The common reading is 'domos' or 'domus vestras,' a reading which has apparently arisen from the old copyists not understanding 'dominia.' In the passage of Gellius (ii. 24), "qui Ludis Megalensibus antiquo ritu mutitarent, id est, mutua inter sese dominia agitent," 'dominia' has been changed into 'convivia' in some editions. Lipsius (Saturn. i. 19. Vol. iii. ed. Vesal. 1675) explains the matter: "Dominus antiquis, Praebitor; et Dominia, Praebitiones hilariores;" and he refers to this passage of Cicero. The passage is corrupted in Nonius, who cites it in 'Dominus;' but the reading in the passage is 'dominos,' not 'domos.' In Horace, 2 Sat. viii. 92, "si non causas narraret earum, et Naturas dominus," 'dominus' is the master of the feast. The passage of Nonius may be easily corrected, for he explains 'dominus' in one of its senses to be 'convivii exhibitor,' and 'dominia' to be 'convivia.' The corrupt text of Nonius is 'Adria argento dominos vestrae,' instead of which it ought to be 'ornari argento dominia vestra.'

vestro Marte . . . manubiis] Cicero is making these plunderers ridiculous. They have all robbed and pilfered; and he sarcastically calls their plunder 'manubiae.' See Lib. 1. c. 59, 60.

5. reliqua—attendere:] Forcellini will explain this verb. See Lib. 5. c. 57; and Divin. c. 15.

fere criminibus] Ernesti and Beck have 'et re' for 'fere.' Klotz has 'et re fere.' It is difficult to collect from Zumpt's note what the readings of the MSS. are. There seems some objection to 'et re,' and we know that 'fere' will do.

religioni] To the obligation of their oath, to do justice. There will seldom be any difficulty in translating this word, if the reader will bear in mind that it is said of man when viewed with reference to the gods.

noscenda haec vobis proponite, iudices, vos de rebus fortunisque Siculorum omnium, de civium Romanorum qui arant in Sicilia bonis, de vectigalibus a majoribus traditis, de vita victuque populi Romani cognituros. Quae si magna atque adeo maxima vobis videntur, quam varie et quam copiose dicantur expectare nolite.

Neminem vestrum praeterit, iudices, omnem utilitatem opportunitatemque provinciae Siciliae, quae ad commoda populi Romani adjuncta sit, consistere in re frumentaria maxime: nam ceteris rebus adjuvamus ex illa provincia; hac vero alimur ac sustinemur. Ea causa tripertita, iudices, erit in accusatione; primum enim de decumano, deinde de empto dicemus frumento, postremo de aestimato.

VI. Inter Siciliam ceterasque provincias, iudices, in agrorum vectigalium ratione hoc interest, quod ceteris aut impositum civium Romanorum qui arant] This may be taken as one definition of 'aratores.' On the matter of pointing, a remark may be made here. Zumpt and Klotz write 'de civium Romanorum, qui arant in Sicilia, bonis, de,' &c. Now this is vicious in the extreme. We first observe that the Romans would generally say 'de civium Romanorum bonis,' as 'de consilii sententia,' and so forth. If these 'civium Romanorum' are to be further defined, it may be done briefly by 'qui arant in Sicilia;' but this is not said with emphasis; it is pronounced as it would be if one word in the genitive plural could represent these four words. It is so manifestly a qualification, an exposition of the terms 'civium Romanorum,' that the practice of fencing these words in with commas can have no other effect than to divert the learner from what he would see clear enough if these obstacles were removed. Cicero abounds in examples of this collocation of words, as in the letter Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 15: "non est tibi his solis utendum existimationibus ac judiciis qui nunc sunt hominum;" and yet even here Orelli has hemmed in with commas the 'qui nunc sunt.'

Cicero (Lib. 2. c. 3), when he is speaking of the advantages of Sicily to the Romans, says "quos illa partim retinet ut arare, ut pascere, ut negotiari libeat, ut denique sedes ac domicilium collocare." The 'aratores' of Sicily were the cultivators, who had to pay the 'decumae,' or tenths of the produce. The 'arator' is opposed to the 'decumanus,' who farmed the tenths (c. 8, 10, 16, &c.). Some of these 'aratores' were Roman 'equites,' as we see in the case of Q. Lollius (c. 25): "qui—affirmavit se decumanis plus quam deberet non daturum." 'Aratores' was a general name for the cultivators in the Roman provinces, whether the provincials themselves, or Roman citizens. These 'aratores' might either be the owners of land, or the lessees. If the land was let, the owner was distinguished by the term 'dominus,' and the occupier by the term 'arator' (c. 54). In c. 21, one Nympho is mentioned, and he was a Sicilian, who was the lessee of a large extent of land (arationes magnas conductas haberet); and many rich Sicilians were large tenant farmers. In another case, the property of a man's wife was let to a 'colonus;' and this 'colonus' was, of course, an 'arator' (c. 22). Again (c. 40), "Diocles Panhormitanus—arabat agrum conductum in Segestano;" a man of Panhormus was the lessee of lands in the territory of Segeste; where it appears that persons who were not Segestani could not acquire the ownership of land. The 'decumani,' as we have already seen, were those Publicani who farmed the 'decumae,' and the chief among the Publicani (Lib. 2. c. 71).

6. vectigalium] 'Vectigal' contains the root 'vec,' the same as 'veh,' in 'veh-o;' but the reason of 'vectigal' signifying a tax is not clear. 'Tributum' is the tax which from the time of Servius Tullius was paid by the Roman citizens. It was a sum paid in respect of the estimated value of a man's property; and, inasmuch as property in land was the chief property, it was in substance a land tax, paid under the form of a general tax on property. When the treasury was enriched by the Macedonian war, the 'tributum' was abolished, B.C. 167, and it was never afterwards permanently restored in Italy. From this time the chief income of the Roman state consisted of the taxes raised in the provinces, particularly of the produce of the earth, as tenths or tithes. This produce and other taxes were included under the term 'vectigal,' in which Cicero, Pro Leg. Man. c. 6, includes 'portoria' and 'scriptura.' In the Lex Thoria, cap. 10, we find "neive quid quoi ob eam rem vectigal neive scripturam dare debeto," where both 'vectigal' and 'scriptura' are used, according to the legal superfluity of expression, the object being to exclude any possible payment for the pasturage of cattle, the matter of which this clause in the Lex treats. 'Vectigal,' then, which had a limited meaning, became a general term for a tax, as this passage proves, for Cicero speaks of 'vectigal certum quod stipendiarium dicitur,' by which he means a fixed money payment or land-tax, which money payment is contrasted with the 'censoria locatio,' or the tenths, which were let by the censors at Rome, and pursuant to a Lex Sempronia, probably the Agraria Lex of C. Sempronius Gracchus. Under the empire, all the provincial payments were ultimately reduced to a fixed sum of money, the progress towards which we see in the time of Gaius, by his application of the terms 'stipendiaria' and 'tributoria' (ii. 21) to lands in the provinces.

The following passage will serve as a commentary on this chapter: "All the provinces except Sicily," says Cicero (Verr. Lib. 3. c. 6), "pay either a fixed land-tax (vectigal stipendiarium) or variable duties (that is, tenths or other quotae of produce), which last are let in Rome by the censors. Sicily, on the other hand, has the following constitution: two foederate cities and five others are tax-free; a few which have come under the Roman dominion by conquest, lost the ownership of their land, but received it back on condition of paying certain dues, which are let (that is, they have the same terms as other provinces); all the rest of the land is subject to the payment of tenths (decumae), yet so that the mode of administration is maintained in conformity to the Lex Hieronica, that is, so that the tenths are let separately, and in Sicily generally let to those who are bound to pay them, and on easy terms. But, without any respect to these differences, Cicero calls all land in the provinces by the general name of 'agri vectigales,' which consequently was at that time the general name for all land that paid a tax; and it is this liability to taxation which he always considers as the general character of all the provinces, so that only particular towns were exempt from it" (Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, Römische Steuerverfassung, ii. 97). We must understand that the 'perpaucae civitates,' whose land became 'publicus Populi Romani,' did not recover the ownership of the land. The ownership belonged to the Roman state, but the former proprietors had the enjoyment of the land, subject to the payment of the taxes.

In the time of Gaius it was the legal doctrine that the 'dominium' or ownership of all provincial land was either in the Roman people or in the Caesar (ii. 7): "in provinciali solo . . . dominium populi Romani est vel Caesaris, nos autem possessionem tantum et usumfructum habere videmur."

Zumpt attempts to ascertain the number of these 'perpaucae civitates.' But I do not clearly comprehend his note, and I therefore refer the reader to it, if he is curious to see it.

[publicus populi Romani] These states being conquered by the Romans, their land, according to the rule of war, became the property of the Roman people, but it was restored to these states. They paid a 'vectigal,' which was let at Rome by the censors; and in this respect the occupiers of 'ager redditus' were on the same footing as the inhabitants of those Punic towns which solet. Foederatae civitates duae sunt quarum decumae venire non soleant, Mamertina et Tauromenitana: quinque praeterea sine foedere immunes ac liberae, Centuripina, Halesina, Segestana, paid tenths of grain, wine, and oil. For when Cicero says 'is ager—locari solet,' he means that the tenths were let, not the land itself. Still these least favoured Sicilian towns, whose tithes were let at Rome by the censors to the 'publicani,' were on the footing of the more favoured Punic towns which were directly subject to the 'imperium' of the Proconsul of Africa; for the other Punic towns, which were under the Proconsul, lost a part of their land, which was made Publicus Populi Romani, and for the rest, which was restored to them, they paid a fixed tax, 'stipendium' or 'vectigal stipendiarium.' They also paid a capitation tax both for males and females (Appian, Pun. c. 135). This will explain Cicero's expression 'plerisque Poenorum.' Several of the Punic towns, which had sided with the Romans, received a portion of the conquered land, and were 'liberae et immunes,' that is, like those Sicilian towns which Cicero mentions. They were not immediately under the governor's jurisdiction. (Rudorff, Zeitschrift für Geschichtl. Rechtsw. Das Ackergesetz des Sp. Thorcius, Vol. x.) Klotz, in his note on the 'censoria locatio,' says that it was 'a leasing of the public lands to the cultivators for a fixed amount of produce, and the letting took place at Rome by the censors or their representatives.' But I believe he is singular in this explanation, which condemns itself, for how could those Sicilians, who cultivated their land, attend at Rome to bid? Besides, Cicero says that the land was 'redditus,' and, though the Roman state retained the legal ownership, the Sicilians had the enjoyment of this land. It is true, Cicero says (Lib. 5. c. 21): 'qui agros publicos arant, certum est quid e lege censoria debeant.' But this is not inconsistent with the word 'redditus' taken in its proper sense. There also occurs the expression 'colonus aratorque vester' (Lib. 3. c. 23), which applies to one who cultivated his own land. See the note.

Mamertina] The Civitas Mamertina was Messina, now Messina, on the north-east coast of Sicily, and on the straits, a city whose various fortunes require a separate history (Lib. 2. c. 5). The original town Zancle, or Dankle, as the name appears on the oldest coins, took the name of Messina when it was occupied by Messenians from Rhegium (Thucyd. vi. 5). In B.C. 282 it fell into the hands of the Mamertini (Polyb.

1. 7), and hence it is sometimes called Mamertina. Pliny (iii. 8, 14) calls it 'oppidum civium Romanorum;' but it must have been made such after the time of Cicero. In this passage Cicero omits the 'Netina civitas,' which he calls 'foederata' (Lib. 5. c. 51). The Netini had the same grounds for their 'foedus' with Rome as the Mamertini (Lib. 5. c. 22).

immunes ac liberae,] Provincial cities were so called which were free from the payments to which other cities were liable. Savigny shows that the Jus Italicum consisted of three elements: freedom from taxes; the possession of a municipal constitution and of magistrates who exercised jurisdiction according to the old fashion of the place; and the quality of Italian land being communicated to the 'ager' of the town with all the legal incidents of such land. A city which had all these had the Jus Italicum. A city which had only the first, or the first and second, had not the Jus Italicum. A city which received the Jus Italicum received all three at once (Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, Vol. i. p. 39). These five cities were 'immunes et liberae,' but nothing more. Their 'libertas' appears to have consisted in having magistrates of their own, and being free from the government of the praetor in most matters: the 'immunitas' was an exemption from paying taxes to the Roman State. Cicero says of the 'foederatae civitates'—'quarum decumae venire non soleant,' where 'non soleant' seems by the form of expression to imply that this was incident to a 'foedus.' He says of the five, that they were 'immunes et liberae' without a 'foedus,' meaning apparently that they had the same advantages as the 'foederatae,' though they had no 'foedus.' Cicero says of Halicyae (c. 40), one of these five towns 'incolae decumas dant, ipsi agros immunes habent' (compare Lib. 4. c. 9, 'Centuripinos et Halesinos immunes populos'). The words 'Praeterea omnis,' &c., seem somewhat ambiguous. Cicero says of the two foederate cities, and we must suppose the same remark to apply to the third, which he does not mention here, that their 'decumae' were not let by the censors, which appears to have been provided for in the 'foedus.' He does not in direct terms say that they paid no 'decumae.' Five cities besides were 'immunes ac liberae,' though they had no 'foedus.'

Halicyensis, Panhormitana. Praeterea omnis ager Siciliae civitatum decumanus est, itemque ante imperium populi Romani ipsorum Siculorum voluntate et institutis fuit. Videte nunc majorum sapientiam, qui, quum Siciliam tam opportunum subsidium belli atque pacis ad rem publicam adjunxissent, tanta cura Siculos tueri ac retinere voluerunt, ut non modo eorum agris vectigal novum nullum imponerent, sed ne legem quidem venditionis decumarum, neve vendundi aut tempus aut locum commutarent; ut certo tempore anni, ut ibidem, in Sicilia, denique ut lege Hieronica venderent: voluerunt eos in suis rebus ipsos interesse; eorumque animos non modo lege nova sed ne nomine quidem legis novo

He then says 'Praeterea omnis,' which is explained to mean that all the cities were 'decumanae,' except those to which the 'censoria locatio' applied, and the seven cities.' If the order of the words were 'Omnis praeterea ager,' the meaning would seem to be more clearly expressed. But the difficulty which I have hinted at may be only an imaginary one. The reader should observe how 'praeterea' is used.

lege Hieronica venderent:] This system of taxation was established by Hiero II., who died probably B.C. 216. His land-tax was a tenth of the produce. The letting of the 'vectigalia' in general, as already observed, was managed at Rome by the censors, and the farmers of them were the Societates of Publicani. This 'censoria locatio' applied also, as Cicero says, to a small number of towns in Sicily. But other 'civitates' were under the Lex Hieronica. Their lands were subject to the 'decumae,' which the 'aratores' had to pay; and these 'decumae' were let or sold, which is the Roman expression, to Publicani, who were called Decumani, from 'decumae,' which they purchased the right to collect. They were let or sold at Syracuse (c. 64). The expression 'decumas emisse' occurs in c. 12; and in c. 8 we have the equivalent expression, 'in locandis vectigalibus.' To buy the 'decumae' is in itself an ambiguous expression, for it might signify to buy the right of collecting them for ever. But this is not the meaning of the Roman expression. To buy and to sell the 'decumae' expresses a contract for a given time, by which contract the farmers gave a sum of money for the tenths for such a period. It was one of those cases in which we might doubt whether it was a case of 'emptio et venditio,' or of 'locatio, conductio.' The following passage from the Institutiones of Justinian will explain what is meant: "Adeo autem familiaritatem aliquam inter se habere videntur emptio et venditio, item locatio et conductio ut in quibusdam causis quaeri soleat, utrum emptio et venditio contrahatur ex locatis et conductis. Ut ecce de praediis, quae perpetuo quibusdam fruenda traduntur, id est ut quamdiu pensio sive redditus pro his domino praestetur, neque ipsi conductori neque heredi ejus, cuive conductor heresve ejus id praedium vendiderit, aut donaverit, aut dotis nomine dederit aliove quo modo alienaverit, auferre liceat: sed talis contractus quia inter veteres dubitabatur, et a quibusdam locatio, a quibusdam venditio existimabatur, lex Zenoniana lata est, quae emphyteuseos contractui propriam statuit naturam," &c. (Inst. iii. tit. 24, (25)). In the same way, the Romans applied the term 'selling' to the furnishing of the inhabitants of a town with a certain supply of water by those to whom the management of this part of municipal administration was intrusted. The administrators were said to sell this water, though the agreement belongs more to the head of 'locatio, conductio,' than to the head of 'emptio, venditio.' (Zeitschrift für Geschichtl. Rechtsw. vol. xv. p. 311). Compare τὴν δεκάτην ἀποδόσθαι, Demosth. Adv. Leptin. 48. ed. Wolf, and Wolf's note.

non modo] Cicero clearly means to say that the Romans willed that the Siculi should not be disturbed by a new lex, or even by the change of the name of the old lex. If the 'modo' were omitted, the first 'non' would negative 'lege.' As it stands, the 'non' negatives 'modo lege,' &c. The meaning is plain: they willed that 'not in any degree,' by a new 'lex,' should they be disturbed, and not even by a new name of the 'lex.' It is the Roman fashion to make 'sed' the adversative of 'non,' which we do sometimes. And if we do it here, we commoveri. Itaque decumas lege Hieronica semper vendundas censuerunt ut iis jucundior esset muneris illius functio, si ejus regis qui Siculis carissimus fuit non solum instituta, commutato imperio, verum etiam nomen maneret. Hoc jure ante Verrem praetorem Siculi semper usi sunt: hic primus instituta omnium, consuetudinem a majoribus traditam, conditionem amicitiae, jus societatis, convellere et commutare ausus est.

VII. Qua in re primum illud reprehendo et accuso, cur in re tam vetere, tam usitata, quidquam novi feceris. Ingenio aliquid assecutus es? tot homines sapientissimos et clarissimos qui illam provinciam ante te tenuerunt prudentia consilioque vicisti? Est tuum, est ingenii diligentiaeque tuae. Do hoc tibi et concedo. Scio te Romae, quum praetor esses, edicto tuo possessiones hereditatum a liberis ad alienos, a primis heredibus ad secundos, a legibus ad libidinem tuam transtulisse. Scio te edicta superiorum omnium correxisse, et possessiones hereditatum non secundum eos qui proferrent, sed secundum eos qui dicerent testamentum factum, dedisse: easque res novas abs te prolatas et inventas magno tibi quaestui fuisse scio: eundemque te memini censorias quoque leges in sartis tectis exigendis tollere et commutare, ne is redimeret cuja res esset; ne pupillo tutores propinquire consulerent quo minus fortunis omnibus everteretur: exiguam diem praefinire operi qua ceteros ab negotio excluderes, ipse in tuo redemptore nullam certam diem observares. Quamobrem novam legem te in decumis statuuisse non miror, hominem in edictis praetoriis, in censoriis legibus tam prudentem, tam exercitatum: non, inquam, miror te aliquid exco-gitasse; sed quod tua sponte, injussu populi, sine senatus auctoresort to the form of a double negative—not only that they should not be disturbed by a new ‘lex,’ but not even by the new name of an old ‘lex.’ But this is not the Roman form of expression, and it leads us to the false supposition of ‘non modo’ being put for ‘non modo non.’ Another ‘non’ after ‘modo’ is not wanted. Sometimes ‘non solum’ stands in the first clause, followed by ‘ne—quidem,’ as in this passage. In both cases there is only a single verb of predication, which is placed in the ‘ne—quidem’ clause. In a passage in Lib. 2. c. 72, ‘non modo id non dices,’ &c., some MSS. omit the ‘non’ before ‘dices,’ where the copyist may have been misled by the words ‘sed ne illud quidem dicere licebit,’ which follow. But if the ‘non’ before ‘dices’ were omitted, it would make palpable nonsense; for the ‘id’ refers to what has been mentioned in the preceding sentence, and the ‘illud’ refers to what Cicero says at the end of this sentence. “It is not all, that you won’t be able to deny this (id)—‘nihil in istis literis fuisse’—you won’t have the right of affirming as much as this—‘tantum quantum ego dicam non fuisse.’” functio,] ‘The performance of that duty,’ the payment of the ‘decumae.’ Zumpt refers to c. 86: “quid . . muneris in re publica fungi.” See also c. 16: “quum tribus decumis pro una defungeretur.”

7. secundum eos qui dicerent] See Lib. 1. c. 45. This passage shows that the interpretation of ‘se ei daturum,’ &c., given in the note, is right. The passage from ‘Scio te Romae’ to ‘diem observares’ will cause no difficulty to those who have read Lib. 1. c. 44, &c.

ritate, jura provinciae Siciliae mutaris, id reprehendo, id accuso. L. Octavio et C. Cottae consulibus senatus permisit ut vini et olei decumas et frugum minutarum, quas ante quaestores in Sicilia vendere consuessent, Romae venderent, legemque his rebus quam ipsis videretur dicerent. Quum locatio fieret, publicani postularunt quasdam res ut ad legem adderent, neque tamen a ceteris censoriis legibus recederent. Contra dixit is, qui casu tum Romae fuit, tuus hospes, Verres, hospes, inquam, et familiaris tuus, Sthenius hic Thermitanus. Consules causam cognoverunt, quum viros primarios atque amplissimos civitatis multos in consilium advocassent: de consilii sententia pronuntiarunt se lege Hieronica vendituros.

VIII. Itane vero prudentissimi viri, summa auctoritate praediti, quibus senatus legum dicendarum in locandis vectigalibus omnem potestatem permiserat, populusque Romanus jusserat, Siculo uno recusante, cum amplificatione vectigalium nomen Hieronicae legis mutare noluerunt; tu, homo minimi consilii, nullius auctoritatis, injussu populi ac senatus, tota Sicilia recusante, cum maximo detrimento atque adeo exitio vectigalium, totam Hieronicam legem sustulisti? At quam legem corrigit, judices, atque adeo totam tollit? acutissime ac diligentissime scriptam, quae lex omnibus custodiis subjectum aratorem decumano tradidit, ut neque in segetibus, neque in areis, neque in horreis, neque in amovendo, neque in exportando frumento, grano uno posset arator sine maxima poena fraudare decumanum. Scripta lex ita diligenter est ut eum scripsisse appareat qui alia vectigalia non haberet; ita acute ut Siculum; ita severe ut tyrannum; qua lege Siculis tamen arare expediret.

L. Octavio, &c.] The consuls of B.C. 74, the year before Verres was Praetor Urbanus. From this passage we collect that there were 'decumae' of wine, oil, and of what Cicero calls 'fruges minutae,' which are explained to be 'legumina.'

quam ipsis videretur] That is, 'videretur dicere.' Zumpt refers to Drakenborch's note on Liv. vi. 26, for examples, of which there is no lack. In Liv. vi. 26: "precibus eventum vestris senatus quem videbitur dabit." In Lib. 2. c. 13, there is 'eum judicem quem commodum erat—dabat.'

neque tamen, &c.] The Publicani asked the consuls to add certain things to the terms (legem) of the letting, but yet not so as in other respects to deviate from the terms which the censors observed. The words 'neque tamen,' &c., are added, as Zumpt observes, to show that the Publicani asked for nothing unreasonable, but only for what was observed in letting the 'decumae' of other provinces. But the consuls kept to the Lex Hieronica. The senate, however, had infringed the Lex Hieronica, by letting these 'decumae' at Rome, the reason for which Cicero does not explain.

8. Itane vero] Zumpt and Klotz, as usual, put an interrogation after 'vero.'—'tamen totam Hieronicam:' Klotz.

adeo exitio] "Even to the ruin of the 'vectigalia.'" Another example shortly after follows: "atque adeo—tollit." Also in the next chapter: "atque adeo saeculis tot." The instances of this use of 'adeo' are very numerous.

exportando] Orelli has 'asportando,' the wrong word.

Nam ita diligenter constituta sunt jura decumano ut tamen ab invito aratore plus decuma non posset auferri.

Quum haec ita essent constituta, Verres tot annis atque adeo saeculis tot inventus est qui haec non commutaret sed everteret, eaque quae jamdiu ad salutem sociorum, utilitatemque rei publicae composita comparataque essent, ad suos improbissimos quaestus converteret; qui primum certos constituerit nomine decumanos, re vera ministros ac satellites cupiditatum suarum; per quos ostendam sic provinciam per triennium vexatam atque vastatam, judices, ut eam multis annis, multorum innocentia sapientiaque recreare nequeamus. IX. Eorum omnium qui decumani vocabantur princeps erat Q. ille Apronius quem videtis; de cujus improbitate singulari gravissimarum legationum querimonias audistis. Aspicite, judices, vultum hominis et aspectum; et ex ea contumacia quam hic in perditis rebus retinet illos ejus spiritus Sicilienses quos fuisse putetis cogitate ac recordamini. Hic est Apronius, quem in provincia tota Verres, quum undique nequissimos homines conquisisset, et quum ipse secum sui similes duxisset non parum multos, nequitia, luxuria, audacia sui simillimum judicavit. Itaque istos inter se perbrevis tempore non res, non ratio, non commendatio aliqua, sed studiorum turpitudine similitudineque conjunxit. Verris mores improbos impurosque nostis: fingite vobis, si potestis, aliquem qui in omnibus isti rebus par ad omnium flagitiorum nefarias libidines esse possit: is erit Apronius ille; qui, ut ipse non solum vita sed etiam corpore atque ore significat, immensa aliqua vorago est aut gurgis vitiorum turpitudinumque omnium. Hunc in omnibus stupris, hunc in fanorum expilationibus, hunc in impuris conviviis principem adhibebat; tantamque habet morum similitudo conjunctionem atque concordiam ut Apronius, qui aliis inhumanus ac barbarus, isti uni commodus ac disertus videretur:

commutaret . . . constituerit] There is no doubt of the correctness of 'commutaret' instead of 'commutarit,' which most of the MSS. have, and the old editions. But a new form is introduced with 'qui primum,' and a careful reader of Cicero will find no difficulty in 'constituerit.' The reduction of this usage to a grammatical formula is not so easy. Zumpt has 'institutuerit,' but the true reading is 'constituerit,' as in Cod. Vat. The difference of meaning between 'constituo' and 'instituo' clearly appears from various passages in these orations.

sed everteret,] Klotz has 'sed verteret,'

disertus] 'Inhumanus' may be explained by contrasting it with 'humanus' (c. 4). 'Barbarus' has its secondary meaning of 'uncultivated, brutish.' 'Commodus' appears to be the antithesis of 'barbarus,' and 'disertus' of 'inhumanus.' 'Disertus' means a man of some taste and accomplishments.

ut quem omnes odissent, neque videre vellent, sine eo iste esse non posset: ut quum alii ne conviviis quidem iisdem quibus Apronius, hic iisdem etiam poculis uteretur: postremo, ut odor Apronii taeterrimus oris et corporis, quem, ut aiunt, ne bestiae quidem ferre possent, uni isti suavis et jucundus videretur. Ille erat in tribunali proximus, in cubiculo solus, in convivio dominus, ac tum maxime, quum accubante praetextato praetoris filio in convivio saltare nudus coeperat. Hunc, uti dicere institui, principem Verres ad fortunas aratorum vexandas diripiendasque esse voluit: hujus audaciae, nequitiae, crudelitati fidelissimos socios optimosque cives scitote hoc praetore traditos, judices, atque addictos fuisse, novis institutis et edictis, tota Hieronica lege, quemadmodum antea dixi, rejecta et repudiata.

If so, the scandal of the affair was aggravated by the presence of the praetor's son, who still wore the 'toga praetexta,' the dress of those who were 'impuberes.'

nutu significare] This is the order of the words in Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'significare nutu,' and he seems to disapprove of this 'hexametrical clausula;' but that is hardly a sufficient objection. Nothing is so common as a variation in the MSS. in the order of a pair of words, or even more; and it is often a matter of great difficulty to decide which is to be preferred.

Utrum est aequius decumanum petere an aratorem repetere? iudicium integra abstulerit,' a reading which seems to be at variance with the sense and the usage of the Latin language. See Zumpt's note.

11. traduci] All the MSS., except "quattuor nostri meliores" (Zumpt), have 'traduci.' The Cod. Vat. also has 'traduci.' The reader may take which he pleases. If he reads 'traducis' with Zumpt, he must put a colon after 'iniquum.'

quae vectigalia] That is, the parts of Italy which are 'agri vectigales,' as the Ager Campanus and Stellatis. This was the land which the Lex Agraria of Caesar, B.C. 59, distributed among Roman citizens. After this land was disposed of, and the 'portoria' were abolished in Italy, there was no revenue raised in Italy except the 'vicesima,' from the sale and manumission of slaves (Cic. Ad Att. ii. 16; Dion Cassius, xxxviii. 1, &c., ed. Reimar).

The Roman 'pignoris capio,' and the English 'distress,' were, in many cases, the same process. Property of the person who owes the duty is seized, and it becomes in the condition of property pledged. The owner must pay the demand, and then he is entitled to have his property back. Klotz absurdly supposes that when the property was seized the owner must proceed by action to recover it, whereas, if he pays the money, he is entitled to have it back. Of course, if it is not given back, he must sue for it. This process was in use, as we see from this passage, in Cicero's time, for the recovery of the 'vectigalia' in the provinces, and also in Italy. But this proceeding on the part of the Publicani did not exist in the time of Gaius, for it had been abolished by the Edictum; and they were required to proceed by action for the recovery of what was due. But the 'intentio' in this case contained a fiction, in which mention was made of the old process: Gaius (iv. 32): "in ea forma, quae publicano proponitur, talis fictio est, ut quanta pecunia olim, si pignus captum esset, id pignus is a quo captum erat luere deberet, tantam pecuniam condemnatur." A Rescript of M. Antoninus and L. Verus declared that the proceedings for the recovery of 'vectigalia' should be against the land (praedia), which thus became liable for arrears in the hands of any person who was in possession of it (Dig. 39. 4. 7).

The 'pignoris capio' was an old Roman institution. There was the 'pignoris capio rei militaris' (Gaius, iv. 27; Gellius, vii. 10), one of the Legis Actiones. It was also employed by the 'magistratus' to compel obedience to their orders, or to enforce the discharge of some public duty: the thing taken in such a case could only be recovered by the payment of a sum of money. It was also one of the modes of execution, by which a man's goods were seized when he did not satisfy a judgment, and they were sold within two months for the benefit of the creditor; but this process belongs to a period after Cicero's time, and to the reign of Antoninus Pius (Dig. 42. 1. 15, 31).

The MSS. reading is 'petitor ac pignerator,' but Lag. 42 (pr. m.) has 'aut.' There seems no objection to 'ac,' for we must suppose that the Publicanus might proceed by action to recover what was due to him, as well as by distress.

re an perdita fieri? eum qui manu quaesiverit, an eum qui digito licitus sit possidere? Quid qui singulis jugis arant, qui ab opere ipsi non recedunt, quo in numero magnus ante te praetorem numerus, magna multitudo Siculorum fuit, quid facient? quum dederint Apronio quod poposcerit, relinquent arationes? relinquent Larem familiarem suum? venient Syracusas ut te praetore videlicet, aequo jure Apronium, delicias ac vitam tuam, judicio recuperatorio persequantur? Verum esto: reperietur aliquis fortis et experiens arator, qui, quum tantum dederit decumano quantum ille deberi dixerit, judicio repetat et poenam octupli persequatur. Exspecto vim edicti, severitatem praetoris: faveo aratori, cupio octupli damnari Apronium. Quid tandem postulat arator? nihil nisi ex edicto judicium in octuplum. Quid Apronius? non recusat. Quid praetor? jubet recuperatores rejicere. Decurias scribamus. Quas decurias? de cohorte mea rejicies, inquit. Quid ista cohors, quorum hominum est? Volusii haruspici et Cornelii medici et horum canum quos tribunal meum vides lambere. Nam de conventu nullum unquam judicem nec recuperatorem dedit; iniquos decumanis aiebat omnes esse qui ullam agri glebam possiderent. Veniendum erat ad eos contra Apronium, qui nondum Aproniani convivii crapulam exhalassent. O praeclarum et commemorandum judicium! O severum edictum! O tutum perfugium aratorum!

XII. Atque ut intelligatis cujusmodi ista judicia in octuplum, singulis jugis] The MSS., except Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat., have 'in singulis jugis;' but in c. 51 we have 'minus multis jugis,' where 'jugum' means a pair of beasts. In this passage it means those who plough with a single pair, small cultivators. Orelli has 'in singulis jugis.'

recuperatorio] The judices in such a trial would be 'recuperatores.' See p. 30, note, and c. 12, 21.

experiens arator,] See c. 21: "experientissimus."—'aliqui fortis,' &c.: Klotz, from Cod. Vat.

Exspecto vim, &c.] Some of the hearers are supposed to say this.

postulat] See Lib. 2. c. 4.

rejicere.] 'To reject or challenge,' that is, to come to the 'rejectio' or challenge, so as to determine who shall be the 'recuperatores,' by rejecting as many out of the whole number as the parties were entitled to reject. Hence it comes to be equivalent to select, as in this chapter, and in c. 29 and 59.

Decurias scribamus.] Say the 'aratores.'

"Let us put down the 'decuriae' of those who are qualified to act as 'recuperatores.'" "You shall make your challenges out of my 'cohors,'" says Verres; "the 'recuperatores' must be taken from this body, and not from the 'decuriae;' not from the 'conventus,' that is, not from those 'qui in id forum conveniebant.'" See Lib. 2. c. 32, and Forcellini, Decuria. 'Decuria' is properly a body or union of ten persons, and also a 'collegium' generally, without respect to the number of members. The expression is also used with reference to the Senate (in Rome and in the towns in the country), also with reference to the Judices; but in none of these instances is it of so usual or so universal application as in reference to the Scribae. Savigny, System, &c., vol. ii. p. 254, note (c). nondum Aproniani] 'Nondum etiam Apronii:' Orelli, Zumpt; but Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat. omit 'etiam,' and it seems at least superfluous.—'crapulam exhalassent' is explained by Forcellini.

cujusmodi isti de cohorte recuperatores existimati sint, sic attendite. Ecquem putatis decumanum, hac licentia permissa ut tantum ab aratore quantum poposcisset auferret, plus quam deberetur poposcisse? Considerate cum vestris animis vosmetipsi ecquem putetis, praesertim quum id non solum avaritia sed etiam imprudentia accidere potuerit. Multos necesse est. At ego omnes dico plus ac multo plus quam decumam abstulisse. Cedo mihi unum ex triennio praeturae tuae qui octupli damnatus sit: damnatus? immo vero in quem iudicium ex edicto tuo postulatum sit. Nemo erat videlicet aratorum qui injuriam sibi factam queri posset: nemo decumanorum qui grano amplius sibi quam deberetur deberi professus esset. Immo vero contra, rapiebat et asportabat quantum a quoque volebat Apronius: omnibus autem locis aratores spoliati ac vexati querebantur; neque tamen ullum iudicium reperietur. Quid est hoc? tot viri fortes, honesti, gratiosi, tot Siculi, tot equites Romani ab homine nequissimo ac turpissimo laesi, poenam octupli sine ulla dubitatione commissam non persequabantur? quae causa? quae ratio est? una illa, iudices, quam videtis, quod ultro etiam illusos se et irrisos ab iudicio discessuros videbant. Etenim quod esset iudicium, quum ex Verris turpissimo flagitiosissimoque comitatu tres recuperatorum nomine assedissent, asseclae istius, non a patre ei traditi sed a meretricula commendati? Ageret videlicet causam arator: nihil sibi frumenti ab Apronio relictum, 12. Ecquem putatis] The direct form has the indicative; where the expression is made to depend on another verb, as 'considerate,' we must have the subjunctive. 'Num' is used just in the same way (c. 15: "quaeritis, num quas . . . ceperit"); and also 'quid' and other words.

plus quam decumam] Cod. Vat., Zumpt, Orelli: 'decumas.' See δεκάτην, p. 275.

Nemo—videlicet] Said ironically, as the words 'immo vero contra' show.

commissam] That is, the penalty was incurred.

ultro] As 'ultro' means 'forward,' in a direction from a given point, it can mean, as it does here, 'farther,' 'besides,' or 'even.'

asseclae] Klotz writes 'adseculae,' following three MSS., which is only the same word as 'adseclae,' written in full.

The words 'a patre ei traditi' are not clear. No various reading is noted. Graevius says: "Quis hic patri locus? Franc. 'non a populo Romano ei traditi,' quod verum esse videtur." Cicero says to his brother Quintius, when he was governor of Asia: "atque inter hos, eos quos tibi comites et adjutores negotiorum publicorum dedit ipsa res publica, dumtaxat finibus iis praestabis quos ante praescripsi. Quos vero aut ex domesticis convictionibus aut ex necessariis apparitionibus tecum esse voluisti, qui quasi ex cohorte praetoris appellari solent, horum non modo facta sed etiam dicta omnia praestanda nobis sunt" (i. 1. c. 3). It appears that some of the 'comites,' at least, were given to a governor by the state, and were not appointed by the governor. Others of the inferior class were his own intimates and men of his own choice. These are the men here alluded to. They were recommended by Chelidon: they were not even such as his father had transferred to him; and even they would be none of the best, though certainly the recommendation of a father, even the father of Verres, would be something better than the recommendation of Chelidon. This may be the meaning.

bona sua etiam direpta, se pulsatum verberatumque diceret: conferrent viri boni capita, de comissione loquerentur inter se, ac de mulierculis si quas a praetore abeuntes possent deprehendere: res agi videretur. Surrexisset Apronius, nova dignitas publicani, non ut decumanus, squaloris plenus ac pulveris, sed unguentis oblitus, vino vigiliisque languidus: omnia primo motu ac spiritu suo, vini, unguenti, corporis odore complesses: dixisset haec quae vulgo dicere solebat, non se decumas emisse sed bona fortunasque aratorum; non se decumanum esse Apronium sed Verrem alterum, dominum illorum ac tyrannum. Quae quum dixisset, illi viri optimi, de cohorte istius recuperatores, non de absolvendo Apronio deliberarent, sed quaererent ecquo modo petitozem ipsum Apronio condemnare possent.

XIII. Hanc tu licentiam diripiendorum aratorum quum decumanis, hoc est, quum Apronio permisisses, ut quantum vellet posceret, quantum poposcisset auferret, hoc tibi defensionis ad iudicium tuum comparabas, habuisse te edictum, recuperatores in octuplum daturum? Si mehercule ex omni copia conventus Syracusani, splendidissimorum honestissimorumque hominum, faceres potestatem aratori non modo rejiciendi sed etiam sumendi recuperatores, tamen hoc novum genus injuriae ferre nemo posset, te, quum tuos omnes fructus publicano tradidisses et rem de manibus amisisses, tum bona tua repetere ac persequi lite atque iudicio. Quum vero verbo iudicium sit in edicto, re quidem vera tuorum comitum, hominum nequissimorum, collusio cum decumanis, sociis tuis atque adeo procuratoribus, tamen audes ullius mentionem iudicii facere? praesertim quum id non modo oratione mea sed etiam re ipsa refellatur, quod in tantis incommodis aratorum conferrent . . capita,] Put their heads together, as men do in the jury-box, when they appear to be deliberating. These good men would talk over their last debauch and other delicate matters, and people would think that they were talking of the matter on which they had to give their verdict: 'res agi videretur.' See Lib. I. c. 55: 'res agi.'

Apronio condemnare] Lambinus, in his first edition, altered 'condemnarent' to 'condonarent' (Zumpt): an absurd alteration. Instead of simply refusing the demand of the 'arator,' they would, says Cicero, try if they could not give a verdict against him, which, of course, they could not do; but Cicero speaks oratorically. The dative 'Apronio' is in conformity to the formula. Gaius (iv. 47): "id iudex Numerium Negidium Aulo Agerio condemnato."

13. Si mehercule] Klotz has 'me Hercules.' "Unus (Lag. 42) mehercules:" Zumpt. It is not likely that Cicero wrote 'me Hercules.' The expression 'ita me Hercules juvet' had become reduced to the familiar form 'mehercule.'

publicano tradidisses] Verres had let the 'decumae' to the Publicani, and had nothing more to do with them; but Cicero represents him as acting as a man who had a direct claim on the 'aratores.'

re quidem vera] Lag. 42 has 're vera quidem,' which Klotz follows. Zumpt says of this reading, "male, nam illo potius modo Cicero solet."

injuriisque decumanorum nullum ex isto praeclaro edicto non modo factum sed ne postulatum quidem iudicium invenitur. Erit tamen in aratores lenior quam videtur. Nam qui in decumanos octupli iudicium se daturum edixit, idem habuit in edicto se in aratorem in quadruplum daturum. Quis hunc audet dicere aratoribus infestum aut inimicum fuisse? quanto lenior est quam in publicanum? Edixit ut quod decumanus edidisset sibi dari oportere, id ab aratore magistratus Siculus exigeret. Quid reliqui est iudicii quod in aratorem dari possit? Non malum est, inquit, esse istam formidinem; ut, quum exactum sit ab aratore, tamen ne se commoveat reliquus metus iudicii sit. Si iudicio vis a me exigere, remove Siculum magistratum: si hanc vim adhibes, quid opus est iudicio? Quis porro erit quin malit decumanis tuis dare quod poposcerint, quam ab asseclis tuis quadruplo condemnari?

XIV. Illa vero praeclara est clausula edicti, quod omnium controversiarum quae essent inter aratorem et decumanum, si uter velit, edicit se recuperatores daturum. Primum, quae potest esse controversia, quum is qui petere debet aufert, et quum is non quantum debetur sed quantum commodum est aufert; ille autem unde ablatum est iudicio suum recuperare nullo modo potest; deinde in hoc homo luteus etiam callidus ac veterator esse vult, quod ita scribit, Si uter volet, recuperatores dabo. Quam lepide istam formidinem:] By the edictum of Verres, the 'decumanus' could enforce his claim against an 'arator' before a Sicilian 'magistratus.' There were in the several towns courts for the recovery of the 'decumae,' if they were not paid. The 'decumanus' would declare his demand, and the Sicilian 'magistratus' would enforce it. "What other process remains against the 'arator?'" says Cicero; "this is enough; there is no need of any other." "It is no bad thing," Verres is supposed to say, "that there should be an apprehension of that other process, in which the 'arator' may be sued for four-fold the value of the demand, in order that, though the 'arator' has been compelled to pay, he may have some dread of being sued again by the other process, if he should seem disposed to be restive." Cicero rejoins, on the part of the 'arator:': "if you will get the money from me by this other process, then put this Sicilian 'magistratus' out of the way; or, if you give the Sicilian 'magistratus' power to compel me to pay the demand, what is the use of the other process? Besides, who would not rather give to your 'decumani' what they demand, than be compelled by your route to pay four times the amount?" The object of the 'arator' is to show that the 'iudicium in octuplum' against the 'decumani,' which looks very severe, was a farce. For, in the first instance, the 'arator' could be compelled by a Sicilian 'magistratus' to pay whatever was demanded. If he complained, he had before his eyes the fear of a 'iudicium in quadruplum,' with the 'recuperatores' of Verres for 'judices;' and if he came before them as a plaintiff, to recover the 'octuplum,' he knew that he should certainly fail.

14. quod . . . edicit] Those who call 'quod' a conjunction will find no difficulty here. But it is the relative, and the formula is 'Illa . . . edicti, quod . . . edicit.'

homo luteus] The old reading, and that of Ernesti, is 'lynceus,' which has no sense. It means, says Zumpt, a worthless fellow. A dirty fellow, I suppose. See Lib. 2. c. 78: "tamquam in luto;" "luto volutatum" (Lib. 4. c. 24). "Luteum negotium" (Lib. 4. c. 14), in a somewhat different sense, perhaps.

se furari putat! Utrique facit potestatem; sed utrum ita scripserit, Si uter volet, an, Si decumanus volet, nihil interest: arator enim tuos istos recuperatores nunquam volet.

Quid illa cujusmodi sunt quae ex tempore ab Apronio admonitus edixit? Q. Septitio, honestissimo equite Romano, resistente Apronio, et affirmante se plus decuma non daturum, exoritur peculiare edictum repentinum, NE QUIS FRUMENTUM DE AREA TOLLERET ANTEQUAM CUM DECUMANO PACTUS ESSET. Ferebat hanc quoque iniquitatem Septitius, et imbri frumentum corrumpi in area patiebatur: quum illud edictum repente uberrimum et quaestuosissimum nascitur, UT ANTE KALENDAS SEXT. OMNES DECUMAS AD AQUAM DEPORTATAS HABERENT. Hoc edicto non Siculi, nam eos quidem superioribus edictis satis perdiderat atque afflixerat, sed isti ipsi equites Romani, qui suum jus retinere se contra Apronium posse erant arbitrati, splendidi homines et aliis praetoribus gratiosi, vincti Apronio traditi sunt. Attendite enim cujusmodi edicta sint: Ne tollat, inquit, ex area nisi erit pactus. Satis haec magna vis est ad inique paciscendum: malo enim plus dare quam non mature ex area tollere. At ista vis Septitium et nonnullos Septitii similes non coercet, qui ita dicunt, Non tollam potius quam paciscar. His hoc opponitur: Deportatum habeas Si uter] 'Uter' is here said to be equivalent to 'alteruter' (Zumpt).

Quid illa, &c.] Zumpt, as usual, 'Quid? illa cujusmodi,' &c., whereas the repetition of the question is in the 'cujusmodi.' The reader may put a comma after 'illa,' if he prefers it, or he may learn to read the passage right without this artificial help.

area] An 'area' in a city is a vacant piece of ground (Dig. 50. 16. 27, 115, 211, where other technical words are explained). Here it means the floor in the open air on which the grain was trod out, an open place prepared for this purpose. Virgil (Georg. i. 178) gives directions for making one. The 'area' was in the open air, and the corn was spoiled by the rain. Such an 'area' is used sometimes in the United States, in a field; but the want of a cover for the corn, when it was trod out, as we must infer to have been the case in Sicily, shows a low state of cultivation. The corn must often have been dirty. Arthur Young (Travels in France, vol. i. p. 355, 2nd edition) says of the years 1787—1789, "there is not a plank threshing-floor in France; and no miller can grind corn as he receives it from the farmer, without further cleaning." Virgil's 'area' was made of earth; and Varro, Cato, and Columella give pretty nearly the same instructions for making one.

ad aquam] They were required to carry down the corn to the sea-coast. Dureau de la Malle (Économie Politique des Romains, ii. 427) quotes this passage to prove that, as a general rule, the people had to convey their 'decumae' to the coast. Zumpt thinks that the edict applied to the 'alterae decumae' (see c. 82, 83), which were bought of the Siculi for the use of Rome. And it seems probable that the regular 'decumae' would be delivered to the 'decumani' on the land of each 'arator,' or at some place within a limited distance. Zumpt appears to be right in not joining 'omnes' with 'decumas.'

suum jus retinere] Cicero uses 'obtinerere' in the same sense (Lib. 1. c. 26); and see the use of 'obtinemus' (Lib. 3. c. 35).

cujusmodi edicta sint:] Only two MSS. have the subjunctive (Zumpt); but it is not the less certain, unless any reader should prefer what Klotz has: "Adtendite enim: cujus modi edicta sunt?"

ante Kalend. Sextiles. Deportabo igitur. Nisi pactus eris, non commovebis. Sic deportandi dies praestituta tollere cogebat ex area: prohibitio tollendi, nisi pactus esset, vim adhibebat pactioni non voluntatem.

XV. Jam vero illud non solum contra legem Hieronicam, nec solum contra consuetudinem superiorum, sed etiam contra omnia jura Siculorum, quae habent a senatu populoque Romano, ne quis extra suum forum vadimonium promittere cogatur. Statuit iste,

15. forum vadimonium] This 'forum' is the place to which the people of a certain district resorted to settle their legal disputes, and for other court business; it is also the court-house of a district, and hence the district itself. In the next sentence most of the MSS. have 'quod vellet,' an instance of the slight value of the MS. readings in many cases (c. 20; and c. 34, "promittunt Herbitenses vadimonium Syracusas"). Shortly after, in this chapter, we have "ad Lilybaeum aliquem vadarentur."

'Vadimonium' is thus explained by a German writer (Puchta, Inst. ii. § 160, 1st ed.): "When the parties appeared 'in jure' (that is, before the Praetor or other magistrate who had 'jurisdictio'), as a general rule, the proceedings before the 'magistratus' were by no means ended on the same day, for the plaintiff now declared to the defendant what kind of action he intended to bring (Editio Actionis, Dig. 2. tit. 13), and it was necessary that time should be allowed to the defendant to prepare his defence. Accordingly the parties agreed on a time when they should again appear 'in jure,' and this engagement is called 'vadimonium,' and is comprehended under the general expression, 'cautio iudicio sisti:' it refers to a sum of money, as the 'poena desertionis,' which, in some cases, was equal in amount to the matter in dispute; in other cases, to one half; but never exceeded one hundred thousand sesterces. The defendant had, as a general rule, to furnish sureties (vades) for the amount of the 'vadimonium;' sometimes the sureties were dispensed with (vadimonium purum); in other cases, sureties were replaced by the oath, or by an immediate condemnation in the amount of the 'poena,' by 'recuperatores,' if the 'vadimonium' was broken (Gaius, iv. 184—187). Under these circumstances, it was manifestly more convenient for the parties to save themselves the first appearance before the court, and, instead of the 'in jus vocatio,' to agree from the first about a day for the actual decision of the question, and to secure it by 'vadimonium.' This was, in fact, even in Cicero's time, the usual process; the proper 'in jus vocatio' was only used in the case of a stubborn and resisting defendant." He refers to the passage in Horace (1 Sat. ix. 74): "casu venit obvius illi Adversarius . . . Rapit in jus."

This passage, and another in the same Satire (36), — "et casu tum respondere vadato Debebat, quod ni fecisset, perdere litem," may be properly examined here. On the 'rapit in jus,' Orelli remarks, "ad recuperatores vel ad centumvirale iudicium;" and then he adds a reference to Plautus, Poen. iii. 5, 45, "priusquam obtorto collo ad praetorem trahas;" so that in the same note he contradicts himself. 'In jus' is 'before the Praetor or Magistratus,' as Heindorf rightly explains it, and he quotes, to prove what he says, the same passage of Plautus, which Orelli quotes, without perceiving that it contradicts his own explanation. The scholiast on Horace, Porphyrio, understands the passage to mean, that as the man did not appear according to his 'vadimonium,' the 'adversarius' arrested him to drag him before the Praetor, and he quotes the words of the Twelve Tables: "Si in jus vocat, ni it, antestator. Igitur em capito;" but here, again, there is contradiction, for the 'in jus vocatio' is the first step in a suit. As to the correction of the corrupted text of Porphyrio, see Dirksen, Uebersicht, &c., der Zwölf-Tafel-Fragmente, p. 129. According to the explanation of Orelli, the 'adversarius' in Horace is the 'vadato' mentioned in v. 36. According to Puchta and others, it cannot be this 'vadato,' because the 'in jus vocatio' was the first step in a civil procedure. Bethman-Hollweg (Handbuch des Civilprozesses, i. p. 247, Bonn, 1834), after explaining the 'vadimonium' in the same way as Puchta, adds: "of this 'vadimonium'

Ut arator decumano quo vellet decumanus vadimonium promitteret; ut hic quoque Apronio, quum ex Leontino usque ad Lilybaeum aliquem vadaretur, ex miseris aratoribus calumniandi quaestus accederet. Quamquam illa fuit ad calumniam singulari consilio reperta ratio quod edixerat, Ut aratores jugera sationum suarum profiterentur. Quae res quum ad pactiones iniquissimas magnam vim habuit, sicut ostendam, neque ad ullam utilitatem rei publicae pertinuit, tum vero ad calumnias in quas omnes inciderent quos vellet Apronius. Ut enim quisque contra voluntatem ejus dixerat, ita in eum iudicium de professione jugerum postulabatur, cujus iudicii metu magnus a multis frumenti numerus ablatus, magnaeque pecuniae coactae sunt: non quo jugerum numerum vere profiteri esset difficile, aut amplius etiam profiteri, quid enim in eo periculi esse posset? sed causa erat iudicii postulandi quod ex edicto professus non esset. Iudicium autem quod fuerit isto praetore, si quae cohors et qui comitatus fuerit meministis, scire debetis. Quid igitur est quod ex hac iniquitate novorum edictorum intelligi velim, iudices? Injuriamne factam sociis? At videtis. Auctoritatem superiorum repudiatam? Non audebit negare. Tan-

we accordingly find numerous examples in Cicero; of the 'in jus vocatio' not one; though in the case of such people as the importunate fellow in Horace, or more obstinate persons, it still did good service." He adds, in a note, "force was used to the importunate fellow in Horace, in consequence of the 'vadimonium;' for, if a man did not keep the 'vadimonium,' he had still to apprehend the use of force." I do not believe that this explanation is correct; but it would be out of place to follow up this matter further.

When Hollweg says that no example of the 'in jus vocatio' occurs in Cicero, perhaps he means no example of the violent process mentioned by Horace; for the phrase occurs often. In De Leg. ii. 4: "A parvis, Quirites, didicimus, Si in jus vocat," &c.; Verr. Lib. 2. c. 76: "in jus ad Metellum Carpinatium voco;" Lib. 3. c. 47: "in jus ipsum eduxi." A reader would certainly be inclined to conclude that the 'adversarius,' 'qui rapit in jus,' in Horace, is the 'vadato;' and it may be so. But, if it is so, we must conclude that Horace is not a sufficient authority for legal procedure.

The student should form a clear notion of the 'in jus vocatio,' and he must carefully distinguish 'in jure,' 'before the praetor,' from 'in iudicio,' 'before a iudex' (in civil matters). The passage in Plautus, Persa, iv. 9, 8: "S. age, ambula in jus, leno. D. Quid me in jus vocas? S. Illi apud praetorem dicam, sed ego in jus voco. D. Nonne antestaris?" &c., is as good, for the purpose of explanation, as any comment.

The expression 'vadari aliquem' means to require 'vades,' 'sureties,' of a party. It has nothing to do with the verb 'vad-o,' to go. The corresponding term is 'vadimonium promittere,' which is said of him who gives 'vades.' Bentley's correction of 'vadatus,' for 'vadato,' in the passage of Horace, is against all the MSS., and the general usage of the word; though 'vadatus' is sometimes used passively, as he shows. In place of 'vadari,' Gaius (iv. 187) uses another expression: "quas autem personas sive permissu Praetoris impune in jus vocare non possumus, easdem nec vadimonio invitas obligare possumus, praeterquam si Praetor aditus permittat."

profiterentur.] 'Make a return,' as we say. Examples of the technical use of this word are in Forcellini.

quod ex edicto, &c.] This is the subject of the sentence, of which is predicated, 'causa erat:' "but the not making of a return was a ground of proceeding against him." There is no difficulty here, except what is created by putting a point after 'postulandi.'

tum Apronium isto praetore potuisse? Confiteatur necesse est. Sed vos fortasse, quod vos lex commonet, id in hoc loco quaeritis, num quas ex hisce rebus pecunias ceperit? Docebo cepisse maximas; omnesque eas iniquitates, de quibus antea dixi, sui quaestus causa constituisse convincam, si prius illud propugnaculum quo contra omnes meos impetus usurum se putat ex defensione ejus dejecero.

XVI. Magno, inquit, decumas vendidi. Quid ais? an tu decumas, homo audacissime atque amentissime, vendidisti? tu partes eas quas te senatus populusque Romanus voluit, an fructus integros atque adeo bona fortunasque aratorum omnes vendidisti? Si palam praeco jussu tuo praedicasset, non decumas frumenti sed dimidias venire partes, et ita emptores accessissent, ut ad dimidias partes emendas, si pluris vendidisses tu dimidias quam ceteri decumas, cuinam mirum videretur? Quid vero si praeco decumas pronuntiavit, re vera, hoc est, lege, edicto, conditione plus etiam quam dimidia venierunt, tamen hoc tibi praeclarum putabis, te pluris quod non licebat quam ceteros quod oportebat vendidisse? Pluris vendidi decumas quam ceteri. Quibus rebus id assecutus es? innocentia? Aspice aedem Castoris: deinde, si audes, fac mentionem innocentiae. Diligentia? Codicis lituras tui contemplare in Sthenii Thermitani nomine: deinde aude te dicere diligentem. Ingenio? Qui testes interrogare priore actione nolueris, et iis tacitus os tuum praebere malueris, quamvis et te et patronos tuos lex commonet,] The Lex de Repetundis, under which the proceeding against Verres was instituted. Cicero often rambles a good deal from the point, but he makes a show now and then of coming back to it. We must not forget that the direct demand against Verres was a certain sum, which he was charged with getting illegally; and it was necessary to prove that the money had come to his hands.

16. Quid vero si] Klotz has 'quid? si praeco decumas pronuntiavit; re vera,' &c. The larger stop after 'pronuntiavit' is hardly necessary to prevent a mistake. The 'decumas pronuntiavit,' the declaration of the 'praeco,' that the 'decumae' were going to be sold, is opposed to what in fact (re vera) was done: more than half the produce was really sold, though it was sold under the name of 'decumae.' Zumpt has 'Quid vero,' &c.; but Cod. Vat. omits 'vero.'

pluris vendidi, &c.] Zumpt has from Lag. 42 only 'pluris decumas vendidisti.' It is indifferent which reading we take; but it seems hardly judicious to prefer a single MS. in such a case.

lituras tui, &c.] Klotz has from Cod. Vat.: 'codicis lituras tu contemplare;' but I take 'tu' to be merely a blunder of the copyist.

tacitus os] 'Tacitum os' in the English reprint of Zumpt, and I suppose in the edition from which it was printed. In his large edition Zumpt remarks: 'nunquam tacitum os praebere, sed quia tacet, ideo os praebet.' The expression occurs several times. Terence, Adelph. ii. 2. 7:

"SA. Qui potui melius qui hodie ei usque os praebui?"

and in Cicero, Ad Att. (i. 13): "quam dignus qui Palicano, sicut facit, os ad male audiendum quotidie praebat."

ingeniosos esse dicito. Qua re igitur id quod ais assecutus es? Magna est enim laus, si superiores consilio vicisti, posterioribus exemplum atque auctoritatem reliquisti. Tibi fortasse idoneus fuit nemo quem imitarere. At te videlicet, inventorem rerum optimarum ac principem, imitabuntur omnes. Quis arator te praetore decumam dedit? quis duas? quis non maximo se affectum beneficio putavit, quum tribus decumis pro una defungeretur, praeter paucos qui propter societatem furtorum tuorum nihil omnino dederunt? Vide inter importunitatem tuam senatusque bonitatem quid intersit. Senatus, quum temporibus rei publicae cogitur ut decernat ut alterae decumae exigantur, ita decernit ut pro his decumis pecunia solvatur aratoribus; ut quod plus sumitur quam debetur, id emi non auferri putetur. Tu, quum tot decumas non senatusconsulto sed novis edictis tuis nefariisque institutis exigeres et eriperes, magnum te fecisse arbitrare, si pluris vendideris quam L. Hortensius, pater istius Q. Hortensii, quam Cn. Pompeius, quam C. Marcellus, qui ab aequitate, ab lege, ab institutis non recesserunt? An tibi unius anni aut biennii ratio fuit habenda, salus provinciae, commoda rei frumentariae, ratio rei publicae in posteritatem fuit negligenda? Quum rem ita constitutam accepisses ut et populo Romano satis frumenti ex Sicilia suppeditaretur, et aratoribus tamen arare atque agros colere expediret, quid effecisti? quid assecutus es? Ut populo Romano nescio quid te praetore ad decumas accederet, deserendas arationes relinquendasque curasti. Successit tibi L. Metellus. Tu innocentior quam Metellus? tu laudis et honoris cupidior? Tibi quamvis et te, &c.] Klotz has from Cod. Vat.: 'quantum vis et te,' &c. If 'quantum vis' is right, it is certainly not the common form of expression, which is 'quamvis.' It is more usual to place 'quamvis' nearer the word which it qualifies, which here is 'ingeniosos.' Zumpt says that 'quamvis' is said for 'quantum vis,' which I do not believe. It is said for what it is. His note is "quamvis secundum originem suam pro quantumvis dici, et adverbialiter (non conjunctionaliter) cum aliis Adverbiis vel Adjectivis componi, ut h. l. quamvis ingeniosos, non est quod multis doceam." In Lib. 5. c. 5, there is 'expectate facinus quam vultis improbum,' where 'quam' has a reference to a 'tam' suppressed. I can hardly suppose Zumpt to mean that 'tam' and 'quam' are the same as 'tantum' and 'quantum.'

ut pro his decumis pecunia] This is the order of Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat., which Klotz has. The common order is 'ut pecunia pro his decumis,' &c. These variations in the order of words easily happen in copying from a common original, and are the most common of variations in the text of Cicero, and of other ancient writers also. It is useful now and then to note a few, even though, as in this instance, it may be difficult or impossible to decide which is more probably the genuine language of Cicero.

quod plus] Zumpt has 'quo plus,' which I hardly understand, notwithstanding his explanation. 'Quod plus' is the common reading, that is, of the editions, and also of Cod. Vat.; and it seems more easily explained than the other: 'What is taken over and above what is due, that is to be considered as bought, not as enforced.'

Tibi enim consulatus, &c.] Said ironically: 'you were trying to secure the consulship, I suppose; Metellus was careless about obtaining an office which his father and enim consulatus quaerebatur, Metello paternus honos et avitus negligebatur. Multo minoris vendidit non modo quam tu, sed etiam quam qui ante te vendiderunt.

XVII. Quaero, si ipse excogitare non potuerat quemadmodum quam plurimo venderet, ne tua quidem recentia proximi praetoris vestigia persequi poterat, ut tuis praeclaris abs te principe inventis et excogitatis edictis atque institutis uteretur? Ille vero tum se minime Metellum fore putavit si te ulla in re imitatus esset; qui ab urbe Roma, quod nemo unquam post hominum memoriam fecit, quum sibi in provinciam proficiscendum putaret, literas ad Siciliae civitates miserit, per quas hortatur et rogat ut arent, ut serant. In beneficio Praetor hoc petit aliquanto ante adventum suum: et simul ostendit se lege Hieronica venditurum, hoc est, in omni ratione decumarum nihil isti simile facturum. Atque haec non cupiditate aliqua scribit inductus ut in alienam provinciam literas mittat ante tempus, sed consilio, ne si tempus sationis praeterisset granum de provincia Sicilia nullum haberemus. Cognoscite Metelli literas. LITERAE L. METELLI.

XVIII. Hae literae, iudices, L. Metelli, quas audistis, hoc quantum est ex Sicilia frumenti hornotini exaraverunt: glebam commosset in agro decumano Siciliae nemo, si Metellus hanc epistolam non misisset. Quid Metello divinitus hoc venit in mentem, an ab Siculis qui Romam frequentissimi convenerant negotiatoribusque Siciliae doctus est? quorum quanti conventus ad grandfather had enjoyed. Metellus sold them lower, not only than you, but lower than your predecessors did.' Cicero means to say, he did all that he could under the circumstances.

17. Quaero, . . . potuerat] 'Quaero . . . poterat:' Klotz.

In beneficio, &c.] The text is the same as that of Klotz, except that he has 'populi Romani' before 'praetor,' which two words Cod. Vat. omits. His reading and pointing are founded on the Cod. Vat. Zumpt and Orelli have 'ut serant in beneficio Populi Romani. Et hoc petit,' &c. Zumpt explains 'in beneficio' thus: "In praepositionem omnes libri praeter Nannianum agnoscunt, rectissime, nam beneficium est in agris, quos populus Romanus vi ceperat, Siculisque concesserat, non in serendo." Thus 'in beneficio' is equivalent to 'in agris populi Romani,' an explanation which we cannot accept. Klotz appears to have hit on the true explanation of the passage. He compares c. 48: "atque hoc in beneficii loco petitum est ab Apronio;" and we have only to suppose 'in beneficio' to be equivalent to 'in beneficii loco.' Cicero tells us the same thing again (c. 22): 'Metellus . . . ut sererent quam plurimum;' but there is nothing in that passage which helps us here.

isti simile] Klotz from Cod. Vat. has 'istius simile,' which may be the true reading, though I doubt. (See page 249, note.) —'de provincia' is also the reading of Cod. Vat., in place of the common reading, 'ex provincia.'—After 'Metelli literas,' Zumpt has 'Recita epistolam L. Metelli.' The reading of Cod. Vat., followed by Klotz, is: 'Cognoscite Metelli litteras. Epistula L. Metelli.'

18. hornotini] 'The produce of the year.' The word is a longer form of 'hornus,' an adjective, which signifies 'the produce of the season' (hora). Horace, Epod. ii. 47, has "Et horna dulci vina promens dolio," where the scholiast in the note has the expression 'hornotinum vinum.' There is also 'annotinus.'

Marcellos, antiquissimos Siciliae patronos, quanti ad Cn. Pompeium, consulem designatum, ceterosque illius provinciae necessarios, fieri soliti sint quis ignorat? Quod quidem iudicium nullo unquam de homine factum est, ut absens accusaretur ab iis palam quorum in bona liberosque summum imperium potestatemque haberet. Tanta vis erat injuriarum ut homines quidvis perpeti quam non de istius improbitate deplorare et conqueri mallent. Quas literas quum ad omnes civitates prope suppliciter misisset Metellus, tamen antiquum modum sationis nulla ex parte assequi potuit: diffugerant enim permulti, id quod ostendam; nec solum arationes sed etiam sedes suas patrias istius injuriis exagitati reliquerant.

Non mehercule criminis augendi causa, iudices, dicam: sed quem ipse accepi oculis animoque sensum, hunc vere apud vos et ut potero planissime exponam. Nam, quum quadriennio post in Siciliam venissem, sic mihi affecta visa est ut hae terrae solent in quibus bellum acerbum diuturnumque versatum est. Quos ego campos antea collesque nitidissimos viridissimosque vidissem, hos ita vastatos nunc ac desertos videbam ut ager ipse cultorem desiderare ac lugere dominum videretur. Herbitensis ager, Hen-nensis, Murgentinus, Assorinus, Imacharensis, Agyrinensis, ita relictus erat ex maxima parte ut non solum jugerum sed etiam dominorum multitudinem quaereremus; Aetnensis vero ager qui solebat esse cultissimus, et, quod caput est rei frumentariae, camconsulem] Cod. Vat. has 'tuum consulem,' which means 'tum consulem,' which reading Klotz has.—In place of 'quod quidem iudicium,' Cod. Vat. has 'quod quidem jud.,' out of which Mai makes 'quod quidem iudices;' and this is perhaps the true reading.—At the end of this chapter Cod. Vat. has 'relinquerant,' on which Zumpt remarks, in his Appendix, 'editque admirabiliter Maius.' Klotz is content with the common form 'reliquerant.' Mai is so fond of his palimpsest, that he does not even object to coin new words out of it. In Lib. 2. c. 58, there is the reading "non, opinor, esset dubium," which satisfies ordinary men's judgment. But Cod. Vat. has 'resset' for 'esset,' a blunder, the origin of which is palpable; yet Mai takes it under his protection, and becomes the sponsor for a new verb, 'resum.' nec solum] 'Non solum:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat.

Non mehercule] Here Klotz has 'non mehercule' (see c. 13, note).

An editor has difficulty enough in preserving a reasonable degree of uniformity in the writing of Latin words and expressions, but Klotz delights in variations.

hae terrae solent] Cod. Vat. has 'cae, &c.,' a variation which I note, that the reader may better understand how frequently these two forms, in certain cases, are interchanged or used indifferently.

Murgentinus,] The orthography of this word is somewhat uncertain. The coins are said to have 'Morgantini.' As to 'Imacharensis,' there is the like difficulty; for it is uncertain if the name was 'Imichara,' or 'Imachara,' or 'Machara,' which last Klotz prefers. The modern name 'Maccara' proves nothing either way.

jugerum] Cod. Vat. has 'jugorum,' accepted by Klotz. The context shows that 'jugerum' is the true word. 'Quaereremus' is equivalent to 'desideraremus,' 'I looked in vain for;' and so it is used again shortly after in this chapter.

pus Leontinus, cujus antea species haec erat ut, quum obsitum vidisses, annonae caritatem non vererere, sic erat deformis atque horridus ut in uberrima Siciliae parte Siciliam quaereremus. Labe-factarat enim vehementer aratores jam superior annus, proximus vero funditus everterat.

XIX. Tu mihi etiam audes mentionem facere decumarum? Tu in tanta improbitate, tu in tanta acerbitate, in tot ac tantis injuriis, quum in arationibus et in earum rerum jure provincia Sicilia consistat, eversis funditus aratoribus, relictis agris, quum in provincia tam locuplete ac referta non modo rem sed ne spem quidem ullam reliquam cuiquam feceris, aliquid te populare putabis habere, quum dicis te pluris quam ceteros decumas vendidisse? Quasi vero aut populus Romanus hoc voluerit, aut senatus hoc tibi mandaverit ut, quum omnes aratorum fortunas decumarum nomine eriperes, in posterum fructu illo commodoque rei frumentariae populum Romanum privares; deinde, si quam partem tuae praedae ad summam decumarum addidisses, bene de re publica, bene de populo Romano meritus viderere.

Atque proinde loquor quasi in eo sit iniquitas ejus reprehendenda, quod propter gloriae cupiditatem, ut aliquos summa frumenti decumani vinceret, acerbiores legem, duriora edicta interposuerit, omnium superiorum auctoritatem repudiavit. Magno tu decumas vendidisti. Quid si doceo te non minus domum tuam avertisse quam Romam misisse decumarum nomine? quid habet populare oratio tua, quum ex provincia populi Romani aequam partem tu tibi sumpseris ac populo Romano miseris? quid si duabus partibus campus Leontinus,] This is the extensive plain through which the Lissus flows. This river is described in ancient times as entering a lake, and issuing from it in two branches, one of which was navigable. This is now the lake of Biviere, near Lentini, the site of the ancient Leontini. This lake, "in its greatest winter extent, is about nineteen miles in circumference, but it decreases, as the sun advances, to eight or nine, leaving a feculent bed of mud and marsh on its banks, that, during the summer exhalations, teems with pestilence and death" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 158). Smyth adds that this inconvenience might be easily removed, "as there is a communication by the rivulet of San Leonardo with the sea, which might easily be deepened." This rivulet may be the ancient Terias. (Thucyd. vi. 50.) Swinburne describes the plain along the coast as full of ponds and marshes, which abound with wild fowl. After leaving the fens, he came upon a "noble plain, covered with promising crops of corn, but without a single inclosure, or even tree."

19. cuiquam feceris,] 'Cujusquam feceris:' Klotz, from Lag. 42. He has also 'cum dicis te,' which seems to be the true reading. Zumpt has 'cum dices.'

rei frumentariae, &c.] 'Frumentariae rei rem publicam privares:' Klotz.

oratio] Zumpt, from Lag. 42, which seems, as he says, to be preferable to the common reading 'ratio,' which Klotz has. The defence of Verres would be, "I have sold the 'decumae' at a high price;" but such a defence or declaration would not be calculated to conciliate the good-will of the people; it would not be 'populare.'

doceo te amplius frumenti abstulisse quam populo Romano misisse : tamenne putamus patronum tuum in hoc crimine cerviculam jactaturum et populo se ac coronae daturum ? Haec vos antea, iudices, audistis : verum fortasse ita audistis ut auctorem rumorem haberetis sermonemque omnium. Cognoscite nunc innumerabilem pecuniam frumentario nomine ereptam, ut simul illam quoque ejus vocem improbam agnoscatis, qui se uno quaestu decumarum omnia sua pericula redempturum esse dicebat.

XX. Audivimus hoc jamdiu, iudices : nega quemquam esse vestrum quin saepe audierit socios istius fuisse decumanos. Nihil aliud arbitror falso in istum esse dictum ab iis qui male de isto existimarint nisi hoc. Nam socii putandi sunt quos inter res communicata est. Ego rem totam fortunasque aratorum omnes istius fuisse dico : Apronium, Venereosque servos, quod isto praetore fuit novum genus publicanorum, ceterosque decumanos, procuratores istius quaestus et administros rapinarum fuisse dico. Quomodo hoc doces ? Quo modo ex locatione illa columnarum docui istum esse praedatum : opinor, ex eo maxime quod iniquam legem novamque dixisset. Quis enim unquam conatus est jura omnia et consuetudinem omnium commutare cum vituperatione sine quaestu ? Pergam atque insequar longius. Iniqua lege vendebas quo pluris venderes : cur, addictis jam et venditis decumis, cerviculam] An allusion to the theatrical gesture of Hortensius. Klotz refers to the Brutus (c. 88) : "motus et gestus etiam plus artis habebat quam erat oratori satis."

The 'corona' is the mass of bystanders, the crowd generally, as in Ovid, Met. Lib. xiii. v. 1 :

"Consedere duces, et vulgi stante corona Surgit ad hos clypei dominus septemplicis Ajax."

A passage from the oration Pro Flacco (c. 28) is aptly cited here : "a iudicibus oratio avertitur, vox in coronam turbamque effunditur."

auctorem, &c.] This word is fully explained in a note to Lib. 5. c. 22. In place of 'omnium' it has been proposed to write 'hominum,' but no MS. variation is noted. The two words 'homines' and 'omnes,' in their several cases, are often confounded.

20. Nam socii] Cicero's meaning is this : "You have often heard it said that the 'decumani,' or farmers of the 'decumae,' were his partners. This is, as I think, the only false charge made against Verres by those who have a bad opinion of him : for we must consider those as partners whose stock is made common property, or whose pecuniary interests become a joint interest. But, instead of this partnership existing, I affirm that the whole property and fortunes of the 'aratores' fell into the hands of Verres."

Cicero's language is founded on the legal notion of partnership. 'Quos inter res communicata est' means, that the property of the several partners, if it is a general partnership (totorum bonorum, Gaius, iii. 148), becomes joint property by virtue of the agreement for a partnership, and no mutual transfer is required. This is the doctrine of the Roman law, and the language is that of Cicero : "in societate omnium bonorum res quae coeuntium sunt continuo communicantur" (Paulus, Dig. 17. 2. 1).

addictis—et venditis] The contract of buying and selling, in the Roman system, and in all legal systems, is complete as soon as the thing to be sold and the price are agreed on. When this is done, the contract of buying and selling is complete. Delivery (traditio) and taking possession quum jam ad summam decumarum nihil, ad tuum quaestum multum posset accedere, subito atque ex tempore nova nascebantur edicta? Nam ut vadimonium decumano quocunque is vellet promitteretur, ut ex area nisi pactus esset arator ne tolleretur, ut ante Kalend. Sext. decumas deportatas haberet, haec omnia jam venditis decumis anno tertio te edixisse dico: quae si rei publicae causa faceres, in vendendo essent pronuntiata; quia tua causa faciebas, quod erat imprudentia praetermissum, id quaestu ac tempore admonitus reprehendisti. Illud vero cui probari potest, te sine tuo quaestu ac maximo quaestu tantam tuam infamiam, tantum capitis tui fortunarumque tuarum periculum neglexisse; ut, quum totius Siciliae quotidie gemitus querimoniasque audires, quum, ut ipse dixisti, reum te fore putares, quum hujusce judicii discrimen ab opinione tua non abhorreret, paterere tamen aratores indignissimis injuriis vexari ac diripi? Profecto, quamquam es singulari crudelitate et audacia, tamen abs te totam alienari provinciam, tot homines honestissimos ac locupletissimos tibi inimicissimos fieri nolles, nisi hanc rationem et cogitationem salutis tuae pecuniae cupiditas ac praesens illa praeda superaret.

XXI. Etenim, quoniam summam et numerum injuriarum vobis, judices, non possum exponere, singillatim autem de uniuscujusque incommodo dicere infinitum est, genera ipsa injuriarum, quaeso, cognoscite. Nympho est Centuripinus, homo navus et industrius, are no part of the contract, but a different transaction. The word 'addictis,' of which examples have occurred before, has, among other significations, that of declaring the highest bidder at a public auction to be the purchaser; and accordingly Cicero appropriately says 'addictis et venditis,' for the 'addictio' here is part of the contract, and necessary to its completion. Comp. c. 63: "neque his voluisse te addicere qui contra Apronium licerentur." A passage of Suetonius (Caesar, c. 50) referred to by Forcellini, shows the proper use of this word: "cui amplissima praedia ex auctionibus hastae minimo addixit," where some editions read 'ei numero' for 'minimo.' (See the note in Burmann's edition.) It is also used as applied to private bargains (Julian, Dig. 41. 4. 7). See Horace 2 Sat. v. 109: "nummo te addicere," and Heindorf's note; but he says nothing of 'addicere.'

quocunque is vellet] See c. 15, p. 286, note. reprehendisti] 'You changed or altered.' Compare c. 35: "unum hoc aliquot senatus consultis reprehensum," &c. 'Prehendo' is to lay hold of with the hand, as it seems; and 'reprehendo' is to lay hold of for the purpose of checking or pulling back. Plautus, Mil. Glor. i. 1. 59: "quae here pallio me reprehenderunt." It has also the sense of reconsidering, handling over again, and the like:

—————"pernoscite
Furtumne factum existumetis, an locum Reprehensum, qui praeteritus negligentia est."—Ter. Adelph. Prol. 12.

21. navus] The true writing of the word is 'gnavus' as we see from the compound 'ignavus;' and we have the corresponding Greek form γένναϊος. But the MSS. have 'navus,' and Cicero informs us that the practice in his time was to write 'navus;' the orthography had adapted itself to the pronunciation, for we must suppose that the Romans gave up pronouncing the initial 'g' in this and some other words. Cicero's remark is (Orat. c. 47): "Noti erant et navi et nari, quibus quum in praeponi experientissimus ac diligentissimus arator. Is quum arationes magnas conductas haberet, quod homines etiam locupletes, sicut ille est, in Sicilia facere consuerunt, easque magna impensa magnoque instrumento tueretur, tanta ab isto iniquitate oppressus est ut non modo arationes relinqueret, sed etiam ex Sicilia profugeret Romamque una cum multis ab isto ejectis veniret. Fecit ut decumanus Nymphonem negaret ex edicto praeclaro, quod ad nullam aliam rem nisi ad hujusmodi quaestus pertinebat, numerum jugerum professum esse. Nympho quum se vellet aequo judicio defendere, iste viros optimos recuperatores dat, eundem illum medicum Cornelium—is est Artemidorus Pergaeus qui in sua patria dux isti quondam et magister ad spoliandum Dianae templum fuit—et haruspicem Volusium, et Valerium praeconem. Nympho, antequam plane constitit, condemnatur. Quanti fortasse quaeritis. Nulla erat edicti poena certa. Frumenti ejus omnis quod in areis esset. Sic Apronius decumanus, non decumam debitam, non frumentum remotum atque celatum, sed tritici septem millia medimnum ex Nymphonis arationibus, edicti poena, non redemptionis aliquo jure tollit.

XXII. Xenonis Menaeni, nobilissimi hominis, uxoris fundus oporteret, dulcius visum est, ignoti, ignavi, ignari dicere quam ut veritas postulabat." He seems to have taken no notice of the Greek forms, which, with the Latin compounds, explain to us the true forms of these words. Klotz has 'gnavus.' Zumpt says that 'navus' is the reading of the MSS. Should we write the word as it ought to be written, if we look to its origin, or should we write it in the text of Cicero in the way in which he says that he would write it himself? There cannot be any doubt on this point, I think.

instrumento] See c. 50. We may collect from this passage that these 'conductores' (lessees) farmed solely at their own cost, and paid a fixed rent. It was not the métayer system. Cicero speaks of them as rich, and farming 'magna impensa magnoque instrumento,' 'with a great outlay, and a large farming-stock.' It may be observed that 'conductas,' if we interpret it strictly, means the contract of 'locatio et conductio,' of which 'merces,' or a money payment, is as essential a part as 'pretium' (price) is in buying and selling. Gaius (iii. 142): "locatio autem et conductio similibus regulis constituuntur: nisi enim merces certa statuta sit, non videtur locatio et conductio contrahi."

ad nullam] 'Nullam ad:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat.—'ad spoliandum:' Cod. Vat. The common reading is 'ad despoliandum.'

Artemidorus Pergaeus] Of Perga, a town in Pamphylia. It seems that this Artemidorus had been made a Roman citizen, as we may infer from his name, Cornelius. Cicero alludes to this part of the plundering of Verres in Lib. 1. c. 21.

Frumenti] I prefer making this the beginning of a new sentence. The reader will see that it is the answer to 'Quanti fortasse quaeritis.'

non redemptionis, &c.] 'Not by any right that he had as undertaker.' I prefer using a genuine word, which expresses the meaning well, though with us in England it is now generally applied to one peculiar kind of undertaking. A 'decumanus' was said 'redimere' or 'conducere' the 'decumae' (c. 30); he could also be said 'emere,' the reason of which has been already explained, p. 275.

22. Menaeni,] The safest orthography seems to be 'Menaeni,' though the MSS. have 'Meneni,' except Cod. Vat., which has 'Menaeni.' But, as Zumpt observes, and the remark is worth noting, to prevent MSS. being cited where the citation is not applicable, that, in the MSS., very often ae erat colono locatus: colonus quod decumanorum injurias ferre non poterat ex agro profugerat. Verres in Xenonem judicium dabat illud suum damnatorium de jugerum professione. Xeno ad se pertinere negabat: fundum elocatum esse dicebat. Dabat iste judicium, Si paret jugera ejus fundi plura esse quam colonus diphthongus is represented by simple e, especially in foreign names. The form on the coins is ΜΕΝΑΙΝΩΝ. The place is called Μέναινον in Diodorus (xi. 78), but the usual Greek form is Μέναι.

fundus] A 'fundus' is an estate in land; a piece of land as a whole. A 'fundus' was often designated in Italy by some name, as 'Sempronianus.'

This 'fundus' was the property of Xeno's wife, and was let (locatus) to a 'colonus.' The word 'colonus,' if we explain the term according to Roman usage, means the lessee of a farm. He who lets the use of a thing is 'locator.' He who promises money for the use of a thing (conductor) is 'inquilinus,' if the thing let is a house or lodgings. If it is a piece of cultivable ground, the 'conductor' is called 'colonus.' Caius, Dig. 19. 2. 25. § 1: "qui fundum fruendum vel habitationem alicui locavit, si aliqua ex causa fundum vel aedes vendat, curare debet ut apud emptorem quoque eadem pactione et colono frui et inquilino habitare liceat; alioquin prohibitus is aget cum eo ex conducto." The annual payment agreed on was 'pensio.' Sometimes there was an agreement for the division of the produce, in which case the 'colonus' was called 'partiarius.' Caius, Dig. 19. 2. 25. § 6: "apparet autem de eo nos colono dicere qui ad pecuniam numeratam conduxit; alioquin partiarius colonus quasi societatis jure et damnum et lucrum cum domino fundi partitur." This is the métayer system.

The 'coloni' of the later empire are quite different from these 'coloni' of Cicero's time, who were simply tenant-farmers. There are only two passages in the writings of the great Roman jurists in which these later 'coloni' are mentioned. One is an excerpt from Marcian, Dig. 30. s. 112; and the other is a rescript of Alexander Severus, of A.D. 225 (Cod. Just. 8. 52. 1). There are passages in which the 'coloni Caesaris' are mentioned, which, as Savigny observes, may apply as well to the common free tenant-farmers, as to 'coloni' in the later sense. Nobody will suppose that the 'colonus aratorque vester' of this oration (c. 23) means any thing more than 'colonus' in its original sense. On the later 'coloni,' see Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, vol. ii.,

Xeno] The Greek name is Ξένων. The best MSS., including Cod. Vat., have 'Xeno' for the nominative. Whether the Romans wrote it so or not, is uncertain. If we write 'Xeno,' we ought to write 'Solo,' and Zumpt observes that it is so in Cicero, De Republica, ii. 1. But I find it written 'tum Draco, tum Solon.'

fundum elocatum] Zumpt says that this is the reading of all his MSS., but that some of the old editions have 'locatum.' He says it makes some difference, that it is not mentioned to whom it was let. If so, we should have presently afterwards 'elocavisse,' instead of 'locavisse.'

Dabat iste judicium,] Klotz has 'dat iste,' &c., following Cod. Vat., from which he also adopts the vicious reading 'si paret' for 'si paret.' Garatoni, in his note on Divin. c. 17, doubts about the form 'si paret' here; that is, 'possetne atque adeo deberet ipsa formula, quo tempore verbi in actu rerum profertur, etiam in indirecta oratione servari' (Zumpt). I don't see how the remark applies to this passage; and, if it did, I conceive that the formula would be given in its proper terms.

The 'condemnatio' in the formula is as extravagant as the instance in Lib. 2. c. 12, and so far helps to explain that chapter. Xeno, who had no interest in the land, for it was his wife's property, was to pay the penalty of the alleged false return of his wife's tenant. And, even if he had been the owner, the case would have been as bad, for the occupier of the land, the cultivator, was bound to make the return (profiteri). And this was the defence of Xeno. He had not cultivated the land, which was in itself enough (id quod satis erat); but, more than that, he was not the owner (dominus) nor the lessor (locator), by which he means, I suppose, that he had not let it for another, though 'locator' is properly said of him who lets his own. In fact, it was his wife's property, and she was accustomed to look after her own affairs (suum negotium gerere).—The Cod. Vat. has, in place of 'id esset professus, tum uti Xeno damnaretur. Dicebat ille non modo se non arasse, id quod satis erat, sed nec dominum ejus esse fundi nec locatorem: uxoris esse; eam ipsam suum negotium gerere: ipsam locavisse. Defendebat Xenonem homo summo splendore et summa auctoritate praeditus, M. Cossutius. Iste nihilominus iudicium [HS LXXX] dabat. Ille tametsi recuperatores de cohorte latronum sibi parari videbat, tamen iudicium accepturum se esse dicebat. Tum iste maxima voce Venereis imperat ut Xeno audiret, dum res judicaretur, hominem ut asservent; quum iudicata sit, ad se ut adducant: et illud simul dixit, se non putare illum, si propter divitias poenam damnationis contemneret, etiam virgas contemnere. Hac ille vi et hoc metu adductus tantum decumanis dedit quantum iste imperavit.

XXIII. Polemarchus est Murgentinus, vir bonus atque honestus. Is quum pro jugeribus quinquaginta medimna dcc decumae imperarentur, quod recusabat domum ad istum in jus eductus est; et, quum iste etiam cubaret, in cubiculum introductus est, quod quod satis,' the corrupt reading 'id quod satum,' a variation hardly worth noticing, except for the high authority of this MS., and for the fact that an editor could be found to adopt it. Klotz reads 'non arasse id, quod satum erat, sed,' &c. iudicium [HS LXXX] dabat.] The numerals seem to be uncertain. Klotz has 'HS 1000,' and Orelli 'HS LXXX millium.'

ut Xeno audiret,] The reading of Klotz is 'ut Xeno adesset, dum res judicaretur: hominem adservent: cum iudicata sit,' &c. 'Judicaretur' is from Cod. Vat. The authority for 'adesset' does not appear, and I suppose it is one of the tacit emendations which the editor occasionally makes. One would have supposed that the words 'maxima voce' would have prevented the adoption of this reading; though it is true that Klotz has diminished the effect of 'maxima' by writing 'magna,' with Cod. Vat. But 'magna voce' is idle and unmeaning, unless something followed to explain why the governor spoke so loud. He spoke loud enough to be heard. The 'ut . . . ut' occasions no difficulty. The first 'ut' depends on 'maxima,' the second on 'imperat.'

23. medimna dcc] 'Medimnae 1000, Cod. Vat., atque edidit Maius quod mireris: Zumpt. But after adopting 'resset' (p. 291), he may be excused this 'medimnae.'

ad istum in jus] A Roman 'praetor' could not be 'in jure,' that is, in court in his own house. It seems that, to be 'in jure,' he must be 'in tribunali.' It is no objection to this, that he could do certain acts, not judicial, out of court; as, for instance, give his sanction to the manumission of a slave when he was going to the bath or the theatre (Gaius, i. 20). Ernesti thought the words 'in jus' were improperly added; but this is a strange misunderstanding. Cicero evidently means to say that it was a very irregular affair for the 'praetor' to pretend to be 'in jure' in his bedchamber.

cubaret,] This verb is said to mean a person lying sick; and it often has this meaning. See Heindorf, Hor. 1 Sat. ix. 18:

"Trans Tiberim longe cubat is prope Caesaris hortos;"

but there seems no reason why it may not be used in a general sense, as it certainly is here. Ovid (Heroid. 20. v. 164) opposes it to 'valet': "haec cubat, ille valet," which passage, as it clearly shows what 'cubat' means there, so it might be alleged to show that 'cubat' has this particular sense by virtue of the contrast (valet) rather than in itself. And the same may be said of the passage in Horace, 2 Sat. iii. 289:

"Mater ait pueri menses jam quinque cubantis, Frigida si puerum quartana reliquerit;"

for here the context gives the word its special meaning. The word occurs in another passage in Horace, 2 Ep. ii. 68.

nisi mulieri et decumano patebat alii nemini. Ibi quum pugnīs et calcibus concisus esset, qui DCC medimnis decidere nolisset, mille promisit. Eubulidas est Grosphus, Centuripinus, homo quum virtute et nobilitate domi suae, tum etiam pecunia princeps. Huic homini, iudices, honestissimae civitatis honestissimo, non modo frumenti scitote sed etiam vitae et sanguinis tantum relictum esse quantum Apronii libido tulit. Nam vi, malo, plagis adductus est ut frumenti daret non quantum deberet sed quantum cogeretur. Sostratus et Numenius et Nymphodorus ejusdem civitatis quum ex agris tres fratres consortes profugissent, quod iis plus frumenti imperabatur quam quantum exararent, hominibus coactis, in eorum arationes Apronius venit, omne instrumentum diripuit, familiam abduxit, pecus abegit. Postea quum ad eum Nymphodorus venissed etiam vitae] Cod. Vat. omits 'etiam,' and Klotz follows it. Any reader who has got so far in these speeches will know that 'non modo,' in this sentence, requires 'sed etiam.'

non quantum deberet] Klotz has preferred the reading of Cod. Vat., 'non quantum vellet,' apparently observing a contrast between 'vellet' and 'cogeretur.' But a man's will could not be the measure of his duty. It is not unjust for a man to be compelled to pay more than he would choose to pay, but it is unjust to be compelled to pay more than he owes. The old reading, which Orelli has, is 'quantum haberet.' But 'deberet' is evidently the true word, as in c. 25: "se decumanis plus quam deberet non daturum."

Sostratus et Numenius] Zumpt and Klotz, in the usual fashion, place a comma after 'civitatis,' which leads a reader to expect another verb to which those names are the nominative. This seems to be a sufficient objection to this pointing, for nouns thus placed before 'quum' are very often the nominatives to the verb which follows 'quum.' It may be said that a reader naturally, that is, according to the organic laws of articulation, would pause after the word 'civitatis,' and that is true; but, as stops are now used in the printed texts of Greek and Latin authors, they are supposed to indicate in some measure the grammatical relations of words, and they should therefore be struck out whenever they are likely to mislead in this matter. But, if this punctuation is objectionable, it is still more so to place a colon after 'quantum exararent,' as Zumpt and Klotz do. However the Germans understand the colon, it is certain that an English reader will

consortes] This is explained by Klotz to signify that the three brothers had inherited a patrimonial estate which they had not divided; they still held it as tenants in common. He refers to Festus, v. Sors, and v. Desertiones; and to Cujacius, Observ. Lib. 5, 10.

hominibus coactis,] This is the expression used to signify a violent invasion of a man's property. The words are found in the Interdictum de Vi: Cicero, Pro Caecina, c. 21: "Perge porro hoc idem interdictum sequi: Hominibus Coactis."

familiam] This word seems to mean the slaves only here. In its widest sense it comprehends all that is subjected to the power of a person, a 'paterfamilias,' particularly when the discourse is of the property of a testator considered as a whole; as in the expressions 'familiae erciscundae,' 'familiae emptor' (Gaius, iii. 102, &c.; Cic. De Or. i. 56). Sometimes 'familia' is used to signify all the persons who are subjected to the power of a 'paterfamilias,' all, both free and slaves; and it may then be opposed to 'pecunia,' or property, in the sense of things only. Sometimes it signifies all the free persons who are subjected to the power of a 'paterfamilias,' a notion which is also extended to all the 'agnati,' or those whose descent can be traced to one 'paterfamilias.' Sometimes it means the slaves only, as it probably does in this passage, and certainly does in many others. (Pro Caecina, c. 19: "unde tu aut familia aut procurator tuus." Ad Div. xiv. 4.) And sometimes it is used to express things only as the collective name for a property: 'agnatus proximus familiam habeto' (Dig. 50. 16. 195).

set Aetnam, et oraret ut sibi sua restituerentur, hominem corripere ac suspendi jussit in oleastro quodam, quae est arbor, judices, Aetnae in foro. Tamdiu pependit in arbore socius amicusque populi Romani in sociorum urbe ac foro, colonus aratorque vester, quamdiu voluntas Apronii tulit. Genera jamdudum innumerabilium injuriarum, judices, singulis nominibus profero: infinitam multitudinem injuriarum praetermitto. Vos ante oculos animosque vestros tota Sicilia decumanorum hos impetus, aratorum direptiones, hujus importunitatem, Apronii regnum proponite. Contempsit Siculos; non duxit homines: nec ipsos ad persequendum vehementes fore, et vos eorum injurias leviter laturos existimavit.

XXIV. Esto: falsam de illis habuit opinionem, malam de vobis. Verumtamen quum de Siculis male mereretur, cives Romanos coluit, his indulgit, eorum voluntati et gratiae deditus fuit. Iste cives Romanos? At nullis inimicior aut infestior fuit. Mitto vincla, mitto carcerem, mitto verbera, mitto secures; crucem denique illam praetermitto quam iste civibus Romanis testem humanitatis in eos ac benevolentiae suae voluit esse: mitto, inquam, haec omnia, atque in aliud dicendi tempus rejicio: de decumis, de civium Romanorum conditione in arationibus disputo; qui quemadmodum essent accepti, judices, audistis ex ipsis: bona sibi erepta esse dixerunt. Verum haec, quoniam ejusmodi causa fuit, ferenda sunt; nihil valuisse aequitatem, nihil consuetudinem: damna denique, judices, nulla tanta sunt quae non viri fortes, magno ac libero animo affecti, ferenda arbitrentur. Quid si equitibus Romanis non obscuris neque ignotis, sed honestis et illustribus, manus ab Apronio, colonus aratorque vester,] If the lands of these men were in the 'Civitas Centuripina,' then the lands of this 'civitas' must have paid 'decumae,' and yet it was a 'civitas immunis' (c. 6). Cicero says afterwards 'tota Sicilia decumanorum hos impetus,' which, taken literally, proves that all Sicily paid 'decumae.' But 'tota Sicilia' is an oratorical expression, and means every part of Sicilia where the 'decumae' were payable. These three brothers would not pay 'decumae' for lands in the 'Centuripina civitas;' and therefore the lands, in respect of which they were liable, must have been situated elsewhere. It seems probable that they were lessees of the land in question, rather than owners (see c. 21); but, if they were owners, the land must have been out of the limits of the 'Centuripina civitas.' Nymphodorus was not called 'colonus aratorque vester' with strict propriety, any more than the 'ager decumanus' was called properly 'populi Romani;' as in c. 39, where he says of the 'decumae' of the Amestratini: "ut ex agro populi Romani plus frumenti servo Venereo quam populo Romano tribui pateretur."

24. At nullis, &c.] This is Zumpt's reading. Some MSS. have 'nullus,' evidently a blunder, which Hotmann corrected. Klotz, following Cod. Vat., has 'an ulli . . . fuit?' on which Zumpt briefly observes 'mendose.' A more signal instance of a depravation of the text cannot be found. 'At' contains the answer to the assumption.

ejusmodi causa] Thus explained by Zumpt: "res ita comparata est, aiebant homines: avaro praetori cedendum." 'Nihil valuisse,' &c., are instances of 'haec.' Klotz, following Cod. Vat., has 'ejusmodi casus.'

isto praetore, sine ulla dubitatione afferebantur, quid expectatis? quid a me amplius dicendum putatis? an id agendum ut eo celerius de isto transigamus, quo maturius ad Apronium possimus, id quod ego illi jam in Sicilia pollicitus sum, pervenire? qui C. Matrinium, judices, summa virtute hominem, summa industria, summa gratia, Leontinis in publico biduum tenuit. Quo ab Apronio, judices, homine in dedecore nato, ad turpitudinem educato, ad Verris flagitia libidinesque accommodato, equitem Romanum scitote biduum cibo tectoque prohibitum; biduum Leontinis, in foro, in custodiis Apronii retentum atque servatum, neque ante dimissum quam ad conditiones ejus depectus est.

XXV. Nam quid ego de Q. Lollio, judices, dicam, equite Romano spectato atque honesto? Clara res est quam dicturus sum, tota Sicilia celeberrima atque notissima: qui quum araret in Aetnensi, quumque is ager Apronio cum ceteris agris esset traditus, equestri vetere illa auctoritate et gratia fretus, affirmavit se decumanis plus quam deberet non daturum. Refertur ejus sermo ad Apronium. Enimvero iste ridere ac mirari Lollium nihil de Matrinio, nihil de ceteris rebus audisse. Mittit ad hominem Venereos: hoc quoque attendite, apparitores a praetore assignatos habuisse decumanum, si hoc mediocre argumentum videri potest, istum decumanorum nomine ad suos quaestus esse abusum: adducitur a Venereis atque adeo attrahitur Lollius, commode quum Apronius a palaestra redisset, et in triclinio quod in foro Aetnae straverat decubisset. Statuitur Lollius in illo tempestivo gladiatorum convivio. Non mehercule haec quae loquor crederem, judices, tametsi vulgo audieram, nisi mecum ipse senex, quum mihi atque huic voluntati accusationis meae lacrimans gratias id agendum] 'Id' does not refer to what goes before. It refers to 'ut eo,' &c. "Must I take all pains to be the quicker in settling the case of Verres, in order to come sooner to Apronius?" 'Transigere' is a word of 'settling,' 'determining,' 'bringing a thing to an end.'

in publico] These words are explained by what follows. "He was kept two days in the forum without cover and without food."

Quo ab Apronio,] Klotz has, from Cod. Vat., 'Quo Apronio;' but, as Zumpt observes, 'ab' cannot be supplied. Zumpt reads 'Atque ab Apronio;' but he says 'atque paret abesse;' and, indeed, it seems quite out of place. I have written 'Quo ab Apronio.'—'ad conditionem ejus depec-tus est:'. Klotz, from Cod. Vat. Zumpt approves of 'depectus est,' in place of the common reading 'depactus est.'

25. commode quum] "Just as Apronius had returned from the 'palaestra.'" Lag. 42 has 'commodo.' Cicero, quoted by Zumpt (Ad Att. ii. 12), says: "emerseram commode ex Antiati quum in me incurrit." Cod. Vat. has 'postmodum' in place of 'commode;' and Klotz reads 'Lollius. Postmodum quum Apronius . . recubisset.' Cod. Vat. has 'recubisset.'

tempestivo] This means an entertainment which began before the usual time of the day. The same expression, in the same sense, occurs in the oration Pro Murena, c. 6: "tempestivi convivii . . comes est extrema saltatio."

ageret, summa cum auctoritate esset locutus. Statuitur, ut dico, eques Romanus, annos prope xc natus, in Apronii convivio, quum interea Apronius caput atque os suum unguento confricaret. Quid est, Lolli? inquit: tu nisi malo coactus recte facere nescis? Homo quid ageret; taceret, responderet; quid facere denique illa aetate et auctoritate praeditus nesciebat. Apronius interea coenam ac pocula poscebat. Servi autem ejus, qui et moribus iisdem essent quibus dominus et eodem genere ac loco nati, praeter oculos Lollii haec omnia ferebant. Ridere convivae; cachinnare ipse Apronius: nisi forte existimatis eum in vino atque luxu non risisse, qui nunc in periculo atque exitio suo risum tenere non possit. Ne multa, judices, istis contumeliis scitote Q. Lollium coactum ad Apronii leges conditionesque venisse. Lollius aetate et morbo impeditus ad testimonium dicendum venire non potuit. Quid opus est Lollio? nemo hoc nescit: nemo tuorum amicorum, nemo abs te productus, nemo abs te interrogatus, nunc se primum diceret audire. M. Lollius, ejus filius, adolescens lectissimus, praesto est: hujus verba audietis. Nam Q. Lollius ejusdem filius, qui Calidium accusavit, adolescens et bonus et fortis et in primis disertus, quum his injuriis contumeliisque commotus in Siciliam esset profectus, in itinere occisus est: cujus mortis causam fugitivi sustinent; re quidem vera nemo in Sicilia dubitat quin eo sit occisus quod habere clausa non potuerit sua consilia de Verre. Iste porro non dubitabat quin is, qui alium antea studio adductus accusasset, sibi advenienti praesto esset futurus, quum esset parentis injuriis et domestico dolore commotus.

XXVI. Jamne intelligitis, judices, quae pestis, quae immanitas in vestra antiquissima, fidelissima, proximaque provincia versata sit? Jam videtis quam ob causam Sicilia, tot hominum furta antea, rapinas, iniquitates, ignominiasque perpessa, hoc non poterit novum ac singulare atque incredibile genus injuriarum contumeliarumque perferre? Jam omnes intelligunt cur universa provincia defensorem suae salutis eum quaesiverit, cujus iste fidei, diligentiae, perseverantiae, nulla ratione eripi possit. Tot judiciis interfuistis: tot homines nocentes et improbos accusatos et vestra et superiorum memoria scitis esse: ecquem vidistis, ecquem audistis istis contumeliis] Zumpt has 'his contumeliis,' from Lag. 42.

Calidium] See Act. i. c. 13.

fugitivi] He was reported to have been killed by some of the slaves who were then in a state of rebellion in Lower Italy, a circumstance likely enough; but Cicero, after the oratorical fashion of antiquity, does not scruple, without any evidence, as far as we know, to make his death a charge against Verres.

in tantis furtis, in tam apertis, in tanta audacia, tanta impudentia esse versatum? Apronius stipatores Venereos secum habebat ducebat eos circum civitates: publice sibi convivia parari, sterni triclinia, et in foro sterni jubebat: eo vocari homines honestissimos, non solum Siculos sed etiam equites Romanos; ut quicum vivere nemo unquam nisi turpis impurusque voluisset, ad ejus convivium spectatissimi atque honestissimi viri tenerentur. Haec tu, omnium mortalium profligatissime et perditissime, quum scires, quum audires quotidie, quum videres, si sine tuo quaestu maximo fierent, cum tanto tuo periculo fieri paterere atque concederes? Tantum apud te quaestus Apronii, tantum ejus sermo inquinatissimus et blanditiae flagitiosae valuerunt ut nunquam animum tuum cura fortunarum tuarum cogitatioque tangeret? Cernitis, judices, quod et quantum incendium decumanorum impetu non solum per agros sed etiam per reliquas fortunas aratorum, neque solum per bona sed etiam per jura libertatis et civitatis, isto praetore pervaserit. Videtis pendere alios ex arbore; pulsari autem alios et verberari; porro alios in publico custodiri; destitui alios in convivio; condemnari alios a medico et praecone praetoris; bona tamen interea nihilominus eorum omnium ex agris auferri ac diripi. Quid est hoc? populi Romani imperium? populi Romani leges? judicia? socii fideles? provincia suburbana? nonne omnia potius ejusmodi quae, si Athenio vicisset, in Sicilia non fecisset? non, inquam, judices, esset ullam partem istius nequitiae fugitivorum insolentia consecuta.

XXVII. Privatim hoc modo. Quid publice, civitates tractatae quemadmodum sunt? Audistis permulta, judices, testimonia civi-

26. triclinia,] In c. 25, Cicero uses the singular, 'triclinium,' a sofa or seat for persons at dinner; though there is no reason for supposing that he there means a single sofa. There might be several 'triclinia,' with their coverlids (strata). In Lib. 2. c. 74, there is the expression "quingenta tricliniorum lectos," which means the furniture for fifty 'triclinia,' the soft cushions, and the like. Though 'triclinium' is used to signify a room to eat in, as in Cic. Ad Att. xiii. 52, and elsewhere, this is not its original meaning, as the passages in which it occurs, and its etymology, clearly show. The scholiast on Horace, 1 Sat. iv. 86, "saepe tribus lectis videas caenare quaternos," says that a 'triclinium,' or eating-room, was so called, because there were three 'lecti' placed in it, one on each of the three sides of the table. This leaves unexplained why a 'triclinium' (not an eating-room) was so called. In fact, the room took its name from the piece of furniture, and not from the number of the pieces of furniture.

provincia suburbana?] Compare Lib. 2. c. 3.

27. Quid publice,—sunt?] Klotz has the absurd pointing, 'Quid? publice civitates tractatae quem ad modum sunt?' Zumpt, who writes 'quid publice? civitates,' &c., says properly: "Ceterum redii ad veterem ante Lambinum interpungendi rationem quid publice? Nam publice, si cum civitatibus jungas, abundat, nec habet privatim, quod recte opponatur." The sense is plain: "In matters concerning private persons, in this way. How as to those concerning the public; the cities, how were they dealt with?"

tatum, et reliquarum audietis. Ac primum de Agyrinensi populo, fidei et illustri, breviter cognoscite. Agyrinensis est in primis honesta civitas Siciliae, hominum ante hunc praetorem locupletium summorumque aratorum. Ejus agri decumas quum emisset idem Apronius, Agyrium venit. Qui quum eo cum apparitoribus, id est, cum vi ac minis, venisset, poscere pecuniam grandem coepit, ut accepto lucro discederet: nolle se negotii quidquam habere dicebat, sed accepta pecunia quam primum in aliam civitatem occurrere. Sunt omnes Siculi non contemnendi, si per nostros magistratus liceat, sed homines fortes satis et plane frugi ac sobrii; et in primis haec civitas de qua loquor, judices. Itaque homini improbissimo respondent Agyrinenses sese decumas ei quemadmodum deberent daturos; lucrum, quum ille praesertim magno emisset, non addituros. Apronius certiore facit istum cuja res erat.

XXVIII. Statim, tamquam conjuratio aliqua Agyrii contra rem publicam facta aut legatus praetoris pulsatus esset, ita Agyrio magistratus et quinqueprimi accitu istius evocantur. Veniunt Syracusas: praesto est Apronius: ait eos ipsos qui venissent contra edictum praetoris fecisse. Quaerebant, quid? respondebat Qui quum eo, &c.] Klotz has 'Qui cum apparitoribus, hoc est,' &c. 'Qui cum eo cum apparitoribus.' Orelli and Zumpt. Cod. Vat. has 'Qui cum apparitoribus eo et cum vi,' &c. Lag. 42 omits 'eo.' Paris. A. B. and Lag. 29 have the same reading as Cod. Vat. We cannot omit the preposition, I think; and certainly we cannot omit the 'quum.' Nor can we suppose that Cicero wrote 'Qui quum cum apparitoribus,' &c. There seems, then, nothing left but to write the text as it stands in Orelli and Zumpt.

in aliam—occurrere.] This is the common reading, except that the MSS. have dropped the 'in.' Zumpt follows the single MS. Lag. 42, and writes 'aliam—occupare.' But Cod. Vat. supplies the 'in.' This instance shows how unsafe it is sometimes to abandon the common reading. It is true, as Zumpt observes, that 'occurrere,' with an accusative, and without 'in,' is not Latin; but it would have required no great boldness to insert the 'in' before 'aliam;' and it has now good authority.

si per nostros, &c.] 'All the Sicilians are not despicable. I say this under the correction of our Sicilian governors.'

quum ille praesertim] This is the order of Zumpt, who follows Lag. 42. Cod. Vat., with the other Codd., places 'praesertim' after 'magno,' but, by mistake, omits 'quum.' The right place seems to be after 'ille.' See Divin. c. 2, note.—Cod. Vat. has 'audituros' for 'addituros;' and Klotz has not adopted it. The people declared that they would pay what was due, but they would not give any thing. The 'lucrum' was probably not unusual, a kind of fee to the 'decumani,' to keep them in good humour. Cicero himself (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 12) hints pretty plainly, that it is better to over-pay the 'decumani' than to have any trouble: "Quod si genus ipsum et nomen publicani non iniquo animo sustinebunt, poterunt iis consilio et prudentia tua reliqua videri mitiora. Possunt in pactionibus faciendis non legem spectare censoriam sed potius commoditatem conficiendi negotii et liberationem molestiae." See Lib. 3. c. 57.

facit, istum cuja, &c.] If we are to have any pointing here, it is best to put the comma after 'facit,' for 'istum cuja res erat' is only a further description. Zumpt and Klotz put the comma after 'istum.'—After 'erat' Orelli has 'quid rei esset,' which seems superfluous, and it is omitted in Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat.

28. quinqueprimi] The 'magistratus' and the first five members of the senate (βουλευή). See Lib. 2. c. 67: "magistratus et decemprimos."

se ad recuperatores esse dicturum. Iste, aequissimus homo, formidinem illam suam miseris Agyrinensibus injiciebat: recuperatores se de cohorte sua daturum minabatur. Agyrinenses, viri fortissimi, iudicium se passuros esse dicebant. Ingerebat iste Artemidorum Cornelium medicum, et Tlepoleum Cornelium pictorem, et ejusmodi recuperatores, quorum civis Romanus nemo erat, sed Graeci sacrilegi, jampridem improbi, repente Corneli. Videbant Agyrinenses quidquid ad eos recuperatores Apronius attulisset, illum perfacile probaturum: condemnari cum istius invidia infamiaque malebant quam ad ejus conditiones pactionesque accedere. Quae-rebant quae in verba recuperatores daret. Respondebat, SI PARET ADVERSUS EDICTUM FECISSE; quam in rem in iudicio dicturum esse dicebat. Iniquissimis verbis, improbissimis recuperatoribus, conflictari malebant quam quidquam cum isto sua voluntate decidere. Summittebat iste Timarchidem qui moneret eos, si saperent, ut transigerent. Pernegabant. Quid ergo? In singulos HS quinquagenis millibus damnari mavultis? Malle dicebant. Tum iste clare, omnibus audientibus, Qui damnatus erit, inquit, virgis ad necem caedetur. Hic illi flentes rogare atque orare coeperunt iudicium se passuros] Cod. Vat. has 'iudicio.' See Lib. 2. c. 24, and the note.

repente Corneli.] These Greeks were, or affected to be, Roman citizens; but Cicero means to insinuate that they had assumed the name of 'Corneli' all at once. Sulla made a great number of 'Corneli' of manumitted slaves (Appian, Civil War, Lib. 1. c. 100. 104); and these men may have been among them; or, as there were so many 'Corneli,' they may have thought that they might venture on assuming the name. This is one of the passages from which an argument has been derived that Cornelius was the gentile name of Verres, and that these men, being his freedmen, had, as was usual in such cases, taken the gentile name of their 'patronus.' But this conclusion is by no means certain. Cicero gives no indication that they were freedmen of Verres. Cicero calls them 'Graeci sacrilegi,' probably in allusion to their having assisted Verres to rob the temples of the Greeks; for Artemidorus is charged (c. 21) with assisting Verres to rob the temple of Diana at Perga. As to 'sacrilegus,' see p. 77, note.

quae in verba] That is, what would be the form in which the demand against them should be put? or, in other words, what would be the formula? In place of 'si paret,' the old editions had the usual blunder, 'si pateret.' (See Divin. c. 17, note.) Hotmann made the correction 'si pareret,' which Orelli has. But Lag. 1. 42. 29, have 'paret.' Paris. B. has 'parret.' Cod. Vat. has also 'paret;' and we now know the genuine form, 'si paret,' from Gaius.

Zumpt reads 'quam rem in iudicio;' but most of the MSS., and the best, have 'quare;' and Paris. A. B. 'qua in re.' Yet all these readings may mean 'quam rem,' for the omission of the horizontal line over the vowels, which line indicates m, is very common. Mai says that Cod. Vat. has 'in qua re,' but he would prefer 'de qua re.' Klotz reads 'in qua re: in iudicio,' &c. It is not immaterial to ascertain the true reading in a case of this kind, which I believe to be 'quam in rem,' which expression corresponds to 'quae in verba.' In c. 29 there is 'iudicium in aratorem in quadruplum.'

esse dicebat.] Cod. Vat. has 'esse aiebat;' and also Klotz.

quinquagenis millibus] Cod. Vat. has the numerals 1000, which mean the same. —'Malle dicebant:' Klotz has 'damnari —dicebant,' from Cod. Vat. This MS. has 'damnari septu mavultis damnari dicebant.' It is difficult to see what the corrupt word 'septu' indicates.—Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat. have 'suas sibi segetes,' which, with Zumpt, I take to be the genuine order. Klotz has 'sibi suas.'

ut suas sibi segetes, fructusque omnes, arationesque vacuas Apronio tradere liceret, ut ipsi sine ignominia molestiaque discederent. Hac lege, judices, decumas vendidit Verres. Dicat licet Hortensius, si volet, magno Verrem vendidisse.

XXIX. Haec conditio fuit isto praetore aratorum ut secum praeclare agi arbitrarentur, si vacuos agros Apronio tradere liceret. Multas enim cruces propositas effugere cupiebant. Quantum Apronius edidisset deberi, tantum ex edicto dandum erat. Etiamne si plus edidisset quam quantum natum esset? Etiam. Quomodo? Magistratus ex istius edicto exigere debebant. At arator repetere poterat. Verum, Artemidoro recuperatore. Quid si minus arator dedisset quam poposcisset Apronius? Judicium in aratorem in quadruplum. Ex quo judicum numero? Ex cohorte praetoria praeclara hominum honestissimorum. Quid amplius? Minus te jugerum professum esse dico: recuperatores rejice quod adversus edictum feceris. Ex quo numero? Ex eadem cohorte. Quid erit extremum? Si damnatus eris, atque adeo quum damnatus eris—nam dubitatio damnationis illis recuperatoribus quae poterat esse?—virgis te ad necem caedi necesse erit. His legibus, his conditionibus, erit quisquam tam stultus qui decumas venisse arbitretur, qui aratori novem partes reliquas factas esse existimet, qui non intelligat istum sibi quaestui praedaeque habuisse bona, possessiones, fortunasque aratorum? Virgarum metu Agrinenses quod imperatum esset facturos se esse dixerunt.

XXX. Accipite nunc quid imperarit, et dissimulate, si potestis, vos intelligere ipsum praetorem, id quod tota Sicilia perspexit, redemptorem decumarum atque adeo aratorum dominum ac regem

29. edidisset . . edidisset] Cod. Vat. in both cases 'edixisset,' which Klotz has admitted into his text. As if Apronius could make an 'edictum,' and as if 'ex edicto' the 'edictum' of Verres did not show that 'edidisset' is the true reading. Further, in c. 13, we have the form of the 'edictum' of Verres: 'edixit ut quod decumanus edidisset sibi dari oportere,' which is the very expression of this passage, except that for 'dari oportere' we have the equivalent expression 'deberi'; and Klotz in c. 13 has 'edidisset.'

Verum,] Klotz: 'Vero: Artemidoro,' &c. Cod. Vat. has 'vero.' 'Verum' is thus used: 'Yes, but Artemidorus would be a recuperator.'

Minus te jugerum] 'Jugerum' is the genitive case. This word is a medley. It seems to be generally of the second declension in the singular; but in the plural the word has the form of the third declension, as gen. 'jugerum,' 'jugeribus.'

quod adversus, &c.] It is usual to place a comma after 'rejice.' How the 'quod' is understood by those who use it, I don't know. 'Rejice' is here equivalent to 'select,' that is, to determine the 'recuperatores' by challenging the legal number out of the whole number proposed. Cicero says, "select 'judices' for the matter which is to be tried, your violation of the 'edictum.'"
The full expression would be 'in id quod . . feceris.'

atque adeo quum damnatus eris—] These words are in the Cod. Vat., and no where else, as it appears. It seems somewhat singular that so expressive a clause should appear only in a single MS.; but we can hardly doubt that the words are genuine.

fuisse. Imperat Agyrinensibus ut decumas ipsi publice accipiant, Apronio lucrum dent. Si magno emerat, quoniam tu es qui pretia diligentissime exquisisti, qui, ut ais, magno vendidisti, quare putabas emptori lucrum addi oportere? Esto: putabas. Quamobrem imperabas ut adderent? Quid est aliud capere et conciliare pecunias, in quo te lex tenet, si hoc non est, vi atque imperio cogere invitos lucrum dare alteri, hoc est, pecuniam dare? Quid tum? Apronio, deliciis praetoris, lucelli aliquid jussi sunt dare. Putatote Apronio datum, si Apronianum lucellum ac non praetoria praeda vobis videbitur. Imperas ut decumas accipiant: Apronio dent lucri tritici medimnum $\overline{\text{xxxiii}}$. Quid hoc est? una civitas ex uno agro plebis Romanae prope menstrua cibaria praetoris imperio donare Apronio cogitur. Tu magno decumas vendidisti, quum tantum lucri decumano sit datum? Profecto, si pretium exquisisses diligenter tum quum vendebas, $\overline{\text{x}}$ medimnum potius addidissent quam HS $\overline{\text{dc}}$ postea. Magna praeda videtur: audite reliqua, et diligenter attendite quo minus miremini Siculos, re necessaria coactos, 30. decumas—publice accipiant,] Verres required them to take the 'decumae' on the account of the 'civitas' on the terms which Apronius had given for them, which were too high. Thus they would, in fact, pay more than the 'decumae;' and, besides this, they were to give something to Apronius, who, in this way, would be rid of his bargain, and get a sum of money, simply for nothing.

capere et conciliare] One MS., Lag. 42, omits the 'et' between these words, and Zumpt and Klotz follow it. If Cicero were closely adhering to the technical form of the Roman Leges, he would omit the 'et;' and he may have done so here, as in c. 94: "de pecunia capta, conciliata," where Zumpt notices no variation in the reading. But in that instance the form of expression is such that the 'et' might well be omitted, even if Cicero were not following the technical terms of a 'lex.' In c. 40, Zumpt reads 'pecuniae captae et conciliatae.' As to the Roman legal form of expression, it is well known that the usual formula is to heap words upon one another, as our own legislation does, so as by the fulness of the expression to comprehend all that is intended (see c. 84); and the conjunction 'et' is omitted. Examples are abundant. The following may suffice:

"QVAEQVE AQVA IN OPPIDVM VENAFRORVM IT FLVIT DVCITVR EAM AQVAM DISTRIBVERE DISCRIBERE VENDVNDI CAVSA," &c.

(From the Edict of Augustus relating to the Aqueduct at Venafrum, Zeitschrift für Geschichtl. Rechtsw. vol. xv.).

lucri tritici] 'Lucri' is a correction of Hotmann's, confirmed by Lag. 42. The reading of the other MSS., which Orelli has, is 'lucrum.'

ex uno agro] 'Ager' is a name for a territorial division, as 'Ager Sabinus,' 'Ager Romanus;' or a name by which a whole tract of some definite limits is signified. He calls it 'ager plebis Romanae,' because the 'decumae' were for the supply of Rome, and this was almost as much as would furnish the city for a month, as he seems to say.

HS $\overline{\text{dc}}$] So it stands in Zumpt; and at the end of this chapter he writes 'HS,' that is, 'sestertii,' instead of the common reading 'HS $\overline{\text{iii}}$.' Klotz has 'ioc postea,' and 'Apronio HS.' By a comparison of the numbers in this and the following chapter, it appears that there is an error in some of the numerals, for the sum total of the money that was got for approving of the corn which was given as a present, is made $\overline{\text{lx}}$. If the money mentioned as extorted in c. 30 is made HS $\overline{\text{xxxiii}}$, which is the same number of sesterces as of medimna, and if we add to this HS $\overline{\text{xxx}}$, mentioned as extorted in c. 31, we have a total of HS $\overline{\text{lxiii}}$, which comes very near $\overline{\text{lx}}$.

auxilium a patronis, a consulibus, ab senatu, ab legibus, ab judiciis petivisse. Ut probaret Apronius hoc triticum quod ei dabatur, imperat Agyrinensibus Verres ut in medimna singula dentur Apronio HS.

XXXI. Quid est hoc? tanto numero frumenti, lucri nomine, imperato et expresso, nummi praeterea exiguntur ut probetur frumentum? An poterat non modo Apronius sed quivis, exercitui si metiendum esset, improbare Siculum frumentum quod illi ex area si vellet admetiri licebat? Frumenti tantus numerus imperio tuo datur et cogitur. Non est satis: nummi praeterea imperantur. Dantur. Parum est. Pro decumis hordei alia pecunia cogitur: jubes HS $\overline{\text{xxx}}$ lucri dari. Ita ab una civitate, vi, minis, imperio, injuriaque praetoris eripiuntur tritici medimnum $\overline{\text{xxxiii}}$, et praeterea HS $\overline{\text{lx}}$. An haec obscura sunt, aut si omnes homines velint, obscura esse possunt? quae tu palam egisti, in conventu imperasti, omnibus inspectantibus coëgisti; qua de re Agyrinenses magistratus et quinqueprimi, quos tu tui quaestus causa evocaras, acta et imperia tua domum ad senatum suum renuntiaverunt; quorum renuntiatio legibus illorum literis publicis mandata est; quorum legati, homines nobilissimi, Romae sunt, qui hoc idem pro testimonio dixerunt. Cognoscite Agyrinensium publicas literas: deinde testimonium publicum civitatis. Recita literas publicas, testimonium publicum. Animadvertistis in hoc testimonio, iudices, Apollodorum, cui Pyragro cognomen est, principem suae civitatis, lacrimantem testari ac dicere nunquam post populi Romani nomen ab Siculis auditum et cognitum Agyrinenses contra quemquam infimum civem Romanum dixisse aut fecisse quidpiam, qui nunc contra praetorem populi Romani magnis injuriis et magno dolore publice testimonium dicere cogerentur. Uni mehercule huic civitati, Verres, obsistere tua defensio non potest: tanta auctoritas est in eorum hominum fidelitate, tantus dolor in injuria, tanta religio in testimonio. Verum non una te tantum sed universae, similibus afflictæ incommodis, legationibus ac testimoniis publicis persequuntur.

31. An haec, &c.] So in the English reprint of Zumpt, and I suppose in his smaller edition. In his larger edition he has 'at,' and so has Klotz. It appears that the MSS. have 'at,' but how it is to be explained I don't see.

cui Pyragro] The true cognomen is uncertain, owing to the variations of the MSS., and most immaterial. 'Cogitabam,' says Zumpt, 'de nomine Προβραγής.' Klotz has 'cui Perirrhati cognomen est,' with the following remark: "Since such 'cognomina' must certainly have a meaning, we write, following the indications of the MSS., 'Perirrhati.' Apollodorus probably had this cognomen on account of his wide, gaping mouth, a peculiarity which is more fully expressed by περιβραγής τὰ χεῖλη." There are various modes of commenting on an author, and this may be to some people's taste.

una te tantum] Klotz omits 'tantum,' XXXII. Etenim deinceps videamus, Herbitensis civitas, honesta, et antea copiosa, quemadmodum spoliata ab isto ac vexata sit. At quorum hominum? summorum aratorum, remotissimorum a foro, judiciis, controversiis; quibus parcere et consulere, homo impurissime, et quod genus hominum studiosissime conservare debuisti. Primo anno venierunt ejus agri decumae tritici modium XVIII. Atidius, istius item minister in decumis, quum emisset, et praefecti nomine quum venisset Herbitam cum Venereis, locusque ei publice quo deverteretur datus esset, coguntur Herbitenses ei lucri dare following Cod. Vat. After 'incommodis' he adds 'civitates,' a reading which Zumpt does not notice. He has also from Cod. Vat. 'persecuntur,' as to which Zumpt remarks 'vere quidem.' I suppose he means that Cicero wrote the word so; or I do not understand in what the 'vere' consists. Certainly 'persecuntur' is as good as 'persecutus;' but there is nothing gained by adopting this orthography in a single instance. It will be some time before Roman orthography is settled. The inscription of Venafrum (c. 30), of the time of Augustus, writes CVIVS as the genitive of 'qui;' and the Lex Thoria, which may be considered as belonging to Cicero's early age, writes QVOIVS. It also writes PEQVNIAE, PERSEQVTIO, PEQVDES, and also PECVDES. It also writes QVOI (cui), QVOM (quum or cum); but no c appears in it in any form of the word 'quo.' The Romans, as it appears, soon came to write 'cuius' for 'quius,' as we see in the inscription of Venafrum, which also has CVI (cui), and CVM (cum, the conjunction). This letter q is only followed by v. In this same Thoria Lex we find PECORIS. This letter q went out of use in some forms; but it was still retained in a great many, as we may see in any page of a Latin author. See Professor Key's remarks on q in his work entitled "The Alphabet," &c.

32. Herbitensis] The place is Herbita, once a place of some note, and governed by 'tyranni' (Diod. xii. 8). Its site is supposed by some geographers to be near the sources of the Symaethus. Zumpt places it in a line between Centuripa and Menae, and about half way between these two places.

parcere et consulere,] Cod. Vat. omits 'et,' and so does Klotz, who loves varieties.

modium XVIII.] These numbers are all uncertain. I have not noticed the different symbols which Klotz has. As an instance, however, of the mode of representing the numbers in Cod. Vat., where they agree with this text, we may take 'tritici modium XXV DCC,' which is 25700. In this case Klotz has M. CCICCC CCICCC ICCC CCCCC, where M represents 'modium,' and the rest of the symbols respectively, 10000, 10000, 5000, 800, which is 100 more than this text. The Cod. Vat. has CCCCC, which is a c too much. For 'accessionis HS CIO CIO,' Klotz has HS ∞ ∞, which is the same thing, namely, 2000.

praefecti nomine] I find no note on this word 'praefecti' in any of the commentaries which I have. Among the various officers in a province, Cicero has already enumerated 'legati,' 'praefecti,' 'tribuni.' The word 'praefectus' is so general in its signification, that it is impossible to assign to it any exact meaning, unless something is added to qualify the term, or unless it be associated with other words which give it a meaning. Where 'tribuni militares et praefecti' go together, we must understand some military officer. No description is added here, and nothing is said by which we can conjecture what the 'praefectus' was in whose name this man came. But Cicero elsewhere uses the word absolutely (Ad Att. vi. 3): "aut quia praefectus non est, quod ego nemini tribuo negotiatori;" and again (Ad Att. v. 21): "Scaptius ad me in castra venit—praefecturam petivit: negavi me cuiquam negotianti dare." These 'praefecti' appear to have been persons who were empowered by the governor to administer justice in certain districts. It seems, then, that Atidius came to Herbita as a 'praefectus juri dicundo' (praefecti nomine); which will explain why a lodging was furnished him by the town. He was both a farmer of the 'decumae' and a 'praefectus.' Cicero tells us, in the passages above cited, that when he was governor of Cilicia, he refused to give a 'praefectura' to any negotiator, lest the sources of justice should be corrupted.

tritici modium xxxvii millia, quum decumae venissent tritici modium xviii. Atque hoc tantum lucri coguntur dare publice, quum jam privatim aratores ex agris, spoliati atque exagitati decumanorum injuriis, profugissent. Anno secundo quum emisset Apronius decumas tritici modium xxv dcc, et ipse Herbitam cum illa sua praedonum copia manuque venisset, populus publice coactus est ei conferre lucri tritici modium xxi et accessionis HS ciccio. De accessione dubito an Apronio ipsi data sit, merces operae atque impudentiae; de tritici quidem numero tanto, quis potest dubitare quin ad istum praedonem frumentarium, sicut Agyrinense frumentum, pervenerit? Anno tertio vero in hoc agro consuetudine usus est regia.

XXXIII. Solere aiunt barbaros reges Persarum ac Syrorum plures uxores habere, his autem uxoribus civitates attribuere, hoc modo: haec civitas mulieri redimiculum praebeat, haec in collum, haec in crines. Ita populos habent universos non solum conscios libidinis suae verum etiam administros. Eandem istius, qui se regem Siculorum esse ducebat, licentiam libidinemque fuisse cognoscite. Aeschrionis Syracusani uxor est Pipa, cujus nomen istius nequitia tota Sicilia pervagatum et pervulgatum est, de qua muliere versus plurimi supra tribunal et supra praetoris caput scribebantur. Hic et accessionis] This is the reading of Cod. Vat., and is perhaps preferable to the common reading 'accessionem,' for the genitive is of the same form as 'lucri.'

operae, &c.] The common reading is 'merces operae pretiumque impudentiae.' The text is the same as that of Cod. Vat. — 'Anno tertio vero:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'anno vero tertio.'

33. barbaros reges] By 'Syrorum,' Cicero cannot mean the Greek kings of Syria, but he must mean the Assyrians; for the names Syrian and Assyrian are often confounded. Whatever the practice may have been with the barbarian Syrian or Assyrian kings, it was the fashion with the Persians. Klotz quotes the passage of Plato from the first Alcibiades, p. 123: ἐπεὶ ποτ' ἐγὼ ἤκουσα ἀνδρὸς ἀξιόπιστου, &c. Xenophon, in his Anabasis, mentions certain villages, which the army came to, that were set apart for the girdle of Queen Parysatis (i. 4, 10).

Klotz refers to Böttiger's Sabina to show that these extravagant dames of antiquity could spend the income of a whole community on such ornaments as Cicero alludes to. This may be so; but it seems more reasonable to consider that these donations were made nominally for such and such purpose, not because a woman required the revenue of a whole district to keep her hair or head-gear in order. When Artaxerxes provided royally for the traitor Themistocles (Thucyd. i. 138), by giving him Magnesia as bread, Lampsacus as wine, and so forth, the Greek made something of his bread, for it amounted to fifty talents the year, rather more than he and his household would consume. See Athenaeus also, Lib. i. p. 29, ed. Casaub.

esse ducebat,] 'Sic Nannianus, nostri omnes dicebat' (Zumpt); and Cod. Vat. also. Zumpt has 'ducebat;' Klotz 'dicebat.' We can hardly suppose that Verres called himself King of Sicily, or that Cicero meant to say that he did.

pervagatum et pervulgatum est,] The reading of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has in his text 'Sicilia pervulgatum est.' In his Appendix, where he notices the readings of Cod. Vat., he tells us to read 'Sicilia pervagatum est.' It is rather doubtful if we ought to keep both words.

versus plurimi] It seems that Verres could not check the propensity to pasquidonis. Veniunt Herbitam duo praetoris aemuli non molesti, nades, in which the Romans have always indulged; for we may presume that the 'versus' were Roman rather than Greek, though I would not pretend to decide so important a question. They were written above the seat (tribunal) where the Praetor sat in court. Plutarch tells a like story of words being written on the seat of M. Junius Brutus, for another purpose, when he was Praetor (Brutus, c. 9). But the Sicilians had their songs about Pipa (Lib. 5. c. 31), and a taste for humour (De Or. ii. 54).

adumbratus,] Husband in name. It is a painter's term, but it does not mean to make a mere outline, though originally the word may have meant to take a likeness by means of a shadow. It seems sometimes to be used generally of a picture or likeness. So Aeschrio was the portrait or likeness of Pipa's husband; but he was not the real husband.

recidisset,] Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat. have 'resedisset,' which Klotz adopts. The common reading of the MSS. is 'redisset.'

liciti sunt] Here we have an instance of a community bidding for the 'decumae.' They went as high as they thought prudent. But Aeschrio, of course, outbid (suprajecit) them, for he knew that his wife's favour with the praetor would save him harmless. —'Suprajecit' is the reading of Lag. 42, and probably the true reading. See Zumpt's note. The common reading, and that of Cod. Vat., is 'supra adjecit.'—'et eo magis quod:' 'adeo magis quod:' Klotz, from Cod. Vat.

I have followed Zumpt in the numerals, for they are consistent.

de capite] 'From the total.' 'Caput' is used for any principal sum or amount. Thus it can signify a principal sum of money for which interest is paid: "quinas hic capiti mercedes exsecat," Hor. l Sat. ii. 14.

34. Hordei] It appears that in this instance, at least, the 'decumae' of barley were sold or let separately.

deduxerat] The common reading is 'qui ad istum deduxerat.' This woman is again mentioned (Lib. 5. c. 12. 31), and in the latter chapter as a married woman. Docimus, it appears, played the part of husband. Klotz has, from Cod. Vat., 'ad-

aemuli non molesti,] This is all to the same effect as what he has hinted in c. 33. Aeschrio and Docimus are represented as the rivals of Verres for the favours of Pipa and Tertia, but rivals who did not give him trouble. Cicero represents them as the agents (cognitores) of their wives, for, though the husbands had bought the 'decumae,' it was through the interests of their wives that they had made the bargain. Accordingly Cicero represents the women as the principals in the matter. This is said 'oratorie,' or 'accusatorie,' as Cicero sometimes terms it.

Ita . . . vectigalis] This is explained by c. 43: "omnes denique agros decumanos per triennium populo Romano ex parte decuma, C. Verri ex omni reliquo vectigales fuisse." They paid their 'decumae,' but that was not all. Verres made them give him money too.

35. L. Sulla.] The dictator, L. Cornelius Sulla, to whose yoke the Romans had submitted in a manner that would appear incredible, if it were not explained by the fact which Cicero points at, that a country which has long been distracted by civil commotion readily yields to a bold usurper. Zachariae has written a Life of Sulla, which is the work now usually referred to; but it is not impartial, nor always discriminating. Plutarch, after his fashion, has drawn a picture of this singular compound of sensuality, cruelty, and ability, in his Life of Sulla.

potuit ut nemo, illo invito, nec bona nec patriam nec vitam retinere posset: tantum animi habuit ad audaciam ut dicere in contione non dubitaret, bona civium Romanorum quum venderet, se praedam suam vendere. Ejus omnes res gestas non solum obtinemus, verum etiam propter majorum incommodorum et calamitatum metum publica auctoritate defendimus: unum hoc aliquot senatus consultis reprehensum, decretumque est ut quibus ille de capite dempsisset hi pecunias in aerarium referrent. Statuit senatus hoc, ne illi quidem esse licitum, cui concesserat omnia, a populo factarum quaesitarumque rerum summas imminuere. Illum viris fortissimis judicarunt patres conscripti remittere de summa non potuisse; te mulieri deterrimae recte remisisse senatores judicabunt? Ille, de quo legem populus Romanus jusserat ut ipsius voluntas ei posset esse pro lege, tamen in hoc uno genere, veterum religione legum, reprehenditur: tu qui omnibus legibus implicatus tenebare libidinem tibi tuam pro lege esse voluisti? In illo reprehenditur quod ex ea pecunia remiserit quam ipse quaesierat; tibi concedetur qui de capite vectigalium populi Romani remisisti?

XXXVI. Atque in hoc genere audaciae multo etiam impudentius in decumis Acestensium versatus est, quas quum addixisset in contione] Klotz refers to Cicero, De Off. ii. 8: "Est enim ausus dicere hasta posita quum bona in foro venderet et bonorum virorum et locupletium et certe civium, praedam se suam vendere." This insolent tyrant treated the property of proscribed Roman citizens as if it were booty taken from an enemy.

obtinemus,] 'Maintain all that he did,' in order to maintain tranquillity; for, after a violent revolution, it is unsafe and impossible, all at once at least, to restore a former state of things. Klotz quotes Quintilian (Inst. ix. 1. § 85), who refers to a lost oration of Cicero, De Liberis Proscriptorum, in which the same opinion is expressed: "sed ita legibus Sullae cohaerere statum civitatis affirmat ut his solutis stare ipse non possit." After the assassination of Caesar, the conspirators thought of rescinding his 'acta,' but through fear they did not make the attempt (Sueton. Caesar, c. 82).

de capite] Rightly explained by Zumpt to refer to the purchasers of the property of the proscribed, who, after agreeing to pay for it, prevailed on the dictator, Sulla, to remit the whole or part of the purchase-money. The words 'a populo factarum,' &c., mean that the senate would not consent to diminish the amount of the property which had been got and acquired by the Roman people. The property of the proscribed citizens was declared public, and accordingly the 'aerarium' was entitled to the full value of it.—'aerarium referrent.' Zumpt has 'aerarium deferrent' in his minor edition, and so it is in the English reprint; a somewhat singular mistake, but Zumpt candidly acknowledges his error in his larger edition. He took 'deferrent' from Lag. 42. 14. 48, "propter auctoritatem codicis illius." 'Referre in aerarium,' 'referre rationes,' and the like, are the usual expressions. 'Deferre' has a different meaning. See Forcellini. An instance of 'deferre' occurs in Lib. 2. c. 19: "ut quidquid caelati argenti fuit in illis bonis ad istum deferatur;" and there are various other examples of its use in these orations.

legem . . jusserat] The usual formula: 'populus Romanus jubet,' and 'jubere legem.' Orelli has retained the false reading 'lege,' which might be safely corrected, even if all the MSS. had it.

36. Acestensium] Orelli has 'Segestensium.' What the MSS. have does not appear quite clear. But no MS. has 'Acestensium,' which is Garatoni's emendation, if I understand Zumpt's note right. Pliny tantidem] Zumpt and Klotz have 'tantundem,' from Lag. 42 only. The common reading is 'tantidem.'

Sed si eripuerit,] Klotz, with Cod. Vat., omits 'sed.'

peculatus] See Lib. 1. c. 4 and 5, and the notes.

37. interpres,] Here the word has its sense of interpreter of languages. An interpreter was one of the 'apparitores' of a governor (Ad Div. xiii. 54). Diognetus is called 'Venereus apparitor,' c. 38. Caesar had interpreters with him in Gaul (Bell. Gall. i. 9).—'Fit interpres hic:' Zumpt.

medimnis DC.] There is great confusion in the MSS., as Zumpt observes, between 'modii' and 'medimna,' as the abbreviations mod. med. are easily confounded. The true reading here is 'medimnis,' as appears from the value put on the 'medimnum II millia.' See c. 39: "quum medimnum esset HS xv." Cicero is clearly speaking of 'medimna' here.

mediterraneis] This use of the word is explained by c. 83: "Henna est mediterranea maxime;" nearly in the centre of Sicily. See also Lib. 5. c. 27. It may be observed, that the application of this word to the Mediterranean Sea was not made by the Roman writers, and could not well be made consistently with the meaning of the word.

ante te praetorem] Cod. Vat. has 'te praetore,' which Klotz adopts. Zumpt says of 'te praetore,' which is the reading of Lag. 42, for he had not at that time seen the reading of Cod. Vat., "quod magnopere placeret, quippe conjunctum cum Verris infamia, si tot annis recte dici de tribus videretur posse." This is a mistaken view. The Liparenses, before the time of Verres, had to ransom their property from the pirates. Verres played the part of pirate to them.

Cicero appears to be speaking only of Lipare, now Lipari, the largest and the richest of the group of the Aeolian islands. It is about eighteen miles and a quarter in circuit, and contains at present about 12,000 persons. "The interior of the country forcibly recalls to the memory the 'agri Liparensis, miseri atque jejuni,' of Cicero; for it is singularly rugged and broken, presenting sterile hills of volcanic glass, porphyritic lava, pumice, and other vitrifications; many of which must be more than three thousand years old, and yet exhibit no symptoms whatever of decomposition.—There are also two large but unequal plains; the one to the northward is called Piano Grande, and the other Piano de' Conti: the soil of both is chiefly an argillaceous tufa, mixed with various decompositions; and, as they are well cultivated, they produce fine fruit, cotton, pulse, olives, and other vegetables, besides a three months' supply of corn for the island" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 265). These Aeolian islands would naturally attract pirates, for the people, though poor, had still something, and they could make no great resistance. Captain Smyth adds, that "the people are accounted expert throwers of stones; a valuable talent in an unarmed population, exposed to predatory excursions from pirates." But stones would not keep Verres away.

38. accedunt?] Klotz has 'accedant,' from Cod. Vat. 'Hoc auctore' means, when Diognetus sets such an example. 'Accedere ad vectigalia' signifies, to become farmers of the public revenue. The Thermitani (c. 42) gave Venuleius a handsome sum, 'ne accedat,' that he should not meddle with the contract. Communities (res publicae) often owned slaves, who were 'servi publici;' and Cicero considers the 'Venerei' of this class.

Zumpt, in his map, places it west of Tauromenium, on the river Onobalas, which flows on the north-eastern base of Aetna. Cod. Vat. has 'Atheniensibus,' another proof that it cannot always be followed.

daturi sunt.] 'Daturi sint:' Lag. 42 and Klotz; a doubtful case.

39. Amestratini] The name of the place is Amestratus. It seems likely enough that it is the Mytistraton of Diodorus (23. c. 9), and of Polybius (i. 24), where the name is written Μυτρίστρατον (ed. Bekker). Po-lybius speaks of it as a strong position. The position of Mistretta, where there are some ruins, in the interior south of Halesa, may be the site.

mandatum] 'If he had received instructions, he would have bought.' He was the agent or representative of the Amestratini, and Cicero uses the Roman word 'mandare,' which expresses the relation between principal and agent. The construction of the verb is with a dative: "Quum autem is cui recte mandaverim," &c. (Gaius, iii. 161); and further (§ 162): "in summa sciendum (est, quoties faciendum) aliquid gratis dederim, quo nomine, si mercedem statuissem, locatio et conductio contraheretur, mandati esse actionem; veluti si fulloni polienda curandave vestimenta aut sarcinatori sarcienda (dederim).

ipsum perveniret.] Klotz has 'perveniret,' from Lag. 42.—'ut lucri dec.:' Klotz.

Petrini,] This place, Petra, is placed on the road from Agrigentum to Panhormus, and its site is supposed to be Casal della Pietra.

40. Halicyenses,] See Lib. 2. c. 28. Halicyae was an 'immunis civitas' (c. 6). He says that the inhabitants 'dant decumas,' but that their lands were 'immunes;' by which he seems to mean that the Halicyenses would pay 'decumae' for any land, liable to 'decumae,' which they cultivated, but not for the lands of their own 'civitas.'

Segestam] Another 'civitas immunis.' See the note, Lib. 4. c. 33.

nobilis. Arabat] The text here seems somewhat uncertain. Klotz has 'nobilis

Segestano; nam commercium in eo agro nemini est; conductum habebat HS sex millibus: pro decuma, quum pulsatus a Venereo arator. Arabat is,' &c. The word 'arator' seems an idle addition. A man may be called 'illustris ac nobilis;' but to be called 'nobilis,' in respect of being an 'arator,' seems to have no meaning in it.

commercium] The meaning of Cicero may be collected from his words. Diocles was the lessee of lands in the 'ager Segestanus' (conductum habebat), and he belonged to Panhormus. He could not hold land as owner in the territory of Segesta, 'nam commercium in eo agro nemini est;' that is, the law of Segesta did not allow the citizens of other places to be the owners of land in the territory of Segesta.

Cicero uses a Roman word (commercium) which had a technical meaning. It is fully explained by Savigny: "'Commercium' primarily signifies the legal capacity to buy and sell; this technical expression, however, does not refer to the usual selling of daily life, but to the symbolical sale, which the Romans call Mancipatio (Ulpian, tit. 19. § 4, 5). But as Mancipatio has only a significant meaning as the oldest and most usual form of alienation of Roman ownership, the capacity to have this most complete kind of ownership is properly indicated by this term; consequently, also, it indicates the capacity of the In jure cessio, of Usucapio, and of the strict Vindicatio. Further developed, however, this technical expression comprises also the capacity to have Servitudes, which capacity, as well as ownership, is Juris Quiritium; further, the capacity to contract many kinds of obligations (Gaius, iii. 93, 94); finally, and most especially, the Testamenti Factio, that is, the fundamental condition of the capacity to make a testament or a codicil, to be named 'heres,' 'legatee,' or 'fidei commissarius,' and to be a witness to a testament'" (System, &c., ii. 27). This incapacity for any person not a Segestan to hold land in the territory of Segesta, does not appear to have been a rule imposed by the Romans, but a custom of this particular state. The Romans sometimes imposed these terms on conquered people, with the view of keeping them isolated and weak communities, or, at any rate, of preventing any close union among them. In Livy (8. c. 14) we read: "Ceteris Latinis populis connubia, commerciaque et concilia inter se ademerunt." The object was, to break the national unity of the Latini. Macedonia, after the Roman conquest, was divided into four regions: "pronuntiavit deinde, neque connubium neque commercium agrorum aedificiorumque inter se placere cuiquam extra fines regionis suae esse" (Liv. 45. c. 29). The effect of which was, that no inhabitant of one 'regio' could contract a lawful marriage with an inhabitant of another 'regio;' if a union was formed in the nature of marriage, it would not have the effect of a legal marriage. Further, no inhabitant of one region could in any way acquire the ownership of land or houses in another 'regio,' a provision that would be partly effected by the prohibition as to marriage; at least, in case of intestacy, there could be no claim by the children of such a prohibited marriage, for they would not be recognized as the offspring of a legal marriage. Such acquisition of land or houses, also, could not be obtained under a testament, or by purchase; that is, if we interpret this provision, as we perhaps ought to do, according to the meaning of the Roman term. Thus Macedonia was split up into four parts, completely disunited. It by no means follows that the inhabitants of one 'regio' could not live in another 'regio,' and carry on traffic; and perhaps they might hold land as occupiers or tenants, but not as owners.

'Commercium' is poorly explained in Forcellini, where explanations are generally very good and complete. As to the English Lexicons, the reader may judge for himself by looking at them.

There are some remarks on this passage by Zumpt and Klotz which seem to me worth noticing; not that the remarks are of any value, but they suggest the question as to the right method of interpretation and commenting. Zumpt observes that Cicero takes pains (laborat) to show that Diocles had no other reason for hiring the land, except that he could not buy it; but Zumpt is of opinion that the hiring was simulated on account of the legal impediments, and that there was a 'vera possessio agri maximi,' which I will not venture to translate. Now Cicero does not take any particular pains to prove that this man hired the land because he could not buy it. If he was so anxious to buy, why did he not go where he could buy? The man wanted to farm, that is clear; and we may suppose that he preferred the land of Segesta to buying or hiring land elsewhere. This is, however,

XLI. Hunc ordinem si dignitate antecellere non existimabas, ne hoc quidem sciebas, judicare? Antea quum equester ordo iudicaret, improbi et rapaces magistratus in provinciis inserviebant publicanis: ornabant eos qui in operis erant: quemcunque equitem Romanum in provincia viderant, beneficiis ac liberalitate prosequabantur: neque tantum illa res nocentibus proderat quantum obfuit of no great importance. But the assumption that he had bought in evasion of the law, contrary to the law, and contrary to what Cicero says, is a monstrous absurdity to broach, when we know nothing about the matter except what Cicero tells us; and he tells us that he had not bought the land, and could not buy it. If he bought it, we must assume that he paid for it; that he bought land, the title to which he could never maintain, even against the man who had sold it. Possibly, too, if the law was at all what it ought to be, in order to secure its object, the land might be forfeited to the 'civitas' as soon as it came into the pretended ownership of a person who could not hold it. But there is no end of the objections that may be urged to Zumpt's assumption, which is sufficiently answered by saying that it must be considered false till he can prove it to be true. Klotz says that he is of a different mind from Zumpt; he thinks that Diocles was merely a tenant; and we may observe that there is great weight in this remark, for this is precisely Cicero's statement, and we know no more about the thing than what he tells us. However, Klotz has a little secret of his own also. He says that Cicero merely gave this explanation, that no one might suppose that the words 'homo illustris et nobilis' were not to be taken in their strict sense, if Diocles was merely the tenant of the land. But why should Cicero be so anxious to save this gentleman's character for respectability, when he was only doing what other rich men did in Sicily? "Is quum arationes magnas conductas haberet, quod homines etiam locupletes, sicut ille est, in Sicilia facere consuerunt" (c. 21). But why did Cicero make the remark then? I can't tell. He might have omitted it, and then all we should have known was, that this man was a tenant-farmer, like many other rich Sicilians; and neither Zumpt, nor Klotz, nor I, should have made a note on the passage. However, Cicero has told us something worth knowing, though it has no direct bearing on the subject in hand; and nothing is so common as for a man to do this who has abundance of matter in him.

Id ex tabulis, &c.] 'Id ex ipsius tabulis:' Klotz, from Lag. 42. There is no rule to determine which is the genuine order. If the emphasis is placed on 'ipsius,' it should come first.

41. in operis] The governors paid great attention to those who were employed in the provinces (in operis erant) by the Publicani to collect their dues; and Cicero explains why. The collection of the 'vectigalia' in the provinces employed a great number of people, and gave a large patronage to the Publicani at Rome. To get a good place under them in the provinces, was like a good office under the powerful body which levies contributions on so large a part of Hindustan. Cicero (Pro Plancio, c. 19) says: "Jam ut ego doceo, gratiosum esse in sua tribu Plancium quod . . in operas plurimos patris auctoritate et gratia miserit." Plancio got employment for many of his 'tribules' in the provinces, through his father, who was a leading man among the Publicani. These persons showed their gratitude by voting for Cn. Plancius, when he was a candidate for the aedileship. Thus they helped one another for a consideration: the world went as it does now. Terence expresses it all in a few words: "Tradunt operas mutuas" (Ter. Phorm. ii. 3. 37).

multis, quum aliquid contra utilitatem ejus ordinis voluntatemque fecissent. Cassio, clarissimo et fortissimo viro, quum is eo ipso tempore, primo istius anno, consul esset, tanta improbitate usus est ut, quum ejus uxor, femina primaria, paternas arationes haberet in Leontino, frumentum omne decumanos auferre jusserit. Hunc tu in hac causa testem, Verres, habebis, quoniam qui habitarent] 'Nannianus et Lag. 42, haberen, quod Garatonius perite defendit' (Zumpt). The objection made to 'habitarent' is, that very few Roman senators could have dwelt (habitasse) in Sicily. But Cicero says 'aut . . . attigissent,' leaving his hearers to apply 'habitarent' to as many or as few as they pleased. Further, it is said, it is probable that many senators might have held lands there (habuisse agros vel praedia); but the reasons for the probability are not stated. The assertion that it is improbable is quite as good. Finally, 'haberen in Sicilia' is an odd phrase to express ownership of land in Sicily, and requires confirmation. It is not exactly like 'habet in nummis' (c. 86).

In hac tam misera atque iniqua conditione vitae, ne hoc quidem retinebimus, iudices, ut magistratibus nostris in obtinendo jure nostro ne contemptissimi ac despiciatissimi esse videamur?

XLII. Thermitani miserunt qui decumas emerent agri sui. Magni sua putabant interesse publice potius quamvis magno emi quam in aliquem istius emissarium incidere. Appositus erat Venuleius quidam qui emeret. Is liceri non destitit: illi quoad videbatur ferri aliquo modo posse contenderunt: postremo liceri destiterunt: addicitur Venuleio tritici medimnum VIII millibus. Legatus Pasidorus renuntiat. Quum omnibus hoc intolerandum videretur, tamen Venuleio dantur ne accedat tritici mod. VII et praeterea HS II. Ex quo facile apparet quae merces decumani, quae praetoris praeda esse videatur. Cedo Thermitanorum mihi literas et testimonium. TABULAE THERMITANORUM ET TESTIMONIUM. Imacharenses jam omni frumento ablato, jam omnibus injuriis tuis exinanitos, tributum facere miseros ac perditos coëgistis, ut Apronio darent HS xx millia. Recita decretum de tributis et publicum testimonium. SENATUS CONSULTUM DE TRIBUTO CONFERENDO. TESTIMONIUM IMACHARENSIUM. Hennenses, quum decumae venissent agri Hennensis mod. Nam per omnes civitates quae decumas debent percurrit oratio mea: et in hoc genere nunc, iudices, versor, non in quo singillatim aratores eversi bonis omnibus 42. qui—emerent] Another instance of a community proposing to purchase the 'decumae' of their territory. The 'civitas' would of course have to deliver as much corn as they agreed to give for the 'decumae'; but they would have no further trouble, and would thus escape the rapacity of the agents of Verres.

Pasidorus] Zumpt has 'Posidorus.' The common reading is 'Possidorus.' Zumpt thinks that 'Pasidorus' may be the man's name, and adds this remark: "sed quis tandem, ut dubitare desinamus, Lexicon Graecorum nominum conficiet, ad historiae fidem et grammaticam rationem necessarium." A diligent German, Dr. W. Pape, has responded to the wish of his countryman by publishing a Dictionary of Greek proper names; but, unluckily, I can't find in it either Pasidorus, or Posidorus, or Possidorus; nor the illustrious Perirrhaeus of Klotz (c. 31); nor yet Pyragrus: from which we may perhaps conclude that there is no sure authority for any of these names in Greek authors. We cannot expect to find every Sicilian name in extant Greek authorities.

sint, sed quae publice decumanis lucra data sint, ut aliquando ex eorum agris atque urbibus expleti atque saturati cum hoc cumulo quaestus decederent.

XLIII. Calactinis quamobrem imperasti anno tertio ut decumas agri sui, quas Calactae dare consueverant, Amestrati M. Caesio decumano darent, quod neque ante te praetorem illi fecerant, neque tu ipse hoc ita statueras antea per biennium? Theomnastus Syracusanus in agrum Mutycensem cur abs te immissus est? qui aratores ita vexavit ut illi in alteras decumas, id quod in aliis quoque civitatibus ostendam, triticum emere necessario propter inopiam cogerentur. Jam vero ex Hyblensium pactionibus intelligetis quae factae sunt cum decumano Cn. Sergio, sexies tantum quam quantum satum sit ablatum esse ab aratoribus. Recitationes ex literis publicis. Cognoscite pactiones Menaenorum cum Venereo servo. Recita ex literis publicis professiones sationum et pactiones Menaenorum. Patiemi, judices, ab sociis, ab aratoribus populi Romani, ab iis qui vobis laborant, vobis serviunt, qui ita plebem Romanam ab sese ali volunt ut sibi ac liberis suis

43. Calactae] Klotz writes 'Calacte,' which I suppose he intends for an ablative. The MS. readings vary, as usual in proper names of rare occurrence. The word appears to be formed by the union of the two words καλή ἀκτή, the name of a pleasant tract on the north coast of Sicily (Herod. vi. 22), east of Halesa. The Ethnic name 'Calactini' is certain (Diod. xii. 29).

Mutycensem] Cod. Nann. and Lag. 42 have 'Mutiensem;' the rest of the MSS., and the old editions, have 'Muticensem.' This may be the small place called Mutyca or Motuca, between Syracuse and Camarina, now Modica. If we read 'Mutyensem,' the place intended by Cicero may be Motya (Μοτύη), a considerable place near Lilybaeum, on a small island connected with the main land by a dyke (Diod. xiv. 52), now Isola di Mezzo; an old Phoenician settlement (Thucyd. vi. 2). But there are several reasons for supposing that this is not the place. Himilco removed the inhabitants (B.C. 397) to the site of Lilybaeum, and from that time we hear no more of it. Besides, such a place could hardly have a territory. It was a mere commercial post and stronghold; and, in fact, Motya was lost in Lilybaeum (now Marsala). There can, then, be no doubt that Mutyca is Modica. "The contéa of Modica is a county of about eighty thousand inhabitants, and possessing nearly a hundred and twenty thousand acres of land."—There is "a superior spirit of activity and industry among the natives, attended by greater affluence and comfort than any other agricultural part of Sicily displays, although it is not naturally so fertile as the rest" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 191).

ex Hyblensium pactionibus] The place is Hybla Major, so called, to distinguish it from a smaller Hybla, named Heraea, the site of which does not appear to be certain. Smyth places it at Caltagirone. Hybla Major was on the southern slope of Aetna, on the Symaethus; now Paterno, on the river Giaretta, according to some authorities.

qui ita . . . volunt] This is a most extravagant way of showing the fidelity and attachment of the Sicilians to Rome. There is considerable difficulty in translating this, which I remark for the benefit of those who may not discover the difficulty. 'Volunt' expresses 'will,' 'purpose,' and the like, not 'wish.' 'Ita' is related to 'ut,' but this relation is very difficult to express in English. The meaning is: "the Sicilians have a hearty good-will to maintain the Roman Plebes, and they ask for no better terms than to have enough left for the support of themselves and their children." It is ludicrous to us for an orator to represent these laborious cultivators of Sicily as working with hearty good-will to support the lazy population of Rome, and content if they could only have enough left to give them strength to go on working. Cicero is here alluding to the provisioning of Rome, which was a settled part of Roman policy. The state provided the grain, and sold it for less than the cost. The produce of the 'decumae' cost nothing, except probably the transport from the coast to Rome; and, as the state got this corn cheap, they could sell it cheap. Corn was also bought, as we learn from this oration, when there was scarcity. The distribution of corn gratis did not begin until after the date of this oration, as it is said; and the tribune Clodius has the credit of introducing this pestilent measure (B.C. 58). See the article Frumentariae Leges, in Smith's Dict. of Antiqs., and the note c. 70.

Sentio, judices, moderandum mihi esse jam orationi meae, fugiendamque vestram satietatem: non versabor in uno genere diutius, et ita cetera de oratione mea tollam ut tamen in causa relinquam. Audietis Agrigentinorum, fortissimorum virorum, diligentissimorum aratorum querimonias; cognoscetis Entellinorum, hominum summi laboris summaeque industriae, dolorem et injurias: Heracliensium, Gelensium, Soluntinorum incommoda proferentur: Catinensium, locupletissimorum hominum amicissimorumque, agros vexatos ab Apronio cognoscetis: Tyndaritanam, nobilissimam civitatem, Cephaloeditanam, Haluntinam, Apolloniensem, Enguinam, Capitinam perditas esse hac iniquitate decumarum intelligetis: Inensibus, Murgentinis, Assorinis, Elorinis, Ietinis nihil omnino relictum: Citarinos, Acherinos, parvarum civitatum homines, omnino abjectos esse ac perditos: omnes denique agros decumanos per triennium populo Romano ex parte decuma, C. Verri ex omni reliquo vectigales fuisse; et plerisque aratoribus nihil omnino

Catinensium,] The place is Catina. I have followed Zumpt in writing Catina, which appears to be the more usual Roman form of the name, though the Greek form is always Kατάνη. Catina was an ancient Chalcidian colony, founded (B.C. 730) by the people of the neighbouring city of Naxos, at the foot of Aetna. It is now Catania, a large city, which has often suffered from its vicinity to the great volcanic mountain.

Enguinam,] The Greek name of the place is Ἐγγυον or Ἐγγύιον. The authority of the MSS. is in favour of representing the γγ by gg, which may have been the Roman fashion sometimes. But it is conformable to the doctrine of the grammarians to write 'Enguina.' This was an old town of the Siceli, south of Halesa, with a famous temple of the Magna Mater. The remains are said to be near Gangi Vetere.

Elorus,] No various reading is noticed by Zumpt. The Greek form is Ἐλωρον or Ἐλωρος, whence we should expect the Latin form 'Helorus.' This town was near the mouth of the river Helorus, in a delightful country called 'Heloria Tempe' (Ovid, Fast. iv. 477). A road ran from Syracusae to Elorus.

Ietenses] 'Codd. omnes et edd. vulgares Letinis' (Zumpt). But there are no Letini, and Graevius supposed that the Ietini are meant whom Pliny calls Ietenses. The Ethnic name is Ἰετῖνοι, and the place is Ἰεταί (Thucyd. vii. 2, so the name should be read, perhaps; Steph. Byz. Ἰεταί, who makes the Ethnic name Ἰεταῖος).

Citarinos,] Zumpt's reading. 'Cetarinos:' Klotz. The name is uncertain.

decumanos] Here the 'decumani agri,' of which the tenths were due to Rome, are contrasted with 'agri vectigales.' These lands paid their 'decumae' to Rome; they were 'decumani' so far as this payment. But, as to the remaining nine-tenths, they were 'vectigales' to Verres, for he plundered them of what was left after the tenths were deducted.

XLIV. Duarum mihi civitatum reliquos feci agros, iudices, fere optimos ac nobilissimos, Aetnensem et Leontinum. Horum ego agrorum missos faciam quaestus triennii: unum annum eligam, quo facilius id quod institui explicare possim. Sumam annum tertium, quod et recentissimus est et ab isto ita administratus ut, quum se certe decessurum videret, non laboraret si aratorem in Sicilia nullum omnino esset relicturus. Agri Aetnensis et Leontini decumas agemus. Attendite, iudices, diligenter. Agri sunt feraces: annus tertius: decumanus Apronius. De Aetnensibus perpauca dicam; dixerunt enim ipsi priore actione publice. Memoria tenetis Artemidorum Aetnensem, legationis principem, publice dicere Apronium venisse Aetnam cum Venereis; vocasse ad se magistratus; imperasse ut in medio foro sibi lecti sternerentur; quotidie solitum esse non modo in publico sed etiam de publico convivari; quum in eis conviviiis symphonia caneret maximisque poculis ministraretur, retineri solitos esse aratores atque ab eis non modo per injuriam sed etiam per contumeliam tantum exprimi frumenti quantum Apronius imperasset. Audistis haec, iudices, quae decumas agemus.] Zumpt takes this to mean the same as 'de' with its case, but he finds no other like expression with the active form of 'ago.' It seems, however, as he observes, to express the same as the passive form 'aguntur decumae;' and he refers to "aguntur injuriae sociorum," Lib. 4. c. 51; and to "aguntur vectigalia populi Romani," Pro Leg. Man. c. 2.

44. Aetnensem] The town of Aetna (Αἷτρη, Thucyd. vi. 94) was founded by the ejected inhabitants of Catina (about B.C. 461). Hiero I. (B.C. 476) transplanted the inhabitants of Catina to Leontini, and settled five thousand Syracusans, and as many Peloponnesians at Catina (Diod. xi. 49). He gave the town the name of Aetna. (Pind. Pyth. i.) After Hiero's death, the new settlers were driven out by the combined Siceli and Syracusans (Diod. xi. 76; Strabo, p. 268), and they founded, about twelve miles north of Catina, a new city Aetna, which before this time was called Inessa. The old inhabitants of Catina finally, but after some time, got their city again, and restored to it the old name of Catina. The new town of Aetna kept its name, and is the place which Cicero means. The site does not appear to be certain.

ad se magistratus;] The MSS., except Lag. 42, have 'magistratum;' but the Sicilian towns had more than one 'magistratus.' Zumpt refers to c. 28, as proving that Agyrium had only one; but I don't see how that appears.

symphonia] This dissolute fellow had a band of music at his feast. 'Symphonia' is the nominative to 'caneret.' Cicero (Ad Div. xvi. 9) apparently alludes to Tiro having been at a merry meeting where there was music: "symphoniam Lysonis vellem vitasses." This word 'symphonia' was naturalized among the Romans. There was a Collegium, or association of Symphoniaci, as we see from the following inscription found at Rome in 1847, in a Columbarium:

DIS MANIBVS
COLLEGIO SYMPHONIA
CORVM QVI SACRIS PVB
LICIS PRAESTV SVNT QVIBVS
SENATVS C.C.C. PERMISIT E

nunc ego omnia praetereo et relinquo. Nihil de luxuria Apronii loquor, nihil de insolentia, nihil de singulari nequitia ac turpitudine: tantum de quaestu ac lucro dicam unius anni et unius agri, quo facilius vos conjecturam de triennio et de tota Sicilia facere possitis. Sed mihi Aetnensium brevis est ratio. Ipsi enim venerunt, ipsi publicas literas deportaverunt: docuerunt vos quid lucelli fecerit homo non malus, familiaris praetoris, Apronius. Id, quaeso, ex ipsorum testimonio cognoscite. Recita testimonium Aetnensium.

XLV. Quid ais? dic, dic, quaeso, clarius ut populus Romanus de suis vectigalibus, de suis aratoribus, de suis sociis atque amicis audiat. 'L. med., HS L.' Per deos immortales, unus ager uno anno trecenta millia modium tritici et praeterea HS L. lucri dat Apronio! tantone minoris decumae venierunt quam fuerunt, an, quum satis magno venissent, hic tantus tamen frumenti pecuniaeque numerus ab aratoribus per vim ablati est? Utrum enim horum dixeris, in eo culpa et crimen haerebit. Nam illud quidem non dices, quod utinam dicas, ad Apronium non pervenisse tantum. Ita te non modo publicis tenebo sed etiam privatis aratorum pactionibus ac literis, ut intelligas non te diligentiores in faciundis fuisse furtis quam me in deprehendendis. Hoc tu feres? hoc quisquam defendet? hoc hi, si aliter de te statuere voluerint, sustinebunt? Uno adventu, ex uno agro, Q. Apronium, praeter eam quam dixi pecuniam numeratam, ccc millia modium tritici lucri nomine sustulisse? Quid hoc Aetnenses soli dicunt? immo etiam Centuripini qui agri Aetnensis multo maximam partem possident; quorum legatis, de insolentia,] After which Klotz adds 'nihil de permissa ab isto licentia,' the authority for which is but indifferent.

brevis est ratio.] Compare the beginning of c. 46, which would be sufficient to show that the old reading 'oratio,' which Orelli and Klotz have, is not the true reading. But Lag. 42 has 'ratio.' Klotz translates his text thus: "I can be brief in what I say about the Aetnenses;" and adds, it is only necessary to rightly understand the genitive, which depends on 'oratio.' He compares Lib. 2. c. 69: "Eripiunt tibi istam orationem contemnendorum Siculorum atque aratorum statuæ illae equestres," which, of course, he would explain in the same way. Zumpt says of the reading 'Sed mihi . . oratio,'—"quæ dicendi ratio vix Latina potest haberi, Aetnensium pro de Aetnensibus." Klotz observes that a grammarian like Zumpt should not have allowed such a remark to escape him. Klotz may be right, and Zumpt wrong, for what I know, but I should like to have seen other instances produced besides the only one that Klotz refers to in Lib. 2. c. 69: "istam orationem contemnendorum Siculorum."

homo non malus,] Divin. c. 14: "homini minime malo."

45. me in deprehendendis.] All the MSS. and the older editions have 'reprehendendis.' The things opposed are 'committing theft,' and 'detecting;' and the word for detection is 'deprehendere.' Zumpt observes, "nam dicitur h. l. non de corrigendo, sed de inveniando." Klotz has 'reprehendendis.'

partem possident;] We cannot tell what technical signification 'possident' here has; whether these men were owners or tenants. He means to say that the largest part of the 'Aetnensis ager' was cultivated by Centuripini. They were the great farmers of Sicily, as this chapter shows: "Arant enim tota Sicilia fere Centuripini." He adds, "quod hominibus nobilissimis, Androni et Artemoni, senatus ea mandata dedit, quae publice ad civitatem ipsorum pertinebant; de iis injuriis, quas cives Centuripini non in suis sed in aliorum finibus acceperunt, senatus et populus Centuripinus legatos noluit mittere: ipsi aratores Centuripini, qui numerus est in Sicilia maximus hominum honestissimorum et locupletissimorum, tres legatos, cives suos, delegerunt, ut eorum testimonio non unius agri, sed prope totius Siciliae calamitates cognosceretis. Arant enim tota Sicilia fere Centuripini: et hoc in te graviores certioresque testes sunt, quod ceterae civitates suis solum incommodis commoventur, Centuripini, quod in omnium fere finibus possessiones habent, etiam ceterarum civitatum damna ac detrimenta senserunt.

XLVI. Verum, uti dixi, ratio certa est Aetnensium, et publicis et privatis literis consignata: meae diligentiae pensum magis in Leontino agro est exigendum, propter hanc causam quod ipsi Leontini publice non sane multum me adjuverunt: neque enim eos, isto praetore, hae decumanorum injuriae laeserunt; potius etiam, iudices, adjuverunt. Mirum fortasse hoc vobis aut incredibile videatur, in tantis aratorum incommodis Leontinos qui principes rei frumentariae fuerint expertes incommodorum atque injuriarum fuisse. Hoc causae est, iudices, quod in agro Leontino praeter unam Mnasistrati familiam glebam Leontinorum possidet nemo. Itaque Mnasistrati, hominis honestissimi atque optimi viri testimonium, iudices, audistis: ceteros Leontinos, quibus non modo Apronius in agris sed ne tempestas quidem ulla nocere potuit, exspectare nolite. Etenim non modo incommodi nihil ceperunt, sed etiam in Aproniani illis rapinis in quaestu sunt compendioque versati. Quapropter, quoniam me Leontina civitas atque legatio propter eam quam dixi causam defecit, mihimet ineunda ratio et via reperiunda est, qua ad Apronii quaestum sive adeo qua ad istius ingentem immanemque praedam possim pervenire. Agri Leontini decumae tertio anno venierunt tritici medimnum xxxvi, hoc est, tritici modium cc et xvi millibus. Magno, iudices, magno: neque enim hoc possum in omnium fere finibus possessiones habent;" which may mean that these enterprising agriculturists held land as owners in many parts of Sicily. There is no difficulty about giving 'possessiones' this meaning. (c. 46.) They certainly farmed as tenants, c. 21.

46. qui principes . . fuerint] 'Conjunctivum fuerint admodum multi codices, interque eos, cui soli plus paene tribuo quam ceteris omnibus, Lag. 42, habent pro vulg.

fuerunt' (Zumpt). Klotz has 'fuerint.' Orelli has 'fuerunt.' I have no doubt that 'fuerint' is right. It is easier to feel convinced of this, than to explain the reason to another.

compendioque versati.] Compare Lib. 2. c. 3: "quos illa . . cum quaestu compendioque dimittit."

negare. Itaque necesse est aut damnum aut certe non magnum lucrum fecisse decumanos. Hoc enim solet usu venire iis qui magno redemerunt. Quid si ostendo in hac una emptione lucri fieri tritici modium c? quid si cc? quid si ccc? quid si cccc millia? dubitabitis etiam cui ista tanta praeda quaesita sit? Iniquum me esse quispiam dicet qui ex lucri magnitudine conjecturam capiam furti atque praedae. Quid si doceo, iudices, eos qui cccc mod. lucri faciunt damnum facturos fuisse, si tua iniquitas, si tui ex cohorte recuperatores non intercederent; numquis poterit in tanto lucro tantaque iniquitate dubitare quin propter improbitatem tam magnos quaestus feceris, propter magnitudinem quaestus improbus esse volueris?

XLVII. Quomodo igitur hoc assequar, iudices, ut sciam quantum lucri factum sit? non ex Apronii tabulis quas ego quum conquirerem non inveni; et quum in jus ipsum eduxi, expressi ut conficere se tabulas negaret. Si mentiebatur, quamobrem removebat si hae tabulae nihil tibi erant offuturæ? si omnino nullas confecerat literas, ne id quidem satis significat illum non suum negotium gessisse? Ea est enim ratio decumanorum ut sine plurimis literis confici non possit: singula enim nomina aratorum et cum singulis pactiones decumanorum literis persequi et conficere necesse est. Jugera professi sunt omnes aratores imperio atque instituto tuo: non opinor quemquam minus esse professum quam quantum arasset, quum tot cruces, tot supplicia, tot ex cohorte recuperatores proponerentur. In jugero Leontini agri medimnum fere tritici seritur, perpetua atque aequabili satione: ager efficit cum octavo bene ut agatur; verum ut omnes dii adjuvent, cum

47. pactiones] 'Pactum,' 'pactio,' is the general Roman term for any agreement; and 'agreement' is the general and non-technical English word for any agreement, though the lawyers have tried to torture it into a technical word. The curious may see how they have done it, in Wain and Warlters, 5 East, 10. 'Pactio,' or 'pactum,' is also not a technical term. Many 'pacta' did not produce 'obligationes' in the Roman sense. "Pactum autem a pactione dicitur . . . Est autem pactio duorum pluriumve in idem placitum consensus:" Ulpian, Dig. 2. 14. 1.

The German 'Vertrag' is another instance of a general word for 'agreement.'

The 'pactiones' are the agreements made between the 'aratores' and the 'decumani.' All that the 'decumani' could demand was the 'decumae;' but many arrangements might be made between the payers and receivers for mutual convenience, or rather, mainly for the convenience of the receivers, for one seldom hears of any tax-paying arrangement made for the special ease of the payer. See c. 27, and the passage quoted from Cicero's letter to his brother Quintus. Instances of these 'pactiones' we have in Lib. 3. c. 14 and 57.

In jugero] 'In jugere,' the reading of Orelli, is bad. See c. 29.

As to the Roman 'jugerum,' and the 'medimnum,' see Excursus vi.; and also as to the produce raised on the land.

efficit cum octavo, &c.] "With a produce of eight medimna the land does well; but a produce of ten is an especial favour of heaven." Shortly after occurs the ex-decumo: quod si quando accidit, tum fit ut tantum decumae sit quantum severis, hoc est, ut quot jugera sint sata totidem medimna decumae debeantur. Hoc quum ita esset, primum illud dico, pluribus millibus medimnum venisse decumas agri Leontini quam quot millia jugerum sata essent in agro Leontino. Quodsi fieri non poterat ut plus quam decem medimna ex jugero exararent, medimnum autem ex jugero decumano dari oportebat, quum ager, id quod perraro evenit, cum decumo extulisset, quae erat ratio decumanis, si quidem decumae ac non bona venibant aratorum, ut pluribus aliquanto medimnis decumas emerent quam jugera erant sata? In Leontino jugerum subscriptio ac professio non est plus $\overline{\text{xxx}}$.

XLVIII. Decumae $\overline{\text{xxxvi}}$ medimnum venierunt. Erravit aut potius insanivit Apronius? Immo tum insanisset, si aratoribus id quod deberent licitum esset, et non quod Apronius imperasset necesse fuisset dare. Si ostendam minus tribus medimnis in jugerum neminem dedisse decumae, concedes, opinor, ut cum decumo fructus arationis perceptus sit, neminem minus tribus decumis pression 'cum decumo extulisset.' In the next chapter: "ut cum decumo fructus arationis perceptus sit;" "the crop got in with ten for one." The expression of Columella is the same: "nam frumenta majore quidem parte Italiae quando cum quarto responderint vix meminisse possumus" (iii. 3).

dari oportebat,] The true reading, furnished by Lag. 42, may be noticed, as Orelli has 'poterat,' which is obviously a blunder that has arisen from the proximity of the other 'poterat.'

venibant] The MSS. are not consistent in this form, for Zumpt observes that both here, and in c. 50, they all have 'veniebant.' However, it is now generally agreed that 'venibant' is the form for which there is best authority.

subscriptio, &c.] Lag. 42 has 'subscriptio professio,' which is specious, but probably not true. The omission of the 'et' in formulary language has been remarked on above, c. 30.—In place of 'plus $\overline{\text{xxx}}$,' Klotz has 'plus xxx milium,' which is the same thing.

48. Decumae $\overline{\text{xxxvi}}$] Cicero states his case clearly. There were 30,000 'jugera' returned as sown with corn. This was the 'professio' or return, which return the 'aratores' were obliged to make: "jugera professi sunt aratores imperio atque instituto tuo." The 'subscriptio' probably means the signature to the return, which signature shows by whom it was made, as a man signs his return to the Income Tax. The produce of the 'decumae' could not, in the most favourable seasons, be more than $\overline{\text{xxx}}$; but Apronius bought the 'decumae' for $\overline{\text{xxxvi}}$. He would, therefore, manifestly lose $\overline{\text{vi}}$ at least by his bargain, if the people had paid no more than what was due. However, Apronius made his bargain profitable, for he allowed poor people, as a special favour, to compound (decidere), by paying three medimna for each 'jugerum'; so that, if the produce was ten medimna, they paid three 'decumae,' three-tenths, in place of one. If it was less, so much the worse for them, as they paid three medimna out of a smaller amount. But even this, as it appears, was not the worst, for this rascal claimed as much as five medimna for each 'jugerum.'

'Ut cum decumo . . perceptus sit' means as above explained, 'though the produce should have been ten for one.'

Erravit aut] 'Aut' is found only in Lag. 42; but Zumpt and Klotz have preferred it. Orelli, who had not the collations of the Lag. MSS., has 'erravit an potius.' There is a difference; for 'an' is a part of the disjunctive form 'utrum—an,' which would here signify "Which was it? Did he make a mistake, or was he mad?" But Cicero's form of expression does not leave it in doubt; the answer must be "he was mad," that is, "he would have been mad, if," &c.

dedisse. Atque hoc in beneficii loco petitum est ab Apronio ut in jugera singula ternis medimnis decidere liceret. Nam quum a multis quaterna etiam quina exigerentur, multis autem non modo granum nullum sed ne paleae quidem ex omni fructu atque ex annuo labore relinquerentur, tum aratores Centuripini, qui numerus in agro Leontino maximus est, unum in locum convenerunt; hominem suae civitatis in primis honestum ac nobilem, Andronem Centuripinum, legarunt ad Apronium, eundem quem hoc tempore ad hoc iudicium legatum et testem Centuripina civitas misit, ut is apud eum causam aratorum ageret, ab eoque peteret ut ab aratoribus Centuripinis ne amplius in jugera singula quam terna medimna exigeret. Hoc vix ab Apronio in summo beneficio pro iis qui etiam tum incolumes erant impetratum est. Id quum impetrabatur, hoc videlicet impetrabatur ut pro singulis decumis ternas decumas dare liceret. Quodsi tua res non ageretur, a te potius postularent ne amplius quam singulas quam ab Apronio ut ne plus quam ternas decumas darent. Nunc, ut hoc tempore ea quae regie seu potius tyrannice statuit in aratores Apronius praetermittam, neque eos appellem a quibus omne frumentum eripuit, et quibus nihil non modo de fructu sed ne de bonis quidem suis reliqui fecit, ex hisce ternis medimnis, quod beneficii gratiaeque causa concessit, quid fiat cognoscite.

XLIX. Professio est agri Leontini ad iugerum $\overline{\text{xxx}}$. Haec sunt ad tritici medimnum $\overline{\text{xc}}$, id est, mod. $\overline{\text{dxl}}$: deductis tritici mod. $\overline{\text{ccxvi}}$, quanti decumae venierunt, reliqua sunt tritici $\overline{\text{cccxxiv}}$. Adde totius summae $\overline{\text{dxl}}$ millium modium tres quinquagesimas; fit tritici mod. $\overline{\text{xxxii cccc}}$: ab omnibus enim ternae praeterea quinquagesimae exigebantur: sunt haec jam ad $\overline{\text{ccclx}}$ mod. tritici. At ego $\overline{\text{cccc}}$ lucri facta esse dixeram: non enim duco in hac ratione eos quibus ternis medimnis non est licitum decidere. Verum ut hac ipsa ratione summam mei promissi compleam, ad singula medimna multi HS binos, multi HS singulos semis accessionis non modo granum nullum] Some MSS. have 'ullum,' contrary to usage. Zumpt refers to Lib. 4. c. 22: "non modo oppidum nullum," &c. It is certain that 'nullum' might be omitted. It is doubtful if 'ullum' would do. The 'nullum' is a kind of case of reduplicated or emphatic negation.

49. Professio] The reckoning in this chapter is clear enough as the numerals stand.

multi HS binos, &c.] The old reading, and that of Orelli, is 'multi HS duo, multi

HS quinque accessionis,' &c., to which there are two objections. First, the orator is clearly proceeding from the highest number, 'two,' to the lowest, 'one' (singulos nummos); and, therefore, 'one and a fraction' of some kind should intervene. Secondly, the distributive 'binos' should be used with 'singula;' at least, that is the usage of Cicero, I believe. I have noticed one instance (Lib. 2. c. 55), where, as the text stands, this is not the case. Zumpt says that Lag. 42 has the passage clearly as it cogebantur dare; qui minimum, singulos nummos. Minimum ut sequamur, quoniam $\overline{\text{xc}}$ med. duximus, accedant eo, novo pessimoque exemplo, HS xc millia. Hic mihi etiam dicere audebit magno se decumas vendidisse, quum ex eodem agro dimidio ipse plus abstulerit quam populo Romano miserit? $\overline{\text{ccxvi}}$ agri Leontini decumas vendidisti: si ex lege, magno; si ut lex esset libido tua, parvo; si ut quae dimidiaae essent decumae vocarentur, parvo vendidisti: multo enim pluris fructus annui Siciliae venire potuerunt, si id te senatus aut populus Romanus facere voluisset. Etenim saepe decumae tanti venierunt, quum lege Hieronica venirent, quanti nunc lege Verria venierunt. Cedo mihi C. Norbani decumas venditas. C. NORBANI DECUMAE VENDITAE AGRI LEONTINI. Atqui tum neque iudicium de modo jugerum dabatur, neque erat Artemidorus Cornelius recuperator, neque ab aratore magistratus Siculus tantum exigebat quantum decumanus ediderat; nec beneficium petebatur ab decumano ut in jugera singula ternis medimnis decidere liceret; nec nummorum accessionem cogebatur arator dare, nec ternas quinquagesimas frumenti addere: et tamen populo Romano magnus frumenti numerus mittebatur.

L. Quid vero istae sibi quinquagesimae, quid porro nummorum accessiones volunt? quo id jure atque adeo quo id potius more fecisti? Nummos dabat arator. Quomodo? aut unde? qui si largissimus esse vellet, cumulatione mensura uteretur, ut antea solebant facere in decumis, quum aequa lege et conditione venibant. Is nummum dabat. Unde? de frumento? quasi habuisset te praetore quod venderet. De vivo igitur aliquid erat resecandum ut esset unde Apronio ad illos fructus arationum hoc corollarium nummorum adderetur. Jam id porro utrum libentes an inviti dabant? Libentes? amabant, credo, Apronium. Inviti? qua re nisi vi et malo cogebantur? Jam iste homo amentissimus in stands in the text. He adds 'solet semis numeralibus, sine conjunctione postponi, quemadmodum significavimus in Gramm. § 87.' 'Semis' is indeclinable.

50. De vivo, &c.] The 'arator' could not make a present out of the corn that was left after he had paid his (nominal) 'decumae,' for he had nothing left. "Something must be carved out of the very life of him, in order to enable him to make a present to Apronius, after giving up his produce." There is a use of 'resecare' akin to this in Cicero, De Amicit. c. 5: "sed hoc primum sentio nisi in bonis amicitiam esse non posse; neque id ad vivum resecare, ut illi qui haec subtilius disserunt," &c. Zumpt compares Cicero, Pro Flacc. c. 37: "dat de lucro, nihil detrahit de vivo."

This expression is most apt; for, to take from a man a large part of his earnings as soon as he has got them, cuts to the very life of a people, and, in the end, checks industry.

corollarium] From 'corolla,' a diminutive of 'corona,' there is formed 'corollarium,' which Pliny defines to be small 'coronae,' made of thin plates of copper, gilt or silvered. Here it signifies something given to a man over that which is due. Comp. Lib. 4. c. 22.

vendundis decumis nummorum faciebat accessiones ad singulas decumas; neque multum; bina aut terna millia nummum addebat: fiunt per triennium HS D millia fortasse. Hoc neque exemplo cujusquam neque jure ullo fecit: neque eam pecuniam rettulit: neque hoc parvum crimen quemadmodum defensurus sit homo quisquam unquam excogitavit.

Quod quum ita sit, audes dicere te magno decumas vendidisse, quum sit perspicuum te bona fortunasque aratorum non populi Romani sed tui quaestus causa vendidisse? Ut si qui villicus ex eo fundo qui sestertia dena meritasset, excisis arboribus ac venditis, demptis tegulis, instrumento, pecore abalienato, domino xx millia nummum pro x miserit, sibi alia praeterea centum confecerit; primo dominus, ignarus incommodi sui, gaudeat, villicoque delectetur quod tanto plus sibi mercedis ex fundo reffectum sit; deinde, neque multum;] These words seem to refer to what he has just said; and 'no great amount,' 'that was not much,' ironically. For he goes on to say 'bina aut terna millia nummum addebat.'

HS D millia fortasse.] 'Fortasse' is so placed by Lag. 42. The common reading is 'fortasse HS,' &c. Zumpt cannot explain how Cicero made out this sum. 'Fortasse' must be taken to signify 'about.' P. Manutius explains it thus. There were seventy-two cities in Sicily, as Pliny says; and if he took 2000 from each for three years, that will make 432,000; and he took from some not 2000, but 3000, which will bring up the sum to a larger amount. But this, as Zumpt observes, is manifestly a false explanation, for many of the cities were 'vectigales,' not 'decumanae;' and some were 'immunes.' Cicero says (c. 51), "ager decumanus . . desertus est." The 'decumanae,' so far as appears from Cicero's enumeration, were only thirty-four. It seems to me that the words 'ad singulas decumas' may refer to all the 'decumae' which the 'civitates' paid, and not to the several regular 'decumae' of the several 'civitates;' though, as Zumpt observes, these 'alterae decumae' are treated of afterwards.

audes dicere te] 'Lag. 29, Paris. A. B., audes te dicere, collocatione verborum admodum eleganti' (Zumpt); but he does not adopt the order; Klotz does.

villicus] Written 'vilicus' by Klotz. The word clearly contains the same root as 'villa,' which may perhaps only be entitled to one 'l.' A 'villicus' was an overseer or manager of an estate, who was sometimes a slave, perhaps generally (Forcellini). The use of 'villicus' explains 'meritasset,' a term which might refer to the 'merces' or rent, but here it means, which had brought in, or 'earned,' as we might say, 'sestertia dena.' Zumpt observes that the reading of Lag. 42 is not 'HS dena,' but 'sestertia dena,' which, as he observes, is very seldom found in prose writers; and he only knows one other example in Cicero (Paradox. vi. 3), where 'sexcena sestertia' is the true reading, not 'sexcenta sestertia.'

instrumento,] This word occurs several times in these orations. Among the Romans it had a fixed legal meaning, for 'instrumentum' was often the subject of a legacy (Dig. 33. tit. 7: "De instructo vel instrumento legato"). Ulpian (Dig. 33. 7, 8) says: "in instrumento fundi ea esse quae fructus quaerendi, cogendi, conservandi gratia parata sint, Sabinus libris ad Vitellium evidenter enumerat;" and he then proceeds to explain the definition. The term, in its widest extent, might comprehend all the stock of the farm, slaves included. In some parts (quibusdam in regionibus) it had a wider meaning than in others; and the interpretation of the word was determined among the Romans by what we call the custom of the country. It may be observed that κατασκευή is used in the same, or nearly the same sense, as the Roman 'instrumentum;' but whether it has a strictly technical meaning, as 'instrumentum' had in Latin, I don't know.

refectum sit;] Lag. 42 has 'receptum sit,' which does not appear to be the right word. Zumpt quotes a like use of 'reficiatur,' from Paradoxa, vi. 1.

quum audierit eas res quibus fundi fructus et cultura continetur, amotas et venditas, summo supplicio villicum afficiat et secum male actum putet: item populus Romanus, quum audit, pluris decumas vendidisse C. Verrem quam innocentissimum hominem cui iste successit, C. Sacerdotem, putat se bonum in arationibus fructibusque suis habuisse custodem ac villicum; quum senserit istum omne instrumentum aratorum, omnia subsidia vectigalium vendidisse, omnem spem posteritatis avaritia sua sustulisse, arationes et agros vectigales vastasse atque exinanisse, ipsum maximos quaestus praedasque fecisse, intelliget secum actum esse pessime, istum autem summo supplicio dignum existimabit.

LI. Unde ergo hoc intelligi potest? ex hoc maxime quod ager decumanus provinciae Siciliae propter istius avaritiam desertus est. Neque id solum accidit uti minus multis jugis ararent si qui in agris remanserunt, sed etiam ut permulti locupletes homines, magni et navi aratores, agros latos ac fertiles desererent, totasque arationes derelinquerent. Id adeo sciri facillime potest ex literis publicis civitatum, propterea quod lege Hieronica numerus aratorum quotannis apud magistratus publice subscribitur. Recita tandem quot acceperit aratores agri Leontini Verres; LXXXIII: quot anno tertio profiteantur; XXXII: II et quinquaginta aratores ita video dejectos ut his ne vicarii quidem successerint. Quot aratores adveniente te fuerunt agri Mutycensis? videamus ex literis publicis. CLXXXVII. Quid anno tertio? LXXXVI. Centum et unum aratores unus ager istius injuria desiderat, atque adeo res publica, quoniam illa populi Romani vectigalia sunt, hunc tot patrumfamilias numerum desiderat et reposcit. Ager Herbitensis primo anno habuit aratores CCLII, tertio CXX: hinc CXXXII patresfamilias extorres profugerunt. Agyrinensis ager, quorum hominum! quam honestorum! quam locupletium! CCL aratores habuit primo anno praeturae tuae. Quid tertio anno? LXXX, quemadmodum legatos Agyrinenses recitare ex literis publicis audistis.

LII. Pro dii immortales, si ex provincia tota CLXX ejecisses, possesne severis iudicibus salvus esse? Unus ager Agyrinensis CLXX aratoribus inanior quum sit, vos conjecturam totius provinciae posteritatis] 'All hope for the future,' like 'in posteritatem,' c. 55.

51. uti minus, &c.] 'Uti ei minus,' &c.: Klotz, for which there is some authority; but it is a bad reading.

vicarii] This word here simply means one who takes the place of another, as in

Lib. 4. c. 37: "sucedam ego vicarius tuo muneri." Compare Horace, 3 Carm. xxiv. 15:

"Defunctumque laboribus Aequali recreat sorte vicarius."

nonne facietis? Atque hoc peraeque in omni agro decumano reperietis: quibus aliquid tamen reliqui fuerit ex magno patrimonio, eos in agris minore instrumento, minus multis jugis, remansisse, quod metuebant, si discessissent, ne reliquas fortunas omnes amitterent; quibus autem iste nihil reliqui quod perderent fecerat, eos plane non solum ex agris verum ex civitatibus suis profugisse. Illi ipsi qui remanserant, vix decuma pars aratorum, relicturi agros omnes erant, nisi ad eos Metellus Roma literas misisset, se decumas lege Hieronica venditum, et nisi ab iis hoc petivisset ut sererent quam plurimum; quod illi semper sui causa fecerant, quum eos nemo rogaret, quamdiu intelligebant sese sibi et populo Romano, non Verri et Apronio serere, impendere, laborare. Jam vero, iudices, si Siculorum fortunas negligitis, si quemadmodum socii populi Romani a magistratibus nostris tractentur non laboratis: at vos communem populi Romani causam suscipite atque defendite. Ejectos aratores esse dico, agros vectigales vexatos atque exinanitos a Verre, populatam vastatamque provinciam; haec omnia doceo literis civitatum, ostendo testimoniis et publicis honestissimarum civitatum et privatis primariorum virorum. Quid vultis amplius?

LIII. Num expectatis dum L. Metellus, is qui multos in istum testes imperio et potestate deterruit, idem absens de istius scelere, improbitate, audacia testimonium dicat? Non opinor. At is optime qui successit isti potuit cognoscere. Ita est: verum amicitia impeditur. At debet vos certiores facere quo pacto se habeat provincia. Debet: verumtamen non cogitur. Num quis in Verrem L. Metelli testimonium requirit? Nemo. Num quis postulat? Non opinor. Quid si testimonio L. Metelli ac literis haec omnia vera esse doceo? quid dicetis? utrum Metellum falsum scribere an amicum laedendi esse cupidum? an praetorem quemadmodum provincia afflicta sit nescire? Recita literas L. Metelli quas ad Cn. Pompeium et M. Crassum consules, quas ad M. Mummius praetorem, quas ad quaestores urbis misit. EPISTOLA L. METELLI. 'Decumas frumenti lege Hieronica vendidi.' Quum scribit se lege

52. nonne facietis?] 'Non facietis:' Orelli. But this is not the form of interrogation in this part of a sentence. Zumpt says: 'Vulgo non facietis, quae interrogandi forma in indignatione locum habet: in apodosi num habeat ignoro et dubito.' He refers to Lib. 2. c. 59, and Lib. 5. c. 32. — 'si discessissent,' from Lag. 42 only. The common reading is 'recessissent.'

sui causa] There is the better authority for this. Orelli has 'sua causa.'

53. afflicta sit] 'Nannianus et Lag. 42' (Zumpt). But he keeps 'affecta,' because he supposes that 'afflicta' should be used with 'quam,' and not with 'quemadmodum.' Klotz has 'adfflicta sit.'

quaestores urbis] 'Quaestores urbanos:' Klotz, which Nann. only has, but in the unusual order, 'urbanos quaestores.'

Hieronica vendidisse, quid scribit? ita se vendidisse ut omnes praeter Verrem. Quum scribit se lege Hieronica vendidisse, quid scribit? se per istum erepta Siculis majorum nostrorum beneficia, jus ipsorum, conditionem societatis, amicitiae, foederum, reddidisse. Dicit quanti cujusque agri decumas vendiderit: deinde quid scribit? 'Summa vi data est a me opera ut quam plurimo decumas venderem.' Cur igitur, Metelle, non ita magno vendidisti? quia desertas arationes, inanes agros, provinciam miseram perditamque offendisti. Quid id ipsum, quod satum est, qua ratione quisquam qui sereret inventus est? Recita. Literas ait se misisse et confirmasse, suam se interposuisse auctoritatem: tantummodo aratoribus Metellus obsides non dedit, se non ulla in re Verri similem futurum. At quid est tandem in quo se laborasse dicit? Recita. 'Ut aratores qui reliqui erant quamplurimum sererent.' Qui 'reliqui?' quid hoc est 'reliqui?' quo ex bello? qua ex vastitate? Quaenam in Sicilia tanta clades, aut quod bellum tam diuturnum, tam calamitosum, te praetore, versatum est ut is qui tibi successerit reliquos aratores collegisse et recreasse videatur?

LIV. Quum bellis Carthaginiensibus Sicilia vexata est, et post nostra patrumque memoria quum bis in ea provincia magnae fugitivorum copiae versatae sunt, tamen aratorum interitio facta nulla est. Tum sementi prohibita aut messe amissa fructus annuus interibat; tamen incolumis numerus manebat dominorum atque aratorum: tum, qui M. Laevino aut P. Rupilio aut M'. Aquillio praetores in eam provinciam successerant, aratores reliquos non tantummodo] This is the reading of Lag. 42 only, which Zumpt and Klotz have preferred, and apparently for good reasons. The common reading is 'tantum quod aratoribus,' &c. It is true that 'tantum quod . . non' occurs in Lib. 1. c. 45, but it is not used in the same way that 'tantum quod' must be understood here.

laborasse dicit?] 'Laborasse dicat:' Orelli. Lag. 42 has 'dicit.' The meaning of the two forms is not the same. Cicero asks, "What is that in which he says that he found a difficulty?" The other would mean, "What is there in which he says that he found a difficulty?" In Divin. c. 3, we have this form: "quid est . . in quo ego rei publicae plus hoc tempore prodesse possim?" See Lib. 4. c. 20, note on 'quid erat quod,' &c.

54. versatae sunt, tamen] Klotz reads 'versatae sunt: tum . . nulla est: tum sementi,' &c. I do not know what is the authority for this first 'tum' in place of 'tamen.'—'Sementi' is in Lag. 42 only; the other MSS. have 'semente.' The form 'sementi,' Zumpt observes, is used in Columella.

praetores] The old reading is 'praetoribus;' but the three men who have been named were either Consuls or Proconsuls in Sicily. The reading, 'praetoribus,' is merely a misinterpretation of the abbreviation Pr., and Zumpt observes that Lag. 42 has 'praetores' at full length. He suggests it as a matter of consideration, whether 'in eam provinciam' should be changed into 'in ea provincia.'

As to M. Valerius Laevinus, see Livy, Lib. 26. c. 40, and Lib. 27. c. 5. He was in Sicily, as consul, B.C. 210, and tranquilized the island after the capture of Agrigentum.

The inscription in Gruter (150. 7), and in Orelli's Inscript. Lat. Sel. ii. 71, referred colligebant. Tantone plus Verres cum Apronio provinciae Siciliae calamitatis importavit quam aut Hasdrubal cum Poenorum exercitu, aut Athenio cum fugitivorum maximis copiis, ut temporibus illis simul atque hostis superatus esset ager araretur omnis, neque aratori praetor per literas supplicaret, neque eum praesens oraret ut quam plurimum sereret; nunc autem ne post abitum quidem hujus importunissimae pestis quisquam reperiretur qui sua voluntate araret, pauci essent reliqui qui L. Metelli auctoritate in agros atque ad suum larem familiarem redirent? His te literis, homo audacissime atque amentissime, jugulatum esse non sentis? non vides, quum is qui tibi successit aratores reliquos appellet, hoc eum diserte scribere, reliquos hos esse, non ex bello neque ex aliqua hujusmodi calamitate, sed ex tuo scelere, importunitate, avaritia, crudelitate? Recita cetera. 'Tamen pro eo ut temporis difficultas aratorumque penuria tulit.' 'Aratorum,' inquit, 'penuria.' Si ego accusator toties de re eadem dicerem, vererer ne animos vestros offenderem, iudices. Clamat Metellus, 'Nisi literas misissem:' non est satis: 'Nisi praesens confirmassem:' ne id quidem satis est: 'Reliquos,' inquit, 'aratores.' Reliquos! prope lugubri verbo calamitatem provinciae Siciliae significat: addit, 'Aratorum penuria.'

LV. Expectate etiam, iudices, expectate, si potestis, auctoritatem accusationis meae. Dico aratores istius avaritia ejectos, scribit Metellus, 'reliquos' ab se esse confirmatos. Dico agros relictos arationesque desertas esse: scribit Metellus, aratorum esse 'penuriam.' Hoc quum scribit, illud ostendit, dejectos, ejectos, fortunis omnibus expulsos esse populi Romani socios atque amicos. Quibus si qua calamitas propter istum, salvis vectigalibus nostris, accidisset, animadvertere tamen in eum vos oportebat; praesertim quum ea lege judicaretis quae sociorum causa esset constituta:

to by Klotz, begins thus: M. AQUILIUS M. F. GALLVS. PROC. . . ET EIDEM PRAETOR IN SICILIA, &c. But it is hard to say what is the value of this inscription. Klotz says that he was Proconsul, and accordingly he calls himself so, for this inscription professes to be made by himself, but he appears, with reference to his administration of Sicily, to have called himself Praetor. Klotz refers to the case of Bibulus (Cic. Ad Div. ii. 17), who is called Praetor of Syria, though he had been consul. See the note of P. Manutius on this passage of Cicero, and Ernesti, Clavis Cic.

quum is . . . appellet,] 'Quum is . . . appellat:' Klotz. Zumpt says that all the MSS. have 'appellet.' It is one of those cases in which either mood may be used, for the meaning may be, "Don't you see when he speaks (appellat) of the rest?" or "Don't you see in that he speaks (appellet) of the rest?" &c.

pro eo ut] Servius Sulpicius, in a letter to Cicero (Ad Div. iv. 5), has the expression 'pro eo ac debui.'

55. auctoritatem] 'The evidence.' See the Index, 'auctor.'

ejectos,] Zumpt omits 'ejectos' on the authority of Lag. 42; and he has the passage thus: 'dejectos fortunis omnibus, expulsos,' &c.—'animum advertere:' Lag. 42, and Klotz.

quum vero perditis profligatisque sociis, vectigalia populi Romani sint deminuta, res frumentaria, commeatus, copiae, salus urbis atque exercituum nostrorum in posteritatem istius avaritia interierit; saltem populi Romani commoda respicite, si sociis fidelissimis prospicere non laboratis. Atque ut intelligatis ab isto prae lucro praedaeque praesenti nec vectigalium nec posteritatis habitam esse rationem, cognoscite quid ad extremum scribat Metellus. 'In reliquum tamen tempus vectigalibus prospexi.' In reliquum tempus ait se vectigalibus prospexisse. Non scriberet se vectigalibus prospexisse, nisi hoc vellet ostendere te vectigalia perdidisse. Quid enim erat quod vectigalibus prospiceret Metellus in decumis et in tota re frumentaria, si iste non vectigalia populi Romani quaestu suo pervertisset? Atque ipse Metellus, qui vectigalibus prospicit, qui reliquos aratores colligit, quid assequitur nisi hoc, ut arent si qui possunt quibus aratrum saltem aliquod satelles istius Apronius reliquum fecit, qui tamen in agris spe atque expectatione Metelli remanserunt? Quid ceteri Siculi? quid ille maximus numerus aratorum, qui non modo ex agris ejecti sunt, sed etiam ex civitatibus suis, ex provincia denique bonis fortunisque omnibus ereptis profugerunt? qua ratione ii revocabuntur? quot praetorum innocentia sapientiaque opus est ut illa aratorum multitudo aliquando in suis agris ac sedibus collocetur?

LVI. Ac ne miremini tantam multitudinem profugisse quantam ex literis publicis aratorumque professionibus cognovistis, scitote tantam acerbicatem istius, tantum scelus in aratores fuisse,—incredibile dictu est, iudices, sed et factum et tota Sicilia pervulgatum, deminuta,] 'Lag. 42 et vi deteriores cum Paris. C. editionesque veteres diminuta' (Zumpt). He assents to Oudendorp's remark (Ad Suetonii Caesarem, c. 5), that there is both 'deminuo' and 'diminuo'; and this may be readily admitted, for we have 'describo,' 'discribo'; 'dejicio,' 'disjicio'; and many other like pairs. 'Deminuo,' according to Oudendorp, applies to a thing from which something is taken; 'diminuo,' to a thing that is destroyed by the dissolution of the parts. If this is so, we ought perhaps to say 'deminutio capitis,' and not 'diminutio capitis;' but this matter is still unsettled. Savigny observes: "in the MSS. there occur two modes of writing this word, 'deminutio' and 'diminutio.'" Hugo is decidedly in favour of the latter." Savigny is of opinion that the Romans wrote the word both ways (System, &c., ii. p. 61, note).

saltem . . si] Whatever 'saltem' may mean, Cicero often expresses the same notion that he has here by the formula 'si—at,' as in c. 52: "Si Siculorum . . : at vos," &c. Further on in this chapter: "quibus aratrum saltem," 'saltem' is used there as Cicero often uses 'tamen.'

quaestu suo] Zumpt has 'suo quaestu,' from Lag. 42, which some may prefer.—'aratores collegit:' Klotz.

56. pervulgatum,] Zumpt and Klotz write 'pervagata,' on the authority of Lag. 42 only. Zumpt says that it is not Latin to apply 'pervulgata,' or hardly Latin (verum pervulgata Latine non fere dicuntur), to things which are known to all, but to things that are practised by or are in use by all; 'nec pervulgamus notitiae causa, sed ut alii vulgo utantur.' "Therefore," he says, "if we read 'pervulgatum,' we must understand that the 'aratores' hanged them-

—ut homines propter injurias licentiamque decumanorum mortem sibi ipsi consciverint. Centuripinum Dioclem, hominem locupletem, suspendisse se constat, quo die sit ei nuntiatum Apronium decumas redemisse. Tyracinum, principem civitatis, eadem ratione mortem oppetisse dixit apud vos homo nobilissimus, Archonidas Helorinus, quum audisset tantum decumanum professum esse ex edicto istius sibi deberi quantum ille bonis suis omnibus efficere non posset. Haec tu, tametsi omnium hominum dissolutissimus crudelissimusque semper fuisti, tamen nunquam perpeterere, propterea quod ille gemitus luctusque provinciae ad tui capitis periculum pertinebat; non, inquam, perpeterere ut homines injuriae tuae remedium morte ac suspendio quaererent, nisi ea res ad quaestum et ad praedam tuam pertineret. Quid illud perpeterere? Attendite, iudices; omnibus enim nervis mihi contendendum est, atque in hoc elaborandum ut omnes intelligant, quam improbam, quam manifestam, quam confessam rem pecunia redimere conetur. Grave crimen est hoc, et vehemens, et post hominum memoriam judiciorum de pecuniis repetundis constituta gravissimum, praetorem socios habuisse decumanos.

LVII. Non hoc nunc primum audit privatus de inimico, reus ab accusatore: jam antea in sella sedens praetor, quum provinciam Siciliam obtineret, quum ab omnibus non solum id quod commune est propter imperium, sed etiam id quod istius praecipuum est propter crudelitatem metueretur, millies audivit, quum ejus animum ad persequendum non negligentia tardaret, sed conscientia sceleris avaritiaeque suae refrenaret. Loquebantur enim decumani palam, et praeter ceteros is qui apud istum plurimum poterat maximosque selves all over Sicily." Cicero hardly means to say this: he means to say, that the thing was notorious all over Sicily. Zumpt even thinks that 'cupiditate illa . . . pervagata' (Lib. 2. c. 34) may also be understood of the notoriety of the greediness of Verres; an explanation, I think, which will not generally be received. He refers to 'pervagatum est,' in Lib. 4. c. 28. In Lib. 2. c. 42, I have followed Zumpt in writing 'promulgata' for 'pervulgata;' but in that passage 'promulgata' is the appropriate word. But one may doubt whether the difference of meaning between 'pervulgata' and 'provulgata,' or 'promulgata,' is so great as Zumpt makes it.

Quid illud perpeterere?] 'Quid? illud paterere?' Zumpt. He says of 'paterere:' 'ex Lag. 42, pro perpeterere, quod nimis

contendendum, &c.] This word is from Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'mihi nervis connitendum.'—'elaborandum,' in place of 'laborandum,' is also due to Cod. Vat.

confessam rem] This is one of the so-called deponent verbs, of which the participles are sometimes used in a passive sense. 'Adeptus' is another, as in De Sen. c. 2, where the common reading is 'eandem accusaret adeptam.' In Lib. 2. c. 42, 'testata' occurs.

57. privatus de inimico, &c.] This means 'from his enemy.' But Cicero uses 'ab accusatore,' as if, as Zumpt remarks, 'ab' expressed a more direct purpose in him who speaks, and 'de' a less direct or formal communication.

agros populabatur, Apronius, perparvum ex illis magnis lucris ad se pervenire; praetorem esse socium. Hoc quum palam decumani tota provincia loquerentur tuumque nomen in re tam turpi nefariaeque interponerent, nihilne tibi venit in mentem existimationi tuae consulere, nihil denique capiti ac fortunis tuis providere? quum tui nominis terror in auribus animisque aratorum versaretur, quum decumani aratoribus ad pactiones faciendas non suam vim sed tuum scelus ac nomen opponerent. Ecquod iudicium Romae tam dissolutum, tam perditum, tam nummarium fore putasti, quo ex iudicio te ulla salus servare posset, quum planum fieret decumis contra instituta, leges, consuetudinemque omnium venditis, in aratorum bonis fortunisque diripiendis decumanos dictitasse tuas esse partes, tuam rem, tuam praedam, idque te tacuisse, et, quum dissimulare non posses, potuisse tamen perpeti et perferre, quod magnitudo lucri obscuraret periculi magnitudinem, plusque aliquanto apud te pecuniae cupiditas quam iudicii metus posset? Esto: cetera negare non potes: ne illud quidem tibi reliquum fecisti ut hoc posses dicere, nihil te eorum audisse, nihil ad tuas aures de infamia tua pervenisse. Querebantur cum luctu et gemitu aratores: tu id nesciebas? Fremebat tota provincia: nemo id tibi renuntiabat? Romae querimoniae de tuis injuriis conventusque habebantur: ignorabas haec? ignorabas haec omnia? Quid quum palam Syracusis te audiente maximo conventu L. Rubrius Q. Apronium sponcione laccessivit, Ni Apronius dictitaret te sibi in decumis esse socium, haec te vox non perculit? non perturbavit? non ut capiti et fortunis tuis prospiceres excitavit? Tacuisti: sedasti etiam lites illorum, et sponsio illa ne fieret laborasti.

LVIII. Pro dii immortales, hoc aut innocens homo perpeti potuisset, aut quamvis nocens, qui modo iudicia Romae fore putaret, non aliqua simulatione existimationi se hominum venditasset?

nummarium] 'Corrupt,' 'accessible to bribes.' Cicero has the expression (Ad Att. i. 16): 'nummariis iudiciis.'

ulla salus] Salus was a goddess, and she had a temple (Liv. ix. 43; x. 1). The similar passage in Terence is referred to by Hotmann:

———"ipsa si cupiat Salus, Servare prorsus non potest hanc familiam."
Adelph. iv. 7. 43.

Ni . . dictitaret . . socium] Klotz writes these words in capitals, as if they were the words of the Sponsio; and he has them in this order: 'Ni Apronius dictitaret te sibi in decumis esse socium.' The exact words of the Sponsio are given in c. 59. See Excursus v.

58. non aliqua, &c.] 'Codd. non aliqua re simul. populi Rom. existimationi se hominum, item sic editiones veteres, et praeterea vendicasset s. vindicasset. Victor.' (Zumpt.) Manutius struck out 'populi Rom.;' but he kept 'vindicasset.' Gruter first gave the text as it stands in Zumpt's edition and in this. Klotz has 'non aliqua re, simulatione praetoris,' &c., which I don't understand. The reading is very uncertain. 'Venditare se' is explained by Forcellini as equivalent to 'ostentare,' 'to make a show or display.'

Quid est hoc? Sponsio fit de capite ac fortunis tuis: tu sedes et quiescis? non persequeris? non perseveras? non perquiris cui dixerit Apronius, quis audierit, unde hoc natum, quemadmodum prolatum sit? Si tibi aliquis ad aurem accessisset et dixisset, Apronium dictitare te sibi esse socium, commoveri te oportuit, evocare Apronium, nec illum ante tibi satisfacere quam tu omnium existimationi satisfacisses. Quum vero in foro celeberrimo, tanta frequentia, hoc, verbo ac simulatione, Apronio, re vera, tibi objectum esset, tu unquam tantam plagam tacitus accipere potuisses, nisi hoc ita statuisses in re tam manifesta quidquid dixisses te deterius esse facturum? Quaestores, legatos, praefectos, tribunos suos multi missos fecerunt et de provincia decedere jusserunt, quod illorum culpa se minus commode audire arbitrarentur aut quod peccare ipsos aliqua in re judicarent; tu Apronium, hominem vix liberum, contaminatum, perditum, flagitiosum, qui non modo animum integrum sed ne animam quidem puram conservare potuisset, eum in tanto tuo dedecore profecto ne verbo quidem graviore appellasses, neque apud te tam sancta religio societatis fuisset ut tui capitis periculum negligeres, nisi rem tam notam esse omnibus et tam manifestam videres.

tu sedes, &c.] If the reader will omit the notes of interrogation after 'quiescis' and the other words in this sentence, he will not miss them.

prolatum sit?] Here the word is used in its ordinary sense, 'to bring forward.' See Lib. 2. c. 30, where Klotz has 'pro-lato' for 'dilato' in a sense in which 'pro-lato' can also be used, as it appears from other passages in Cicero: Pro Muren. c. 13, 'prolatis rebus;' and Ad Att. xiv. 5, 'res prolatas.'

minus commode audire] The good report of the governor of a province, his good name, was a matter that concerned him nearly. Cicero says to his brother, when he was governor of Asia (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1): "ac si te ipse vehementius ad omnes partes bene audiendi excitaris." It appears from this passage that a governor could send away his 'quaestors' and others from the province.—'illorum culpa,' adopted by Zumpt from the better MSS. Orelli's reading is 'eorum culpa;' and 'eorum' is the proper word simply to express a reference to persons; but Cicero means to speak of 'these persons' emphatically. Again, Orelli has 'peccare illos;' but the best MSS. have 'peccare ipsos,' where 'ipsos' refers specially to the 'illos.' These are not slight matters in the text of Latin authors. The right use of the pronouns is one of the great niceties of the language.

animum] This scandalous abuse is in the style of the Roman orators. It is an unsavoury allusion to the foul breath of Apronius. 'Animus,' the intellectual and moral existence, is here contrasted with the breath, as in Juvenal (xv. 148) with the life:

—"indulsit communis conditor illis

ne verbo quidem, &c.] 'Locus difficilis,' says Zumpt. Manutius thought that 'non' should be inserted before 'profecto,' and Ernesti did it. But this cannot be justified. The explanation of Zumpt is the right one; nor is there any real difficulty, if the words 'ne verbo—graviore,' &c., are rightly understood. 'Appellare asperius,' or 'verbo graviore,' is 'to reprove.' The sense is this: "Now, with respect to you and Apronius, &c., you would not, in a matter so discreditable to yourself, have been satisfied even with giving him a reproof, nor, &c.;—you would not have spoken to him at all, not even in words of reproof; you would have sent him away." The position of 'tu Apronium' is one of the contrasts which are common in Latin.

LIX. Cum eodem Apronio postea P. Scandilius, eques Romanus, quem vos omnes nostis, eandem sponsionem de societate fecit quam Rubrius facere voluerat. Institit, oppressit, non remisit: facta est sponsio HS $\bar{v}$: coepit Scandilius recuperatores aut judicem postulare. Satisne vobis praetori improbo circumdati cancelli videntur in sua provincia, immo vero in sellá ac tribunali, ut aut de suo capite iudicium fieri patiatur praesens ac sedens, aut confiteatur se omnibus iudiciis convinci necesse esse? Sponsio est, NI TE APRONIUS SOCIUM IN DECUMIS ESSE DICAT. Provincia tua est: ades: abs te iudicium postulatur. Quid facis? quid decernis? Recuperatores dicis te daturum. Bene agis: tametsi qui tantis erunt cervicibus recuperatores qui audeant in provincia, quum praetor adsit, non solum contra voluntatem ejus sed etiam contra fortunas iudicare? Verum esto: manifesta res est: nemo est quin audisse se liquido diceret: locupletissimus quisque ac certissimus cancelli] 'Cancelli' (in Greek κυκλίδες, δρύφακτος) is an enclosure of wood, or a railing, or any thing of the kind, by which a place is enclosed and protected (Forcellini). Salmasius, who has a prodigious long note on 'Cancellarii' and 'Cancelli' (Hist. Aug. p. 483, ed. Paris, 1620), says: "sic κυκλίδες sunt proprie cancelli: οἱ ἐπὶ κυκλίδων, cancellarii: κυκλίδα Graeci τὴν τοῦ δικαστηρίου θύραν passim interpretantur. Latini tamen cancellos non tantum fores τοῦ δικαστηρίου, sed etiam omne conseptum appellant. Graeci quoque δρύφακτον et κυκλίδα saepe confundunt, et δρυφάκτους, καγγέλλους passim exponunt; nam δρύφακτοι, ut dixi, proprie sunt septa judicialium secretorum: hinc cancellorum septa vocat Ammianus Marcellinus, Lib. xxx. de advocatis: 'cum intra cancellorum venerint septa et agi coeperint alicujus fortuna vel salus.'" This will explain what the 'cancelli' are. 'Cancellarii' were door-keepers, who stood at the outer bounds or limits of the court (cancelli), in the later empire (Bethmann-Hollweg, Handbuch des Civilprozesses, &c., p. 190). Those who are curious may trace this name of Cancellarius from his humble duties of a door-keeper to his higher duties of Chancellor in modern times.

59. oppressit,] 'He kept close to him, he held him fast (oppressit), he would not let the man go.'

HS $\bar{v}$:] Most of the MSS. have 'HS v.' The horizontal line, which denotes thousands, is often omitted. The full expression is 'sestertium quinque millium.' See Lib. 5. c. 54.

Cicero says, "Don't you think that a wicked praetor was shut up close enough in his own province, I would say, on his judgment-seat and tribunal, when he must either in his own presence, and while sitting there, allow a matter to be heard, in which his own character was implicated, or must confess that he must of necessity be convicted in every trial?"

It is a metaphor, says Hotmann (circumdati cancelli), taken from wild beasts shut up in enclosures so that they cannot escape. But the metaphor is not wanted. Verres was so hemmed in, even in his own court, that a man would suppose he must do either one or the other thing. But Verres did neither.

ni te, &c.] There is another instance of this form in Lib. 5. c. 54. The Sponsio was in the form of a condition, and it commenced with 'Si' or 'Ni.'

tantis—cervicibus] 'With necks strong enough.' The expression occurs again in Lib. 5. c. 42.

locupletissimus] This word is sometimes applied to 'testes' and 'cognitores,' as an honourable epithet. Cicero says (Topic. c. 2): "quum lex assiduo vindicem assiduum esse jubeat, locupletem jubet locupleti: locuples enim est assiduus, ut ait Aelius, appellatus ab asse dando." 'Locuples' has accordingly a signification which implies some means or wealth; which is more clearly shown by another passage (Orat. Part. c. 34): "atque etiam si obscuri testes erunt aut tenues, dicendum erit non esse ex fortuna fidem ponderandam, et eos esse cujusque locupletissimos testes qui testis esset: nemo erat Sicilia tota quin sciret decumas esse praetoris; nemo quin audisset id Apronium dictitasse: praeterea conventus honestus Syracusis, multi equites Romani, viri primarii, ex qua copia recuperatores rejici oporteret qui aliter judicare nullo modo possent. Instat Scandilius poscere recuperatores. Tum iste homo innocens qui illam suspicionem levare atque ab se remove cuperet recuperatores dicit se de cohorte sua daturum.

Nam quid hic dicet? Sponsio facta est cum cognitore tuo Apronio de fortunis tuis omnibus, ni socium te sibi in decumis sese dictitaret. Exspectant omnes quantae tibi ea res curae sit, quemadmodum hominum existimationi te atque innocentiam tuam probari velis. Hic tu medicum et haruspitem et praeconem tuum recuperatores dabis, aut etiam illum ipsum quem tu in cohorte tua Cassianum judicem habebas, si qua res major esset, Papirium Potamonem, hominem severum, ex vetere illa equestri disciplina? Scandilius postulare de conventu recuperatores. Tum iste negat se de existimatione sua cuiquam nisi suis commissurum. Negotiatores sibi putant esse turpe, id forum sibi iniquum ejurare ubi negotientur. Praetor provinciam suam sibi totam iniquam ejurat.

id de quo agatur facillime scire possint." See also Cic. De Re Pub. ii. 22: "ut suffragia non in multitudinis sed in locupletium potestate essent." Comp. Verr. Lib. 2. c. 55: "locupletissimi cujusque census extenuarant, tenuissimi auxerant."

qui aliter] means that they could not decide differently from what was commonly reported and known, 'decumas esse praetoris.'—'rejici,' as explained in another place, is here equivalent to 'selected.'

60. avertentem] 'Averrentem,' the reading of the old MS. of Nannius, and a bad reading.

cognitore] He calls Apronius the 'cognitor' of Verres, though he was not really his 'cognitor.' But it is a way of saying that Verres was the principal, and Apronius was his agent.

Cassianum judicem] See c. 62.

iniquum ejurare] The plaintiff proposed a Judex (judicem tulit), and the Magistratus appointed him, if the defendant did not object. If he did object, it was in this form: 'ejuro, iniquus est' (Cic. De Or. ii. 70). The Romans also said 'ejurare iniquum,' 'to reject a judex as a partial man' (Philipp. xii. 7). If the defendant accepted the 'judex,' this was 'sumere judicem.' The 'rejectio,' it is said, applied when the Praetor named a certain number of persons, out of whom each party could reject or challenge a certain number; and the 'judices,' or 'recuperatores,' were named by the Praetor out of those who had not been challenged.—'iniquom ejurare:' Klotz.

The 'negotiatores,' says Cicero, think that it is a scandalous matter to refuse the jurisdiction of the forum, in which they carry on their business; but Verres refuses even the whole province. The number of 'recuperatores,' at least in Sicily, seems to have been three at this time.

O impudentiam singularem! Hic postulat se Romae absolvi qui in sua provincia judicavit absolvi se nullo modo posse, qui plus existimet apud lectissimos senatores pecuniam quam apud tres negotiatores metum valere? Scandilius vero negat sese apud Artemidorum recuperatorem verbum esse facturum: et tamen auget atque onerat te bonis conditionibus, si tu uti velis: si ex provincia Sicilia tota statuas idoneum judicem aut recuperatorem nullum posse reperiri, postulat abs te ut Romam rem rejicias. Hic enimvero tu exclamas, hominem improbum qui postulet ibi de tua existimatione iudicium fieri, ubi te invidiosum esse intelligat: negas te Romam rejecturum; negas de conventu recuperatores daturum: cohortem tuam proponis. Scandilius rem se totam relicturum dicit et suo tempore esse rediturum. Quid tu ibi tum? quid facis? Scandilium cogis—quid? sponsionem acceptam facere?

Hic postulat] Cod. Vat. has 'id postulat.' 'Id' is probably intended for 'is,' which Klotz has.

provincia judicavit] Zumpt has 'judicavit,' because Lag. 42 has 'judicaret.' Cod. Vat. has 'judicavit,' which is probably the true reading. Zumpt says 'conjunctivum requirit quod sequitur existimet;' but that is not so. If our MSS. may be trusted, Cicero uses subjunctives and indicatives in the same sentence, though the meaning of the two is not the same. The distinction is a nice one, easier felt than defined. Zumpt makes no difficulty about "qui se ipse . . . existimari vult, qui . . . appellatus sit," at the end of c. 62. Cicero uses indicatives and subjunctives in many cases in precisely the same form of sentence, but he does not mean the same thing by the two moods. In c. 55: "Atque Metellus, qui vectigalibus prospicit, . . . quid assequitur," &c.; and in c. 59: "Tum iste homo innocens qui illam suspicionem levare . . . cuperet."

idoneum judicem] Zumpt inserts 'alium,' from Lag. 42, before 'judicem.' Cod. Vat. omits 'alium.' If Verres could not find any 'judices' in Sicily whom he was satisfied with, he was asked to remit or refer the matter to Rome (ut Romam rem rejicias).

esse intelligat:] 'Intelligat' is Ernesti's emendation for 'intelligebat,' which is confirmed by Lag. 42. Cod. Vat. has 'intelligit,' manifestly a false reading, but Klotz takes it.

sponsionem acceptam facere?] 'Acceptam facere,' like 'missos facere' (c. 58) in form. But 'acceptum' or 'accepto facere' also means to acknowledge that a man has received a thing, as in Ulpian (Dig. 46. 4. 7): "accepta facis decem? ille respondit, facio."

Accordingly Zumpt explains the passage thus: "profiteri se pecuniam, de qua sponsio fuerit, accepisse, itaque omittere quidem causam, vicisse tamen. Qua re hominum expectationem de rebus in iudicio audiendis elusisset." If Verres had done this, he would have avoided the trial, it is true; but if the money had been paid by Apronius, or acknowledged to be received by Scandilius, this would have been a clear admission that Apronius said what he was charged with saying; and the guilt of Verres would have been as clear as it could have been made by the evidence of Apronius. The meaning of 'sponsionem acceptam facere' cannot be what Zumpt says. See p. 173.

But there is another objection to this interpretation of Zumpt. Cicero says that Verres did not compel Apronius, 'sponsionem acceptam facere;' and, by not doing this, he impudently disappointed the expectations of those in court, who were waiting to hear this curious affair. If, then, Verres had compelled Apronius 'sponsionem acceptam facere,' the expectation would not have been disappointed; the matter would have been heard. Therefore 'sponsionem acceptam facere' is something which, if done, would have been followed by a trial, would have satisfied people's expectations.

The interpretation of P. Manutius is right, which Forcellini (v. Acceptus) warns us against accepting. "Facere," says Manutius, "pro persequi. Quod, inquit, non facis: in quo tollis expectatum existimationis tuae iudicium; quia scire homines cupiebant quid de tua existimatione decerne-Impudenter tollis expectatum existimationis tuae iudicium: non facis. Quid ergo? Apronio permittis ut quos velit de cohorte sumat recuperatores? Indignum uni potius ex iniquis sumendi quam utrisque ex aequis rejiciendi fieri potestatem. Neutrum facis eorum. Quid ergo? estne aliquid quod improbius fieri possit? Est. Cogit enim Scandilium quinque illa millia nummum dare atque annumerare Apronio.

retur. Hoc igitur est in quo primum peccas, quod Scandilium non cogis litem persequi: alterum quod Apronio non permittis ut quos velit de tua cohorte recuperatores sumat." The explanation of Klotz is the same as that of Zumpt.

This explanation of Zumpt, which must be rejected by virtue of the very form of Cicero's argument, assumes that 'sponsionem' here means the money; and it may be admitted that 'sponsio' may have this meaning. But Cicero has used the word 'sponsio' before in the ordinary sense. Gaius (iv. 93), when he speaks of the 'sponsio,' terms the money the 'summa sponsionis.' But I do not rely on this, for, as already observed, 'sponsio' can be used in the sense of the money, which is the subject of the 'sponsio.'

utrisque] This word makes a difficulty, for it should be 'utrique.' Zumpt says that this is the only passage in Cicero where two persons are called 'utrisque' in the plural number. He cites from Livy, xxx. 8: "utraque cornua;" and xlii. 54: "utraque oppida;" and some instances from other writers.

Cogit enim Scandilium] Klotz has a note on this passage, in which he acts the part of the defendant of Verres, and shows his legal skill: "Since Scandilius would not accept the 'recuperatores' from among the Roman citizens, who had come with Verres into the province, whom Verres ('negat se de existimatione sua cuiquam nisi suis commissurum,' and 'cohortem proponis') expressly chose to name, it was quite equitable that he lost his wager, and was compelled to pay to Apronius the amount placed on the hazard. It is true that, with respect to that declaration, Scandilius may not have been so much in the wrong, but, according to strict law, he must lose his cause if he had not confidence enough to have the matter investigated before the 'judices' of Verres." Can any man in his senses suppose that Cicero would state a case against Verres in such terms that the obvious and only conclusion must be that Verres was quite in the right? It makes no matter that this speech was not delivered. Cicero was not so dull as to state a thing which he intended to be for him, in such a way that a modern commentator can declare that the statement is direct against him. Scandilius claimed the appointment of 'recuperatores' from the 'conventus,' in which he may have been right or wrong. Let it be either way. Verres would only appoint from his own 'cohors;' he would not trust his reputation to any other persons than those about him; not to a single man in all Sicily. We do not know enough probably of the mode of appointing 'recuperatores' to understand the whole matter; but we know that there was a 'rejectio' or challenge allowed of a certain number among those who were proposed. Whether Verres could legally propose his own 'cohors,' I don't know. Perhaps he could legally do this (c. 61, at the end), but it was not the practice of good governors at least. If, then, the 'praetor' acted according to strict law, he did not act conformably to the notion of right, for the question should have been tried by impartial persons. Scandilius, says Cicero, positively refused to have the matter tried by the 'recuperatores' of Verres. He resisted the authority of the court. Perhaps he was wrong in that. What then? What is the next step? He had in effect refused to exercise his challenge; we may even allow that he refused to have any thing to do with the appointment of the 'recuperatores.' Did that justify Verres in pronouncing against him? Can the German editor prove, that because he refused to acknowledge the 'recuperatores,' he must therefore be condemned by Verres, who, it must be remembered, had nothing to do with the matter beyond the appointment of the 'recuperatores?' Verres ought to have appointed the 'recuperatores,' or allowed them to be named by Apronius; that is, he ought to have appointed the 'recuperatores' in the way in which he declared to be the proper way, whatever way that was; and the trial ought to have proceeded before these 'recuperatores.' We are not bound to assume or admit that the 'recuperatores' were knaves; they might have turned out honest men; they might have decided for Scandilius, whether they were honest or dishonest; for who could tell what they would do until they had done it? It was their duty to pronounce the judgment; not the office of Verres. It was the office of Verres to see that the trial proceeded in due form; and he would not let the trial proceed (sponsiones . . ab ipso prohibitas judicari). It did not proceed in due form. Verres delivered judgment, which was not his function. All this is clearly stated or implied in Cicero. The proceeding of Verres was neither equitable nor legal; and the defence of it is altogether absurd.

LXI. Quid potuit elegantius facere praetor cupidus existimationis bonae, qui ab se omnem suspicionem propulsare, qui se eripere ex infamia cuperet? Adductus erat in sermonem, invidiam, vituperationem: dictitabat homo improbus atque impurus, Apronius, socium esse praetorem: venerat res in iudicium atque discrimen: potestas erat isti homini integro atque innocenti data ut, in Apronium quum animadvertisset, sese gravissima levaret infamia. Quid excogitat poenae? quid animadversionis in Apronium? Cogit Scandilium Apronio ob singularem improbitatem atque audaciam praedicationemque nefariae societatis HS $\bar{v}$ mercedis ac praemii dare. Quid interfuit, homo audacissime, utrum hoc decerneres an quod Apronius dictitabat tute de te confiterere ac dictitares? quem hominem, si qui pudor in te atque adeo si qui metus fuisset, sine supplicio dimittere non debuisti, hunc abs te sine praemio discedere

As authority goes further with some people than reason, I quote the following brief exposition from a learned jurist (Rudorff, Zeitschrift für Geschichtliche Rechtsw. xii. p. 153): "It was well known, by the statements of Apronius himself, that he was in partnership with Verres, and shared with him the unjust gains, for the getting of which Verres had lent him his official authority. Already, under the administration of Verres, this connexion between him and Apronius was talked about. P. Rubrius, and after him Scandilius, had challenged Apronius to a 'sponsio' upon this alleged partnership. Scandilius had compelled him to enter into a 'sponsio,' and Verres had only contrived to save himself from the damage with which he was threatened by this matter being brought to a hearing, by compelling Scandilius, without judgment, and wrongfully, to pay the amount of the 'restipulatio,' instead of appointing a 'judex' or impartial 'recuperatores,' or remitting the case to Rome."

Cicero says (c. 62): "attuli sponsiones ipso praesente factas de decumarum societate, ab ipso prohibitas judicari;" where 'de societate decumarum,' as in c. 61, means the alleged partnership of Apronius and Verres.

The truth of Cicero's whole statement is immaterial. But, as he states the case, Verres committed a monstrous act of illegality. It is almost inconceivable how some modern critics misunderstand what they read. They are so much occupied with their own notions, which are foreign to the matter, that they are quite unable to understand what their author says. Their object is that which is well described by one of the Delphin editors in his preface: to illustrate themselves first, and then their author.

61. elegantius] Compare Divin. c. 17: said ironically here.

HS $\bar{v}$] "Vulgo v millia, sed 'millia' in quatuor melioribus non est, proque eo in Paris. A. lineola inducta numero" (Zumpt). Klotz has, from Cod. Vat., 'HS 100 mercedis ac praemi nomine.' It might be supposed, from what Cicero says, that this five thousand (HS 100) was a different sum, because he adds 'mercedis ac praemi nomine,' but this appears to be only an oratorical embellishment.

confiterere] The reading of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'profiterere.' Cod. Vat. has also 'si qui pudor . . si quis metus,' which Klotz has. The reading 'ex hoc uno crimine' of Cod. Vat. seems better than 'uno crimine,' which Zumpt has.

ex — deportatum.] Klotz, from Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'de' and 'apportatum,' from Lag. 42. The MSS. generally have 'exportatum.' There is a great variety in the readings wherever 'asportare,' 'deportare,' 'exportare,' 'apportare,' come in question. One does not always see why one word is preferable to the other. 'Deportatum' seems to me the right word here, notwithstanding Zumpt's explanation of the difference between 'deportatum' and 'exportatum.'

provincia sua] 'Sua' is from Cod. Vat. Zumpt omits it, but remarks in the Appendix, 'Vat. ut vulgo fit addit sua.' Lag. 42 omits 'sua.'

62. non haberem;] 'Non habeam:' Zumpt, from Lag. 42.—Cicero generally says 'hos iudices.'

similibus] Cod. Vat. 'militibus,' which I only note to prove that no MS. can always be followed, not even Cod. Vat.

Quod si quis] Here Cod. Vat. has 'qui.' There is no consistency in these matters. Zumpt writes 'Quodsi quis,' which is a most vicious way of writing, as if 'si' were to be attached to 'quod;' whereas there is an emphasis on 'si.' Klotz writes 'Quod si qui sociorum,' &c.

posse ut de isto non severissime judicetur. Erit aliquis etiam qui haec omnia dissimulare ac negligere possit. Attuli sponsiones ipso praesente factas de decumarum societate, ab ipso prohibitas judicari: quid est quod possit quisquam manifestius hoc desiderare? Non dubito quin vobis satisfecerim, iudices; verumtamen progrediar longius: non mehercule quo vobis magis hoc persuadeatur quam jam persuasum esse confido, sed ut ille aliquando impudentiae suae finem faciat, aliquando desinat ea se putare posse emere, quae ipse semper habuit venalia, fidem, iusjurandum, veritatem, officium, religionem, desinant amici ejus ea dictitare, quae detrimento, maculae, invidiae, infamiae nobis omnibus esse possint. At qui amici! O miserum atque invidiosum offensumque paucorum culpa atque indignitate ordinem senatorium? Albam Aemilium sedentem in faucibus macelli loqui palam, vicisse Verrem, emptos habere iudices, alium HS cccc millibus, alium HS D, quem minimo, ccc.

Erit aliquis] This is equivalent to a supposition: 'Suppose there shall still be some one who can disregard and pay no attention to all these facts.' This form is more common with the second than the first future. To this supposed case, Cicero replies, "I have brought the 'sponsiones.'" He has evidence to which even such a careless person, as he supposes, must attend.

offensumque] "O wretched senatorian order, that has incurred all this odium and disgrace through the fault and unworthiness of a few." The whole order is represented as stumbling and floundering through the misconduct of some of its members. Compare Divin. c. 22: "si tantulum offensum titubatumque sit."

Albam Aemilium] P. Manutius collects from the preceding words that he was a senator. He bore a great name at least, that of Aemilius.

in faucibus macelli] Cicero (Pro P. Quintio, c. 6) has the same expression: "tum Naevius pueros circum amicos dimittit: ipse suos necessarios ab atriis Liciniis et a faucibus macelli corrogat." Heindorf, in his notes on the line of Horace, "Cum scurris fartor, cum Velabro omne Macellum (2 Sat. iii. 229), quotes Varro (De L. L. iv. 32). Varro, after speaking of the 'forum boarium, olitorium,' and others, adds, "haec omnia postquam contracta in unum locum quae ad victum pertinebant, et aedificatus locus, appellatum Macellum." Here all kinds of 'obsonia,' fish and flesh, were sold. (Comp. Plaut. Aulul. ii. 8. 3: "Venio ad Macellum:

rogito pisces. Indicant caros," &c.). We may suppose, then, that Aemilius was fond of good living, and a constant visitor to the Macellum, to see how prices were going, and what dainties were in the market. Juvenal says, Sat. xi. 9:

"Multos porro vides quos saepe elusus ad ipsum Creditor introitum solet expectare macelli."

Heinrich (Juvenal, v. 94) has a good note on Macellum. This great market was surrounded by a wall (maceria), and hence the name 'macellum.' Here all kinds of eatables were sold—the raw material, as well as things prepared by the Restaurateurs. It was a place where a man might dine (Ter. Eunuch. ii. 2. 25; Sueton. Caesar, c. 26). The word is accordingly used as a general name for the provision market, as in Suetonius (Tib. c. 34): "annonamque macelli senatus arbitrio quotannis temperandam;" the prices of provisions in the Macellum were to be regulated. There were Macella in other places besides Rome. Cicero applies the term 'fauces' to places situated in some narrow space, as to Corinth, on the isthmus (Forcellini, v. Fauces). The word 'faucibus' seems to refer to the position of this Macellum between higher grounds. Martial (ii. 17. ed. Schneid.) says: "Tonstrix Suburae faucibus sedet primis."

The old Subura was in such a spot. Becker, Handbuch, &c., i. 521; and p. 543, on the Macellum.

Atque ei quum responsum esset fieri non posse, multos testes esse dicturos, me praeterea causae non defuturum: Licet hercle, inquit, omnes omnia dicant: in illo, nisi ita res manifesta erit allata ut responderi nihil possit, vicimus. Bene agis, Alba: ad tuam veniam conditionem. Nihil putas valere in iudiciis conjecturam, nihil suspicionem, nihil ante actae vitae existimationem, nihil bonorum virorum testimonia, nihil civitatum auctoritates ac literas: res manifestas quaeris. Non quaero iudices Cassianos; veterem iudiciorum severitatem non requiro; vestram in hac re fidem, dignitatem, religionem in iudicando non imploro: Albam habebo iudicem, eum hominem, qui se ipse scurram improbissimum existimari vult, qui a scurris semper potius gladiator quam scurra appellatus sit; afferam rem ejusmodi in decumis ut Alba fateatur istum in re frumentaria et in bonis aratorum aperte palamque esse praedatum.

LXIII. Decumas agri Leontini magno dicis te vendidisse. Ostendi jam illud initio, non existimandum magno vendidisse eum qui verbo decumas vendiderit, re et conditione et lege et edicto et licentia decumanorum decumas aratoribus nullas reliquas fecerit. Etiam illud ostendi, vendidisse alios magno decumas agri Leontini ceterorumque agrorum, et lege Hieronica vendidisse, et pluris etiam quam te vendidisse; nec aratorem quemquam esse questum. Nec enim fuit quod quisquam queri posset quum lege aequissime scripta venirent; neque illud unquam aratoris interfuit quanti decumae Licet, &c.] Zumpt reads 'Licet hercle, inquit, omnes omnia dicant in illum: nisi,' &c. Orelli has the same. Hotmann altered 'in illo' into 'in illum,' from an old MS., as he says. All Zumpt's MSS., and the old editions, have 'in illo;' Lag. 42 has only 'illo.' I have kept the old reading, which Klotz also has.

Bene agis,] 'Bene ais:' Orelli; but the best MSS. have 'agis.' 'Ais' is not so likely to have been changed into 'agis,' as 'agis' into 'ais.'—'ante actae:' Zumpt omits 'ante,' on the authority of Lag. 42 only.

iudices Cassianos;] Act. i. c. 10: "L. Cassius ex familia quum ad ceteras res tum ad iudicandum severissima." Pro Sex. Roscio Amer. c. 30: "L. Cassius ille quem populus Romanus verissimum et sapientissimum iudicem putabat."

scurram] Heindorf, in his notes on Horace (1 Sat. v. 52), observes—'scurrae' were persons who, after an old Italian fashion, made it a profession to bandy jokes and sarcasms against one another at the tables of their rich fellow-citizens. A personage of exactly the same kind is the γελωτοποιός Philippus, who appears in this character in the Symposium of Xenophon. Yet the 'scurrae' originally may have been merely poor Roman citizens, without any landed property (Plaut. Trinum. i. 2. 165: "urbani assidui cives quos scurras vocant"), who attached themselves to richer people, and were maintained by them.—Horace, in the Satire above referred to, gives a sample of the 'scurrilitas' of a 'scurra.' This Alba was a very prince of 'scurrae.' His fellows called him a 'gladiator.' He was a man with whom you would not readily engage in a war of words. Finally, he patronized Verres in his difficulties. Probably he had eaten some of his dinners.

63. dicis te] From Lag. 42. Orelli has 'dicit se.'

scripta venirent;] 'Scripta venderent:' Klotz. There is authority for 'venderent,' but not the best.

venirent. Non enim ita est ut, si magno venierint, plus arator debeat; si parvo, minus: ut frumenta nata sunt, ita decumae veneunt: aratoris autem interest ita se frumenta habere ut decumae quam plurimo venire possint: dum arator ne plus decumam det, expedit ei decumam esse quam maximam. Verum, ut opinor, hoc esse vis caput defensionis tuae, magno te decumas vendidisse, agri vero Leontini qui plurimum efficit tritici modium ccxvi millibus. Si doceo pluris aliquanto potuisse vendere, neque his voluisse te addicere qui contra Apronium licerentur, et Apronio multo minoris quam aliis potueris vendere tradidisse, si hoc doceo, poteritne te ipse Alba, tuus antiquissimus non solum amicus verum etiam amator, absolvere?

LXIV. Dico equitem Romanum, hominem in primis honestum, Q. Minucium, cum sui similibus ad decumas agri Leontini tritici mod. non mille, non duo, non tria millia, sed ad unas unius agri decumas tritici modium triginta voluisse addere; ei potestatem emendi non esse factam ne res abiret ab Apronio. Negare hoc, nisi forte negare omnia constituisti, nullo modo potes: palam res gesta est, maximo conventu, Syracusis: testis est tota provincia propterea quod undique ad emendas decumas solent eo convenire. Quod sive fateris sive convinceris, quot et quam manifestis in rebus

decumas vendidisse, agri vero Leontini] After 'vendidisse,' Zumpt has 'atque aliorum quidem agrorum pro portione magno decumas vendidisse.' These words are in the second edition of Lambinus, and Zumpt has adopted them. Lambinus says that he has inserted them from an old MS. But he is evidently unworthy of credit, for he said in his first edition that the passage was mutilated, and that he had restored it according to the authority of an old MS.; and yet the first edition does not contain these words. In his second edition he makes the same remark about the mutilated state of the passage, and about the authority of this old MS., and then says that these words have been accidentally omitted by a copyist, who passed from one 'vendidisse' to the other, without noticing what lay between. His carelessness, as Zumpt observes, makes it impossible to know whether these words were in a MS. or not. They are hardly his own, I think. There seems to be something wanted, for the words 'agri vero Leontini' have a tacit reference to other 'agri.' We might read, in Cicero's own words above, 'decumas vendidisse ceterorum agrorum, agri vero Leontini;' but if we look back only a few lines, to the words 'vendidisse alios magno decumas agri Leontini ceterorumque agrorum,' it will appear that perhaps really nothing has been omitted.

As to the words 'pro portione,' Zumpt refers to a like use in Lib. 4. c. 21; Lib. 5. c. 21.

64. modium triginta] 'Modium xxx:' Klotz. The same thing is meant by the text, which is that of Zumpt, following Lag. 42.

manifestis in rebus] There seems to be no MS. authority for the 'in.' Klotz omits it. Zumpt says, 'teneri, quum significat convictum esse, peccatum addita praepositione in secum habet.' He refers to Lib. 1. c. 1, 'in rebus turpissimis,' &c.; Lib. 2. c. 59, 'quum in manifestissimo furto tenere;' and to some other passages. But in Lib. 3. c. 89, he has 'cum manifestis flagitiis tenebitur,' which he explains thus, 'cum ita tenebitur ut flagitia ejus manifesta sint.' I have no belief in many of these small distinctions of modern critics.

teneare non vides? Primum tuam rem illam et praedam fuisse: nam, ni ita esset, cur tu Apronium malebas, quem omnes tuum procuratorem in decumis, tuum negotium agere loquebantur, quam Minucium decumas agri Leontini sumere? Deinde immensum atque infinitum lucrum esse factum: nam si $\overline{\text{xxx}}$ tu commotus non esses, certe hoc idem lucri Minucius Apronio libenter dedisset, si ille accipere voluisset. Quantam igitur illi spem praedae propositam arbitramur fuisse, qui tantum praesens lucrum nulla opera insumpta contempserit atque despexerit? deinde ipse Minucius nunquam tanti habere voluisset, si decumas tu lege Hieronica venderes: sed quia tuis novis edictis et iniquissimis institutis plus aliquanto se quam decumas ablaturum videbat, idcirco longius progressus est. At Apronio semper plus etiam multo abs te permissum est quam quod edixeras. Quantum igitur quaestum putamus factum esse per eum cui quidvis licitum sit, quum tantum lucri voluerit addere is cui, si decumas emisset, idem non liceret? Postremo illa quidem certe tibi praecisa est defensio, in qua tu semper omnia tua furta atque flagitia latere posse arbitratus es, magno te decumas vendidisse, plebi Romanae consuluisse, annonae prospexisse. Non potest hoc dicere is qui negare non potest se unius agri decumas xxx millibus mod. minoris quam potuerit vendidisse; ut—etiam si tibi hoc concedam, Minucio te ideo non tuum procuratorem] 'Tuum procurare in decumis negotium loquebantur:' the common reading and that of Orelli. The additional words are from Lag. 42, 'quocum consentit Lambini codex.' Zumpt. Lambinus wished to have 'esse' after 'procuratorem.' Zumpt thinks that it is 'supplendum potius.' I think that the old reading is quite as good as the new one.

annonae] 'Annona,' a word formed from 'annus,' is the current year's produce, the general measure of plenty or scarcity; for, if the current year fails in any country, there is never so large a supply on hand as to make up the deficiency and prevent prices rising. 'Annona' often occurs in these orations and in the Latin writers in various senses, all of which are easily connected with the primary sense. In Lib. 3. c. 98, it has its common sense of 'produce,' or 'the year's produce:' "Annona porro pretium nisi in calamitate fructuum non habet." It is sometimes used for the price of the necessities of life, and particularly grain, as in the passage of Suetonius referred to above (c. 62).

vendidisse; ut—etiam si] I set no great value on pointing; but, if it has a use, it should help to the meaning and not obstruct the discovery of it. Zumpt and Klotz may understand it as I do; but, if I pointed it as they have done, most English readers would misunderstand it. The pointing which I have made will show that I connect 'etiam si' and 'tamen,' as in Lib. 1. c. 38: "quae omnia etiamsi . . per istum tamen," &c. The first 'ut' is resumed in 'verum ita ut sit,' 'but though it be so.'

Zumpt has 'voluerit emere' from Lag. 42.

Klotz here steps in again, like another Alba Aemilius, to help his friend Verres. In reference to the words 'ut—etiam si—addixisses Apronio,' he observes, that the main blow from his adversary fails through the effect of these words, and yet the orator contrived to give the matter such a turn, that a false appearance, even though this admission is made, might easily fall on Verres if a hearer was rather inattentive. This is something like the meaning of what he says; but it is hard to express. He adds, "one thing only is true, that on this occasion some one was willing to offer more." This is a complete falsificatradidisse quod jam addixisses Apronio, (aiunt enim te ita dictitare, quod ego exspecto cupioque te ita illud defendere) verum ut ita sit, —tamen non potes hoc quasi praeclarum aliquid praedicare, magno te decumas vendidisse, quum fuisse fateare qui multo pluris voluerint emere.

LXV. Tenetur, igitur jam, iudices, et manifesto tenetur avaritia, cupiditas hominis, scelus, improbitas, audacia. Quid si haec quae dico ipsius amici defensoresque iudicarunt? quid vultis amplius? Adventu L. Metelli praetoris, quum omnes ejus comites iste sibi suo illo panchresto medicamento amicos reddidisset, aditum est ad Metellum: eductus est Apronius: eduxit vir primarius C. Gallus, senator: postulavit a L. Metello ut ex edicto suo iudicium daret in Apronium, QUOD PER VIM AUT METUM ABSTULISSET; quam formulam Octavianam et Romae Metellus habuerat, et habebat in provincia. Non impetrat, quum hoc diceret Metellus, praejudicium se de capite C. Verris per hoc iudicium nolle fieri. Tota Metelli cohors, hominum non ingratorum, aderat Apronio: C. Gallus, homo vestri ordinis, a suo familiarissimo L. Metello iudicium ex edicto non potest impetrare. Non reprehendo Metellum: pepercit homini amico, et, quemadmodum ipsum dicere audivi, necessario: non reprehendo, inquam, Metellum; sed hoc miror, quomodo de quo homine praejudicium noluerit fieri per recuperatores, de hoc ipse non modo praejudicarit, verum gravissime ac vehementissime iudicarit. Primum enim, si Apronium absolutum iri putaret, nihil tion of the text; and a reader can scarcely be so inattentive as to let this false appearance deceive him. Cicero says that Verres sold the 'decumae' for less by $\overline{\text{xxx}}$ than he could have done. He does not admit that the 'decumae' had been 'knocked down' (addictae) to Apronius when this offer was made; and he adds, that even if he should admit that they had been adjudicated to Apronius, Verres cannot deny that an offer was made (palam res gesta est) to give $\overline{\text{xxx}}$ more than Apronius had given. And that would be a pretty good proof that Verres had acted like a knave.

65. panchresto] 'With his panacea' as we say sometimes, his universal drug, his gold. Cicero goes to the apothecary sometimes for his metaphors, or to the paint-box, as in Ad Att. i. 14: "Totum hunc locum quem ego varie meis orationibus, quarum tu Aristarchus es, soleo pingere, de flamma, de ferro—nosti illas $\lambda\eta\kappa\acute{\upsilon}\theta\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$ —valde graviter pertexuit."

praejudicium se] Zumpt has 'praejudicium a se.' He observes, "abest praepositio a MSS. praeter Nannianum et Lag. 42 omnibus;" and he seems to think that the preposition is better omitted, as to which there can be no doubt. See the note, p. 13, on 'praejudicium.'

vestri ordinis,] The reading of Cod. Vat. and of the MSS., it seems, except Lag. 42. It is a matter of indifference; but it seems more appropriate for Cicero to be considered as addressing the 'iudices' as senators, than to include himself in the 'ordo.'

noluerit fieri] Klotz, from Cod. Vat. 'noluit fieri—hoc ipso—praejudicaret—iudicaret.'

absolutum iri] It may not be useless to remind some readers that this so-called passive future is really a form which does not differ from 'Cur te is perditum' (Ter. And. i. 1. 107). The word 'absolutum' (called a supine) corresponds to 'perditum,' and depends on the 'iri,' which is used impersonally, as it is termed: that is, the whole erat quod ullum praejudicium vereretur: deinde, si condemnato Apronio conjunctam cum eo Verris causam omnes erant existimaturi, Metellus quidem certe jam hoc judicabat eorum rem causamque esse conjunctam, qui statueret Apronio condemnato de isto praejudicium futurum. Et simul una res utrique rei est argumento, et aratores vi et metu coactos Apronio multo plus quam debuerint dedisse, et Apronium istius rem suo nomine egisse, quum L. Metellus statuerit non posse Apronium condemnari quin simul de istius scelere atque improbitate judicaretur.

LXVI. Venio nunc ad epistolam Timarchidi, liberti istius et accensi, de qua quum dixero totum hoc crimen decumanum peroraro. Haec epistola est, judices, quam nos Syracusis in aedibus Apronii, quum literas conquireremus, invenimus. Missa est, ut ipsa significat, ex itinere, quum Verres jam de provincia decessisset, Timarchidi manu scripta. Recita epistolam. 'Timarchides Verris accensus Apronio salutem dicit.' Jam hoc quidem non reprehendo quod adscribit 'accensus:': cur enim sibi hoc scribae soli sumant? —L. Papirius scriba.—Volo ego hoc esse commune accensorum, lictorum, viatorum. 'Fac diligentiam adhibeas quod ad praetoris phrase means, "if he thought that the 'recuperatores' were going to acquit him."

qui statueret] Zumpt observes, "recte Lag. 42 statueret, et miror Ernestium in ejusmodi rebus acutissimum vulg. statuerit tulisse, cum praecesserit judicabat, non judicavit." Klotz has at the beginning of the sentence 'si . . . putabat,' but I do not know on what authority; and also 'statuerat' from Cod. Vat.

66. Timarchidi] Cod. Vat. has 'Timarchidis,' which Klotz follows here. In Lib. 2. c. 44, he writes 'Timarchidi.' Cicero may have written either indifferently. Klotz has also 'perorabo' from Cod. Vat., which is the reading of the MSS., except Cod. Nann. and Lag. 42. Cicero says, as Zumpt observes, that when he shall have spoken about this letter, he will have finished with this part of the subject; and it is so, for he passes to another part of his subject without a 'peroratio,' which 'perorabo' promises.

ex itinere] 'On the road,' as in Caesar, Bell. Gall. ii. 6: "id ex itinere magno impetu Belgae oppugnare coeperunt." The expression is simple enough in the Latin language, which uses prepositions very significantly and clearly. Cicero says of himself (Topica 1), in addressing Trebatius: "itaque haec . . . in ipsa navigatione conscripsi tibi ex itinere misi."

quod adscribit] 'Quom scribat,' Klotz; 'quod adscripsit,' Orelli; the common reading—'scribae soli assumant;,' Zumpt from Lag. 42. Cod. Vat. has 'sumant.' I suppose either will do. Cicero says (Divin. c. 4), 'verum id mihi non sumo.' Klotz omits the words 'Apronio salutem dicit.'

Cicero is ridiculing the addition of his title 'accensus.' He then says, "Why should 'scribae' alone assume to add their title?" for instance, 'L. Papirius' might add 'scriba' if he were addressing any one: he might say 'L. Papirius Scriba.' This is said in derision of L. Papirius Potamo, that upright man, who is mentioned in c. 60. It does not appear that any letter of Papirius of this kind had been produced; and the words 'L. Papirius scriba' are perhaps somewhat difficult to explain. Zumpt writes 'L. Papirius scriba! volo ego,' &c., where the (!), I suppose, is significant. But Zumpt's italics and the capitals of Klotz make the words part of the letter of Timarchides. If the words are genuine, they must be taken as the words of Cicero, I think.

Volo ego hoc] Cicero says, 'I would have all these important functionaries sign their title of office,' even a 'lictor,' and a 'viator.'

existimationem attinet.' Commendat Apronio Verrem, et hortatur ut inimicis ejus resistat. Bono praesidio munitur existimatio tua, si quidem in Apronii constituitur diligentia atque auctoritate. 'Habes virtutem, atque eloquentiam.' Quam copiose laudatur Apronius a Timarchide! quam magnifice! Cui ego illum non putem placere oportere qui tanto opere Timarchidi probatus sit? 'Habes sumptum unde facias.' Necesse est quod redundarit de vestro frumentario quaestu ad illum potissimum per quem agebatis defluxisse. 'Scribas, apparitores recentes arripe: cum L. Volteio, qui plurimum potest, caede, concide.' Videte quam valde malitiae suae confidat Timarchides qui etiam Apronio improbitatis praecepta det. Jam hoc 'caede, concide;' nonne vobis verba domo patroni depromere videtur ad omne genus nequitiae accommodata? 'Volo, mi frater, fraterculo tuo credas'—consorti quidem in lucris atque furtis, gemino et simillimo nequitia, improbitate, audacia. 'In cohorte carus haberis.' Quid est hoc 'in cohorte?' quo pertinet? Apronium doces? quid, in vestram cohortem te monitore an sua sponte pervenerat? 'Quod cuique opus est oppone.' Qua impudentia putatis in dominatione fuisse qui in fuga tam improbus sit? ait omnia pecunia effici posse; dare, profundere oportere, si velis vincere. Non hoc mihi tam molestum est Apronio suadere Timarchidem, quam quod hoc idem patrono suo praecipit. 'Te postulante omnes vincere solent.' Verre quidem praetore, non Sacerdote, non Peducaeo, non hoc ipso Metello.

LXVII. 'Scis Metellum sapientem esse.' Hoc vero ferri jam non potest, irrideri viri optimi L. Metelli ingenium, et contemni ac despici a fugitivo Timarchide. 'Si Volteium habebis, omnia ludi-caede, concide.] 'In conjunction with L. Volteius, who is all-powerful, cut and slash away:' expressions derived from the gladiatorial fights, says Klotz, when a successful gladiator was encouraged to cut down his adversary. It may be so. He gives no proof, and I know none. Timarchides means that Apronius must lay about him, as we say, and vigorously. "De obsceno sensu, qui inest in verbis caedere, concidere, cf. quae laudat Gruterus et Forcellinus in lexico: sed hoc tamen loco gladiatorium potius est" (Zumpt). We will hope so.

carus haberis.] From Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'carus habebere.'

oppone.] Explained by Zumpt to mean in this passage 'obtendere, ante oculos ponere (vorhalten), ut aliquid consequare, non ut impediās.' 'Hold out to every man the inducement that will win him.' Zumpt refers to c. 57: "quum decumani . . tuum scelus ac nomen opponerent."—Klotz has 'quod cuique opus sit, oppone.'

67. Scis Metellum, &c.] Cicero puts his own interpretation on these words; but it does not therefore follow that it is the true interpretation. Timarchides, according to Cicero, was speaking ironically: he did not think Metellus very clever. Zumpt, in explaining 'et contemni,' which words, he adds, are not in Lag. 42, supposes that these rascals were laughing at Metellus for devoting himself to some branch of Greek learning rather than to the business of his office. This is rather far-fetched.

ludibundus] 'As easy as play,' with no trouble. Comp. Lib. 5. c. 70: "ut ad istos bundus conficies.' Hic vehementer errat Timarchides qui aut Volteium corrumpi pecunia putet posse, aut Metellum unius arbitratu gerere praeturam, sed errat conjectura domestica: quia multos et per se et per alios multa ludibundos libidinosa apud Verrem effecisse vidit, ad omnes eosdem patere aditus arbitratur. Facilius vos efficiebatis ludibundi quae volebatis a Verre, quod multa ejus ludorum genera noratis. 'Inculcatum est Metello et Volteio te aratores evertisse.' Quis istuc Apronio attribuebat, quum aratorem aliquem everterat? aut Timarchidi quum ob judicandum, aut decernendum, aut imperandum aliquid, aut remittendum, pecuniam acceperat? aut Sextio lictori quum aliquem innocentem securi percusserat? Nemo: omnes enim ei tunc attribuebant quem nunc condemnari volunt. 'Obtuderunt aures te socium praetoris fuisse.' Vides hoc quam clarum sit et fuerit, quum etiam Timarchides hoc metuat? concedesne hoc crimen in te nos non confingere sed jampridem ad crimen aliquam defensionem libertum quaerere? Libertus et accensus tuus, et tibi ac liberis tuis omnibus in rebus conjunctus ac proximus, ad Apronium scribit, vulgo esse ab omnibus ita demonstratum Metello, tibi Apronium in decumis socium fuisse. 'Fac sciat improbitatem aratorum: ipsi sudabunt, si dii volent.' Quid istuc, per deos immortales, aut qua de causa excitatum esse dicamus in aratores tam infestum odium atque tantum? quantam injuriam fecerunt Verri aratores ut eos etiam libertus et accensus ejus tam irato animo ac literis insequatur?

LXVIII. Neque ego hujus fugitivi vobis, judices, epistolam recitassem, nisi ut ex ea totius familiae praecepta et instituta et honores pervenirent, ad quos vos per ludum et negligentiam pervenistis;" and Ad Div. xvi. 9: "Inde austro lenissimo, coelo sereno, nocte illa et die postero in Italiam ad Hydruntum ludibundi pervenimus:" the voyage was easy.

libidinosa] From Cod. Vat. The reading of the other MSS. appears to be 'libidinoſe,' which Zumpt places thus [libidinoſe] in his text. Zumpt in his appendix has the reading of Cod. Vat. thus noticed: "ludibundos] Vat. multa libidinosa." So I suppose that it omits 'ludibundos.' The passage stands here as it does in the text of Klotz; but, if the word 'ludibundos' can be got rid of on good authority, it will be an improvement. It occurs shortly after in the right place. The words 'domestica conjectura' will perhaps hardly make a difficulty. Cicero says, 'Herein Timarchides is greatly mistaken, &c; but he is mistaken in forming this opinion from his experience in the household of Verres.' Compare c. 68: "verum in hoc errat uno quod," &c.

Obtuderunt aures] 'Obtuderunt ejus aures:' Zumpt; but Cod. Vat. omits 'ejus.' —'Videsne hoc:' Zumpt. 'Vides hoc:' Cod. Vat.

concedesne . . confingere] From Cod. Vat. si dii volent.] Cod. Vat. has 'si dolunt,' which means probably, 'si dii volunt,' which Klotz has. —'Quod istuc:' Zumpt.

68. nisi ut ex ea] "Vulgo nisi ut ex ea (Lag. 42, nisi uti ex ea) quod miror adhuc toleratum esse. Neque enim constat vel sententia vel constructio verborum, nisi aut recitavi corrigas aut ut tollas" (Zumpt: who omits 'ut.') Cod. Vat. has 'nisi ut.' But the 'ut' seems to be necessary for the meaning; and I do not see the force of Zumpt's note. 'Nisi ut' is common enough in Cicero.

disciplinam cognosceretis. Videtis ut moneat Apronium quibus rebus ac muneribus se insinuet in familiaritatem Metelli, Volteium corrumpat, scribas accensumque pretio deleniat: ea praecipit quae vidit; ea monet alienum hominem quae domi didicit ipse: verum in hoc errat uno quod existimat easdem vias ad omnium familiaritates esse munitas. Quamquam merito sum iratus Metello, tamen haec quae vera sunt dicam. Apronius ipsum Metellum non pretio ut Verrem, non convivio, non muliere, non sermone impuro atque improbo posset corrumpere; quibus rebus non sensim atque moderate ad istius amicitiam adrepserat, sed brevi tempore totum hominem totamque ejus praeturam possederat. Cohortem autem Metelli quam vocat, quid erat quod corrumperet, ex qua recuperatores in aratorem nulli dabantur? Nam quod scribit, 'Metelli filium puerum esse,' vehementer errat: non enim ad omnes praetorum filios iidem aditus sunt. O Timarchide, Metelli est filius in provincia, non puer, sed adolescens bonus ac pudens, dignus illo loco ac nomine. Vester iste puer praetextatus in provincia quem admodum fuisset non dicerem, si pueri esse illam culpam ac non patris existimarem. Tune, quum te ac tuam vitam nosses, in Siciliam tecum grandem praetextatum filium ducebas ut, etiamsi natura puerum a paternis vitiis atque a generis similitudine abduceret, consuetudo tamen eum et disciplina degenerare non sineret? Fac enim fuisse in eo C. Laelii aut M. Catonis materiem atque indolem, quid ex eo boni sperari atque effici potest qui in patris luxurie sic vixerit ut nullum unquam pudicum neque sobrium convivium viderit? qui in epulis quotidianis adulta aetate per triennium inter impudicas mulieres et intemperantes viros versatus sit? nihil unquam audierit a patre quo pudentior aut melior esset?

se insinuet] 'Se' is from the Cod. Nann. and Lag. 42; though there are passages in Cicero, which Zumpt refers to, which show that 'insinuo' is used absolutely. Both forms seemed to have been used by Cicero.

vias . . munitas.] 'That the same roads are made to the intimacy of all persons.' 'Munio' is a road-making word, and the proper word for this purpose, as in the inscription which records the construction of the military road through the Alps, planned by Drusus, and made by the Emperor Claudius his son: "viam Claudiam Augustam quam Drusus pater Alpibus bello patefactis derivavit munit." (Cited by Orelli, Horace, Carm. iv. 4.)

Vester iste puer] The reading of Lag. 42, instead of 'vester ille,' &c.

C. Laelii] This is the C. Laelius, the principal speaker in the treatise De Amicitia. Hotmann, by an odd blunder, supposes that M. Cato is Cato of Utica; but it is, as Manutius says, Cato the Censor. The word 'materiem' was suspected by Lambinus, who says, "quid si legamus naturam atque indolem?" but it appears to be the reading of all the MSS. 'Materies' is 'stuff' generally, often 'timber.' As Cicero says, Pro Caelio, "si quis hoc robore animi, atque hac indole virtutis &c. fuit;" so he might join together 'materies et indoles,' as it seems.

LXIX. Quibus in rebus non solum filio, Verres, sed etiam rei publicae fecisti injuriam. Susceperas enim liberos non solum tibi sed etiam patriae, qui non modo tibi voluptati sed etiam qui aliquando usui rei publicae possent esse. Eos instituere atque erudire ad majorum instituta atque civitatis disciplinam, non ad tua flagitia neque ad tuas turpitudines debuisti. Esset ex inerti et improbo et impuro parente navus et pudens et probus filius, haberet aliquid res publica abs te muneris. Nunc pro te Verrem substituisti alterum civitati; nisi forte hoc deteriolem, si fieri potest, quod tu ejusmodi evasisti, non in hominis luxuriosi sed tantum in furis atque divisoris disciplina educatus. Quid isto fore festivius arbitramur, si est tuus natura filius, consuetudine discipulus, voluntate similis? Quem ego, judices, quamvis bonum fortemque facile paterer evadere; non enim me inimicitiae commovent, si quæ mihi cum isto futurae sunt; nam si in omnibus rebus innocens fuero meique similis, quid mihi istius inimicitiae nocebunt? sin aliqua in re Verris similis fuero, non magis mihi deerit inimicus quam Verri defuit. Etenim, judices, ejusmodi res publica debet esse, et erit, veritate judiciorum constituta, ut inimicus neque deesse nocenti possit neque obesse innocenti. Quapropter nulla res est quamobrem ego istum nolim ex paternis probris ac vitiis emergere: id quod tametsi isti difficile est, tamen haud scio an fieri possit: præsertim si, ut nunc fit, custodes amipatris similis] The reading of the better MSS. The others have 'patri similis.' The genitive seems to express more of the complete likeness,—'a copy of his father,' as we might say: the other form, 'patri similis,' expressing merely the general external resemblance. See Lib. 5. c. 12. In the next chapter is 'mei similis,' and 'Verris similis;' where Orelli has the common reading, 'Verri similis,' and it may be the right reading.

69. Esset . . haberet] "If from a lazy and an unprincipled and a filthy father there had sprung an active, and modest, and honest son, the state would have had some service from you." The form 'esset' in the conditional expression, without 'si,' is not common.

furis atque divisoris] A plain-spoken allusion to the father of C. Verres. He calls his father a thief, and a manager of bribes at elections (Divin. c. 8, note). Cicero considers such a bribe-monger worse than a thief. That is the Roman doctrine.

festivus] This is said ironically, for 'festivus' means that which gives pleasure and delight. Cicero says (Ad Att. i. 12): 'Puer festivus anagnostes noster Sositheus decesserat, meque plus quam servi mors debere videbatur commoverat.' Here he says: "What youth do we suppose will ever turn out more charming than this of yours; if he is yours by blood, by intercourse your disciple, by inclination your veritable copy?"

si quæ . . futurae sunt;) Zumpt seems to suppose that 'sint' might do, though it would give a somewhat different sense. The best MSS. are in favour of 'sunt,' which I think is the only reading that we can have.

haud scio an—possit;) Cicero's usual formula for expressing a possibility; not, however, very strongly expressed, but still it affirms.

corum eum sectabuntur, quoniam pater tam negligens ac dissolutus est. Verum huc longius quam voluntas fuit ab epistola Timarchidi digressa est oratio mea, qua recitata conclusurum me esse crimen decumanum dixeram; ex quo intellexistis innumerabilem frumenti numerum per triennium aversum a re publica esse ereptumque aratoribus.

LXX. Sequitur ut de frumento empto vos, iudices, doceam, maximo atque impudentissimo furto; de quo dum certa et pauca et magna dicam breviter attendite. Frumentum in Sicilia emere debuit Verres ex senatusconsulto et ex lege Terentia et Cassia frumentaria. Emendi duo genera fuerunt; unum decumarum; alterum, quod praeterea civitatibus aequaliter esset distributum:

crimen decumanum] This is an emendation of Lambinus. The MSS. have 'crimen decumarum,' which is an error. See c. 66, 77. Klotz has 'crimen decumarum.'

70. Terentia et Cassia] This was one of the Leges Frumentariae, the object of which was the provisioning of Rome, and the securing a supply of grain. The Lex Terentia Cassia was enacted in B.C. 73. It is mentioned again, c. 75 and Lib. 5. c. 21. The purpose of the 'lex,' it is said, was to give authority for the purchasing of corn with the public money, and for the retailing it at a fixed price at Rome. There is little information about the provisions of this 'lex.' The passages relating to it are collected in Orelli's edition of Cicero, Index Legum.

The passage in the Fragments of Sallust (p. 974, ed. Cort.): "Nisi forte repentina ista frumentaria lege munia vestra pensantur, qua tamen quinque modis libertatem omnium aestimavere, qui profecto non amplius possunt alimentis carceris," is supposed to refer to this 'lex;' but there is nothing in the passage which shows that it does. The passage implies that the corn here spoken of, the five 'modii' (a month), was a gift; for it is spoken of as the price of liberty. Yet it is stated that the corn was not given under the provisions of this 'lex,' but sold at the price of 6½ asses for each 'modius.' (Ascon. in Pis. c. iv. p. 9, ed. Or.) The passage in Sallust seems to refer to a gift of corn. The corn mentioned in the text was purchased in accordance with the provisions of the 'lex;' but the senate, the administrative body, gave the order for each several purchase.

This system of buying corn at the public cost led to miserable results. The market at Rome was unsteady: scarcity was often feared, and sometimes felt. The Romans compelled the Sicilians to sell grain at the price which the Romans gave, and so far the Roman state was better off than a modern state would be, which would be compelled to give the market price if it became a purchaser. But this practice must have raised the price of grain in other parts of Italy, and indeed to all persons who were not fed by the state. Arthur Young (Travels in France, 1787—9, p. 490) has some instructive remarks on Neckar's corn-purchases during his administration. The effect of his giving notice that he had made an immense purchase in corn, on the public account, was to raise the price immediately. A 'senatusconsultum' for the purchasing of a quantity of corn for Rome was an announcement of scarcity, necessarily followed by a rise of price. The National Assembly of France followed Neckar's example. They watched over the subsistence of the people, and so made or aggravated scarcity.

unum decumarum;] The reading of the MSS. is either 'unum ceterarum decumarum,' or 'unum certarum decumarum.' 'Ceterarum' may be right: the other certainly not. Nannius says that neither word is in his MS.; and it is not in Lag. 42. Hotmann writes 'unum alterarum decumarum.' Klotz has 'unum ceterarum decumarum.' The 'alterae decumae' are meant. Zumpt thinks that we should perhaps read 'decumanum' for 'decumarum,' which is probable. After 'hujus imperati' some MSS. have 'in annos singulos;' and also Klotz.

distributum;] This word is supposed to be equivalent to 'imperatum;' but Ernesti says that a like use of the word cannot be found in Cicero. This 'emptum illius decumani tantum quantum ex primis decumis fuisset; hujus imperati tritici modium DCCC millia: pretium autem constitutum decumano in modios singulos HS III, imperato HS IIIS. Sic per triennium ad hanc frumenti emptionem Siciliensem prope centies et vicies erogatum est. Hanc pecuniam tantam, datam tibi ex ærario inopi atque exhausto, datam ad frumentum, hoc est, ad necessitatem salutis ac vitæ, datam, ut Siculis, ut aratoribus, quibus tanta onera res publica imponeret, solveretur, abs te sic laceratam esse dico ut possim illud probare, si velim, omnem te hanc pecuniam domum tuam avertisse. Etenim sic hanc rem totam administrasti ut hoc, quod dico, probari æquissimo judici possit. Sed ego habebo rationem auctoritatis meae; meminero quo animo et quo consilio ad causam publicam accesserim. Non agam tecum accusatorie; nihil fingam; nihil cuiquam probari volo me dicente quod non ante mihimetipsi probatum sit. In hac pecunia publica, judices, hæc insunt tria genera furtorum: primum quum posita esset pecunia apud eas societates unde erat attributa, binis centesimis feneratus est: deinde permultis civitatibus pro frumento nihil solvit omnino: postremo, si cui civitati solvit, frumentum' consisted of a second 'decumae' which was paid for; and of 'imperatum frumentum,' an amount required of all the states equally, which was paid for one 'semis' dearer. The words 'emendi duo genera,' 'two kinds of purchase,' explain 'alterum,' which of course means 'the other mode of purchase,' which purchase was to be equally distributed over the different states; as if he had said, the money was to be distributed among the states equally, or proportionately to what was taken of them, as in c. 73: "pecunias quas civitatibus distribuere debeat." There seems no necessity to explain 'distributum' as equivalent to 'imperatum.'

HS III,] The MSS. have 'ternos' by error instead of 'terni,' except Lag. 42, which has the numerals. The MSS. reading in place of 'HS IIIS' is 'HS IIII,' or half an 'as' more. Zumpt has written 'HS IIIS,' and thus the 800,000 modii, and the sum total 'duodetricies,' are in harmony. And this agrees with c. 75, where the price of a 'medimnum' or six 'modii' is stated at HS XXI.

During these years the sum of nearly twelve millions of 'sertertii' was annually laid out in Sicily only, for the provisioning of Rome; an enormous sum, when we consider the then price of grain, and that the outlay was made for a single city.

societates . . . attributa,] He has just spoken of the money being paid to Verres out of the Aerarium. Here he speaks of the 'societates' or companies of Publicani, on whom Verres received an order for payment (unde erat attributa). But it comes to the same thing. The 'societates' were bound to pay into the Aerarium their rent for the 'vectigalia,' which they farmed, at least such 'vectigalia' as were not derived from grain: but it was the same thing if they paid to Verres such amounts as they were ordered to do; for to such amount they would be discharged. Money paid out of the Aerarium is 'pecunia erogata.' Money for which Verres had an order on the 'societates' is 'pecunia attributa.' Verres lent this money, or some of it; and as it appears (c. 71), to the 'societates.' They paid at the rate of twenty-four per cent. per annum for it, 'binae centesimae,' or two hundredths per month, a rate of interest almost incredible. They must have had large profits by their contracts, to make it worth their Horat. Epod. ii. 67.

71. Ac primum] The old reading is 'At,' which is out of place here. The orator is continuing his subject.—The 'tu' stands alone without any grammatical connexion with the sentence; but that is no reason for omitting it, as Ernesti did. If a man were reading straight on, without troubling himself about grammatical canons, he might hardly observe the irregularity. Graevius quotes an example from Livy, ii. 13: "Quum C. Mucius adolescens, cui indignum videbatur . . itaque eam indignitatem vindicandam ratus . . constituit."

ex tempore,] This is a very common expression in Cicero, and in these orations. 'Ex tempore' means 'to suit an occasion,' that which is temporary, not permanent; and accordingly it is almost the same as 'fictum,' as Hotmann explains it correctly.

et sex publicorum,] The editions up to that of Lambinus have 'sex publicanorum.' Lambinus made it 'et societatis publicanorum.' F. Ursini says, "legitur in manuscripto 'ejus societatis publicanorum' sine conjunctionis nota, quae est in vulgatis." Zumpt says that he and Gruter found nothing in the MSS. except what stands here in the text. He supposes that 'publica' may mean 'vectigalia;' and so it means in another passage of Cicero, where he says, 'publicis male redemptis;' and he adds, "quorum cum varia genera fuerint, etiam sex publica quasi conjuncta poterant esse a societate illa conducta: certe eandem societatem portum et scripturam habuisse cognoscimus Lib. 2. c. 70." Klotz observes (Vorrede, p. 13): "we have with Zumpt explained sex publica to be six companies for farming the revenues;" but Zumpt seems to speak of six different kinds of 'vectigalia' farmed by one company. Cicero says, 'scripturae et sex publicorum,'—which seems to mean the 'scriptura,' and six other branches of the 'vectigalia,' for 'publicorum' appears to be equivalent to 'vectigalium.' There was the 'portorium,' the vectigal of wheat, of barley, which was let separately in Sicily, of wine, oil, and of the 'fruges minutae,'—all mentioned by Cicero, and these make exactly six. Klotz is delighted to be able to defend 'sex publica' by a pertinent example from Valerius Maximus, vi. 9, § 7: "T. Aufidius cum Asiatici publici exiguam admodum particulam habuisset, postea Asiam proconsulari imperio obtinuit." See the passage from Gaius cited in the note to c. 72; and the note in Torrenius' edition of Valerius Maximus.

quod dicimus obtinere?] 'Maintain, support, that is, prove what I say.'

72. peculatum;] 'Peculatus' was the offence of embezzling public property (pecunia publica), whether the offence was committed by a private person, or by one who held some public office. According to the Romans, the word was derived from 'pecus;' and as fines were paid originally not in money, but in cattle, it was properly the embezzlement of what was so paid as a fine to the state. The explanation is hardly satisfactory; but, such as it is, it is all that can be offered. When the offence of 'peculatus' became common, it was the subject of particular enactments (leges); and finally, at some time not ascertained, there was established a 'quaestio perpetua de peculatu,' or a court for the trial of the offenders in this matter. Cases of 'peculatus' appear to have become more common when the Romans began their conquering career, and generals were tempted to appropriate some of the booty. The 'quaestio' existed before this time (B.C. 70). The chief 'lex' on this subject is a Lex Julia, of the time either of the Dictator Caesar or Augustus. (Rein, Das Criminal-recht der Römer, p. 672, &c.)

perscriptorem] He was the man who made all the entries in the books relating to these transactions. The sense of 'perscribere' is explained by other passages (Lib. 5. c. 19): "multas pecunias isti erogatas in operum locationes falsas atque inanes esse perscriptas." Lib. 2. c. 70: "furta quoque istius permulta nominatim ad socios perscripserat." As to the various meanings of 'perscriptio' and 'perscribere,' see Ernesti, Clavis.

scribae] "And it happened that two 'scribae' were at that time 'magistri' together with Vettius." Difficulties have been made about this. It is usual to speak of only one 'magister.' Here three are mentioned, and two of them 'scribae,' who were more inclined to interfere in this matter, because a 'scriba,' one of their 'ordo,' was acting as the tool of Verres. They may have wished to keep up the character of their 'ordo.' This may have been one motive for their acting in this matter. As to 'scribae,' see c. 78. Ernesti put 'scribae' in the critical stocks thus [scribae].

non putant. Quis enim hoc fecit unquam? quis denique conatus est facere, aut posse fieri cogitavit, ut, quum senatus usura publicanos saepe juvisset, magistratus a publicanis pecuniam pro usura auderet auferre? Certe huic homini spes nulla salutis esset, si publicani, hoc est, si equites Romani judicarent. Minor esse nunc, iudices, vobis disceptantibus debet; et tanto minor quanto est honestius alienis injuriis quam re sua commoveri. Quid ad hæc respondere cogitas? Utrum factum negabis, an tibi hoc licitum esse defendes? Negare qui potes? an ut tanta auctoritate literarum, tot testibus publicanis convincare? Licuisse vero qui? Si mehercule te pecuniam tuam praetorem in provincia feneratum docerem, tamen effugere non posses; sed publicam, sed ob frumentum decretam, sed a publicanis fenore accepto, hoc licuisse cuiquam probabis? quo non modo ceteri, sed tu ipse nihil audacius improbiusque fecisti. Non mehercule hoc, quod omnibus singulare videtur, de quo mihi deinceps dicendum est, possum, iudices, dicere audacius esse aut impudentius quod permultis civitatibus pro frumento nihil solvit omnino: major hæc praeda fortasse est: sed illa impudentia certe non minor. Et quoniam de illa feneratione satis dictum est, nunc de hac tota pecunia aversa, quaeso, cognoscite.

usura . . juvisset,] Helped them, not by the loan of money, but by allowing them to have the use of money which was due. ‘Usurae’ is the term for interest. The senate had often not called for the money from the Publicani so soon as it was due. Hotmann quotes the passage of Cicero, Tusc. Disp. 1. c. 39: “Natura dedit usuram vitae tamquam pecuniae, nulla praestituta die,” &c. Zumpt observes that ‘usurae’ is always ‘money,’ and ‘usura’ is also ‘facultas utendi.’

disceptantibus] ‘Disceptare’ is a word applied to judicial investigations and determinations. See c. 79, and Lib. 5. c. 71: “disceptante populo Romano.” Cicero (Orat. Part. c. 3) says: “Disceptator rei sententiaeque moderator,” and in the De Re Publica (v. 2): “nec vero quisquam privatus erat disceptator aut arbiter litis, sed omnia conficiebantur judiciis regiis.” Compare Livy, 43. c. 10: “placuit ut disceptaret coram purgaretque sese.”

an ut tanta] This must be explained by looking back to what has been just said. “As to denying it, how can you do that? or will you deny it in order that you may be completely convicted by the evidence of so many documents, and of so many ‘publicani?’” effugere non posses;] We might infer from this that a ‘magistratus’ could not carry on the trade of money-lending in his province. At any rate this was the law in later times, for a rescript of Gordian states that there had been previous rescripts to this effect (Cod. Just. 3. tit. 2. s. 3, referred to by Zumpt after Hotmann).

a publicanis fenore accepto,] ‘fenore acceptam,’ Cod. Vat., and Klotz; but he does not say how he understands it. Compare Lib. 2. c. 74, near the end, as to this use of ‘sed.’

The following definition of Publicanus may be worth noting: “Eum qui vectigal populi Romani conductum habet, publicanum appellamus. Nam publici appellatio in compluribus causis ad populum Romanum respicit: civitates enim privatorum loco habentur” (Gaius, Dig. 50. 16. 16).

73. Halesina:] The Cod. Vat. almost always has this word with the diphthong, 'Halaesa'; but it has also 'Halesa.' It is Ἀλαισα in Strabo; in Diodorus, in several passages, Ἀλεσα; and in one passage (Excerpt. Legat. Lib. xxiii.), Ἀλαιοῖνοι (Zumpt). Klotz writes 'Halaesina.'

sexagena tritici] "Sexagena pro vulg. sexaginta scripsi, quia sic liquido testatur Nannius in suo libro se invenisse" (Zumpt). But he thinks that 'sexaginta' also would do. I doubt that; at least, the usual form is 'sexagena' when connected with 'singuli.' See Lib. 2. c. 55, note. Klotz here writes 'LX. M. tritici modium.' The copyists seem to have preferred the numerals to the numerical words; and probably Cicero himself would generally use them in writing, to save trouble. We may therefore owe 'sexaginta,' in this case, solely to the copyists; and it may be, that the Romans themselves, even in speaking, were not consistent in the use of the forms 'sexagena' and 'sexaginta.'

quanti erat, &c.] He took money instead of wheat, and at the price at which wheat then was in Sicily; that is, for every 'modius' he took the money value.

Obstupui,] Or 'obstupui,' for both forms are used, though I see no reason for preferring 'obstupui.' It is a common word to express the surprise which almost takes away utterance.

— "uxor tibi ducenda est, Pamphile, hodie, inquit, para, Abi domum: id mi visus est dicere, Abi cito et suspende te. Obstipui. Censen' me verbum potuisse ullum proloqui."

Ter. Andr. i. 5. 19.

dederat publice causam] Klotz follows, Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat., in writing 'dederat publicam causam.' The expression is unusual either way. Cicero means to say, that he was empowered or commissioned by the 'civitas.' Cicero's 'frater' is his cousin, L. Tullius Cicero, who accompanied him when he went to Sicily to collect evidence against Verres. Such a 'cognatus' was called 'frater patruelis,' or simply 'frater.' When Cicero speaks of the death of this L. Tullius (Ad Att. i. 5), he calls him 'frater' on that occasion also.

quod quum omnis] 'Quod omnis' is the reading of Lag. 42. All the rest of the MSS. have 'quod cum omnis.' The editors since Naugerius have omitted the 'quod,' and kept the 'quum' (Zumpt). Zumpt and Klotz omit the 'quum,' and they retain the 'quod.' I have kept them both, for I think that this usage of 'quod' is often misunderstood in Cicero, and that it is rightly placed here.

pecuniam Volcatio, &c.] Klotz follows

dedisse: reperio genus hujusmodi, iudices, praedae ut praetor, qui frumentum emere debeat, non emat sed vendat; pecunias, quas civitatibus distribuere debeat, eas omnes avertat atque auferat. Non mihi jam furtum sed monstrum ac prodigium videbatur, civitatum frumentum improbare, suum probare; quum suum frumentum probasset, pretium ei frumento constituere; quod constituisset, id a civitatibus auferre; quod a populo Romano accepisset, tenere.

LXXIV. Quot vultis esse in uno furto peccatorum gradus ut, si singulis insistere velim, progredi iste non possit? Improbas frumentum Siculorum. Quid, ipse quod mittis? peculiarem habes aliquam Siciliam quae tibi ex alio genere frumentum suppeditare possit? Quum senatus decernit ut ematur in Sicilia frumentum, aut quum populus jubet, hoc, ut opinor, intelligit, ex Sicilia Siculum frumentum apportari oportere. Tu, quum civitatum Siciliae vulgo omne frumentum improbas, num ex Aegypto aut Syria frumentum Romam missurus es? Improbas Halesinum, Thermitanum, Cephaloeditanum, Amestratinum, Tyndaritanum, Herbitense, multarum praeterea civitatum. Quid accidit tandem ut horum populorum agri frumentum ejusmodi, te praetore, ferrent, ut neque tibi neque populo Romano posset probari, praesertim quum ex iisdem agris ejusdem anni frumentum ex decumis Romam mancipēs advexissent?

Cod. Vat. in writing "pecuniam Timarchidi et Volcatio scribae." Zumpt refers to the end of c. 75, where three persons are mentioned; and the 'scriba' appears to be Maevius.

suum probare;] Omitted by Klotz. These words are wanting in the old editions, and in most of the MSS., as well as the words 'quum suum . . probasset': 'quod quum constituisset,' is the reading of Cod. Nannianus: 'civitatis auferre,' Orelli; but in these orations the verb is nearly always used with the preposition 'ab,' as Zumpt observes.

74. Quot vultis, &c.] Zumpt and Klotz place the ? after 'gradus.' Zumpt himself considers the passage clear enough, though it has plagued the commentators; and yet he mistakes it. He supposes 'tot sunt' to be the answer to the question; that is, 'tot sunt ut si singulis,' &c. Ernesti thought the text should be altered thus; "Tot videtis esse in uno furto," &c. But if there is no difficulty with 'Tot videtis,' &c., why should there be any difficulty with the words 'Quot vultis,' &c., which manifestly are connected with 'ut.' "How many degrees of offence would you have in one single act of fraud, that is, how many do you think will be enough, if I should insist on them severally, to bring the matter to a point where he can go no further." The meaning is plain and certain, if the passage is not obscured by bad punctuation. Compare Lib. 3. c. 94: "in quo primum injuriae gradu resistere incipiet severitas iudicis, quotus erit iste denarius qui non sit ferendus," &c. Cicero here asks a question to the same effect, with a like form to this in c. 74: "at what degree of wrong will the strictness of the 'judex' begin to resist; to what number of 'denarii' must that demand of yours be carried, before the amount is considered intolerable?"

ferrent, ut neque] "Ferrent, quod numquam antea, quod neque tibi," &c., is the reading of Klotz. The words, 'quod numquam antea,' look like an interpolation, and they are not in Lag. 42, though they are in Cod. Vat.

quid acciderat ut ex eodem horreo decumanum probaretur, emptum improbaretur? Dubiumne est quin ista omnis improbatio cogendae pecuniae causa nata sit? Esto: improbas Halesinum; habes ab alio populo quod probes: eme illud quod placet; missos fac eos quorum frumentum improbasti. Sed ab his quos repudias exigis tantum pecuniae quantum ad eum numerum frumenti satis sit quem ei civitati imperas emendum. Dubium est quid egeris. In medimna singula video ex literis publicis tibi Halesinos HS quinos denos dedisse. Ostendam ex tabulis locupletissimorum aratorum eodem tempore neminem in Sicilia pluris frumentum vendidisse.

LXXV. Quae est ergo ista ratio, aut quae potius ista amentia, frumentum improbare id quod ex eo loco sit, ex quo senatus et populus Romanus emi voluerit, et ex eo acervo ex quo partem tu idem decumarum nomine probaris; deinde a civitatibus pecuniam ad emendum frumentum cogere, quum ex aerario acceperis? Utrum enim lex Terentia Siculorum pecunia frumentum emere an populi Romani pecunia frumentum a Siculis emere jussit? Jam vero ab isto omnem illam ex aerario pecuniam quam his oportuit civitatibus pro frumento dari lucrifactam videtis. Accipis enim HS xv pro medimno; tanti enim est illo tempore medimnum: retines HS xxi; tanti enim est frumentum Siciliense ex lege aestimatum. Quid interest utrum hoc feceris, an frumentum non improbaris, sed frumento probato et accepto, pecuniam publicam tenueris omnem, neque quidquam ulli dissolveris civitati, quum aestimatio legis ejusmodi sit ut ceteris temporibus tolerabilis Siculis, te praetore etiam grata esse debuerit? Est enim modius lege HS iis aestimatus: fuit autem, te praetore, ut tu in multis epistolis ad amicos tuos gloriaris, HS ii. Sed fuerit HS iis, quoniam tantum a civitatibus in modios singulos exegisti. Quum, si solveres Siculis tantum quantum populus Romanus jusserat, aratoribus fieri gratissimum posset, tu non modo eos accipere quod oportebat noluisti, sed etiam dare quod non debebant coëgisti. Atque haec ita gesta Esto: improbas] Zumpt has 'improbes' from Lag. 42, a reading which is certainly not so good as the common reading, 'improbas,' which Cod. Vat. also has.

Dubium est, &c.] Klotz places a note of interrogation after 'egeris.' But it is not an interrogative sentence in form, though in the enunciation it may be made very nearly so. It is better without the ?. The Cod. Vat. omits 'Dubium . . . egeris.'

75. quae potius ista, &c.] Cod. Vat. omits 'ista;' for 'emere voluerit,' Klotz reads 'emere te voluerit.' 'Utrum enim te lex,' Klotz, apparently following Cod. Vat. But the Lex Terentia did not empower Verres to make the particular purchase. The senate gave orders for the particular purchases, and pursuant to the general terms of the Lex.

Accipis enim HS xv] See c. 70.

esse, iudices, cognoscite ex literis publicis civitatum et ex testimoniis publicis; in quibus nihil fictum, nihil ad tempus accommodatum intelligitis. Omnia quae dicimus rationibus populorum non interpositis, neque perturbatis, neque repentinis, sed certis, institutis, ordine relata atque confecta sunt. Recita rationes Halesinorum. Cui pecuniam datam dicit? Dic, dic etiam clarius: VOLCATIO, TIMARCHIDI, MAEVIO.

LXXVI. Quid est, Verres? ne illam quidem tibi defensionem reliquam fecisti, mancipēs in istis rebus esse versatos? mancipēs frumentum improbasse? mancipēs pretio cum civitatibus decidisse, et eosdem abs te illarum civitatum nomine pecunias abstulisse, deinde ipsos sibi frumentum coēmissee; nihil haec ad te pertinere? Mala mehercule ac misera defensio, praetorem hoc dicere, Ego frumentum neque attigi neque inspexi; mancipibus potestatem probandi improbandique permisi; mancipēs a civitatibus pecunias extorserunt; ego autem quam pecuniam populis dare debui mancipibus dedi. Mala est haec quidem, ut dixi, defensio, ac potius perdita maximorum peccatorum, hujus autem et iniquitatis et inertiae confessio, non defensio criminis; sed tamen hac ipsa tibi, si uti cupias, non licet: vetat te Volcatius, tuae tuorumque deliciae, mentionem mancipis facere. Timarchides autem, columnen familiae vestrae, premit fauces defensionis tuae; cui simul et Volcatio publicis civitatum] The reading of Cod. Vat. in this instance, 'civitatum,' may be worth noting, as a variety. Klotz adopts it here for conformity's sake; but in c. 74 he writes 'civitatum.' The faulty reading of Cod. Vat., 'nihil a te fictum,' may perhaps have induced him to write as he does, 'nihil esse fictum.' 'Intelligitis' is the reading of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'intelligitis.'

non interpositis,] This word was taken to be equivalent to 'interpolatis' by Ernesti and Garatoni, on which Zumpt observes: "non credo sic dici posse interposita; quibus quid interpositum sit." The meaning of the word seems to be deducible from that with which it is contrasted, 'certis.' All that Cicero affirms was entered (relata), and recorded in the records of the cities. Zumpt supposes, as it seems, that 'rationes' cannot be said of parts of the 'rationes'; or, at any rate, he takes 'rationibus' to mean the whole 'rationes.' I don't see why Hotmann's explanation may not serve, that 'rationes non interpositas' may mean 'rationes' not foisted in, where

76. mancipēs] See Divin. c. 10.

inspexi;] Nannius says that this is the reading in his old codex; and it is the reading of Lag. 42. The other reading is 'adspexi,' which Klotz has. This is one of those cases which we may leave to the opinion of readers, to choose that which seems to suit the sense best. 'Inspicere' is a word that expresses a minuter examination. 'Neque adspexi' would mean, that he did not even look at it; and some may prefer this. The evidence of the MSS. leaves us in doubt as to the genuine words of Cicero.

haec quidem, ut dixi,—criminis;] "Edd. principes et codd. deteriores nihil aliud nisi Mala est haec, ut dixi, defensio criminis" (Zumpt). He says of the text as it here stands: "sic prorsus in quattuor melioribus nostris, Lag. 29. 42. Paris. A B."

columnen] Thus in Terence, Phormio, ii. 3. 57:—

"Bone custos, salve, columnen vero familiae."

pecunia a civitate numerata est. Jam vero scriba tuus annulo aureo suo, quem ex his rebus invenit, ista te ratione uti non sinet. Quid igitur est reliquum nisi uti fateare, te Romam frumentum emptum Siculorum pecunia misisse, publicam pecuniam domum tuam convertisse? O consuetudo peccandi, quantam habes jucunditatem in improbis et audacibus, quum poena abfuit et licentia consecuta est! Iste in hoc genere peculatus non nunc primum invenitur, sed nunc demum tenetur. Vidimus huic ab aerario pecuniam numerari quaestori ad sumptum exercitus consularis: vidimus paucis post mensibus et exercitum et consulem spoliatum. Illa omnis pecunia latuit in illa caligine ac tenebris quae totam rem publicam tum occupant. Iterum gessit hereditariam quaesturam cum Dolabella: magnam pecuniam avertit; sed ejus rationem cum damnatione Dolabellae permiscuit. Commissa est pecunia tanta praetori: non reperietis hominem timide nec leviter haec improbissima lucra ligurientem; devorare omnem pecuniam publicam non dubitavit. Ita serpit illud insitum natura malum consue-

publicam pecuniam] 'Pecuniam' is in Cod. Vat. It is not in Lag. 42, but it is in the inferior MSS. (Zumpt, who omits it). The worse are sometimes the better.

in improbis] Zumpt omits 'in' "fide meliorum librum, quaeritur enim, cui habeat, non in quo jucunditatem." Cod. Vat. also omits 'in.' But I think it doubtful if Zumpt is right.

Vidimus huic] As to this allusion, and the affair of Carbo and Dolabella, see Lib. 1. c. 13, &c. Cicero is bringing up again the old stories against Verres.

hereditariam quaesturam] This is explained by a passage in Lib. i. c. 36: "C. Malleolo quaestore Cn. Dolabellae occiso duas sibi hereditates venisse arbitratus est," &c. ligurientem;) Zumpt writes the word with rr. There is a dispute about the rr. Zumpt refers to Faernus and Bentley (Ter. Eunuch. v. 4. 14), and to the editors of Horace, 1 Sat. iii. 81, on the line—

"Semesos pisces tepidumve ligurierit jus."

On which Heindorf remarks, that Manutius and Victorius have preferred rr on the authority of the MSS.; and also Bentley in the passage, and in the passage of Terence, though the derivation from lingere, and the analogy of scaturio are in favour of the single r.—The derivation has nothing to do with the matter. The root is 'lig,' our 'lick.' Whether the termination is to be 'urio' or 'urrio,' is a different question. As other words of this form have 'urio,' I write this so also.

Cicero is not sparing of any kind of metaphor for the purpose of abuse. The meaning of the word is explained by its radical signification, and its contrast with 'devorare.' Hotmann also refers to the well-known passage in the Eunuchus, v. 4. 14:—

"Quae cum amatore suo quum coenant, liguriunt.

Harum videre ingluviem, sordes, inopiam,

Quam inhonestae solae sint domi, atque avidae cibi," &c. insitum natura] 'Insitum in natura,' all the MSS., as it appears, except Lag. 42, which omits the preposition. Zumpt observes: "difficile est statuere de praepos. in aut addenda aut abjicienda, cum praecesserit littera m," the meaning of which any one will know, who has been accustomed to observe hand-writing. I take 'natura' to be used generally, and not to mean the 'natura' of Verres only. Zumpt is inclined, on second thoughts, to think that 'natura' is not said absolutely. The form of the first part of the sentence leads us to expect a general remark, but the end pre-tudine peccandi libera, finem audaciae ut statuere ipse sibi non possit. Tenetur igitur aliquando, et in rebus quum maximis tum manifestis tenetur. Atque in eam fraudem videtur mihi divinitus incidisse, non solum ut eas poenas quas proxime meruisset solveret, sed ut illa etiam scelera ejus in Carbonem et in Dolabellam vindicarentur.

LXXVII. Etenim nova quoque alia res, judices, extitit in hoc crimine quae tollat omnem dubitationem superioris illius decumani criminis. Nam, ut illud missum faciam, permultos aratores in alteras decumas et in haec octingenta millia modium quod emptum populo Romano darent non habuisse, et a tuo procuratore, hoc est, ab Apronio, emisse; ex quo intelligi potest nihil te aratoribus reliqui fecisse: ut hoc praeteream, quod multorum est testimoniis expositum, potest illo quidquam esse certius, in tua potestate atque in tuis horreis omne frumentum Siciliae per triennium atque omnes fructus agri decumani fuisse? Quum enim a civitatibus pro frumento pecuniam exigebas, unde erat frumentum quod Romam mitteres, si tu id non omne clausum et compressum possidebas? Ita in eo frumento primus tibi ille quaestus erat ipsum frumentum quod erat ereptum ab aratoribus: alter, quod id frumentum improbissime per triennium partum non semel sed bis, neque uno sed duobus pretiis, unum et idem frumentum, vendidisti: semel civitatibus, HS xv in medimnum; iterum populo Romano, a quo HS xxi in medimna pro eodem illo frumento abstulisti. At enim frumentum Centuripinorum et Agrigentinarum et nonnullorum fortasse praeterea probasti, et his populis pecuniam dissolvisti.

sents us with a special application, if 'ipse' must be applied to Verres. It seems doubtful if all is right. Klotz has 'insitum in,' and also 'ipse sibi non possit.' Zumpt omits 'sibi,' which he says is not in the best MSS., and that it is not wanted, because you can easily understand 'suae' after 'audaciae.' There is not much in the second reason for the omission of 'sibi.'

Cicero has a use of 'serpit' in the De Amicitia (c. 12), which may be compared with this.

77. et a tuo] 'Sed a tuo,' the common reading. Zumpt has 'et a tuo,' from the better MSS.; and adds, that 'et' has the signification of 'sed' after a negation. Whether it is exactly like 'sed,' I am not sure; but there is no doubt that 'et' is the better reading. Both 'et' and 'que' often come after such a negative clause, and a man gets a kind of feeling of their propriety in certain cases. As to reducing such a thing to rule, by saying that 'et' is sometimes put for 'sed,' that is saying nothing at all. Cicero says (Ad Q. Fr. i. l. c. 1): "neve te obrui tamquam fluctu sic magnitudine negotii sinas: contraque erigas ac resistas," &c. And in this oration, c. 4: "nihil eorum est; contraque sunt omnia," &c.

HS xv in medimnum;] Ernesti expresses some surprise that we have first 'in medimnum,' and then 'in medimna.' The variation in the expression seems so easy and natural, that a reader might not have observed it, if a critic had not pointed it out. It wants no explanation.

dissolvisti.] This is a word of payment, but 'solvo' is sufficient. It is the loosening of the 'obligatio' (see note, p. 108). For instances of 'dissolvo' in this sense, see Forcellini. The verb and its derivatives Sint sane aliquae civitates in eo numero quarum frumentum improbare nolueris. Quid tandem his civitatibus omnisne pecunia quae pro frumento debita est dissoluta est? Unum mihi reperi, non populum sed aratorem: vide, quaere, circumspice, si quis forte est ex ea provincia in qua tu triennium praefuisti qui te nolit perisse: unum, inquam, da mihi ex illis aratoribus, qui tibi ad statuas pecuniam contulerunt, qui sibi dicat omne esse pro frumento quod oportuerit solutum. Confirmo, iudices, neminem esse dicturum.

LXXVIII. Ex omni pecunia quam aratoribus solvere debuisti certis nominibus deductiones fieri solebant: primum pro spectatione et collybo; deinde pro nescio quo cerario. Haec omnia, iudices, non rerum certarum sed furtorum improbissimorum sunt vocabula. Nam collybus esse qui potest quum utuntur omnes uno genere nummorum? Cerarium vero quid vocas? quomodo hoc nomen ad rationes magistratus, quomodo ad pecuniam publicam allatum est? Nam illud genus tertium deductionis erat ejusmodi, quasi non modo liceret sed etiam oporteret, nec solum oporteret sed plane necesse esset. Scribae nomine de tota pecunia binae quinquagesimae detrahebantur. Quis hoc tibi concessit? quae lex? quae senatus auctoritas? quae porro aequitas, ut tantam pecuniam scriba tuus auferret sive de aratorum bonis sive de populi Romani vectigalibus? Nam si potest ista pecunia sine aratorum injuria detrahi, populus Romanus habeat, tantis praesertim aerarii angustiis: sin autem et populus Romanus voluit et aequum est ita solvi aratoribus, tuus apparitor, parva mercede populi conductus, de aratorum bonis praedabitur? Et in hac causa scribarum ordinem in me concitabit Hortensius, et eorum commoda a me labefactari atque oppugnari jura dicet? Quasi vero hoc scribis ullo exemplo aut ullo have a great variety of meanings, easily deducible from the primary sense.

78. deductiones] These official gentlemen contrived to get some of the money which passed through their hands, and was intended for other people, under the name of 'deductiones.' First, under the head of 'spectatio,' or proving the money to be good, which of course was a mere pretence. Next, for the exchange of one kind of money for another, 'aggio,' as Forcellini says, using an Italian word. 'Collybus' occurs again in Cicero, Ad Att. xii. 6. Then comes the 'cerarium,' or wax money. Nobody now knows what that is. We may be consoled for our ignorance, by considering that the Sicilians themselves did not know. It was merely the name under which a sum of money was paid. I conjecture that we have something like it. There is one Chafewax (sometimes called Chaff-wax), thus described; "an officer in chancery, that fitteth the wax for sealing of the writs, commissions, and such other instruments as are there made to be issued out." The wax in the two cases may be used in a very different way; but it comes to the same end. It produces money.

The third 'deductio' was monstrous; two fiftieths, or one twenty-fifth, or four per cent., deducted under the head of 'scriba.' This is worse than chafewax. Scriba was paid, as it appears, by the Populus Romanus, small wages (parva merces), and he helped himself to something more, as usual in such cases.

jure sit concessum. Quid ego vetera repetam? aut quid eorum scribarum mentionem faciam quos constat sanctissimos homines atque innocentissimos fuisse? non me fugit, judices, vetera exempla pro fictis fabulis jam audiri atque haberi. In his temporibus ver-sabor miseris ac perditis. Nuper, Hortensi, quaestor fuisti. Quid tui scribae fecerint tu potes dicere: ego de meis hoc dico, quum in eadem ista Sicilia pro frumento civitatibus pecuniam solverem, et mecum duos frugalissimos homines scribas haberem, L. Mamilium et L. Sergium, non modo istas duas quinquagesimas sed omnino nummum nullum cuiquam esse deductum. LXXIX. Dicerem hoc mihi totum esse attribuendum, judices, si illi unquam hoc a me postulassent, si omnino unquam cogitassent. Quamobrem enim scriba deducat, et non potius mulio qui advexit, tabellarius cujus adventu certiores facti petiverunt, praeco qui adire jussit, viator aut Venerereus qui fiscum sustulit? Quae pars operae aut opportu-nitatis in scriba est cur ei non modo merces tanta detur, sed cur cum eo tantae pecuniae partitio fiat? Ordo est honestus. Quis

79. attribuendum,] He means to say that he should have taken all the blame to himself, if his 'scribae' had ever made such a demand. In Lib. 5. c. 41, there is: "ut aut aliis causam calamitatis attribueret." But the word may be used without an accusative, and the context will explain it.

et non potius] "Non mulio potius qui advexerit:" Klotz, which appears to be the reading of Cod. Vat., except that it has 'plus' for 'potius.'—'non tabell.:' Klotz.

petiverunt,] The Siculi receive news of the arrival of the money by the letter-carrier, and then go to ask for their money, the payment for their corn. When they came, they would be called in order by the 'praeco,' and then they would go up to the place where the 'scribae' were sitting, and get their money, after the 'deductiones' were made.

viator aut Venerereus] See Act. i. c. 8. It would not be making a very bold conjecture to suppose that all these distinguished functionaries received a piece of coin for their services, from the 'aratores.'

operae] 'Quae pars operis:' Klotz from Cod. Vat.; a matter of indifference.

Ordo est honestus.] Cicero calls the 'scribae' an 'ordo,' a class. He applies to them the same name as to the 'Senatorius ordo,' 'Equestris ordo.' The subordinate functionaries attached to the magistrates formed a kind of corporate bodies, or guilds, and therefore belong to the class of artificial persons. The 'scribae' were a class that rose in number and importance with the extension of the Roman empire. They were employed in all branches of the public service; and also, like notaries on the continent, they did various kinds of business for private persons. The functions of a French notary were probably very like those of a Roman 'scriba,' so far as concerns his employment by private persons. This class of persons are mentioned under various names,—'librarii,' 'fiscales,' 'censuales;' but the name 'scribae' is the most general. They were divided into 'decuriae;' and, though this is a general term, it came to signify, when used absolutely, even in the Republican period, the body of 'scribae;' and it certainly has this meaning in the Imperial period. The members of the 'decuriae' were called 'decuriati;' later, 'decuriales.' These 'decuriae' had no doubt distinct names. There were 'scribae quaestorii,' 'aedilicii,' 'praetorii,' and others. They existed in the other towns besides Rome (Sueton. Claud. c. 1). Horace (1 Sat. v. 34) met with one at Fundi, a self-sufficient fool. These guilds of 'scribae' obtained great privileges at Rome, and subsequently at Constantinople.

The principal passages in the Roman writers about 'scribae,' are this chapter; Cicero Ad Q. Fr. ii. 2; Tacit. Ann. xii. 27; Suetonius, August. 57; Claudius, 1. Among modern writers, Niebuhr, Roman History, negat, aut quid ea res ad hanc rem pertinet? Est vero honestus, quod eorum hominum fidei tabulae publicae periculaque magistratum committuntur. Itaque ex his scribis qui digni sunt illo ordine, patribus familias, viris bonis atque honestis, percontamini, quid sibi istae quinquagesimae velint. Jam omnes intelligetis novam rem totam atque indignam videri. Ad eos me scribas revoca, si placet: noli hos colligere, qui nummulis corrogatis de nepotum bonis ac de scenicorum corollariis, quum decuriam emerunt, ex iii. 298, &c., English translation, Savigny, System, &c., ii. 253, &c., and Becker, Handbuch, &c. ii. 2. p. 372, may be consulted.

This class of men, who now aspired to the rank of an 'ordo' in the state, took an active part in political matters, and in times of political excitement appeared in the public places with the clubs (sodalitates), and threatened the peace of Rome. Cicero mentions an occasion on which the Senate made a Consultum, which required these turbulent fellows (sodalitates decuriatique) to disperse, under pain of coming under the laws De Vi. The 'scribae' belonged to the class of 'libertini'; they were all 'libertini,' as Niebuhr affirms, that is, not the sons of free-born Romans. It appears that admission into these 'decuriae,' or some of them, was purchased. Admission was also obtained in other ways, as, for instance, by the nomination of a 'magistratus.' There is a note on the Decuriae and the Scribae by the learned Henri de Valois, in which note he informs us, that Salmasius (Claude de Saumaise) stole the substance of it. (Ammianus Marcellinus, Lib. xxviii. c. 6, ed. J. Gronov.) Horace (Life in the editions of Suetonius) is said to have got, perhaps bought (scriptum quaestorium comparavit) at Rome, a 'writer's' place in the office of the 'quaestor.' The writings of Horace clearly show a greater familiarity with many legal and technical terms than one would expect from a poet, and an indolent man; and he may have picked up some of this learning when he was in the 'quaestor's' office.

It would be instructive to trace the history of guilds and companies, which have made so large a figure in modern towns, to their Roman originals; for they are undoubtedly of Roman origin. The ancient guilds at Rome were nine in number, as Niebuhr remarks; but there were more than the ancient nine of Numa's institution (Plutarch, Numa, c. 17). Niebuhr mentions bankers, merchants, watermen of the river, and butchers. (Comp. these orations, Lib. ii. c. 55; "Nam aut publice," &c.). But it is probable that all the trades had their guilds in the later periods, both at Rome and in other towns of Italy. The 'fullones,' for instance, were a numerous guild at Rome. There is a remark of Niebuhr which contains the germ for large inquiries, and which will be appreciated by those who know that Roman history is more than the history of battles and of conquest: "if, according to the view of a clear-sighted jurist, which seems to me to carry conviction with it as soon as it is uttered, the notaries preserved the Roman law in Italy, the manes of the heroes and lawgivers of Rome owe it for the most part to a guild, in which they saw, not unjustly, a germ which might produce the destruction of the old noble institutions—and the pretensions of which rendered them indignant—that a late posterity is enabled to know and admire these institutions, and their development."

The English name 'scrivener' reminds us of the Roman name 'scriba'; and his practice, so far as I can make it out, bore some resemblance to the private business of a 'scriba.' The race is said to have expired in the person of Jack Ellis, who is mentioned in Boswell's Life of Johnson, iii. 20. (Tomlins, Law Dict.)

patribus familias,] Cod. Vat. has 'patribus familiis,' which one might suppose to be a blunder. But Zumpt (in his larger edition) and Klotz have it. Zumpt observes, that Priscian (p. 679, Putsch.), after speaking of the old genitive of the first declension in -as, says, We may, however, write 'patrem familiae,' 'patres familiae,' and 'familiarum' and 'familiis'; and to prove it he quotes this passage. Lambinus means to say, that 'familiis' occurs in Cod. Fabr.; and Zumpt adds, that it is the reading of Lag. 29.—'percontamini'; Klotz writes, 'percunctamini.'—'novam rem totam:' the order of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'rem novam totam.'

de nepotum bonis] Zumpt says: "Vetustiores libri scripti editique omnes bonis:"

primo ordine explosorum in secundum ordinem civitatis se venisse dicunt. Eos scribas tecum disceptatores hujus criminis habeo qui istos scribas moleste ferunt esse. Tametsi, quum in eo ordine videamus esse multos non idoneos, qui ordo industriae propositus est et dignitati, mirabimur turpes aliquos ibi esse quo cuivis pretio pervenire licet?

LXXX. Tu ex pecunia publica HS terdecies scribam tuum permissu tuo quum abstulisse fateare, reliquam tibi ullam defen-but he writes donis, for which his reasons seem very insufficient. Cicero says that they had picked up their money from spendthrifts (nepotes), and from the pay, perhaps (corollariis), of actors (scenicorum). Manutius explains 'scenicorum' to be 'spectantium scenicorum ludos;' but I know of no case in which 'scenici,' used thus absolutely, means any thing except actors. The learned commentator, no doubt, saw a difficulty in the words 'de nepotum,' &c.; for if these men got their money partly from the 'bona' or 'dona' of extravagant people, and partly from the 'corollaria' of 'scenici,' then the 'scenici' and 'nepotes' are co-ordinated as two classes of persons, out of whom these men got the means of buying a 'decuria.' This is a difficulty which cannot be got rid of, nor explained by those who, like Zumpt and many others, consider the men of whom Cicero speaks to be 'scenici,' or actors. Whatever, then, be the sense of 'de scenicorum corollariis,' it signifies a source of gain, which Cicero puts on the same footing as 'de nepotum bonis.' There is another difficulty in 'ex primo ordine explosorum.' 'Explosorum' is taken to be the genitive plural of the passive participle, and to signify that these men, originally actors, and poor actors, in the first class of those who were hissed off the stage, after buying a 'decuria,' think that they have attained the second 'ordo' in the state, or have attained equestrian rank. But, if my explanation so far is right, this cannot be the meaning of 'explosorum,' which I take to be the genitive plural of 'explosor,' though I find no other example of the noun. The sense of 'explosus' is well known. Horat. 1 Sat. x. 76:—

"Nam satis est equitem mihi plaudere, ut audax Contemptis aliis explosa Arbuscula dixit."

These men were 'explosores' at the theatre, noise-makers, hisses, and so forth; and perhaps the 'scenici' paid them to keep quiet. The 'corollaria' were crowns or chaplets given to the actors, originally of flowers, it is said; afterwards, crowns of thin metal, silvered or gilded, were given them; and afterwards the word seems to have got the meaning of money (crown money), for it is nothing unusual to disguise a money payment under another name. Zumpt's remark on the passage seems to be quite wide of the mark; he takes the people to be actors. Klotz takes them not to be actors; and I suppose that he takes 'explosorum' to be a noun; for he says: "diese Leute, meint nun Cicero, hätten sich in die Decurie eingekauft und wären somit von dem Stande der gemeinen Schmarotzer (ex primo ordine explosorum) in den zweiten Stand (in secundum ordinem civitatis), also in den Ritterstand übergegangen." This passage presents considerable difficulties; and with this explanation I recommend it to others who may be more successful than I have been.

For 'explosorum,' Cod. Vat. has 'expilosophorum,' which seems to be purely a blunder, and to promise nothing for the pains of looking into it.

turpes—esse] 'turpes esse aliquos,' Cod. Vat. and Klotz.—'proelio licet,' Cod. Vat.; where 'proelio' is an obvious blunder, but we get perhaps a better order of words than in the ordinary reading, 'licet pretio.'

80. terdecies] There is good authority for 'terdecies' or 'terdecies,' though most of the MSS. have 'tredecies,' which is nearer the analogy of 'tredecem.' Hotman says, that 'terdecies' is the same as 'trices,' which, as Zumpt observes, requires to be proved. Lambinus would write, 'quattuordecies,' because one twenty-fifth of the sum mentioned in c. 70, is 'quattuordecies,' and a few thousands more; but the sum in c. 70 is not given as absolutely the true sum, for Cicero says (c. 70), "in alteras decumas fere ad nonagies."

Catoni, consulari homini, clarissimo viro, HS IIII millibus lis aestimata sit, in eadem civitate apparitori tuo esse concessum ut HS uno nomine terdecies auferret? Hinc ille est annulus aureus quo tu istum in contione donasti: quae tua donatio singulari impudentia praedita nova Siculis omnibus, mihi vero etiam incredibilis videbatur. Saepe enim nostri imperatores, superatis hostibus, optime re publica gesta, scribas suos annulis aureis in contione donarunt: tu vero quibus rebus gestis, quo hoste superato, contionem donandi causa advocare ausus es? Neque enim solum scribam tuum annulo, sed etiam virum fortissimum ac tui dissimillimum, Q. Rubrium, excellentem virtute, auctoritate, copiis, corona et phaleris et torque donasti, M. impudentia praedita] 'Praedita' is in Cod. Vat. It is not in Lag. 42; and Zumpt omits it. See Lib. 5. c. 42.

annulus aureus] According to Klotz, or rather according to the German edition of Adam's Roman Antiquities, which Klotz quotes, the presentation of the ring was a formal declaration of the reception of the receiver into the equestrian 'ordo.' Becker, Handbuch, ii. 1, p. 277, has some remarks on this passage. This is further explained by the following words: "ut esset unde scriba tuus . . . tueretur," which Klotz explains to mean, "that he might have the requisite census for the equestrian rank, to which you had raised him."

Crowns (coronae), ornaments of metal (phalerae, Lib. iv. c. 12), and ornaments worn round the neck (torques), were presented to men who distinguished themselves in military service; cheap rewards, like the cross of the Legion of Honour, not so costly as pensions.

horum civium] 'horum trium civium:' Zumpt. Cod. Vat. omits 'trium.'

videbas in contione] Zumpt omits 'in contione,' on the authority of Lag. 42; bonis istum annulum aureum donabas, qui ipsi annulos aureos posuerant liberisque suis detraxerant, ut esset unde scriba tuus hoc tuum munus ac beneficium tueretur? quae porro tua praefatio donationis fuit? Illa scilicet vetus atque imperatoria, 'quandoque tu quid in proelio, in bello, in re militari'—cujus ne mentio quidem te praetore ulla facta est: an illa, 'quandoque tu nulla unquam mihi in cupiditate ac turpitudine defuisti, omnibusque in iisdem flagitiis mecum et in legatione et in praetura et hic in Sicilia versatus es, ob hasce res, quoniam te re locupletavi, hoc annulo aureo dono.' Vera haec fuisset oratio. Neque enim iste annulus aureus abs te datus istum virum fortem sed hominem locupletem esse declarat. Ita eundem annulum ab alio datum testem virtutis duceremus; abs te donatum comitem pecuniae judicamus.

LXXXI. Dictum, judices, est de decumano frumento: dictum de empto: extremum et reliquum est de aestimato, quod quum

"quoniam parum confert ad rem." I think most readers will have no objection to 'in contione,' and will think that it 'multum confert ad rem,' for it was not merely seeing, but seeing in the 'contio.'

quandoque tu] This was one of the old Roman precise 'formulae,' which was retained for solemn occasions. No people stuck more closely to the remembrance of the past. Zumpt refers to Livy (ix. 10), and the reading of Gronovius there in support of 'Quandoque tu,' instead of 'Quando tu,' the reading of Zumpt's MSS., except the four better, which have 'Quandoque tu.' Klotz refers to the Pro Caecina, c. 19: "Quandoque te in jure conspicio." The Variorum edition, the text of which is often very bad, has 'Quanto tu quidem,' which may be an error of the press; for presently after it reads 'Quandoquidem tu,' &c. ob hasce res,] 'Ob eas res,' Zumpt, from Lag. 42. The 're' after 'te' is only found in Lag. 42; but Zumpt and Klotz accept it, and it is hard to reject it.

81. aestimato,] Cicero explains what he has to say clearly enough. The 'praetor' had a sum of money allowed him by the State for his household, and the price was fixed at which he must buy from the provincials. If grain was cheap, he might be able to save out of his allowance (c. 84); but, if it was dear, he still had the grain at a fixed price, and was sure of a sufficient supply, for the money was doubtless a competent allowance. We must suppose that the number of 'modii,' which the governor would want, was estimated, and that he had four 'sestertii' allowed for a 'modius' of wheat, and two for a 'modius' of barley; for Cicero says: "numero ad summam tritici adjecto;" that is, Verres claimed the right of taking a larger number of 'modii' than the number allowed (c. 79). He also fixed the price with the 'aratores' at three 'denarii' the 'modius.' The price of barley is here stated at half the price of wheat, which, according to Dureau de la Malle (Économie Politique des Romains (i. 104), was the proportion at Athens also in the time of Demosthenes. Cicero finds no fault with Verres so far; for many good governors, instead of taking from the 'aratores' the grain which they might have taken, and paying for it, allowed the 'aratores' to compound for a sum of money, which the 'aratores' might be willing to do in order to save themselves trouble; and so the governor would get something under the head of 'frumentum aestimatum,' in addition to the sum that he had for his allowance. If the price was higher than the sum allowed by the State to the governor, the 'aratores' might, without loss to themselves, give him a sum of money, instead of selling corn for less than the market price; and the governor would no doubt take care that he was not a loser by the transaction. Verres, who put no bounds to his illegal conduct, extorted, as it appears, for every 'modius' that he was entitled to buy, three 'denarii,' or twelve sesterces, that is, he got all this money for nothing; and he got it in respect of a much larger number of 'modii' than he was entitled to demand.

magnitudine pecuniae, tum injuriae genere quemvis debet commovere; tum vero eo magis quod ad hoc crimen non ingeniosa aliqua defensio sed improbissima confessio comparatur. Nam quum ex S. C. et ex legibus frumentum in cellam ei sumere liceret; idque frumentum senatus ita aestimasset, quaternis HS tritici modium, binis hordei; iste, numero ad summam tritici adjecto, tritici modios singulos cum aratoribus ternis denariis aestimavit. Non est in hoc crimen, Hortensi, ne forte ad hoc meditare, multos viros bonos et fortes et innocentes cum aratoribus et cum civitatibus frumentum in cellam quod sumi oporteret aestimasse, et pecuniam pro frumento abstulisse. Scio quid soleat fieri: scio quid liceat. Nihil quod ante fuerit in consuetudine bonorum nunc in istius facto reprehenditur. Hoc reprehendo, quod, quum in Sicilia HS binis tritici modius esset, ut istius epistola ad te missa declarat, summum HS ternis, id quod et testimoniis omnium et tabulis aratorum planum factum antea est, tum iste pro tritici modiis singulis denarios ternos ab aratoribus exegit.

LXXXII. Hoc crimen est; ut intelligas non ex aestimatione neque ex ternis denariis pendere crimen, sed ex conjunctione in cellam quod] Zumpt places a comma after 'frumentum,' and another after 'oporteret;' and he says: "conjuximus (in cellam quod), mutata interpunctione, nam sumi per se nihil est. De postposito pronomine relativo, vid. ad cap. 95." His remark on c. 95, is on 'idem qui fecerint.' If we must have pointing, no doubt the point must be before 'in cellam;' but I cannot understand how any person who has attended to the order of Latin, will be helped by this pair of commas. On the contrary, a person who is accustomed to read Latin straight forward, as he does a modern language, and to consider that it stands in the right order, a fact which I suppose nobody will dispute, will feel these points rather a hindrance than a help.

82. conjunctione] There is no dispute about the meaning of this passage. The offence of Verres did not consist simply in the fact that he took money instead of corn, or simply in the fact that he took three 'denarii' for each 'modius;' but it consisted in the combined fact of the state of the harvest, or the price of grain (annona), and the sum that he received. All the MSS. have 'conjunctione' except Lag. 42, in which 'conjectione' is read; 'perpetua eorum verborum confusione' (Zumpt). Klotz has 'conjectione,' and he explains the passage in the same way as Zumpt, with this remark: "that the joint consideration of the then price of grain, and of the valuation of the Praetor, is a 'conjectio annonae atque aestimationis,' is of itself manifest to the intelligent reader, and we have no occasion to spend more words in defence of this reading of the best MS., which, however, Zumpt has rejected." It may be true that 'conjectio' can be thus used, but Klotz might have given us a few examples, if there are any, of 'conjectio' thus used with reference to two things. This mode of settling a question is not satisfactory, though it is usual with him.

Orelli's reading and the common reading is 'ex coauctione,' which according to Zumpt first appears in the edition of Victorius, and he does not know whether it is not a typographical error. Whatever is the origin of it, the reading has been perpetuated, and the word 'coauctio' has got a place in the lexicons. Thus it appears in the excellent lexicon of Forcellini, where there is an attempt to explain it. The passage, even in the German edition of Furlanetto's Forcellini, is read thus: 'ex coauctione annonae atque existimationis;' so that we have two blunders in five words. 'Existimationis' seems to be a typographical error; but it still stands in the last edition.

annonae atque aestimationis. Etenim haec aestimatio nata est initio, iudices, non ex praetorum aut consulum sed ex aratorum et civitatum commodo. Nemo enim fuit initio tam impudens qui, quum frumentum deberetur, pecuniam posceret. Certe hoc ab aratore primum est profectum, aut ab ea civitate cui imperabatur: quum aut frumentum vendidisset, aut servare vellet, aut in eum locum quo imperabatur portare nollet, petivit in beneficii loco et gratiae ut sibi pro frumento quanti frumentum esset dare liceret. Ex huiusmodi principio atque ex liberalitate et accommodatione magistratum consuetudo aestimationis introducta est. Secuti sunt avariores magistratus, qui tamen in avaritia sua non solum viam quaestus invenerunt verum etiam exitum ac rationem defensionis. Instituerunt semper in ultima ac difficillima ad portandum loca frumentum imperare, ut vecturae difficultate ad quam vellent aestimationem pervenirent. In hoc genere facilius est existimatio quam reprehensio, ideo quod eum qui hoc facit avarum possumus existimare, crimen in eo constituere non tam facile possumus; quod videtur concedendum magistratibus nostris esse, ut iis quo loco velint frumentum accipere liceat. Itaque hoc est quod multi fortasse fecerunt, et ita multi ut ii quos innocentissimos meminimus aut audivimus non fecerint.

LXXXIII. Quaero abs te nunc, Hortensi, cum utris tandem istius factum collaturus es? cum iis, credo, qui benignitate adducti per beneficium et gratiam civitatibus concesserunt ut nummos pro frumento darent. Ita credo petisse ab isto aratores ut, quum HS ternis tritici modium vendere non possent, pro singulis modiis denarios ternos dare liceret. An quoniam hoc non audes dicere, illuc confugies, vecturae difficultate adductos denarios ternos dare maluisse? Cujus vecturae? quo ex loco in quem locum ne portent? Philomelione Ephesum? De et—quidem cum objectione sermonem continuantis vide Goerenz. ad Lib. iii. de Legg. c. 10. p. 247, et ad l de Fin. 10, § 35 ” (Zumpt). The proposed correction of Manutius, ‘malim pro sententia, sed ita multi,’ is certainly unnecessary. The best critics sometimes trip.

quo ex loco . . Ephesum?] As some persons may doubt about the right pointing of this passage, I give that of Klotz, which differs from the text, which is that of Zumpt. ‘Quo ex loco? in quem locum? ne portent Philomelio Ephesum?’ Cod. Vat. has ‘Philomelo’ without ‘ne.’ The name of the place is Philomelium, a town of Phrygia, and of course at some distance from Ephesus. The site has been fixed at various places by various geographers. Akshehr, where there are ruins and inscriptions, is supposed by some of the most recent authorities to be the place.

esse soleat: video quot dierum via sit: video Philomelensibus expedire, quanti Ephesi sit frumentum, tantum dare potius in Phrygia quam Ephesum portare, aut ad emendum frumentum Ephesum pecuniam et legatos mittere. In Sicilia vero quid ejusmodi est? Henna mediterranea est maxime. Coge ut ad aquam tibi, id quod summi juris est, frumentum Hennenses metiantur, vel Phintiam, vel Halesam, vel Catinam, loca inter se maxime diversa: eodem die quo jusseris deportabunt. Tametsi ne vectura quidem est opus. Nam totus quaestus hic, judices, aestimationis ex annonae natus est varietate. Hoc enim magistratus in provincia assequi potest, ut ibi accipiat ubi est carissimum. Ideo valet ista ratio aestimationis in Asia: valet in Hispania: valet in his provinciis in quibus unum pretium frumento esse non solet. In Sicilia vero quid cujusquam intererat quo loco daret? neque enim portandum erat: et, quo quisque vehere jussus esset, ibi tanti frumentum emeret quanti domi vendidisset. Quamobrem si vis, Hortensi, docere aliquid ab isto simile in aestimatione atque a ceteris esse factum, doceas oportebit aliquo in loco Siciliae, praetore Verre, ternis denariis tritici modium fuisse.

LXXXIV. Vide quam tibi defensionem patefecerim, quam iniquam in socios, quam remotam ab utilitate rei publicae, quam sejunctam a voluntate ac sententia legis. Tu, quum tibi ego frumentum in meis agris, atque in mea civitate, denique in iis loci (Hamilton, Researches in Asia Minor, i. 472, ii. 184.) Cicero takes an instance from the province of Asia, where Ephesus was the head-quarters of the Roman governor. We collect from this chapter and elsewhere that the governor could require the corn to be delivered at any place, and of course at the place of his residence. It might then, as Cicero says, be for the interest of the Philomelenses to pay in Phrygia the price of corn at Ephesus, rather than convey the corn all the way there, and only receive the governor's price. This monstrous abuse of the Roman governors is without any excuse, and yet we learn from Cicero that it was tolerated. The governor had his money allowance for corn, and might have bought with it all that he wanted at Ephesus (for instance), for we are to suppose that there was plenty in the market there, or Cicero would not have added 'aut ad emendum frumentum . . . mittere.' Cicero admits that if Hortensius could name a place in Sicily where corn was three 'denarii' the 'modius,' Verres would only have acted like other governors, in Asia and Spain, for example, in receiving three 'denarii' for every 'modius.'

Phintiam,] 'Phintia' was at the mouth of the Himera, the larger river of that name, on the southern side of the island. The position of Halesa and Catina has been mentioned. The distances from Henna to Phintia (now Alicata, at the mouth of the river Salso), Halesa, and Catina, would not be quite the longest distance that corn would have to be carried from the interior to any good port. If Cicero means to say that they could carry it down in a single day, he speaks rather oratorically, for the distance from Henna (Castro Giovanni) to Catina is about forty miles in a direct line. In summer the roads might be pretty good, even if they were only the natural roads, not 'munitae.' But in the wet season so rapid a transport is only an oratorical possibility.

tanti frumentum] This is the reading of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'tantidem.'

in quibus versaris, rem geris, provinciam administras, paratus sim dare, angulum mihi aliquem eligas provinciae reconditum ac derelictum? jubeas ibi me metiri quo portare non expediat, ubi emere non possim? Improbum facinus, judices, non ferendum, nemini lege concessum, sed fortasse adhuc in nullo etiam vindicatum. Tamen ego hoc, quod ferri nego posse, Verri concedo, judices, et largior. Si ullo in loco ejus provinciae frumentum tanti fuit quanti iste aestimavit, hoc crimen in istum reum valere oportere non arbitror. Verum enimvero quum esset HS binis aut etiam ternis quibusvis in locis provinciae, duodenos sestertios exegisti. Si mihi tecum neque de annona neque de aestimatione tua potest esse controversia, quid sedes, quid expectas, quid defendis? Utrum tibi pecuniae coactae conciliatae videntur adversus leges, adversus rem publicam, cum maxima sociorum injuria; an vero id ratione, ordine, e re publica, sine cujusquam injuria factum esse defendis? Quum tibi senatus ex aerario pecuniam prompsisset, et singulos tibi denarios adnumerasset, quos tu pro singulis modiis aratoribus solveres, quid facere debuisti? Si, quod L. Piso ille Frugi, qui legem de pecuniis repetundis primus tulit, quum emissas quanti esset, quod superaret pecuniae rettulisses: si ut ambitiosi homines aut benigni, quum pluris senatus aestimasset quam quanti esset annona, ex senatus aestimatione non ex annonae ratione solvisses: sin, ut plerique faciunt, in quo erat aliqui quaestus sed is honestus atque concessus, frumentum, quoniam vilius erat, ne emissas: sumpsisses id nummorum, quod tibi senatus cellae nomine concesserat.

84. in quibus versaris,] 'In quibus es, versaris,' is the common reading. Zumpt says "quorum verborum discrimen, si quis explicarit, Lag. 42 ego fidem deseram, qui es proscibit."—'Emere non possim:' all the MSS. have 'possum,' which Lambinus corrected. The ground of the correction is that there is the same reason for 'possim' that there is for 'expediat.' But it is possible that 'possum' may be the original.

quid expectas, quid defendis?] 'Quid defendis' here and a little further on is the reading of Lag. 42. The common reading in both cases is 'defendes.' By 'quid sedes,' &c., Cicero means to say, 'Why do you stay here, being already convicted?'

coactae, conciliatae] The word 'coactae' seems to be found only in Cod. Fabr. and Lag. 42; but the word is genuine. The terms of the Lex Servilia (c. 5), cited by Zumpt, are still more complete: 'ablatum captum coactum conciliatum aversumve.'

See Lib. 2. c. 57.—'ratione, ordine,' &c.; 'ratione' is only in Lag. 42. The common reading is 'recte.' These two words are often interchanged, and Zumpt has done right in preferring 'ratione.'—'aratoribus solveres;' 'aratoribus persolveres,' Klotz from Cod. Vat.

L. Piso—Frugi,] See the Excursus on 'Repetundae.' Piso was consul B.C. 133, with P. Mucius Scaevola, and was sent into Sicily against the revolted slaves. He was succeeded in the command by P. Rupilius (Orosius, v. 9). It was probably during his stay in Sicily that he behaved in the manner which Cicero mentions. He returned to the treasury so much of his allowance as he had not expended, a rare instance of disregard of money in a Roman.

quoniam vilius erat, &c.] When corn was at a less price the 'modius' than the senate had allowed for, Verres might have declined buying, that is, requiring the people

LXXXV. Hoc vero quid est? quam habet rationem, non quaero aequitatis sed ipsius improbitatis atque impudentiae? Neque enim est fere quidquam quod homines palam facere audeant in magistratu, quamvis improbe, quin ejus facti, si non bonam, at aliquam rationem afferre soleant. Hoc quid est? Venit praetor: frumentum, inquit, me abs te emere oportet. Optime. Modium denario. Benigne ac liberaliter: nam ego ternis HS non possum vendere. Mihi frumentum non opus est: nummos volo. Nam sperabam, inquit arator, me ad denarios perventurum: sed, si ita necesse est, quanti frumentum sit considera. Video esse binis HS. Quid ergo a me tibi nummorum dari potest, quum senatus tibi quaternos HS dederit? Quid possit attendite; et vos quaeso, judices, simul aequitatem praetoris attendite. Quaternos HS, quos mihi senatus decrevit et ex aerario dedit, ego habebo, et in cistam transferam de fisco. Quid postea? quid? Pro singulis modiis, quos tibi impero, tu mihi octonos HS dato. Qua ratione? Quid quaeris rationem? non tantam rationem res habet quantam utilitatem atque praedam. Dic, dic, inquit ille, planius. Senatus te voluit mihi nummos, me tibi frumentum dare: tu eos nummos, quos mihi senatus dare voluit, ipse habes; a me, cui singulos denarios dari oportuit, binos to furnish him with so much corn; for if he had bought in this way, and paid only the market price, he would not have paid the amount which it may be presumed he was expected to pay. However, he was not bound to require grain 'cellae nomine.' He could keep the money, and supply his wants in the market at a low price, like any other purchaser.

85. Benigne] A word of courtesy and politeness. 'I must buy corn of you,' says the Praetor. 'Very good,' replies the Arator. 'A denarius the modius,' continues the Praetor. 'Much obliged,' says the man, 'and your price is fair.' Cicero is using the words of common life, as Horace does, 1 Ep. vii. 15:—

"Vescere sodes.—

Jam satis est—At tu quantumvis tolle—Benigne."

mihi frumentum] The reading of Lag. 42 and Cod. Fabric. The common reading is 'mihi frumento.'

Nam sperabam,] The old reading is 'non,' which Naugerius corrected, and his emendation, which is certain, is confirmed by the three best MSS. Zumpt compares this use of 'nam' with the Greek, ἀλλὰ γάρ, and the German, ja—doch. Several instances have occurred before. Lib. 2. c. 29, &c. Zumpt says: "significat homo se assentiri, et intelligere quid rei sit, sed sibi tamen non placere."

Quid possit attendite;] "Codd. et edd. vet. possit. Victorius dedit poscit, quod et est in Lag. 42. Poscat correxit Lambinus et vulgo receptum est" (Zumpt); who reads 'poscat.' Klotz has 'quid poscit? attendite.' Orelli has the same as Zumpt. The evidence of Lag. 42 is decidedly against 'poscat;' and the amount of difference between 'poscit' and 'possit' is not enough to make us sure that 'poscit' is not an error of the copyist. I see no reason for any change, and good reason against it. The question, 'Quid ergo, &c., dari potest?' &c., has very little meaning, unless we read, 'Quid possit,' which is the answer. It is strange that a thing so plain should have been overlooked. "What money, then, can be had from me?" says the 'arator,' "when the Senate has allowed you four 'sestertii' the 'modius?'" "What can be had?" says Cicero: "attend; and you will soon hear."

quid postea?] 'quid praeterea?' Lag. 42 and Klotz.—'dari a te op.:' Klotz.

aufers, et huic praedae ac direptioni cellae nomen imponis. Haec deerat injuria et haec calamitas aratoribus, te praetore, qua reliquis fortunis omnibus everterentur. Nam quid esse reliqui poterat ei qui per hanc injuriam non modo fructum omnem amitteret, sed etiam instrumentum vendere cogeretur? Quonam se verteret? ex quo fructu nummos quos tibi daret inveniret? Decumarum nomine tantum erat ablatum quantum voluntas tulerat Apronii: pro alteris decumis emptoque frumento aut nihil datum, aut tantum datum quantum reliqui scriba fecerat, aut ultro etiam, id quod didicistis, ablatum. LXXXVI. Cogantur etiam nummi ab aratore? quomodo? quo jure? quo exemplo? Nam, quum fructus diripiebantur aratorum atque omni lacerabantur injuria, videbatur id perdere arator quod aratro ipse quaesisset, in quo elaborasset, quod agri segetesque extulissent. Quibus injuriis gravissimis tamen illud erat miserum solatium, quod id perdere videbatur, quod alio praetore eodem ex agro reparare posset. Nummos vero ut daret arator quos non exararat, quos non aratro ac manu quaerit, boves et aratrum ipsum atque omne instrumentum vendat necesse est. Non enim debetis hoc cogitare: habet idem in nummis, habet idem in urbanis praediis. Nam quum aratori aliquid imponitur, non hominis si quae sunt praeterea facultates, sed arationis ipsius vis ac ratio considerata est, quid ea sustinere, quid pati, quid efficere possit ac debeat. Quamquam illi quoque homines sunt ab isto omni ratione quantum reliqui, &c.] After deducting the 'binae quinquagesimae,' mentioned in c. 78. Manutius explains 'ultro' by 'nullo nomine, nulla causa, pro Verris ipsius libidine.' Nannius says that we ought to read 'aut ultro etiam id, quod dedistis, ablatum,' which he explains thus: "aut nihil datum aut parum datum aut hoc ipsum quod ultro dederit ab aratore revulsum." But the text appears to be right. At any rate, we have no authority for altering it; and the meaning is not obscure. "For the second 'decumae,' &c., either nothing at all was given, or only so much as remained after the 'scriba' had made his deductions, or, more than that (ultro), money was even taken from the 'aratores,' as you have been informed." Cicero has just told us that the 'arator,' instead of getting a 'denarius' for each 'modius,' received nothing at all, and had to pay two 'denarii.' He then resumes, indignantly, 'Cogantur etiam nummi,' &c. "What! shall money even be wrested from the arator?"

86. daret—exararat,] The reading of Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'det—exarat.'—Zumpt reads 'omnia instrumenta,' from Lag. 42 only, and observes, 'ne hoc quidem sine causa, nam omnia valent cetera omnia, quum jam duo sint nominata, quae omni instrumento comprehenduntur.' But 'instrumentum' is the word. Cicero only uses 'instrumenta' once in these orations at least (c. 97). He mentions the oxen, the plough, and he adds, 'all the stock,' after mentioning part. Klotz has 'instrumentum,' which is the reading of Cod. Vat.

habet idem, &c.] Zumpt omits the second 'idem' after the second 'habet.' Cod. Vat. has it.

aliquid imponitur,] The common reading is 'onus aliquid imponitur;' but Lag. 42, 'et Lamb. in margine' (Zumpt), omit 'onus.' Klotz reads 'munus aliquod imponitur,' probably a conjecture. Cod. Vat. has 'jus aliquod imponitur.'

non hominis] The English reprint of Zumpt has 'homines,' but his larger edition 'hominis,' manifestly the true reading, for it is opposed to 'arationis.'

exinaniti ac perdit, tamen hoc vobis est statuendum, quid aratorem ipsum arationis nomine muneris in rem publicam fungi ac sustinere velitis. Imponitis decumas; patiuntur: alteras; temporibus vestris serviendum putant: dent emptum praeterea; dabunt si voletis. Haec quam sint gravia, et quid his rebus detractis possit ad dominos puri ac reliqui pervenire, credo vos ex vestris rebus rusticis conjectura assequi posse. Addite nunc eodem istius edicta, instituta, injurias: addite Apronii Venereorumque servorum in agro decumano regna ac rapinas. Quamquam haec omitto: de cella loquor. Placetne vobis in cellam magistratibus vestris frumentum Siculos dare gratis? Quid hoc indignius? quid hoc iniquius? Atqui hoc scitote aratoribus, Verre praetore, optandum ac petendum fuisse.

LXXXVII. Sositheus est Entellinus, homo cum primis prudens et domi nobilis, cujus verba audietis, qui ad hoc iudicium legatus publice cum Artemone et Menisco, primariis viris, missus est. Is quum in senatu Entellino multa mecum de istius injuriis ageret, hoc dixit: si hoc de cella atque hac aestimatione concederetur, velle Siculos senatui polliceri frumentum in cellam gratis, ne post-hac tantas pecunias magistratibus nostris decerneremus. Perspicere vos certe scio Siculis quanto opere hoc expediat, non ad aequitatem conditionis sed ad minima malorum eligenda. Nam qui mille mod. Verri suae partis in cellam gratis dedisset, duo millia nummum aut summum tria dedisset: idem nunc pro eodem numero frumenti HS VIII millia dare coactus est. Hoc arator assequi per triennium, certe fructu suo, non potuit: vendiderit in rem publicam] Cod. Vat. 'in re publica;' perhaps right. Klotz has 'in re publica.'—'dent emptum,' &c.; Klotz writes: "emptum praeterea, dabunt, si voletis;" but I do not know on what authority.—"ex vestris impensis, ex vestris rebus;" Klotz from Cod. Vat.

atqui] Whether the reading should be 'atqui' (Zumpt) or 'atque' (Klotz), it is hard to say. Some of the best MSS. have 'atque.'

87. audietis] Klotz has 'audistis;' but Zumpt refers to c. 43.

non ad aequitatem] Lag. 42 and Cod. Vat. have 'non aequitate condicionis;' but the form of the sentence is against this reading.

mille mod.] This is so left by Zumpt. A man may read it 'modios' or 'modiorum,' as he pleases. Cod. Vat. has 'modium,' that is, 'modiorum.' 'Suae partis,' means 'for his share of the contribution:' "pro eo quod ad ipsum attinet" (Manutius). "In that case he would have given only two thousand sesterces, or at most (summum) three thousand."

certe fructu suo,] The reading of Manutius was 'certo,' for which he proposed 'certe.' All the editions have 'certo,' till the time of Lambinus. All Zumpt's MSS. have 'certe.' Hotmann explained 'certo' in his way, but Lambinus could not understand it; nor can any body else. 'Certe,' 'certainly,' is often equivalent to our phrase 'at least.' The 'arator' could not make such a payment out of his produce, at least; he must have sold his farming stock to raise the money.

instrumentum] Lag. 42 has again the false reading 'instrumenta.'—'magna enim:' 'magna est enim,' Cod. Vat. and Klotz; who also reads 'si modo id salva,' &c.

instrumentum necesse est. Quodsi hoc munus et hoc vectigal arator tolerare, hoc est, Sicilia ferre ac pati potest, populo Romano ferat potius quam nostris magistratibus. Magna enim pecunia, magnum praeclarumque vectigal, si modo salva provincia, si sine injuria sociorum percipere possumus. Nihil detraho magistratibus: tantundem detur in cellam quantum semper datum est: quod praeterea Verres imperat, id si facere non possunt recusent; si possunt, populi Romani potius hoc sit vectigal quam praeda praetoris. Deinde cur in isto genere solo frumenti ista aestimatio constituatur? Si est aequa et ferenda (debet populo Romano Sicilia decumas), det pro singulis modiis tritici ternos x: sibi habeat frumentum. Data tibi pecunia est, Verres, una qua frumentum tibi emeris in cellam, altera qua frumentum emeris a civitatibus quod Romam mitteres: tibi datam pecuniam domi retines, et praeterea pecuniam permagnam tuo nomine aufers. Fac idem in eo frumento quod ad populum Romanum pertinet; exige eadem aestimatione pecuniam a civitatibus, et refer quam accepisti: jam refertius erit aerarium populi Romani quam unquam fuit. At enim istam rem in publico frumento Sicilia non ferret: hanc rem in meo frumento tulit. Proinde quasi aut aequior sit ista aestimatio in tuo quam in populi Romani commodo, aut ea res quam ego dico, et ea quam tu fecisti, inter se genere injuriae, non magnitudine pecuniae differat. Verum istam ipsam cellam ferre nullo modo possunt: ut omnia remittantur, ut omnibus injuriis et calamitatibus quas te praetore tulerunt in constituatur?] The common reading is 'constituitur.' "Delector conjunctivo, quem prae-buit Lag. 42" (Zumpt). His delight must have been complete when he found that Cod. Vat. has 'constituatur' (Zumpt, Appendix). "Why should this be the rule?" &c. The pointing of this passage seems to be doubtful. It might stand thus: "Deinde cur . . . constituatur, si est aequa et ferenda? Debet populo," &c. If the common reading is right, 'debet,' &c., comes in very awkwardly after 'si est,' &c.; though it is quite intelligible if it be read rapidly as a parenthesis. The old editions have 'det' in place of 'debet,' which was hard to explain. 'Debet' is the reading of Cod. Fabric. and Lag. 42.—'ternos' means 'ternos denarios,' which Cod. Vat. has. I have adopted the reading of Cod. Vat.:

Nihil detraho] The ordinary punctuation "nihil detraho: magistratibus," &c., is properly rejected by Zumpt; but Klotz has it.

"Deinde cur in isto genere," &c., instead of "Deinde cur in uno genere," which Zumpt has.

jam refertius] 'tum refertius;' Klotz from Cod. Vat. Between 'jam' and 'tum,' ill-written, the difference is small. I prefer 'jam.'

At enim istam—hanc rem] I copy Garatoni's note, quoted by Zumpt, not that this passage has any difficulty, but to show that a good Italian scholar is fully aware of the meaning of 'iste:' "quam tu dicis, deinde hanc rem, quam ego feci." A note of a distinguished scholar (F. A. Wolf, Demosthenis oratio adversus Leptinem, p. 222) may not be out of place here: "nimirum in Graecis oratoribus pronomen οὗτος notat et judicem et clientem et adversarium, quum Latine iste dicatur de adversario, hic de cliente et judice. Vid. Aesch. et Demosth. Or. De Corona, Ciceron. pro Rosc. Amer. et alibi passim:" as in these Verrine orations for instance.

posterum liberentur, istam se cellam atque istam aestimationem negant se ullo modo ferre posse.

LXXXVIII. Multa Sophocles Agrigentinus apud Cn. Pompeium consulem nuper, homo disertissimus et omni doctrina et virtute ornatissimus, pro tota Sicilia de aratorum miseriis graviter et copiose dixisse ac deplorassee dicitur; ex quibus hoc iis qui aderant, nam magno conventu acta res est, indignissimum videbatur, qua in re senatus optime ac benignissime cum aratoribus egisset, large liberaliterque aestimasset, in ea re praedari praetorem, bonis everti aratores; et id non modo fieri, sed ita fieri quasi liceat concessumque sit.

Quid ad haec Hortensius? Falsum esse crimen? Hoc nunquam dicet. Non magnam hac ratione pecuniam captam? Ne id quidem dicet. Non injuriam factam Siculis atque aratoribus? Qui poterit dicere? Quid igitur dicet? Fecisse alios. Quid est hoc? Utrum crimini defensio an comitatus exsilio quaeritur? Tu in hac re publica, atque in hac hominum libidine, et, ut adhuc habuit se status judiciorum, etiam licentia, non ex jure, non ex aequitate, non ex lege, non ex eo quod oportuerit, non ex eo quod licuerit, sed ex eo quod aliquis fecerit, id quod reprehenditur recte factum esse defendes? Fecerunt alii. Quid, alia quam multa? Cur in hoc uno istam se cellam—negant se ullo, &c.] In both cases Cod. Vat. omits 'se;' and in both cases Klotz follows it.

88. Sophocles Agrigentinus] Cod. Vat. has 'Sosippus,' and of course Klotz has. The reading is uncertain, for Lag. 42 has 'Sotiis Agrigentinus,' which Zumpt, perhaps correctly, takes to be for Sosis, which is a Greek name. When this Sophocles or Sosippus addressed Cn. Pompeius, one of the 'consuls' of this year, he addressed him probably as a 'legatus,' and presented to him the 'postulata' of his 'civitas,' as was usual on such occasions.

non modo—sed ita] When 'non modo' may be rendered 'not only,' that is, when the thing mentioned in the clause 'non modo' is affirmed, and something is added to it, 'sed' is followed by 'etiam,' generally, though not always. 'Ita' seems to perform the function of 'etiam' here.

comitatus exsilio] This clearly implies that 'exsilium' was a consequence of a conviction under the 'lex' under which Verres was tried. The condemned must leave Rome, and no doubt a limit was fixed within which he must not approach the city. As to this matter of exile, the reader may consult the article in Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities, and Niebuhr's Roman History.

Fecerunt alii, &c.] Zumpt observes that most of the MSS. and the old editions have 'aliqui alia,' &c. The common reading now, is that which Nannius says is the reading of his old MS. 'alii alia.' But Lag. 42 has 'alii quidem.' Zumpt accordingly reads: Fecerunt alii quidem alia quam multa; and he explains 'quam multa' to be the same as 'quamvis multa,' but adds, that it does not occur elsewhere in Cicero, though it does in other Latin writers; and he refers to Spalding, Ad Quintil. x. 7, 7. Cod. Vat. has 'alii quid;' out of which Klotz has made: "Fecerunt alii quid? alia quam multa?" But in his collation at the foot of the page he has: "Fecerunt alii. Quid? alia quam multa." His book is not remarkable for typographical accuracy. Cicero has already said: "Fecisse alios. Quid est hoc?" The supposed defence of Verres was that others had done the same thing, which Cicero says is no defence: 'Utrum crimini,' &c. He now resumes the 'Fecisse' in the form 'Fecerunt.' 'Fecerunt alii.' The excuse of others having done the same thing has been disposed of. He is now going to speak of the supposed defence of others having done other things; for the words crimine isto genere defensionis uteris? Sunt quaedam omnino in te singularia, quae in nullum hominem alium dici neque convenire possint; quaedam tibi cum multis communia. Ergo, ut omittam tuos peculatus, ut ob jus dicendum pecunias acceptas, ut ejusmodi cetera quae forsitan alii quoque etiam fecerint; illud, in quo te gravissime accusavi, quod ob judicandam rem pecuniam accepisses, eadem ista ratione defendes, fecisse alios? Ut ego assentiar orationi, defensionem tamen non probabo. Potius enim te damnato ceteris angustior locus improbitatis defendendae relinquetur, quam te absoluto alii quod audacissime fecerunt recte fecisse existimentur.

LXXXIX. Lugent omnes provinciae: queruntur omnes liberi populi: regna denique omnia de nostris cupiditatibus et injuriis expostulant: locus intra oceanum jam nullus est neque tam longinquus neque tam reconditus, quo non per haec tempora nostrorum hominum libido iniquitasque pervaserit. Sustinere jam populus Romanus omnium nationum, non vim, non arma, non bellum, sed luctus, lacrimas, querimonias non potest. In ejusmodi re ac mori-

'Cur in hoc uno,' &c., imply that Verres is going to defend what he did, by saying that others had done other things. Cicero accordingly says in reply to 'Fecerunt alii.' 'Quid, alia quam multa?' "Well, suppose they have done other things, as many as you please, why do you adopt this mode of defence in the case of this one particular crime of yours?" Cod. Vat. has 'cur in hoc crimine;' but Klotz does not follow it.

There still remains another mode of explaining this passage. If we omit the 'quid' we may write 'Fecerunt alii aliquam multa:' 'Others have done a good many things;' or 'Fecerunt alii. Quid, aliquam multa?' 'Others have done so. Well, suppose they have done a good many things.' See Lib. 4. c. 25, on 'aliquam multa.' As to the argument 'Fecisse alios,' &c., Lambinus refers to a passage in the oration of Demosthenes against Androtion (c. 2), where Demosthenes is handling similar matter; φήσει τοίνυν ἀπάσας . . . ὥσπερ γὰρ, εἴ τις ἐκείνων προήλω, σὺ τὰδ' οὐκ ἂν ἔγραψας, οὕτως, ἂν σὺ νῦν δίκην δῶς, ἄλλος οὐ γράψει. He contrasts the condensed and subtle style of the Athenian with the copiousness and fulness of the Roman. The matter of the two passages is the same, and one might almost suppose that there is something of imitation in Cicero, particularly if we compare the concluding words of the Greek with the last sentence of this chapter. The manner of the two orators is very different. Each has his merits; but the severer taste will prefer the Athenian. Lambinus also compares a passage from the Busiridis Encomium of Isocrates (c. 18); ἐπεὶ τὸν γε λόγον ὃν συνέγραψας, οὐκ ἀπολογία ὑπὲρ Βουσίριδος ἀλλὰ ὁμολογίαν τῶν ἐγκαλουμένων δικαίως ἂν τις εἶναι νομίσειεν, &c. The style of Isocrates here is not unlike that of Cicero in this passage, full and flowing, but less vigorous than that of the Roman.

89. denique] 'Denique etiam.' Cod. Vat. and Klotz.

intra oceanum] This means on this side of the 'oceanus,' from the straits of Gibraltar eastwards; within the habitable or known world. Juvenal expresses the same notion in other words, Sat. x. 1:

"Omnibus in terris quae sunt a Gadibus usque Auroram et Gangem."

In another passage Cicero expresses himself still more clearly, Pro Lege Manilia, c. 12: "nunc nullam intra Oceani ostium praedonum navem esse."

luctus,] Only in Lag. 42. Cod. Vat. has 'luctum.'—'manifestis in flagitiis,' Cod. Vat. This 'in' is a difficulty. Zumpt omits it and refers to c. 64. See the note there, p. 347.—'audaciam ac libidines,' in Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'audacias.'

bus, si is qui erit adductus in iudicium, quum manifestis flagitiis tenebitur, alios eadem fecisse dicet, illi exempla non deerunt, rei publicae salus deerit, si improborum exemplis improbi iudicio ac periculo liberabuntur. Placent vobis hominum mores? placet ita geri magistratus ut geruntur? placet socios sic tractari quod restat ut per haec tempora tractatos videtis? cur haec a me opera consumitur? quid sedetis? cur non in media oratione mea consurgitis atque disceditis? Vultis autem istorum audaciam atque libidines aliqua ex parte resecare? desinite dubitare utrum sit utilius propter multos improbos uni parcere, an unius improbi supplicio multorum improbitatem coërcere.

Tametsi quae ista sunt exempla multorum? Nam quum in tanta causa, quum in crimine maximo dici a defensore coeptum est factitatum esse aliquid, expectant ii qui audiunt exempla ex vetere memoria, ex monumentis ac literis, plena dignitatis, plena antiquitatis. Haec enim plurimum solent et auctoritatis habere ad probandum et jucunditatis ad audiendum. XC. Africanos mihi, et Catones, et Laelios commemorabis, et eos idem fecisse dices? Quamvis res mihi non placeat, tamen contra hominum auctoritatem pugnare non potero. An, quum eos non poteris, proferes hos recentes, Q. Catulum patrem, C. Marium, Q. Scaevolam, M. Scaurum, Q. Metellum? qui omnes provincias habuerunt et frumentum cellae nomine imperaverunt. Magna est hominum auctoritas, et tanta ut etiam delicti suspicionem tegere possit. Non habes ne ex his quidem hominibus qui nuper fuerunt ullum auctorem istius aestimationis. Quo me igitur aut ad quae me exempla revocas? Ab illis hominibus, qui tum versati sunt in re publica quum et optimi mores erant et hominum existimatio gravis habebatur, et iudicia severa fiebant, ad hanc hominum libidinem ac licentiam me abducis, et in quos aliquid exempli populus Romanus statui putat oportere, ab iis tu defensionis exempla quaeris? Non fugio ne hos quidem mores, dummodo ex his ea quae probat populus Romanus exempla, quod restat] means 'in posterum,' as Manutius correctly explains it.

quid sedetis?] Cicero addresses the 'judices,' 'If such are your opinions, why do you sit here? why don't you rise up all at once in the midst of my address, and be gone?' If such are your opinions, what is the use of a trial?

90. Q. Scaevolam,] There were two of the name, as Zumpt remarks, well-known men. Probably the Pontifex is meant. See Divin. c. 17. The Metelli were many. Nu-

ullum auctorem] 'Any one who sets the example of such a fixing of the price as you have adopted.'

ad quae me exempla] 'Ad quae me exempla,' Lag. 42; but Zumpt has not accepted the 'me.' Klotz has 'et iudicia severa fiebant.' Zumpt suspects that these words are an interpolation. They may be. See his note.

non ea quae condemnat, sequamur. Non circumspiciam, non quaeram foris: habeo iudices tecum principes civitatis, P. Servilium et Q. Catulum, qui tanta auctoritate sunt, tantis rebus gestis, ut in illo antiquissimorum clarissimorumque hominum de quibus antea dixi numero reponantur. Exempla quaerimus et ea non antiqua. Modo uterque horum exercitum habuit. Quaere, Hortensi, quoniam te recentia exempla delectant, quid fecerint. Itane vero Q. Catulus frumento est usus, pecuniam non coëgit? P. Servilius quinquennium exercitui quum praeesset et ista ratione innumeraabilem pecuniam facere quum posset, non statuit sibi quidquam licere quod non patrem suum, non avum Q. Metellum, clarissimum hominem, facere vidisset. C. Verres reperietur, qui quidquid expediat id licere dicat? quod nemo nisi improbus fecerit, id aliorum exemplo se fecisse defendat?

XCI. At in Sicilia factitatum est. Quae est ista conditio Siciliae? cur quae optimo jure propter vetustatem, fidelitatem, propinquitatemque esse debet, huic praecipua lex injuriae definitur? Sed in ista ipsa Sicilia non quaeram exemplum foris: hoc ipso ex consilio utar exemplis. C. Marcelle, te appello. Siciliae provinciae quum esses pro consule praefuisti. Num quae in tuo imperio habeo iudices tecum] 'Habeo,' the reading of Lag. 48, is certain. Cicero says: "Here we have the very 'iudices' who are trying you. You and I have persons to whose conduct we may appeal: let us see how they have conducted themselves." Cicero has mentioned Servilius before, Lib. 1. c. 21. He mentions Catulus again, Lib. 4. c. 21; and C. Marcellus Lib. 4. c. 42.

Itane vero] The current punctuation is this: 'Itane vero? Q. Catulus . . coëgit;' which I think is a bad punctuation. Another instance of this form occurs in Lib. 3. c. 8. 'Itane vero . . sustulisti?' the true form of which it is not easy to mistake.

quinquennium] From his consulship, B.C. 79, to his triumph, B.C. 75, P. Servilius held a command for five years. He took Olympus (Lib. 1. c. 21), Phaselis (Lib. 4. c. 10), destroyed Corycus, was the first Roman who led an army through the range of Taurus, and reduced the Isauri, whence he got the name Isauricus. He was the son of a daughter of Q. Metellus Macedonicus (Zumpt).

91. optimo jure] 'Optimo jure' is a legal phrase, which signifies 'on the best or most favourable terms.' Akin to this is the expression used in the terms of contract for selling a piece of land, 'uti optimus maximusque est,' which means free from all claims and incumbrances. The following passage will explain the expression, Paulus, Dig. 50. 16. 169: "non tantum in traditionibus sed et in emptionibus et stipulationibus et testamentis adjectio haec 'ut optimus maximusque est,' hoc significat ut liberum praestetur praedium, non ut etiam servitutes ei debeantur." It means that the land owes no 'servitus,' but it does not mean that any other land is servient to it.

huic praecipua] Hotmann says that 'huic praecipue' would be 'apertius,' by which I suppose he means 'clearer.' His explanation of 'lex,' in the sense of a 'lex' proper, or a 'privilegium,' is not correct, which is proved by the word 'injuriae.' We could not say in Latin, 'lex injuriae,' in the sense of a 'lex' proper. 'Lex' means 'terms.'

pro consule] C. Marcellus was proconsul of Sicily during his praetorship. He was 'pro consule.' A 'praetor' was often invested with the title and power of 'proconsul.' There is a note on this matter by Oudendorp on the Bellum Africanum, c. 80. 'Pro consule' is said of him who has 'proconsulare imperium,' though he may be only pecuniae cellae nomine coactae sunt? Neque ego hoc in tua laude pono: alia sunt tua facta atque consilia, summa laude digna, quibus illam tu provinciam afflictam et perditam erexisti atque recreasti; nam hoc de cella ne Lepidus quidem fecerat cui tu successisti. Quae sunt tibi igitur exempla ex Sicilia cellae, si hoc crimen non modo Marcelli facto sed ne Lepidi quidem potes defendere? An me ad M. Antonii aestimationem frumenti exactionemque pecuniae revocaturus es? Ita, inquit, ad M. Antonium: hoc enim mihi significasse et annuisse visus est. Ex omnibus igitur populi Romani praetoribus, consulibus, imperatoribus, M. Antonium delegisti, et ejus unum improbissimum factum quod imitarere. Et hic utrum mihi difficile est dicere an his existimare, ita se in isto infinito imperio M. Antonium gessisse ut multo isti perniciosius sit dicere se in re improbissima voluisse imitari Antonium, quam si posset defendere, nihil in vita se M. Antonii simile fecisse. Homines in judiciis ad crimen defendendum, non quid fecerit quispiam proferre solent, sed quid probarit. Antonium, quum multa contra sociorum salutem, multa contra utilitatem provinciarum et faceret et cogitaret, in mediis injuriis ejus et cupiditatibus mors oppressit. Tu mihi, quasi omnia ejus facta atque consilia senatus populusque

'pro praetore.' See also his note on Bell. Civil. i. 12.

ex Sicilia] Cod. Vat.: 'in Sic.' Zumpt.

Ita, inquit, ad M. Antonium:] See Lib. 2. c. 3. He was in Sicily B.C. 74, when Sacerdos was 'praetor' there, and apparently also in B.C. 73 (Divin. c. 17), when Verres was 'praetor.' Klotz reads 'Ita, inquit, ad Antoni: hoc,' &c., from Cod. Vat.

M. Antonii simile] The use of 'simile' with a genitive is not exactly like some of the instances that have occurred. No variation of the MSS. is noted.

ad crimen defendendum,] Zumpt has observed in a note on another passage (p. 258), that 'crimen defendere' is not Latin; but I suppose he changed his mind when he came to this passage, for he makes no objection to it. 'Quid probarit' means what he has made good, or satisfied the 'judices' to be right and proper. This sense of the word is not uncommon in these orations. All the MSS. are said to have 'probarint,' the sense of which is the same; but the word would refer to 'homines.'

mors oppressit.] This is a common use of 'oppressit.' 'Death surprized him,' came upon him suddenly. So in Divin. c. 14, "nunquam ille me opprimet consilio."

Tu mihi,] The juxtaposition of pronouns is common in Cicero, and some instances have been noticed. We can feel what it means. There is no doubt about that. But persons may differ as to the mode in which they will express it. Virgil has an example:

"Tu mihi seu magni superas jam saxa Timavi."—Ecl. viii. 6.

The words 'Tu mihi' are properly connected with 'superas,' and not with the more remote verb 'accipe' (v. 11), as some would have it.—'Quasi' and 'ita' sometimes stand thus; and the meaning is very clear, if we observe that 'quasi' contains a form of the relative, and 'ita' is a form of 'is,' so that there is nothing different in this expression from the ordinary position, 'qui—'is,' 'quem—eum,' and the like.

There is a difficulty in another part of this sentence. The MSS. and the old editions have 'S. Pque R. judices,' that is, 'Senatus Populusque Romanus judices,' a reading which some editions have kept, and others have 'Senatus Populique Romani judices,' which, as Zumpt observes, we cannot admit. Zumpt, following Lag. 42, reads 'senatus, populus, judices comproba-Romanus, judices comprobarint, ita M. Antonii exemplo istius audaciam defendis.

XCII. At idem fecit Sacerdos. Hominem innocentem et summa prudentia praeditum nominas; sed tum idem fecisse erit existimandus si eodem consilio fecerit. Nam genus aestimationis ipsum a me nunquam est reprehensum; sed ejus aequitas aratorum commodo et voluntate perpenditur. Non potest reprehendi ulla aestimatio quae aratori non modo incommoda non est sed etiam grata est. Sacerdos, ut in provinciam venit, frumentum in cellam imperavit. Quum esset ante novum tritici modius x. v, petiverunt ab eo civitates ut aestimaret. Remissior aliquanto ejus fuit aestimatio quam annona; nam aestimavit x. III. Vides eandem aestimationem propter temporis dissimilitudinem in illo laudis causam habere, in te criminis; in illo beneficii, in te injuriae. Eodem tempore praetor Antonius x. III aestimavit, post messem, summa in vilitate, quum aratores frumentum dare gratis mallent. Et aiebat se tantidem aestimasse quanti Sacerdotem; neque mentiebatur: sed eadem aestimatione alter sublevarat aratores, alter everterat. Quod nisi omnis frumenti ratio ex temporibus esset et annona, non ex numero neque ex summa considerata, nunquam tam grati hi sesquimodii, Q. Hortensi, fuissent, quos tu quum ad mensurae tam exiguae rationem populo Romano in capita discrip-rint,' and he adds, 'ut tres potestates in rep. ἀσυνδέρως nominentur.' But this explanation is not satisfactory. Klotz settles the difficulty by omitting 'judices.' If the text is right, 'judices' must be either the vocative or the nominative. The vocative 'judices' would seem out of place. Manutius, in his note on this passage, observes that it is not the vocative, but the nominative: 'judices enim appellat senatum populumque Romanum.' This explanation seems to me sufficient; for 'judices comprobarint' perhaps may be said in the same sense as 'judicio suo comprobarint.'

92. ante novum] That is, as Manutius explains it, 'frumentum.' Before the new corn came in, the 'modius' of wheat sold for five 'denarii,' or twenty sesterces, which is a high price. There is nothing improbable in wheat rising before the harvest, especially if the produce should be uncertain: after the harvest (post messem) it was lower. This being the case, the Sicilians asked Sacerdos to set an 'aestimatio.' He might, we presume, have demanded wheat at four 'sestertii' the 'modius;' which would have been a loss of sixteen to the farmer. Instead of this he took money, fixing the value of a 'modius' nominally at three x, which amount he seems to have received: for the 'aestimatio' was not the sum paid to the farmer, but the sum that the praetor was to receive. We will hope that he did not take the money in respect of a larger number of 'modii' than he was entitled to. The x is the symbol of the 'denarius.'

sesquimodii,] Which he distributed as 'quaestor,' Manutius says. It alludes to a gratuitous distribution of corn, as we may collect. 'Describere,' says Hotmann, is 'distribuere, dispertiri,' and there is no doubt that the word here must mean that. But it ought to be 'discripsisses.' 'Describere, distribuere,' go together in the inscription of Venafrum (p. 306) The MS. of the De Re Publica (ii. 22) has 'relicuum populum distribuit in quinque classis . . . eosque ita disparavit. . . Quae discriptio,' &c.; where the word 'discriptio' refers to 'distribuere.' This word 'discribere' has long been proscribed by editors and lexicographers, but it must be restored to the texts and to the lexicons.

sisses, gratissimum omnibus fecisti. Caritas enim annonae faciebat ut istuc, quod re parvum videbatur, tempore magnum videretur. Idem istuc si in vilitate populo Romano largiri voluisses, derisum tuum beneficium esset atque contemptum.

XCIII. Noli igitur dicere istum idem fecisse quod Sacerdotem, quoniam non eodem tempore neque simili fecit annona: dicito potius, quoniam habes auctorem idoneum, quod Antonius uno adventu et vix menstruis cibariis fecerit, id istum per triennium fecisse; et istius innocentiam M. Antonii facto atque auctoritate defendito. Nam de Sex. quidem Peducaeo, fortissimo atque innocentissimo viro, quid dicetis? de quo quis unquam arator questus est? aut quis non ad hoc tempus innocentissimam omnium diligentissimamque praeturam illius hominis existimat? Biennium provinciam obtinuit, quum alter annus in vilitate, alter in summa caritate fuerit: num aut in vilitate nummum arator quisquam dedit, aut in caritate de aestimatione frumenti questus est? At uberiora cibaria facta sunt caritate. Credo: neque id est novum neque reprehendendum. Modo C. Sentium vidimus, hominem vetere illa ac singulari innocentia praeditum, propter caritatem frumenti quae fuerat in Macedonia permagnam ex cibariis pecuniam deportare. Quamobrem non ego invideo commodis tuis, si quae ad te lege venerunt: injuriam queror, improbitatem coarguo, avaritiam in crimen et in iudicium voco.

XCIV. Quod si suspensiones injicere velitis, ad plures homines, ad plures provincias crimen hoc pertinere, non ego istam defensionem vestram pertimescam, sed me omnium provinciarum defensorem esse profitebor. Etenim hoc dico, et magna voce dico: ubicunque hoc factum est, improbe factum est; quicunque hoc fecit, supplicio dignus est. Nam, per deos immortales, videte, 93. auctorem idoneum,] This is Antonius. Cicero is speaking sarcastically. You have the example or authority of Antonius, which you think sufficient. What he did for a month's allowance, Verres did for three years. The 'istius innocentiam' is the 'innocentia' of Verres, which of course is said ironically.

At uberiora] The supposed objection of the defenders of Hortensius: "the 'cibaria' of Peducaeus were made more productive to him in consequence of the high price." Cicero admits this, but it was no novelty. Manutius explains it thus: "He either received the value of the 'frumentum,' or he received the 'frumentum' itself, and by selling it raised more money than when it was cheap; which also C.

Sentius did." If he received money from the 'aratores,' when corn was dear, and kept the money which the Senate allowed him, he would gain, if the two sums put together enabled him to buy what he wanted for his household, and left something over. The result might be the same, if he gave for the corn the price which the Senate set on it, and, having more than he wanted, sold the surplus at the high current price. Cicero shows by an instance one of the ways in which a fortune might be acquired by a governor. That which he admits to be a proceeding free from blame, seems to us a monstrous abuse. This 'cellae nomine' was a fruitful source of gain even to an honest (in the Roman sense) governor.

judices, et prospicite animis quid futurum sit. Multi magnas pecunias ab invitis civitatibus atque ab invitis aratoribus ista ratione cellae nomine coëgerunt: omnino ego neminem video praeter istum, sed do hoc vobis et concedo esse multos: in hoc homine rem adductam in iudicium videtis. Quid facere potestis? Utrum, quum judices sitis de pecunia capta, conciliata, tantam pecuniam captam negligere; an, quum lex sociorum causa rogata sit, sociorum querimonias non audire? Verum hoc quoque vobis remitto: negligite praeterita, si vultis, sed ne reliquas spes turbetis atque omnes provincias evertatis; id providete ne avaritiae, quae antehac occultis itineribus atque angustis uti solebat, auctoritate vestra viam patefaciatis illustrem atque latam. Nam si hoc probatis et si licere pecunias isto nomine capi judicatis, certe hoc, quod adhuc nemo nisi improbissimus fecit, posthac nemo nisi stultissimus non faciet. Improbi sunt qui pecunias contra leges cogunt; stulti qui quod licere judicatum est praetermittunt. Deinde, judices, videte quam infinitam sitis hominibus licentiam pecuniarum eripiendarum daturi. Si ternos denarios qui coëgit erit absolutus; quaternos, quinos, denos denique aut videnos coget alius. Quae erit reprehensio, in quo primum injuriae gradu resistere incipiet severitas iudicis, quotus erit iste denarius qui non sit ferendus, et in quo primum aestimationis iniquitas atque improbitas reprehendatur? Non enim a vobis summa sed genus aestimationis erit comprobatum: neque hoc potestis judicare, ternis denariis aestimare licere, denis non licere. Ubi enim semel ab annonae ratione et ab aratorum voluntate res ad praetoris libidinem translata est, non est jam in lege neque in officio sed in voluntate hominum atque avaritia positus modus aestimandi.

XCV. Quapropter si vos semel in iudicando finem aequitatis et legis transieritis, scitote vos nullum ceteris in aestimando finem improbitatis et avaritiae reliquisse. Videte igitur quam multa simul a vobis postulentur. Absolvite illum qui se fateatur maximas ad praetoris libidinem] 'Ad praetorum libidinem,' Cod. Vat. and Klotz.

94. ternis denariis] Cod. Vat. has 'tribus denariis,' which Klotz also has; and yet he writes 'denis non licere.'

neque in officio] 'Editi omnes atque in officio' (Zumpt). But 'atque' appears to be in no MS., except it may be in Paris A, the reading of which is not mentioned. Cod. Vat. has 'aeque in,' which may perhaps be as much in favour of 'atque' as of 'neque.' Zumpt doubts if 'atque' is admissible in such a case as this, for there is first a negative (non), and 'lege . . . officio' are separated by a repetition of the preposition. Orelli has 'atque in lege.'

95. absolvite illum] 'Absolvite illum:' Cod. Vat. and Klotz. Zumpt has 'eum.' This is a matter which may be left to a reader's taste, for the genuine word of Cicero is doubtful. 'Illum' may be defended, for we may suppose Cicero to dwell with emphasis on it. Shortly after there is 'absolvite illos,' which reading, about which pecunias cum summa sociorum injuria cepisse. Non est satis. Sunt alii quoque complures qui idem fecerint. Absolvite etiam illos si qui sunt, ut uno judicio quam plurimos improbos liberetis. Ne id quidem satis est. Facite ut ceteris posthac idem liceat. Licebit. Adhuc parum est. Permittite ut liceat quanti quisque velit tanti aestimet. Aestimabit. Videtis jam profecto, iudices, hac aestimatione a vobis comprobata, neque modum posthac avaritiae cujusquam neque poenam improbitatis futuram. Quam ob rem quid agis, Hortensi? Consul es designatus: provinciam sortitus es: de aestimatione frumenti quum dices, sic te audiemus, quasi id quod ab isto recte factum esse defendes te facturum profiteare, et quasi quod isti licitum esse dices vehementer cupias tibi licere. Atqui si id licebit, nihil est quod putetis quemquam posthac commissurum ut de pecuniis repetundis condemnari possit. Quantam enim quisque concupierit pecuniam, tantam licebit per cellae nomen aestimationis magnitudine consequatur.

XCVI. At enim est quiddam quod, etiamsi palam in defendendo non dicet Hortensius, tamen ita dicet ut vos id suspicari et cogitare possitis, pertinere hoc ad commodum senatorium, pertinere ad utilitatem eorum qui judicent, qui in provinciis cum potestate aut cum legatione se futuros aliquando arbitrentur. Praeclaros vero existimas iudices nos habere, quos alienis peccatis concessuros putes quo facilius ipsis peccare liceat. Ergo id volumus populum Romanum, id provincias, id socios nationesque exteras existimare, si senatores judicent, hoc certe unum genus infinitae pecuniae per there is no dispute, seems to determine in favour of 'illum' here.

qui idem] Zumpt prefers 'idem qui eleganter Lag. 42;' and he gives examples where a word precedes 'qui,' which belongs to the same clause, as Lib. 4. c. 4: "omnia qui regna coherceret." There is no difficulty in collecting many instances; but this is not a case in which the ear prefers the elegance of Lag. 42.

Adhuc parum est.] This, I think, is the true reading, and not 'At hoc,' which Zumpt and Orelli have. Cod. Vat. has 'adhuc;' and Klotz. But there is other evidence in favour of 'adhuc.'

Quam ob rem] Zumpt properly (Appendix) rejects his reading 'quas ob res,' for that of Cod. Vat., 'Quam ob rem.' But his pointing spoils the sense; 'Quam ob rem, quid agis, Hortensi?' as if two questions were asked, though I do not suppose that he takes it so. Cicero often places 'quam ob rem' at the beginning of a sentence, not as an interrogative, but as a word of reference to what he has said. It is, as if he were to say, 'now for all these reasons, Hortensius, consider what you are doing.'

provinciam sortitus] The consular provinces were fixed by the Senate before the election, pursuant to a 'lex Sempronia,' B.C. 123; and the consuls determined by lot, which of the two provinces assigned to them each should take. Hortensius got Crete, but he did not go there. He gave it up to his colleague, Q. Metellus, who earned the name of Creticus. Hortensius remained at Rome.

Atqui si id] 'Atque,' &c., Lag. 42. Cod. Vat. omits 'atqui;' and Klotz also.

96. non dicet—tamen ita dicet] Klotz has the future 'dicet' in both cases from Cod. Vat.; which reading is at least consistent with the future tenses in the preceding chapter, where Zumpt, however, has 'defendis . . dicis;' and here, 'dicit . . dicit.'

summam injuriam cogendae nullo modo posse reprehendi? Quod si ita est, quid possumus contra illum praetorem dicere qui quotidie templum tenet, qui rem publicam sistere negat posse nisi ad equestrem ordinem judicia referantur? Quod si ille hoc unum agitare coeperit, esse aliquod genus cogendae pecuniae, senatorum commune et jam prope concessum ordini, quo genere ab sociis maxima pecunia per summam injuriam auferatur, neque id ullo modo senatoriis judiciis reprehendi posse, idque dum equester ordo judicaret nunquam esse commissum; quis obsistet, quis erit tam cupidus vestrum, tam fautor ordinis, qui de transferendis judiciis possit recusare?

XCVII. Atque utinam posset aliqua ratione hoc crimen quamvis falsa, modo humana atque usitata, defendere: minore periculo vestro, minore periculo provinciarum omnium, judicaretis. Negaret hac aestimatione se usum; vos id homini credidisse, non factum comprobasse videremini. Nullo modo negare potest: urgetur a tota Sicilia: nemo est ex tanto numero aratorum a quo pecunia cellae nomine non sit exacta. Vellem etiam hoc posset dicere, nihil ad se istam rationem pertinere; per quaestores rem frumentariam esse administratam. Ne id quidem licet dicere propterea templum tenet,] The Praetor is L. AURELIUS COTTA, who was now agitating about the Lex Aurelia de Judiciis, which was enacted in this year (Lib. v. c. 69). Cotta was daily addressing the people about his proposed Lex, before the Rostra. The Templum means a place chosen by the Augurs, for the observation of the 'auspicia' (Livy, i. 4). Cicero (De Divin. i. 20) quotes a line from Ennius:—

Tendebam lacrimans.”

Every inaugurated place was a Templum; as the Rostra in this passage, and in the oration In Vatini. c. 10: “in Rostris, in illo inquam inaugurato templo ac loco.” The word Templum is explained by Varro, De L. L. vii. 7—9: “quaqua intuitus erat oculi, a tuendo primum templum dictum. Quocirca caelum qua attuimur dictum templum.—Ejus templi partes quattuor dicuntur, sinistra ab oriente, dextra ab occasu, antica ad meridiem, postica ad septentrionem.” This applies to the aethereal ‘templum.’ He says further: “in terris dictum templum locus augurii aut auspicii causa quibusdam conceptis verbis finitus.” See the remarks on Auspicia, Becker, Hand-

sistere] Manutius would prefer ‘stare.’ Cod. Nann. and Lag. 42 have ‘subsistere;’ but ‘sistere’ is used sometimes in an intransitive sense. The metaphor seems to be taken from a thing that is falling, and its downward course cannot be stopped.

97. Negaret] This means ‘if he should deny.’ Lambinus conjectured that ‘si’ should be prefixed to ‘negaret,’ which is unnecessary. Orelli incorrectly puts a note of interrogation after ‘usum,’ which spoils the phrase. See p. 268, note. Zumpt refers to Lib. 5. c. 65.

vos id homini, &c.] This is the text of Zumpt. Cod. Vat. has ‘vos id credidissetis homini credidisse,’ &c., which is capable of being explained in several ways. Klotz prints: ‘vos id credidissetis: credidisse homini, non factum,’ &c., in doing which he does not follow the MS., but he alters the position of ‘homini.’ Lag. 42 has ‘hominibus credidisse,’ where ‘hominibus’ is a mistake for ‘homini.’

Ne id quidem licet] ‘Ne id quidem ei licet’ (Zumpt). Cod. Vat. omits ‘ei;’ a small matter; but it seems better omitted. A little further on there is ‘quam quantum in cellam sumere licitum sit,’ where the ‘ei’ after ‘cellam’ is omitted by Cod. Vat.;

quod ipsius literae recitantur ad civitates de ternis denariis missae. Quae est igitur defensio? Feci quod arguis: coëgi pecunias maximas cellae nomine: sed hoc mihi licuit; vobis si prospicitis licebit. Periculosum provinciis genus injuriae confirmari iudicio; perniciosum nostro ordini populum Romanum existimare, non posse eos homines qui ipsi legibus teneantur leges in iudicando religiose defendere. Atque isto praetore, iudices, non solum aestimandi frumenti modus non fuit sed ne imperandi quidem. Neque enim id quod debebatur, sed quantum commodum fuit imperavit. Summam faciam vobis ex literis publicis ac testimoniis civitatum frumenti in cellam imperati: reperietis quinquies tanto, iudices, amplius istum quam quantum in cellam sumere licitum sit civitatibus imperasse. Quid ad hanc impudentiam addi potest, si et aestimavit tanti ut homines ferre non possent, et tanto plus quam erat ei concessum legibus imperavit? Quapropter, cognita tota re frumentaria, iudices, jam facillime perspicere potestis, amissam esse populo Romano Siciliam, fructuosissimam atque opportunissimam provinciam, nisi eam vos istius damnatione recuperatis. Quid est enim Sicilia, si agri cultionem sustuleris, et si aratorum numerum ac nomen extinxeris? Quid autem potest esse in calamitate residui quod non ad miseros aratores isto praetore per summam injuriam ignominiamque pervenerit? quibus, quum decumas dare deberent, vix ipsis decumae relictæ sunt; quum pecunia deberetur, soluta non est; quum optima aestimatione senatus frumentum eos in cellam dare voluisset, etiam instrumenta agrorum vendere coacti sunt.

XCVIII. Dixi jam antea, iudices, ut has omnes injurias tollatis, tamen ipsam rationem arandi spe magis et jucunditate quadam quam fructu atque emolumento teneri. Etenim ad incertum casum et eventum certus quotannis labor et certus sumptus impenditur.

Zumpt has it.—‘de ternis denariis:’ ‘de tribus denariis,’ Cod. Vat., which I do not follow here. Klotz has ‘tribus.’

si prospicitis] If you look forward, if you take care, that is, if you acquit me; as Verres is supposed to say.

eos homines] The Senators, for only ‘magistratus’ came within the provisions of the Lex de Repetundis, as the first part of the Lex Servilia shows. Compare Pro Rabirio Post. c. 5 (Zumpt). Manutius gives the same explanation.

si agri cultionem] The common reading is ‘si ei agri cultionem,’ &c. Klotz omits ‘ei.’ Zumpt observes: “neque dativum magnopere desidero, immo malo abesse. Cf. ad Lib. iv. 12 extr.” But still he keeps the ‘ei.’ It is better omitted. The omission of the pronouns in Latin, where they are not required to make the sense clear, is one of the niceties of the language, which by careful reading we appreciate.

residui] Lag. 42 has ‘reliqui.’

quibus, quum decumas, &c.] Zumpt has a curious note on this passage: “conjunge quibus ipsis, et facile senties, quam hoc praestet conjecturae Lambini ipsae.” Instead of which say: “read the passage straight forward, and you will find no difficulty at all in ‘ipsis,’ and you will reject the ‘ipsae,’ which Lambinus confidently proposes.”

instrumenta] Here we have the plural with ‘agrorum.’ See c. 86.

Annona porro pretium nisi in calamitate fructuum non habet: si autem ubertas in percipiendis fructibus fuit, consequitur vilitas in vendendis: ut aut male vendendum intelligas, si bene processit, aut male perceptos fructus, si recte licet vendere. Totae autem res rusticae ejusmodi sunt ut eas non ratio, neque labor, sed res incertissimae, venti tempestatesque, moderentur. Hinc quum unae decumae lege et conditione detrahantur, alterae novis institutis propter annonae rationem imperentur, ematur praeterea frumentum quotannis publice, postremo etiam in cellam magistratibus et legatis imperetur; quid aut quantum praeterea est quod aut liberum possit habere ille arator ac dominus in potestate suorum fructuum aut in ipsis fructibus solutum? Quodsi haec ferunt omnia; si potius vobis ac rei publicae quam sibi et suis commodis opera, sumptu, labore deserviunt; etiamne haec nova debent edicta et imperia praetorum, et Apronii dominationem, et Venereorum servorum furta rapinasque ferre? etiamne frumentum pro empto gratis dare? etiamne in cellam quum cupiant gratis dare, ultro pecuniam grandem addere? etiamne haec tot detrimenta atque damna cum maximis injuriis contumeliisque perferre? Itaque haec, judices, quae pati nullo modo potuerunt non pertulerunt. Arationes omnes tota Sicilia desertas atque ab omnibus relictas esse cognostis; neque quidquam aliud agitur hoc calamitate fructuum] A damage of the crops. The word occurs in another sense in Lib. 1. c. 16. The old grammarians define a 'calamitas' to be a fall of hail, or a tempest, which damages the crops (see Forcellini, Calamitas); and, after their fashion, they derived the word from 'culmus,' because the 'culmus' was injured; which is absurd every way. If I am not mistaken, Professor Key has suggested that 'calamitas' contains the root 'cad' to fall, which fits the meaning well. The interchange of d and l is not unusual.

98. pretium] Abundance and low prices; a failure of crops and high prices. No chance of high prices with good crops. A man only sells at a good price ('recte' opposed to 'male'), when the harvest is bad. 'Recte,' says Manutius, as the farmer would say, because he likes a short crop and high prices, better than a good crop and low prices. Cicero's remarks on the risks of the farmer are true. He may sometimes lose all his labour. He is not, however, the only person, who sometimes labours without profit. This is a calamity which is incident to all labour.

Totae autem, &c. The reading of Lag.

42 is 'Totae autem res hujusmodi rusticae,' &c.; and 'ventus tempestasque.' Cod. Nann. and Lag. 42 have 'lege et consuetudine,' which Klotz adopts. But this is not a case of 'consuetudo:' Cicero joins with 'lege' a word of like import, a 'conditio' or terms of submission to Rome. Zumpt refers to the passage, c. 6, 'ut eadem conditione,' &c.

rapinasque ferre?] Lag. 42. Perhaps better than the other reading 'perferre;' for 'perferre' occurs afterwards, and the orator seeks to magnify the wrong as he proceeds.

ultro] 'Ultro,' says Zumpt, belongs to 'pecuniam addere,' about which there can be no dispute. But his remark is not useless, for he observes that it is usually so pointed as to be connected with 'gratis dare;' and Orelli has it so: 'gratis dare ultro, pecuniam,' &c. This is a false punctuation, which one would hardly think that a careful editor could make. 'Ultro' means 'besides.'

ab omnibus relictas] Zumpt has 'a dominis relictas;' but this is not consistent with the facts, for all the 'aratores' were not 'domini.' Klotz has 'a dominis omnes relictas;' to which there is the same objec-judicio nisi ut antiquissimi socii fidelissimique, Siculi, coloni populi Romani atque aratores, vestra severitate et diligentia me duce atque auctore in agros atque in sedes suas revertantur.

tion; and this besides, that Cicero has already said 'omnes.' Lag. 42 has 'a dominis omnis, alt. m. omnibus' (Zumpt). Cod. Vat. has 'pr. manu ab omnibus, altera omnino' (Zumpt, App. without 'dominis,' as I understand it). I conclude that the true reading is, either 'ab omnibus relictas' or 'omnino relictas.'—'antiquissimi socii, fidelissimi Siculi, coloni' &c., Klotz; Cod. Vat. omits the 'que' after 'fidelissimi.'

VI.

Lib. 3. c. 47. "In jugero Leontini agri," &c.

CICERO here informs us that the produce of wheat on the plains of Leontini was ten for one in very favourable years; but that eight for one was a good produce. The quantity sown on a 'jugerum' was a 'medimnum' as a general rule: "in jugero Leontini agri medimnum fere tritici seritur perpetua atque aequabili satione;" which does not mean that the land was sown every year, but that the uninterrupted and regular practice was to sow a 'medimnum' on each 'jugerum.'

Dureau de la Malle (Économie Politique des Romains, vol. ii. chap. 11) has discussed the subject of the proportion between the seed and the produce in Roman cultivation. The first passage that he quotes is Varro (De Re Rustica, i. c. 44), the substance of which is this: There are sown on a 'jugerum' four 'modii' of beans, five of wheat, six of barley, ten of far or spelter; but sometimes more or less, according to the locality and the soil: the same grain produces here ten for one, in other places fifteen for one, as in Etruria and some parts of Italy: it is even said, that in the territory of Sybaris, in the South of Italy, in Syria, near Garada, and in Byzacium in Africa, they get a hundred 'modii' for one; he adds, that it is important to distinguish in sowing between new land, and land which is sown every year (which is called restibilis), and land which rests sometimes.

This produce of a hundred for one is given by Varro merely as a report; and it does not appear whether he believes it or not. Pliny, indeed (H. N. xviii. 10. ed. Harduin), says that some land in the territory of Leontini produced a hundred for one; but Cicero's testimony is clear and precise, that ten for one is an extraordinary produce for the lands of Leontini. It is curious that the produce should still be the same in the plains of Catania, which term comprises the former Leontini; eight for one in good years; ten for one in years of extraordinary fertility. Probably the mode of cultivation, and the agricultural instruments have changed very little in Sicily since the time of Cicero.

Columella (iii. 3) gives four for one as the produce of wheat lands in the larger part of Italy; and this is stated to be the mean produce at the present day in Piedmont. It appears, then, that fifteen for one, or ten for one, which Varro speaks of, was an unusual produce in Italy.

According to the observations of Professor Symonds, printed in Arthur Young's Travels in Italy, some lands on the great plains of Apulia (La Puglia) produced in 1767 twelve, fifteen, and even eighteen bushels for one. Some other parts of Italy produce ten or twelve for one; but these are exceptions.

So small a return as four for one would not pay in all countries. If the English farmer did not get more, the landlord would have to go without rent, and the tithe-owner without tithes. This low produce is explained by the particular circumstances. Dureau de la Malle observes: "Count Prospero Balbo and Mr. Charles Pictet, in their Mémoires on the agriculture of Piedmont, give the proportions between the seed and the produce, which perfectly agree with those which Columella has transmitted to us. Their observations at the same time explain the phenomenon of a large population, with bad modes of manuring, and a comparatively unskilful agriculture. The proportion between the seed and the produce of wheat, is, according to Count Balbo, in Piedmont, as one to four, and that of rye as one to nine: there are no fallows; and they get two crops in a year. They lay little manure on the ground, considering this uninterrupted production: but almost all the meadows are fertilized by irrigation, and produce three crops of hay. The leaves of trees are used for feeding cattle. It is especially the excellent construction of the Piedmontese plough, which is managed by two oxen and a man; the four or five workings which they give the land with this plough for the cultivation of wheat, the repeated diggings for the maize and leguminous vegetables, which, according to Mr. Pictet, are the principal cause of this abundance of gross products. All the land is let at half produce, when it grows wheat, maize, rye, rice, and silk: the meadows alone are let at a fixed rent, which is one half of the net produce. The proprietor pays the taxes: the métayer (massaro) furnishes the animals and the implements for ploughing; yet the proportion of the crop of wheat to the seed, is, I must repeat, only four for one. Thus in Piedmont the cultivated land at present returns, as it did during the first six centuries of the Roman Republic, only a very small net produce; but it gives a very large gross produce, which supports a very great population."

The author concludes by adding, that the mean product of wheat in France was estimated at five to six for one, in 1780, by Necker and Lavoisier; but that it is now from seven to eight, owing to the improvement in cultivation. Arthur Young (Travels in France in 1787—9, 2nd edit. p. 352) also gives the average produce of France before the Revolution at six for one; and the average produce of wheat and rye at eighteen bushels the English acre. The produce of some districts is stated at only four for one. That of the fertile Limagne of Auvergne is stated by him at from seven to ten for wheat. The smallness of wheat produce compared with the great fertility of the soil was partly explained by the fact of the ground being too rich for that grain (p. 332); for which reason they sowed rye on the best soils and wheat on the worst. The Limagne at that time never rested in a fallow; and the cultivation was very bad. Young estimated the average produce of wheat in England at twenty-four bushels the acre, "which," he says, "forms a vast superiority to eighteen, the produce of France, amounting to twelve for one of the seed, instead of six for one; but the superiority is greater than is apparent in the proportion of those two numbers; for the corn of England, as far as respects dressing, that is, cleaning from dirt, chaff, seeds of weeds, &c., is as much better than that of France, as would make the difference at least twenty-five, instead of twenty-four, to eighteen; and I am inclined to think even more."

The average produce of wheat in England, or perhaps in the United Kingdom, is still said to be twenty-four bushels; but one would expect that the average should be higher now than when Young wrote.

I am informed on the authority of an experienced agriculturist², that on good land in England, of the kind suited for the growth of wheat, and fairly farmed, such as that of the Vale of White Horse in Berkshire, the average quantity of wheat sown on a statute acre is 2.25 bushels, and that the average produce is 36 bushels. On such land a smaller quantity of seed would be sufficient, especially if dibbled. It is stated, however, by the same authority, that there have been instances of 60 and even 65 bushels of wheat being produced on an acre of ground in England; and in the years 1835 and 1844 many thousands of acres gave an average produce of 48 bushels. The average produce of an acre in England is usually estimated at 24 bushels.

The Roman 'jugerum' was a measure of surface, 240 feet in length and 120 in breadth, and accordingly contained 28,800 square feet (Roman). The 'jugerum' is estimated at nearly five-eighths of the English acre. The 'modius' is estimated at 1 gallon 7.36 pints; and, as the 'medimnum' contained 6 'modii,' the capacity of the 'medimnum' is 11.52 gallons. The comparative produce will stand thus:—

referred to would be 62 lbs. I am not aware that there is any authority for the weight of a bushel of Sicilian corn; but it would probably be the same that it is now, and I suppose that the hard corn of the south of Europe weighs heavier than English grain. The gross produce on the best Sicilian land, according to Cicero's statement, in the most favourable years, was only equal to the average of the English produce. On the poor lands we must assume it to be only one half.

The following facts are from the same authority that I have referred to:—In 1845, six pieces of land, measuring half an acre each, were sown with one bushel each, of six different kinds of wheat. The following was the result, as given by Mr. C. Hillyard, who tried the experiment to determine the most productive kind of wheat.

No.		Bushels per half-acre.		Bushels per acre.		Weight per bushel.

6		18		36		60

The large amount of produce raised by the best farmers in Scotland under what is called high farming, appears from an article in Blackwood's Magazine, 1850, p. 94. The cost of getting a large produce is not a matter that comes into question here. But it may be well to observe, for the benefit of those who look only to results, without considering how they are produced, that a smaller crop in some countries may be more profitable to the grower than a larger crop in other countries. The larger crop may cost so much as to bring its net value to the grower below the net value of the smaller crop.

In the rich lands of North America a crop of corn is produced at small cost after the land is cleared. An old traveller, Michaux³ (1802), speaks of 25 to 30 bushels the acre in Kentucky, weighing 60 lbs. the bushel, raised with no application of manure and little tillage. Near Wheeling, on the Ohio, he speaks of 15 to 20 bushels the acre, when the land is cleared; but no manure is used, there is little tillage, and the soil is never idle. I have no more recent authority by me, but this is enough for the purpose. On a good soil, with little labour, they get what pays them, though it is not much. When it will pay to get more, they can have it by more labour.

The Formula Octaviana. Lib. 3. c. 65.

THE Roman 'praetor' gave relief to persons who had, under compulsion, done any act which was against their interests, and it was a more complete relief than was given in the case of other Restitutiones. The injured person received fourfold the amount of the loss or damage which he had sustained; and not only was the wrong doer liable to make this reparation, but every person who had derived a profit from the compulsory act, either directly or indirectly, was also liable to make reparation. The remedy was by the 'Actio quod metus causa' (Dig. 4. tit. 2); and its origin must be explained, according to Rudorff, by a reference to the history of Repetundae. The Leges which relate to Repetundae are enumerated in Excursus I.

The proceeding under the Lex Calpurnia (B.C. 149) was, in its material part, a 'condictio,' that is, an action for the recovery of what was claimed by the injured party or parties; but the 'litis aestimatio,' or assessment of the damage, was limited to the simple amount of what had been wrongfully taken. But, though the proceeding was substantially a 'condictio,' it was not conducted by a Legis Actio per conductionem, for this had been abolished by the Lex Aebutia. The proceeding was in the form of a Sacramenti Actio before the Praetor Peregrinus. The Sacramentum contained a penalty for the illegal act; whereas the 'litis aestimatio,' which followed after judgment against the defendant, gave to the complainant satisfaction to the amount of the loss which he had sustained by the illegal act. The penalty in the Sacramentum, it is assumed, came to the State, and, not like the 'Sponsionis summa,' to the successful party. The proceeding by the Sacramentum was preserved in the Lex Junia, and also in the Servilia, according to the restored text¹ (l. 72—74). It also appears that if a man was condemned or acquitted in a Sacramenti Actio, there could be no proceeding against him under the Servilia Lex; but the Lex excluded a man who had been condemned in the Sacramenti Actio from acting as a 'judex.' The Sacramenti Actio of the Lex Calpurnia, and of the Lex Junia, was not a Privatum Judicium, like the Conditiones, or actions brought by a single injured party: it was a proceeding in the name of a whole province, conducted by a prosecutor, before a body of sworn Judices. Yet the indemnification of the injured parties was still the main object. The Servilia gave to the proceedings another character. The 'nominis delatio,' the public prosecution before the Praetor Quaesitor, or the Judex Quaestionis, was the principal thing: the Petitio and the Litis Aestimatio occupy a secondary place. If the defendant was condemned, he did not escape the Litis Aestimatio. "In this, however, is the Litis Aestimatio independent of the result of the public prosecution, that it affects even one who has been acquitted, and is applied to him who has pleaded guilty, without presupposing a condemnation of the defendant by a body of Judices ²." The Servilia raised the amount of damages to double of the real loss sustained; but only one-half of this sum, or the bare amount of loss went to the parties; the rest went to the treasury (aerarium). But the proceedings were not confined to the guilty person; they extended to his 'heredes,' or representatives, and to the 'heredes' of the 'heredes.' Even innocent third persons, who might have been enriched, that is, have got some profit, in consequence of the illegal acts of the defendant, were liable to be proceeded against before a body of 'judices;' they came under the general terms 'quo ea pecunia quam is ceperit qui damnatus sit pervenerit.' The condemnation of a third person, however, relieved the defendant from payment of damages. It is generally said that the Lex Cornelia of the Dictator Sulla raised the Litis Aestimatio to quadruple the amount of the real damage. But there is no direct evidence for this. This Lex retained the chapter 'Quo pervenerit,' as we see from the oration Pro Cluentio, c. 41, which was delivered when the Lex Cornelia was in force. The last Lex de Repetundis was the Lex Julia, passed in Caesar's first consulship.

It appears that all the Leges de Repetundis applied to abuse of their office by Magistratus; but the principle of these Leges was extended to the acts of private persons, which were of a like character with those acts that came within the provisions of those Leges de Repetundis. To this class of private actions, formed in imitation of the proceeding under the Leges de Repetundis, belong the 'in factum actio,' on the ground of 'calumnia' ³ (Dig. 3. 6. 1), and the 'Actio quod metus causa,' which we are now considering.

² I don't understand this. If a man pleaded guilty, that was as good as if he was found guilty. But, if he was acquitted on the charge of Repetundae, I don't see how he could be liable to pay any thing in respect of a charge that had not been proved.

The introduction of the 'Actio quod metus causa' is attributed by Cicero to a Praetor Octavius, who is conjectured to be the L. Octavius who was consul B.C. 75. If this was the man, he was probably 'praetor' about four years earlier, or B.C. 79. Accordingly, the introduction of this Actio would belong to the year B.C. 79, two years after the enactment of the Lex Cornelia De Repetundis, and two years before the introduction of the 'Actio Vi bonorum raptorum,' by the praetor, M. Lucullus. This confirms Rudorff's opinion, which he establishes on other grounds, that the action 'Quod metus causa' was not founded on, or derived from, the 'Actio Vi bonorum raptorum,' as some have supposed. After Sulla's death, B.C. 78, this 'Actio quod metus' was applied to compel persons to make restitution, who, during the time of Sulla, had by violent means got possession of other persons' property. Cicero appears to allude to this application of the Actio, by that active and excellent Praetor, C. Octavius, the father of him who was afterwards the emperor Augustus: "cogebantur Sullani homines quae per vim et metum abstulerant reddere" (Ad Qu. Fr. i. 1. c. 7). The edict into which the Octaviana Formula was received, applied to the case of agreements (Cicero, De Off. iii. 24; Dig. 2. 14. 7. § 7), to cases where Restitutio was claimed, in consequence of a man having sustained loss by having been prevented from doing something (Dig. 4. 6. 1. § 1); and, lastly, to cases where Restitutio was claimed, in consequence of a man's rights having been impaired by acts done under compulsion. The clause applicable to the last case ran thus: "Quod metus causa gestum erit, ratum non habebo;" but the original form was, "Quod vi metusve causa" (Dig. 4. 2. 1). Under this head, Octavius declared that he would allow an action for fourfold the amount of the loss sustained by this compulsion; and an action, not only against the person who had been guilty of the violence, but also against any innocent person who had got direct pecuniary profit in consequence of the act of violence.

This measure of Octavius was caused by the circumstances of the times. During the tyranny of the Dictator Sulla, acts of violence had become so common, and so many persons had been deprived of their property by threats, and other illegal proceedings, that a stronger remedy seemed to be required than a simple action (condictio), to which, however, a person might still have recourse. After the publication of the new Formula, the two remedies subsisted together. As citizens now practised with respect to other citizens the same unlawful means that Roman 'magistratus' practised against provincials, there was a reason for applying what Cicero calls the principles of the Lex Socialis, the Lex De Repetundis (Divin. c. 5), to the case of Roman citizens oppressing their fellow-citizens. The Formula of Octavius having been introduced into the Edictum Urbanum, was thence transferred to the Provinciale; for Cicero tells us (Lib. 3. c. 65), that L. Caecilius Metellus, the successor of Verres, had admitted the Formula into his edict at Rome, and also into his provincial edict. The claim of C. Gallus before Metellus, was, that pursuant to his edict the 'praetor' should grant him an action against Apronius, in respect of "quod per vim et metum—abstulisset." Cicero, in speaking of the exactions of this scoundrel, uses the words which brought his acts within the terms of the edict; 'iniquas pactiones vi et metu expressas'—'civitates virgarum ac mortis metu'—'aratores vi et metu coactos Apronio multo plus quam debuerint dedisse.' There was sufficient reason to allow the action against Apronius, but Metellus refused it, because he wished to keep back what would have appeared to the prejudice of Verres, in the trial at Rome. Verres was, indeed, the real culprit, for Apronius only acted as his tool; but he was at least liable for whatever had come to his hands. Now Metellus saw, that if Apronius had been condemned to restore fourfold to C. Gallus, this would have been indirectly a condemnation of Verres in the matter of the Repetundae. It was, however, a principle of law, that when the condemnation of a defendant by Recuperatores, in a civil matter, preceded the trial for a matter that affected a man's 'caput' (causa capitalis), the accused had the advantage of an exception in this form, 'extra quam si in reum capitis praejudicium fiat,' which means, that the result of this trial was not to prejudice him in the future trial (Cicero, De Invent. ii. 20: "non enim oportet in recuperatorio iudicio ejus maleficii, de quo inter sicarios quaeritur, praejudicium fieri" &c. Paulus, Dig. 5. 1. 54: "per minorem causam majori cognitioni praejudicium fieri non oportet; major enim" &c.: and Dig. 47. 10. 7. § 1). This was precisely the case before Metellus. The 'Actio quod metus causa' against Apronius would have been decided in the province, and Verres would have to be tried by a body of senators at Rome, on the charge of Repetundae. Metellus did not wish the judgment in Sicily, which would certainly have been obtained against Apronius, to prejudice Verres at Rome in any way: "praejudicium se . . . nolle fieri" (c. 65). Cicero expresses his surprise that Metellus did not perceive that he was in effect passing judgment on Verres, by refusing to allow this action: "sed hoc miror . . . judicavit" (c. 65).

It has been urged that the words 'quod per vim et metum abstulisset' cannot have been the words of the Formula, which may be true to a certain degree. Neither the word 'quod,' nor the subjunctive 'abstulisset,' would appear in the Formula; but the words 'per vim et metum,' and 'abstulisse,' so often repeated by Cicero, can only be referred to the Formula as their source. The words 'ablata pecunia' are also one of the expressions of the Lex Servilia, to designate the offences to which that Lex applied; and this, which is an argument in favour of the analogy between the Octaviana Formula, and the Lex de Repetundis, is also in favour of some form of the word 'aufero' being contained in the Formula. Repetundae comprehended both the offence of receiving money as a gift—a bribe, for instance—and also the getting of money by force and threats. The 'Actio quod metus causa' could have no reference to gifts, because a free gift from one private person to another, is a transaction that does not come under the head of things forbidden; but the obtaining of money, or any thing valuable from another by threats and force, is precisely the act to which the Formula Octaviana applied.

The position of the defendant in the 'Actio quod metus causa,' shows also that this 'actio' is framed after the model of the proceedings in the case of Repetundae. The principle of the action is not only to punish the man who has used 'vis et metus,' but to restore the injured party to all his rights. Accordingly the 'Actio quod metus' could be maintained even against artificial persons, though they are not capable of committing a delict (Dig. 4. 2. 9. § 1. 3); also against the 'heredes' of the person who had used 'vis et metus,' though they had taken no personal share in the compulsion; against third persons who had derived some direct advantage from the application of the 'vis et metus,' though as a general rule third persons are not affected by the acts of others. It also holds against those who have acquired by singular succession, if they have got all the profit which the person who used compulsion derived from the act (Dig. 4. 2. 14. § 5), though as a general rule personal complaints do not pass from one defendant to another. But these persons, who may become liable to the plaintiff, are only liable so far as the advantage derived from the 'metus et vis' has come to their hands (quantum ad eos pervenit), and at the time of the commencement of the action is still a part of their property (Dig. 4. 2. 20). The principle was that the gain which had accrued from the unlawful act could be recovered from any person to whom it could be traced. If the thing was consumed, neither the wrong-doer nor his 'heres' was released; the 'actio' is 'perpetua.' If it has perished, a third person in whose hands it was, is released; but if such person has parted with the thing, which was originally wrongfully gotten, he is still liable; for the thing having been exchanged for money, or any thing else, he must be considered to have been a gainer, even if that thing afterwards perish or is consumed.

The object of the 'Actio quod metus' is clearly then, in the case of private wrong-doers, the same as that of the proceedings for Repetundae in the case of Magistratus. The object of the clause 'quo ea pecunia pervenerit,' and the extension of the action to third persons, is to give the injured party complete compensation, and to take from third persons a profit or advantage, which they have got without good grounds, and at the cost of him who has suffered 'vis et metus.' The ignorance in a third party of the unlawful act was not a necessary condition of the plaintiff's right of action. The principle was the same as that applied to stolen goods, where the ownership still remained unchanged, into whatever hands the stolen thing came. Accordingly, a 'bonae fidei emptor,' that is, a man who believed that the seller had a good title, if he bought things from a person who had got them 'vi et metu,' or if he received such things as a gift, or as a legacy, was still liable to this action for its restitution (Dig. 4. 2. 14. § 5).

The Octaviana Formula further agrees with the Litis Aestimatio as to the fourfold value to be recovered; whether this fourfold value first appeared in the Lex Julia, and was thence transferred to the Formula, or whether it was in the Lex Cornelia, and was thence transferred into the Formula at its original formation, as in the case of the 'actio vi bonorum,' where the 'quadruplum' was a part of the original Formula¹.

The object of the 'quadruplum' seems to have been rather an indirect means of compelling 'restitutio' than the proper object of the 'Actio quod metus causa;' and accordingly the right to demand the 'quadruplum' was extinguished if the complainant had obtained satisfaction by the immediate aid of the 'praetor,' by the 'exceptio metus,' or by the 'actio doli.' For if this 'Actio quod metus' had been a mixed penal action, the claim for the 'tripulum' would still have remained, after the 'simplum' was made good². If one of several persons who has used 'metus et vis,' or one of several persons to whose hands the thing had come, either has restored the thing before judgment pronounced against him, or has paid the 'quadruplum' pursuant to a judgment, the demand against the rest is extinguished: the solidarity which is a characteristic of penal actions does not hold here³. This rule as to the 'Actio quod metus causa' is expressed as follows by Ulpian (Dig. 4. 2. 14. § 15):

² Savigny, System, &c. 232, 233. In all cases of this kind the second action can be prosecuted, although the first has been prosecuted and a judgment obtained for the plaintiff. Thus the 'Actio vi bonorum raptorum' had for its object simple recovery of the value, and also three times the value as a penalty.

“Si plures metum adhibuerint et unus fuerit conventus, siquidem sponte rem ante sententiam restituerit, omnes liberati sunt. Sed etsi id non fecerit, sed ex sententia quadruplum restituerit, verius est etiam sic perimi adversus ceteros quod metus causa actionem.”

Finally, the Edict gave a man the opportunity of avoiding the ‘quadruplum’ by restitution (Dig. 4. 2. 14. § 1: “Si quis non restituat, in quadruplum in eum iudicium pollicetur,” &c.). He had the power of making restitution at any time before the sentence was pronounced.

The Formula Octaviana only related to the action of the party who had been wronged: for Formula is only another name for Actio. If the injured party was sued upon some promise obtained by ‘vis et metus,’ or any cause of action, the foundation of which was in ‘vis et metus,’ his defence or answer was by the ‘metus exceptio,’ or the plea of constraint. This ‘exceptio’ was ‘in rem,’ that is, general, and consequently it was an answer not only to the ‘heres’ of the person who had used the ‘vis et metus,’ and to any person who had purchased from him, but also to any third person (enimvero metus causa exceptio in rem scripta est: Si in ea re nihil metus causa factum est; ut non inspicimus an is qui agit metus causa fecerit aliquid sed an omnino metus causa factum sit in hac re a quocunque, non tantum ab eo qui agit: Dig. 44. 4. 4. § 33).

I have given as well as I can the substance of Rudorff’s essay in the Zeitschrift für Geschichtliche Rechtswissenschaft (xii. 131); but it is not easy to compress an essay of forty pages and to treat the matter properly. If this is considered too technical an exposition, the fault is with the subject, and it cannot be helped. Those who will read with care may understand it pretty well; and they will see what pains the Romans took to protect persons who had been constrained by force or threats to do any act by which their pecuniary interests were damaged, or who had been, by like means, prevented from doing some act, the omission of which was injurious to their interests. The ‘condictiones’ of the Jus Civile applied to many cases; and, among others, they enabled a man to recover what had been got from him by force or threats; and Cicero alludes to this process in the Divinatio (c. 5): “Civibus quum sunt ereptae pecuniae,” &c. But the ‘condictio’ could only be maintained against the original wrong-doer (Dig. 12. 6. 49); and the thing itself (a sum of money, for instance), or the simple amount of the loss or damage only could be recovered.

It was remarked that the Edict ran originally ‘Quod vi metusque causa,’ and that afterwards the word ‘vi’ was omitted, and properly omitted. It is properly ‘vis,’ when the person to whom ‘vis’ is applied is overpowered by physical force; for instance, if money is taken from his pocket in spite of his resistance, or if he is prevented by physical force from doing something which he wishes to do, voting at an election, making his testament, or the like. If no force is used, but the will is operated on by threats, that is, by producing fear, this is 'metus.' Savigny observes (System, &c., iii. p. 101, note (a)), that the opposition between 'vis' and 'metus' appears most clearly in the case of the loss of possession; for possession may be lost either through physical force or through threats. If a man is forcibly ejected, that is Dejectio, and to this case applied the 'Interdictum de vi' (Dig. 43. 16. 5). If a man gives up possession through threats, that is compulsive Traditio (delivery), and the 'Actio quod metus causa' applies (Dig. 4. 2. 9). The Romans did not consider that fear, produced by threats, took away the free exercise of the will. The cases to which the 'Actio quod metus' applies are not those where physical force was used, but where fear was produced by threats; they were cases in which the person had chosen to act in obedience to the threat rather than submit to the consequences of refusal. Such are the numerous cases mentioned in these orations, where persons had through fear, and some through pain, consented to comply with the demands of Verres or his agents. The Romans were right in saying that threats do not exclude the freedom of the will; and accordingly they did not consider acts done under the influence of this kind of fear to be void. But they gave a remedy to the person who had acted under the influence of the motive of fear caused by threats; and the ground was this, that means to induce him to consent had been applied, which were immoral, just as it is immoral to tempt a woman's chastity by money; and only one degree less immoral than to violate it by force. Wherever, then, immoral means are applied to induce consent, the consenting party is entitled to restitution or reparation so far as it is possible. What means are immoral is a matter that may be safely left to the 'communis sensus,' the moral notions of all people who are not immediately interested in the decision of any particular case. This subject is discussed by Savigny, System, Vol. iii., Zwang und Irrthum.

It is possible that some things in this Excursus may not be quite consistent with some things that occur elsewhere in this book. The explanation is this: there are great difficulties in some of the subjects discussed in this volume, and certain differences of opinion about them. In this essay I have endeavoured to give Rudorff's opinions. What I have taken from others, or what I have said myself, may easily be distinguished.

1. studium ;] Zumpt refers to Cicero, De Invent. i. 25, for a definition of 'studium': "studium est animi assidua et vehemens ad aliquam rem applicata magna cum voluntate occupatio, ut philosophiae, poeticae, geometriae, literarum."

gemmam] 'Gemmae' are precious stones, as 'adamas, smaragdus, beryllus, opalus,' and many others, which Pliny, in his multifarious work (H. N. xxxvii. 4) describes. They were used in many ways. They were set in gold, and worn in a ring. They were used for adorning drinking cups (Juv. v. 43), for ornament, and for the gem-cutter to exercise his art upon.

margaritam,] 'Margarita,' or 'margaritum,' is the pearl. It is mentioned (μαργαρίτης) by Arrian (Indic. c. 8) as being found in the Indian seas in a shell fish; and he adds, that the name is Indian, as we might suppose (τὸν μαργαρίτην δὲ τὸν θαλάσσιον, οὕτω τῇ Ἰνδοῶν γλώσσῃ καλεόμενον). Pliny (H. N. ix. c. 35) treats of pearls, an article on which immense sums of money were spent in his time. He says that he once saw Lollia Paullina covered with pearls and emeralds; she wore them all over her head, in her hair, in her ears, on her neck, and her fingers. The value of these costly ornaments was 'quadringenties H.S.'

tabula,] The Romans sometimes used 'tabula,' absolutely for 'pictura;' sometimes they added 'picta.' 'Pictura' is the painting; and 'tabula' is the material, which was 'wood.' The word 'textili' is used as a noun, and means 'cloth' or 'canvas.' Cicero, however, does not mean a painting on canvas, but a work made by the needle, or possibly woven. The expressions 'picta sit abstulerit. Magnum videor dicere: attendite etiam quemadmodum dicam. Non enim verbi neque criminis augendi causa complector omnia, quum dico nihil istum ejusmodi rerum in tota provincia reliquisse; Latine me scitote, non accusatorie loqui. Etiam planius: nihil in aedibus cujusquam, ne in oppidis quidem; nihil in locis communibus, ne in fanis quidem; nihil apud Siculum, nihil apud civem Romanum; denique nihil istum quod ad oculos animumque acciderit, neque privati, neque publici, neque profani, neque sacri, tota in Sicilia reliquisse.

II. Unde igitur potius incipiam quam ab ea civitate, quae tibi una in amore atque in deliciis fuit, aut ex quo potius numero quam ex ipsis laudatoribus tuis? Facilius enim perspicietur qualis apud eos fueris, qui te oderunt, qui accusant, qui persequuntur, quum apud tuos Mamertinos invenire improbissima ratione esse praedatus. C. Heius est Mamertinus, omnes hoc mihi qui Messanam accesserunt facile concedunt, omnibus rebus illa in civitate ornatus. Hujus domus est vel optima Messanae, notissima quidem certe, et nostris hominibus apertissima maximeque hospitalis. Ea domus ante istius adventum ornata sic fuit ut urbi quoque esset ornamento. Nam ipsa Messana, quae situ, moenibus, portuque ornata sit, ab his rebus quibus iste delectatur sane vacua atque vestis,' 'picta toga,' mean a dress ornamented with needlework.

"Non ego praetulerim Babylonos picta superbae Texta Semiramia quae variantur acu."
Martial, viii. 28.

According to Pliny (H. N. xxxv. 33), canvas was not used to paint on till the time of Nero. On ancient painting, the reader may consult the useful article Pictura, in Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities. The great shawl, or 'peplus,' which was carried in the Panathenaic festival at Athens, contained a representation of the battle of the gods and the giants. See the article Tela, in Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities.

Latine] That is, 'simply,' 'plainly,' 'in plain English,' as we should say, "Ut ii qui plane et Latine loquuntur" (Phil. vii. 6). To speak 'Latine' seems to have been a common expression, and it was in use long after Cicero's time. Martial says (Epig. Lib. i. Ad Lectorem Epistola): "si quis tamen tam ambitiose tristis est ut apud illum in nulla pagina Latine loqui fas sit, potest epistola vel potius titulo contentus esse." This is Martial's excuse for obscenity. 'Accusatorie' means with the licence which an accuser takes, that is, falsely. He often has the expression: Lib. 3. c. 70, and elsewhere.

2. quae tibi una] 'Which especially, of all others.'

quae situ,—portuque] 'i. e. licet ornata sit,' as Zumpt correctly explains it; and adds, that he is surprised that Ernesti, 'alioquin diligentissimus conjunctivi observator,' could think of correcting the passage. But Zumpt's explanation is only a part of the explanation. The meaning is, 'a city, which by its situation, walls, and port, is embellished.'

The port of Messana "is one of the most picturesque, commodious, and safe that can be imagined" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 113). The old name of Messana, which was Zancle (Thucyd. vi. 4), was derived from its curved or hooked form.

"Quique locus curvae nomina falcis habet."
Ovid. Fast. iv. 474.

The mouth of the harbour is seven hundred yards wide. The old coins represent the form of the harbour, with a Pharos upon it. There is a good view of Messana in Swinburn's Travels, 'as in 1777.'

nuda est. Erat apud Heium sacrarium magna cum dignitate in aedibus, a majoribus traditum, perantiquum; in quo signa pulcherrima quatuor, summo artificio, summa nobilitate, quae non modo istum hominem ingeniosum et intelligentem, verum etiam quemvis nostrum, quos iste idiotas appellat, delectare possent: unum Cupidinis marmoreum Praxiteli—Nimirum didici etiam, dum in istum inquiero, artificum nomina. Idem, opinor, artifex ejusdemmodi Cupidinem fecit illum qui est Thespiis, propter quem Thespieae sacrarium] A little chapel, in which Heius almost daily performed a religious service (c. 8). Cicero has translated the Greek term by a Roman equivalent. Families, both among the Greeks and the Romans, had their family rites; and the maintenance of the private 'sacra' was a part of the Roman religious system.

idiotas] Cicero uses a term familiar among the Greeks (ιδιώτης), which, as its etymology shows, is a person in a private capacity, as opposed to one who has a public function. It was also used generally to signify a person who is ignorant of any particular science or art, as opposed to one who is versed in it. Demosthenes (adv. Leptin. 75, ed. Wolf) says, ἐν' εἰς ᾧ περὶ τῶν ὄντων ἐκάστου νόμος καὶ μὴ τοῦς ιδιώτας αὐτὸ τοῦτο ταραττή καὶ ποιῇ τῶν ἀπαντας εἰδότην τοῦς νόμους ἔλαττον ἔχειν. See Thucydides ii. 47. Cicero here uses a kind of oratorical artifice, pretending to be almost unacquainted even with the names of the Greek artists. But he was fond of works of art even at this time, and he spent more money on them than he could afford: "nam in eo genere sic studio efferimur ut abs te adjuvandi, ab aliis prope reprehendendi simus" (Ad Att. i. 8). He had when he wrote this (B.C. 67), only three years after the supposed delivery of this speech, a 'studium' (see c. 1). In Lib. 4. c. 6, again, he declares that he sets no great value on such things: 'Ego vero ad meam rationem,' &c.; but this is said oratorically.

Praxiteli] There is no doubt that the Romans used this form of the genitive for many of the Greek nouns in -es. 'Timarchidi' has occurred before, Lib. 2. c. 44, &c. As to Praxiteles and his works, see Plin. H. N. xxxiv. c. 8; and the article Praxiteles in Sillig's Catalogus.

Cupidinem] Eros (Ἔρως) was worshipped at Thespieae, a place in Boeotia, chief of all the gods. The oldest statue of Eros was a rude stone. Lysippus made a bronze Eros for the Thespians, and Praxiteles had previously made one of Pentelic marble. This appears to be the statue which Phryne got from him (Pausan. i. 20). Strabo (p. 410) says that Thespieae was visited by people to see the Eros of Praxiteles, which the courtesan Glycera, a Thespian woman, gave to her townsmen, having received it as a present from the artist; and 'in former times people used to go to Thespieae to see it.' This seems to imply that it was not there in Strabo's time, though this inference is not necessary. But, according to the other authorities, the statue was still at Thespieae in Strabo's time, for Strabo did not live to the reign of Caligula. Strabo is mistaken in the name of the lady. All the other authorities agree that the donor was Phryne, of whom there was at Thespieae a statue, also the work of her lover, Praxiteles. The emperor Caius (that is, Caligula) first removed the statue of Eros from Thespieae. Claudius gave it back; but Nero, the universal plunderer, carried it off again, and it was destroyed at Rome in a fire, in the time of Titus, as it appears (Dion Cassius, Lib. lxvi. c. 24, ed. Reimar; Pausanias, ix. 27). The Thespians still clung to their divinity; for Menodorus, an Athenian, made them a copy of the statue of Praxiteles, and this was the figure which Pausanias saw at Thespieae, in the second century of our aera (Pausan. ix. 27; and i. 20).

Pliny (H. N. xxxvi. c. 5, ed. Hard.) says of Praxiteles: "Ejusdem est et Cupido objectus a Cicerone Verri, ille propter quem Thespieae visebantur, nunc in Octaviae scholis positus." Pliny also mentions another Cupido by Praxiteles, at Parium, on the Propontis; and he speaks of this Cupido as being at Parium when he wrote. Pliny's text is either corrupt, or this is an instance of his carelessness; for he clearly says that the Cupido which Verres was charged with taking, was the Cupido which people used to go to Thespieae to see, and which in his time was in the Scholae of Octavia. But the Cupido of Heius was clearly not that visuntur; nam alia visendi causa nulla est. Atque ille L. Mummius, quum Thespiadas quae ad aedem Felicitatis sunt, ceteraque profana ex illo oppido signa tolleret, hunc marmoreum Cupidinem quod erat consecratus non attigit.

III. Verum ut ad illud sacrarium redeam, signum erat hoc quod dico Cupidinis e marmore: ex altera parte Hercules egregie factus ex aere. Is dicebatur esse Myronis, ut opinor; et certe. Item ante hos deos erant arulae quae cuius religionem sacrarii significare possent. Erant aenea duo praeterea signa, non maxima, verum eximia venustate, virginali habitu atque vestitu, quae manibus sub-latis sacra quaedam more Atheniensium virginum reposita in capitibus sustinebant. Canephoroe ipsae vocabantur. Sed earum arti-of Thespieae. It was either the statue from Parium, or a third work of Praxiteles, or what is more likely than either supposition, a copy of one of the Cupids of the great master. Sillig (Catalogus Artificum) supposes that the Cupido of Heius was the Parian statue, which he conjectures had been carried off by some Roman 'proconsul,' and had come to the hands of Heius. He adds, that Pliny's authority remains intact, and he is only mistaken in saying that the statue of Heius was the statue of Thespieae; not a small mistake however. He further adds, that this explains why he considered the other statue to be still at Parium; that is, one blunder explains another. For, if Sillig is right in supposing that the statue of Heius was the Parian statue, Pliny was quite wrong in saying that it was still at Parium. He must have made the assertion contrary to fact, and without making inquiry. The Thespian was at Rome; he knew that: and yet he did not know how it came there, though Nero brought it, and he was living when it came.

Thespiadas] The Greek accusative. These were the figures of the Musae, mentioned by Pliny (H. N. xxxiv. c. 8, ed. Harduin.): "signa quae ante aedem Felicitatis fuere, Veneremque, quae cum ipsa aede incendio cremata est Claudii principatu, marmoreae illi suae per terras inclytæ parem." This Venus and the Thespiades were bronze figures.

profana—signa] The meaning is explained by the contrast with 'consecratus,' that which is devoted to religious purposes.

3. Myronis] A skilful artist in bronze, (Pliny, H. N. xxxi. 8, ed. Hard.) was a Boeotian, born about B.C. 480. See the article Myron in Smith's Dictionary of Biography and Mythology. The famous Hercules of Myron was at Samos, and there was another at Rome. This of Heius may have been by Myron; or, what came to the same thing, it was said to be by Myron. In ancient times, as in modern, there was often more than one original. It is not likely that it was a colossal statue, like the Hercules of Samos (Strabo, p. 637, ed. Casaub.).

arulae] Small altars. The inferior MSS., and the old editions, have 'tabulae,' which is manifestly a false reading.

Canephoroe] This word represents the Greek κρηφόροι, the carriers of the κρηστήν, or basket. Cicero accurately describes the composition of these figures, not like an 'idiotes,' but like a man of taste. Pliny (H. N. xxxvi. c. 5, ed. Hard.) mentions Canephoroe by Scopas, but not by Praxiteles. Canephoroe walked in processions at Athens (Thucyd. vi. 56). They are described by Ovid (Metam. ii. 713):—

"Illa forte die castae de more puellae Vertice supposito festas in Palladis arces
Pura coronatis portabant sacra canistris."

An 'antefixa' in the British Museum, represents two 'canephoroe' approaching a 'candelabrum'; one arm supports the basket on the head, and the other slightly raises the dress. See the cut in Smith's Dictionary of Antiquities. The Caryatid figures, as to the origin of which Vitruvius gives so absurd a story, belong to the same style as the Canephoroe. They were employed in the temple of Pandrosos, on the Acropolis, in supporting the architrave of the southern portico. These stately figures, walking with solemn pace in religious proficem, quem? quemnam? Recte admones, Polyclitum esse dicebant. Messanam ut quisque nostrum venerat, haec visere solebat: omnibus haec ad visendum patebant quotidie: domus erat non domino magis ornamento quam civitati. C. Claudius, cujus aedilitatem magnificentissimam scimus fuisse, usus est hoc Cupidine tamdiu dum forum diis immortalibus populoque Romano habuit ornatum: et quum esset hospes Heiorum, Mamertini autem populi patronus, ut illis benignis usus est ad commodandum, sic ipse diligens fuit ad reportandum. Nuper homines nobiles hujusmodi, judices, et quid dico nuper, immo vero modo, ac plane paulo ante vidimus, qui forum ac basilicas non spoliis provinciarum sed ornamentis amicorum, cessions, are probably alluded to by Horace, 1 Sat. iii. 10:—

—“persaepe velut qui

and 2 Sat. viii. 13; and Heindorf's notes. A ‘canephoros’ of Artemis is mentioned (Theocr. ii. 66).

Sed earum artificem, — Polyclitum] ‘Polyclitum’ appears to be the usual Latin form, as Zumpt shows, not ‘Pölycletum.’ Cicero here uses an artifice, which he probably borrowed from the Athenian orators. He gives an air of reality, or of a spoken discourse, to that which was only written; as Demosthenes and other Athenians did, for they wrote out and polished their speeches after the delivery, which does not exclude the supposition of their being written also before delivery. Wolf (adv. Lep- tin. 68) compares with this passage of Cicero the following passage of Demos- thenes: Δάβε δὴ καὶ τὸ Χαβρία ψήφισμα ψηφισθέν. ὄρα δὴ καὶ σκόπει· δεῖ γὰρ αὐτὸ ἐνταῦθα εἶναι πον. See the note of Wolf, who refers to Quintil. Inst. Or. ix. 2. 61. Pliny, the younger, in a letter to Tacitus (i. 20), also quotes this passage: “ideo in optima quaque mille figuras ex- temporales invenimus: in his etiam quas tantum editas scimus, ut in Verrem, Artifi- cem quem? quemnam?” &c. The inferior MSS., and the editions before that of Lam- binus, omit the ‘quem.’

Sillig (Catalog.) has a long article on Polyclitus.

C. Claudius,] Pulcher, Aedilis Curulis, B.C. 99, who, as Pliny says (H. N. viii. 7, ed. Hard.), was the first who ornamented the ‘scena’ with paintings. See Valerius Max. ii. c. 4. 6. This practice of deco- rating the Forum is mentioned by Livy (ix. 40), and he attempts to assign the origin of the practice. See Lib. i. c. 22.

Zumpt says that this is an oblique attack on Hortensius, who made a magnificent display in his aedileship, but was sus- pected of having received money and pre- sents for this purpose, from persons who had been guilty of irregularities like Verres (De Off. ii. 16. Brut. c. 92).

basilicas] This is a Greek word, sig- nifying a royal building of some sort. The Basilicae of Rome were large buildings, de- signed for public business, particularly mer- cantile business. They were afterwards also used, or part of them, as courts of justice. A Basilica was a roofed building supported by columns, so arranged as to form a por- tico all round the interior of it. The ‘tri- bunal’ was at one end of the building, on a raised platform. Vitruvius (v. 1) explains the plan and uses of this kind of building. These ‘basilicae’ were the originals of the modern exchange or bourse. The best representations of them are the early Chris- tian churches in Rome, and some of them exhibit many of the characteristics of the Roman Basilicae. There are twelve churches in Rome now which are called Basilicae. The most perfect Basilica of antiquity is that of Pompeii, which agrees very well with the description of Vitruvius. The plan of the building is 220 feet by 80.

Livy (xxvi. 27) shows, that in B.C. 210 there was no Basilica at Rome. M. Por- cius Cato, when Censor, was the first who erected a Basilica, B.C. 185; and it was named Porcia. It was close to the Curia and the Comitium. It was burnt B.C. 54, and there is no account of its having been rebuilt. The second Basilica was built (B.C. 180) in the censorship of Aemilius Lepidus and M. Fulvius Nobilior. This was called Basilica Aemilia et Fulvia (Varro, L. L. vi. 2); but it is commonly called Aemilia. The next was the Basilica Julia, built in the midst of the Forum. A Semcommodis hospitum non furtis nocentium ornarent; qui tamen signa atque ornamenta sua cuique reddebant, non ablata ex urbibus sociorum quatruidi causa, per simulationem aedilitatis, domum deinde atque ad suas villas auferebant. Haec omnia quae dixi signa, iudices, ab Heio e sacrario Verres abstulit. Nullum, inquam, horum reliquit, neque aliud ullum tamen praeter unum perpronia, built by the 'censor,' T. Sempronius Gracchus (B.C. 170), is also mentioned.

On the Roman Basilica, see Becker's Handbuch, i. p. 300; and the article Basilicae in the Penny Cyclopaedia. It would be out of place to say more of these Basilicae, or to discuss their position in Rome. Enough is said to show the reader what a Basilica is. Those who have paid any attention to the Topography of Ancient Rome, know the 'Beschreibung der Stadt Rom,' and the work of W. A. Becker, Handbuch der Römischen Alterthümer. There are also three pamphlets which are connected with these two works: 'Die Römische Topographie in Rom, eine Warnung,' by W. A. Becker: 'Römische Topographie in Leipzig, ein Anhang zur Beschreibung der Stadt Rom,' by L. Urlichs: and 'Zur Römischen Topographie Antwort an Herrn Urlichs,' by W. A. Becker; a temperate reply to a scurrilous pamphlet.

commodis] Cicero has just used 'ad commodandum;' and he here uses 'commodis,' in the sense of 'loans.' The Roman name for the loan of a thing, as of a sum of money, or a thing which is consumed in the use, was 'mutuum' (Gaius, iii. 90). When a sum of money was lent, or other things which are consumed in the use, and lent with the object of the things becoming the property of the borrower, who was bound to restore things to the same amount and value, the contract was called 'mutuum' (Gaius, iii. 90). If things were lent, which were not consumed in the use, and were lent for a specific purpose, without any pay for the lending, and on the terms of being restored to the lender after being used, the contract was 'commodatum' (Dig. 13. tit. 6. Inst. Just. Lib. iii. tit. 14. s. 2). This use of 'commodis' seems something peculiar. Zumpt observes: "praeter communem vocabuli usum dicuntur res, quae ab hospitibus ad tempus concessae sunt sive commodatae;" and he quotes after Graevius, Isidorus, Orig. v. 25: "Commodum est id quod nostri juris est et ad alium temporaliter translatum est cum commodo temporis, quamdiu apud eum sit, unde commodum dictum." But the thing lent cannot be called 'commodum;' its name is 'commodatum.' Gaius, iii. 206, says of him 'cui rem commodavimus:' "hic quoque utendo commodum percipiendo similiter necesse habet custodiam praestare:" he is bound to take due care of the thing from which he derives 'commodum.'

quatruidi causa,] Lambinus wanted to get rid of the 'quatruidi.' He says: "quatruidi causa genus loquendi inusitatum;" and the conclusion is, that because it is 'inusitatum' it is wrong. I suppose that it means 'for the purpose of the few days of the exhibition.' Cicero calls it four, but it may have been more.

neque aliud ullum tamen] 'Not one of them, I say, he left;' but he partly corrects himself, only to give more effect to what he had said—not another, at least, except one very old one, of wood. 'Nam tamen non raro poni pro certe, ut Germanice doch pro wenigstens satis constat' (Zumpt). 'Bonae Fortunae,' Cod. Vat. 'Bonam Fortunam' is the common reading.

The oldest statues of Greece were of wood. The Greek name is ξόανον. Pausanias (2. 19. 3) says of the temple of Apollo Lycius ('Ἀπόλλωνος ἱερὸν Λυκίου, ed. Bek.), 'originally both the temple and the ξόανον were a dedication of Danaus; for I am convinced, that at that time all statues were ξόανα, and particularly Egyptian statues.' He says in another place (8. 17. 2): "of old, as far as I have been able to learn, these were the woods of which ξόανα were made, ebony, cypress, cedar, oak, smilax, lotus." To this list may be added olive-wood (Herod. v. 82). Pausanias mentions a statue of Hermes, made of θύος (citrus?), about eight feet high. We know that the Egyptians also made wooden statues. The small figures of sycamore wood are still common. Belzoni found two wooden figures of fine workmanship, about seven feet high, in the tombs of the kings at Thebes. The Greek artist finally overlaid the wooden statue with ivory and

IV. Pro deum hominumque fidem, quid hoc est? quae haec causa est? quae ista impudentia est? Quae dico signa, antequam abs te sublata sunt, Messanam cum imperio nemo venit quin viderit. Tot praetores, tot consules in Sicilia, tum in pace tum etiam in bello fuerunt; tot homines cujusque modi—non loquor de integris, innocentibus, religiosis; tot cupidi, tot improbi, tot audaces; quorum nemo sibi tam vehemens, tam potens, tam nobilis visus est qui ex illo sacrario quidquam poscere aut tollere aut attingere auderet. Verres quod ubique erit pulcherrimum auferet? nihil habere praeterea cuiquam licebit? tot domus locupletissimas domus istius una capiet? Idcirco nemo superiorum attigit ut hic tolleret? ideo C. Claudius Pulcher rettulit ut C. Verres posset auferre? At non requirebat ille Cupido lenonis domum ac meretriciam disciplinam: facile illo sacrario patrio continebatur: Heio se a maioribus relictum esse sciebat in hereditate sacrorum: non quaerebat meretricis heredem.

V. Sed quid ego tam vehementer invehor? Verbo uno repellar: Emi, inquit. O dii immortales, praeclaram defensionem! Mercatorem in provinciam cum imperio ac securibus misimus, omnia qui signa, tabulas pictas, omne argentum, aurum, ebur, gemmas coëmeret, nihil cuiquam relinqueret. Haec enim mihi ad omnia defensio patefieri videtur, Emisse. Primum, si id quod vis tibi ego concedam, ut emeris, quoniam in toto hoc genere ac una defensione usus es; quaero cujusmodi tu judicia Romae putaris esse, si tibi hoc quemquam concessurum putasti, te in praetura gold, and made a wonder of art out of a kernel of wood.

4. ut hic tolleret?] The common reading is 'iste;,' 'sed hic, qui nunc est, opponitur aetate superioribus' (Zumpt).

in hereditate sacrorum:] "Sacra h. l. non sunt sacrificia, sed ipsa signa sacrata" (Zumpt). This is not the correct interpretation. Cicero is speaking after Roman fashion; for, among the Romans, the 'sacra,' or sacred rites, which a family had to perform, were a part of the 'hereditas' or succession. It is no objection that this might not be a rule of Sicilian law; Cicero speaks of it as if it were: "In the Roman religious system there was a kind of divine worship, which was required from mere private persons, as a duty, and, like every other, was under the superintendence of the Pon-tifices: 'sacra privata.' If, for instance, a Roman vowed certain offerings, and the Pontifices approved of them, he was for ever bound to this duty. Nay, this duty did not cease with his life, but, so far as was possible, it must have perpetual continuance. For this reason the Pontifices assumed, that the obligation did not rest so much on the person as on the property, and passed with this property after the death to other persons" (Savigny, Vermischte Schriften, i. p. 152, 'Ueber die Juristische Behandlung der Sacra Privata bei den Römern'). Hotmann understood the passage right.

5. cum imperio ac securibus] See Lib. 1. c. 22, where the text of Asconius had these words, which may have been borrowed from this passage.

atque imperio tot res, tam pretiosas, omnes denique res quae alicujus pretii fuerint tota ex provincia coëmissee. Videte majorum diligentiam qui nihildum etiam istiusmodi suspicabantur; verumtamen ea quae parvis in rebus accidere poterant providebant. Neminem qui cum potestate aut legatione in provinciam esset profectus, tam amentem fore putaverunt ut emeret argentum; dabatur enim de publico: ut vestem; praebebatur enim legibus: mancipium putaverunt; quo et omnes utimur, et non praebetur a populo. Sanxerunt, Ne quis emeret nisi in demortui locum. Si qui Romae esset demortuus? Immo, si quis ibidem. Non enim te instruere domum tuam voluerunt in provincia, sed illum usum provinciae supplere. Quae fuit causa cur tam diligenter nos in provinciis ab emptionibus removerent? Haec, iudices, quod putabant ereptionem esse non emptionem, quum venditori suo arbitrato vendere non liceret. In Ne quis emeret] After 'emeret' is found in most MSS. 'manicipium,' but Zumpt observes, that it seems better omitted, so that the transition to the masculine gender is easier. He refers to Lib. 2. c. 32: "Quod unquam hujusmodi monstrum . . . qui;" and to Liv. xxxviii. c. 34: "tum uti quae servitia tyranni liberassent, ea magna multitudo erat, ante diem certam abirent: qui ibi mansissent," &c.

Hotmann refers to Dig. 18. 1. 46 and 62, which show that there were imperial constitutions, which prevented a governor from trafficking; and these constitutions were undoubtedly founded on old rules: "Non licet ex officio, quod administrat quis, emere quid vel per se vel per aliam personam; alioquin non tantum rem amittit, sed et in quadruplum convenitur secundum constitutionem Severi et Antonini;" that is, Septimius Severus, and his son, Antoninus Caracalla.

Athenaeus (vi. 273. ed. Cas.) tells a story of Scipio Africanus, after Polybius and Posidonius, taking only five slaves with him when he went abroad on a public mission, and one of those having died on the road, he wrote to his friends to buy another in his place, and send him. There is also a curious passage in the Life of Alexander Severus, by Lampridius, c. 42, on the allowance to governors of provinces, in which he seems to refer to this passage of Cicero: so many pounds of silver, so many cups, mules, and so forth. They had one cook allowed; "et si uxores non haberent, singulas concubinas quod sine his esse non possent: reddituri deposita administratione, mulas, mulos, equos, muliones et

illum usum] This expression seems rather peculiar. The whole passage from 'Sanxerunt' means this: "They made a rule that no governor should buy a slave, except in the place of one who died. What if one should die at Rome? No; if one died in the place where the governor was. For they did not intend that you should stock your household in the province, but that you should supply your provincial wants."

ereptionem esse non emptionem,] This, as Zumpt observes, is the figure 'annominatio,' which is described in the Lib. ad Herennium, iv. 21. Some people are, perhaps, not aware of the obscure diligence with which the ancient writers on rhetoric tortured language into rules and figures. It is instructive as a warning against trifling. "Annominatio est quum ad idem verbum et ad idem nomen acceditur commutatione unius literae aut literarum, aut ad res dissimiles similia verba accommodantur" (iv. 21). In Lib. 1. c. 1, there is "ut ad audendum projectus, sic paratus ad audiendum." There is a good, or a bad example of 'annominatio,' whichever way the reader choose to take it, in Phil. ii. c. 11: "qui me non solum meis laudibus ornaret, sed etiam oneraret alienis." Zumpt observes, that Cicero, though he indulges in this figure to some extent, takes more delight in contrasting things by means of the prepositions, as when he opposes 'deportare' to 'asportare' (Lib. 1. c. 4).

provinciis intelligebant, si is qui esset cum imperio ac potestate quod apud quemque esset emere vellet, idque ei liceret, fore uti quod quisque vellet, sive esset venale, sive non esset, quanti vellet auferret. Dicit aliquis, Noli isto modo agere cum Verre: noli ejus facta ad antiquae religionis rationem exquirere: concede ut impune emerit, modo ut bona ratione emerit, nihil pro potestate, nihil ab invito, nihil per injuriam. Sic agam. Si quid venale habuit Heius, si id quanti aestimabat tanti vendidit, desino quaerere cur emeris.

VI. Quid igitur nobis faciendum est? num argumentis utendum in re ejusmodi? Quaerendum est, credo, Heius iste num aes alienum habuerit, num auctionem fecerit: si fecit, num tanta difficultas eum rei nummariae tenuerit, tanta egestas, tanta vis presserit ut sacrarium suum spoliaret, ut deos patrios venderet. At hominem video auctionem fecisse nullam; vendidisse praeter fructus suos nihil unquam; non modo in aere alieno nullo, sed in suis nummis multis esse et semper fuisse; si haec contra ac dico essent omnia, tamen illum haec quae tot annos in familia sacrarioque majorum fuissent venditum non fuisse. Quid si magnitudine pecuniae persuasum est? Verisimile non est ut ille homo tam locuples, tam honestus, religioni suae monumentisque majorum pecuniam anteponeret. Sunt ista: verumtamen abducuntur homines nonnunquam etiam ab institutis suis magnitudine pecuniae. Videamus quanta ista pecunia fuerit quae potuerit Heium, hominem maxime locupletem, minime avarum, ab humanitate, a pietate, a religione deducere. Ita jussisti, opinor, ipsum in tabulas referre: Haec omnia signa Praxiteli, Myronis, Polycliti, HS VI millibus et D Verri vendita sunt. Rettulit. Recita ex tabulis. Juvat me, haec praeclara nomina artificum, quae isti ad coelum ferunt, Verris modo ut—emerit,] The whole expression (concede ut, &c.) means this; "allow that he made this purchase without incurring the penalty of the 'lex,' if he only made it on fair terms," &c.: for this seems to be the meaning of 'bona ratione.' 'Modo ut' occurs in Terence, Andria (ii. 4. 6): 'Modo ut possim,' 'if I only can,' which is there as much as to say, 'I wish I may be able.'

6. presserit] The reading of the better MSS., which is preferable to 'oppresserit,' the reading of Orelli. For this use of 'premere,' Zumpt refers to the oration Pro Rosc. Am. c. 34.

in aere] Compare Hor. 2 Ep. ii. 12; Pro

Rosc. Com. c. 8, 'in suis nummis versabatur.' 'Aes' is a general term for money: 'etiam aureos nummis aes dicimus' (Ulp. Dig. 50. 16. 159). Again: "Aes alienum est quod nos aliis debemus; aes suum est quod alii nobis debent" (Ulp. Dig. 50. 16. 213).

contra ac] Cicero uses 'contra quam.' Ad Q. Fr. 1. 1. c. 1: "factum est enim mea culpa contra quam tu mecum . . . egeras."

persuasum est?] Zumpt omits 'ei' before 'persuasum,' on the authority of 'Guelff. Leid. Havn.;' and also Klotz. Orelli keeps 'ei.'

Verisimile—ut] Zumpt compares a like passage in the oration Pro Sulla, c. 20.

HS cıɔɔc] This reading agrees with the x. cccc or 400 'denarii' of the following chapter, for a 'denarius' was equivalent to four 'sestertii.'

7. qui modus] The passion for works of art among the wealthy Romans began with the conquest of Magna Graecia and Greece Proper. We find in Horace many allusions to the large sums of money expended on such objects, and particularly on such as were of supposed high antiquity. Horat. 2 Sat. iii. 20:—

—“Olim nam quaerere amabam Quo vafer ille pedes lavasset Sisyphus aere,” &c., and Heindorf's notes.

Martial ridicules the passion for these antiques:—

“Argenti furiosa sui cum stemmata narrat Garrulus et verbis mucida vina facit—‘Hoc cratere ferox commisit praelia Rhoe-cus Cum Lapithis: pugna debile cernis opus,’” &c.—Martial, viii. 6.

Heindorf observes that 'signum' is said of every work of the class of sculpture, also of busts and rilievi; on the contrary, 'statua' is said of a figure that is cast, or worked with the chisel, of the complete human form, and of the size of life. In c. 34, a full-length figure of Diana, of more than the natural size, is called 'signum'; and in c. 33, it is mentioned under the more general term 'simulacrum.' The word 'signum' is very general, and applied to any work on which the chisel was used; and, as it seems, also to works cast in metal.

'Statua' seems to be properly applied to a full-length figure, from its being adapted to be set up in public. An equestrian figure was called 'statua,' not 'signum' (c. 40, &c.). Ovid, Heroid. Phyllis to Demophoon, has:—

Magnificus titulis stet pater ante tuis.”

But any full-length figure placed any where may be a 'statua' (Pomponius, Dig. 50. 16. 245), “statuae affixae basibus structilibus,” &c., where the reader will find a good rule as to the law of fixtures.

Sillig, in his Catalogus, speaks of bronze casters as 'statuarii,' and makers of marble statues as 'sculptores.' The word 'sculptor' seems to be the appropriate word for a worker in marble, and 'scalptor' to denote a cutter of stones, or 'gemmae.' The two verbs, 'scalpo' and 'sculpo,' which are really the same word, are often confounded in the MSS.; but yet it is possible that usage may have assigned one to express sculpture, and the other to express gem-cutting. A gem or stone-cutter was sometimes called δακτυλιογλύφος by the Greeks. There is apparently no difference between γλύφω and γλάφω. 'Caelator' (Sillig, Preface) properly signifies one who employed metal for the making of smaller things, as cups, metal vases, and the like; but it was also applied to workers in other material, so as to comprehend all who made 'bassi rilievi,' whether in metal or marble. But, as work in marble was the sculptor's province, Silling limits 'caelator' to workers in metal, who were sometimes called 'vascularii,' of whom Mentor is an example. The aestimationis: difficile est enim finem facere pretio si non libidini feceris. Video igitur Heium neque voluntate, neque difficultate aliqua temporis, neque magnitudine pecuniae adductum esse ut haec signa venderet; teque ista simulatione emptionis vi, metu, imperio, fascibus, ab homine eo, quem una cum ceteris sociis non solum potestati tuae sed etiam fidei populus Romanus commiserat, eripuisse atque abstulisse. Quid mihi tam optandum, iudices, potest esse in hoc crimine quam ut haec eadem dicat ipse Heius? Nihil profecto: sed ne difficilia optemus. Heius est Mamertinus: Mamertina civitas istum publice communi consilio sola laudat: omnibus iste ceteris Siculis odio est; ab his solis amatur: ejus autem legationis quae ad istum laudandum missa est princeps est Heius, etenim est primus civitatis, ne forte, dum publicis mandatis serviat, de privatis injuriis reticeat. Haec quum scirem et cogitarem, commisi tamen, iudices, Heio: produxi eum prima actione; neque id tamen ullo periculo feci. Quid enim poterat Heius respondere, si esset improbus, si sui dissimilis? Esse illa signa domi suae, non esse apud Verrem? Qui poterat quidquam ejusmodi dicere? Ut homo turpissimus esset impudentissimeque mentiretur, hoc diceret, illa se habuisse venalia, eaque sese quanti voluerit vendidisse. Homo domi suae nobilissimus, qui vos de religione sua ac dignitate vere existimare maxime vellet, primo dixit se istum publice laudare, quod sibi ita mandatum esset: deinde neque se illa habuisse venalia, neque ulla conditione, si utrum vellet liceret, adduci unquam potuisse ut venderet illa, quae in sacrario fuissent a majoribus suis relictas et traditas.

VIII. Quid sedes, Verres? quid exspectas? quid te a Centuripina civitate, a Catinensi, ab Halesina, Tyndaritana, Hennensi, Greek word τορευτική expresses the art of the 'caelator'; but 'toreutic' was also applied to those colossal statues which Phidias made, called Chryselephantine, which were of wood, overlaid with gold and ivory. Müller, 'Handbuch der Archæologie der Kunst,' will supply ample references both to ancient and modern authorities on these matters.

temporis,] Cicero often used this word thus, to express something transitory, a temporary difficulty, a temporary motive, a matter of immediate self-interest, and the like.

ne forte, &c.] Zumpt puts a colon after 'est Heius,' which is bad. The pointing of Klotz is in substance the same. Hotman says that something is wanting. Lam-binus changed 'serviat' to 'servit.' Zumpt adopts Beck's incorrect explanation, 'omissa verendi notione.' P. Manutius, one of the best of the interpreters of Cicero, says correctly: "Joci genus, quasi civitas id spectaverit, cum legatum misit: quod ei certe propositum non fuit; ipse tamen utrumque fecit, et faciet."

commisi tamen,] The word 'me,' which is usually added, is properly omitted by Zumpt. It is not 'me,' but 'rem,' as in Lib. 3. c. 71: "quibus hoc committam." But the 'rem' can be omitted, as in De Leg. Agr. ii. 8: "universo populo neque ipse committit," &c., cited by Madvig. Lib. 3. c. 60: "negat se . . . commissurum."

Agyrinensi, ceterisque Siciliae civitatibus circumveniri atque opprimi dicis? tua te altera patria, quemadmodum dicere solebas, Messana circumvenit: tua, inquam, Messana, tuorum adjutrix scelerum, libidinum testis, praedarum ac furtorum receptrix. Adest enim vir amplissimus ejus civitatis, legatus hujus judicii causa domo missus, princeps laudationis tuae: qui te publice laudat: ita enim mandatum atque imperatum est—tametsi rogatus de cybaea, tenetis memoria quid responderit: aedificatam publicis operis, publice coactis, eique aedificandae publice Mamertinum senatorem prae-fuisse—idem ad vos privatim, iudices, confugit: utitur hac lege qua judicium est, communi arce sociorum. Tametsi lex est de pecuniis repetundis, ille se negat pecuniam repetere quam ereptam non tanto opere desiderat: sacra se majorum suorum repetere abs te dicit: deos penates te patrios reposcit. Ecqui pudor est? ecquae religio, Verres? ecqui metus? Habitasti apud Heium Messanae: res illum divinas apud eos deos in suo sacrario prope quotidiano facere vidisti: non movetur pecunia: denique quae orna-menti causa fuerunt non requirit: tibi habe Canephoros: deorum simulacra restitue.

8. cybaea.] See Lib. 5. c. 17, from which it appears that it was a ship for the conveyance of goods, a merchant ship. The commentators suppose the word to be formed from κύπη, a kind of ship: Κύπαι, εἰδός τι νεώς (Hesych.). Salmasius, in J. Capit. Maxim. Duo, c. 22, p. 253, has a long note on the phrase 'ponte itaque cupis facto,' where the word means 'tubs' or 'casks.' From this meaning of 'cupa,' a containing vessel, he derives 'cybaea.' Casaubon (In Capit. Not. p. 186) quotes Lucan, iv. 420:

"Namque ratem vacuae sustentant undique cupae."

It seems that we may conclude that a Cybaea was a big-bellied ship, adapted to hold a good deal. Hotmann would derive the word from κύβος; and he says, that accordingly it means a square ship, or, as he further says, 'quae in omnes partes aequae pateat.' One would suppose that this would be a round ship. It is hardly possible that Hotmann can have seen a ship. Upon this Graevius acutely remarks, that square ships were not known to the ancients. From Hotmann's note on square ships, I glean the following reference to Juvenal, Sat. viii. 105:—

"Inde Dolabella est, atque hinc Antonius;
inde

Sacrilegus Verres; referebant navibus altis

Occulta spolia et plures de pace trium-

qua judicium est.] One might be tempted to think that something is omitted after 'est,' such as 'constitutum:' but the passage from 'qua' to 'sociorum' stands thus in the old editions. Compare Lib. 5. c. 1: "quum judicium certa lege sit." The reading which has obtained since the Junta Veneta is "communis et privatae rei sociorum." Zumpt refers to Divin. c. 5: "hanc habent arcem," that is, the Lex de Repetundis.

prope quotidiano] Or 'prope coti-diano,' as Zumpt writes it, which mode of writing, even if it has the best MSS. authority, I should not choose to follow until we agree to write 'cotus' and 'cot.' The common reading is 'prope quotidie.' Similar usages of 'crastinus, vespertinus, matutinus,' &c., are compared with this by Madvig, Epist. ad Orell. p. 60, referred to by Zumpt.

'Res divinas facere,' or 'rem divinam,' is a common phrase for a religious ceremonial. 'Facere' alone is so used, as in Virgil, Bucol. iii. 77:—

tibi habe] There is good authority for Quae quia dixit, quia tempore dato modeste apud vos socius amicusque populi Romani questus est, quia religioni suae non modo in diis patriis repetendis sed etiam in ipso testimonio ac iurejurando proximus fuit, hominem missum ab isto scitote esse Messanam de legatis unum, illum ipsum, qui navi istius aedificandae publice praefuit, qui a senatu peteret ut Heius afficeretur ignominia. IX. Homo amentissime, qui putasti impetraturum te? quanti is a civibus suis fieret, quanti auctoritas ejus haberetur ignorabas? Verum fac te impetravisse; fac aliquid gravius in Heium statuuisse Mamertinos: quam putas auctoritatem laudationis eorum futuram, si in eum quem constet verum pro testimonio dixisse poenam constituerint?

Tametsi quae est ista laudatio, quum laudator interrogatus laedat necesse est? Quid isti laudatores tui, nonne testes mei sunt? Heius est laudator: laesit gravissime. Producam ceteros: reticebunt quae poterunt libenter: dicent quae necesse erit, ingratis. Negent isti onerariam navem maximam aedificatam esse Messanae? negent si possunt. Negent ei navi senatorem Mamertinum publice praefuisse? utinam negent. Sunt etiam cetera quae malo integra reservare, ut quam minimum sit illis temporis ad meditandum confirmandumque perjurium. Haec tibi laudatio procedat in numerum: hi te homines auctoritate sua sublevent; qui te neque debent adjuvare si possint, neque possunt si velint; quibus tu privatim religioni—proximus] There is no difficulty here. But the following explanation of 'proximus' may not be quite useless: "proximus est quem nemo antecedit, supremus est quem nemo sequitur" (Paulus, Dig. 50. 16. 92).

'tibi,' and it is necessary: "sibi enim habere jubemus, cum possidere patimur et jus nostrum relinquimus" (Zumpt). See Lib. 2. c. 19. Gruter omitted 'tibi,' and so it stands in the text of the Variorum ed. 'habe Canephoros,' and in Orelli.

ignominia.] The word is a Roman term, which perhaps comes near to the Greek ἀτιμία. 'Ignominia' occurs in the Praetor's edict. (De his qui notantur infamia, Dig. 3. tit. 2): "Infamia notantur qui ab exercitu ignominiae causa ab imperatore eove cui de ea re statuendi potestas fuerit dimissus erit." Ulpian remarks: "ignominiosa autem missio toties est quoties is qui mittit addidit nominatim, ignominiae causa se mittere; semper enim debet addere cur miles mittatur." A man who was sent on a public mission, had of course to account for his conduct, and was liable to some punishment if he had neglected his duty. Malversation on an embassy is the παράπρεσβεία of the Greeks.

9. ingratis.] Zumpt writes 'ingratiis' in his smaller edition, and so it stands in the English reprint. In his larger edition he comes to the conclusion that 'ingratis' is the proper form; for, as the prose writers say 'gratis,' so we should expect them to say 'ingratis.' He observes that Plautus and Terence write 'ingratiis,' but then they have only the form 'gratiis.' (Bentley, Ad Terent. Adelph. iv. 7. 26.)

si possunt.] This is the better reading. 'Si possint' is the common reading, but the words are wanting in the worse MSS. Zumpt prefers 'si possunt,' but for a bad reason: "hanc ab causam quod si possint tempore excidit remque in futurum removet."

procedat in numerum:] "Ex animi tui sententia. Sumptum, opinor, ab histri- onibus numerum in motu servantibus" (P. Manutius). He refers to the Paradoxa, iii.: "Histrio si paulo se movit extra numerum," &c. Hotmann completely misunderstood the passage.

injurias plurimas contumeliasque imposuisti; quo in oppido multas familias totas in perpetuum infames tuis stupris flagitiisque fecisti. At publice commodasti. Non sine magno quidem rei publicae provinciaeque Siciliae detrimento. Tritici modium LX millia empti populo Romano dare debebant et solebant: abs te solo remissum est. Res publica detrimentum fecit quod per te imperii jus in una civitate imminutum est; Siculi, quod ipsum non de summa frumenti detractum est, sed translatum in Centuripinos et Halesinos, immunes populos, et hoc plus impositum quam ferre possent. Navem imperare debuisti ex foedere: remisisti in triennium: militem nullum unquam poposcisti per tot annos. Fecisti item ut praedones solent; qui quum hostes communes sint omnium, tamen aliquos sibi instituunt amicos quibus non modo parcant, verum etiam praeda quos augeant, et eos maxime qui habent oppidum opportuno loco, quo saepe adeundum sit navibus, nonnunquam etiam necessario.

X. Phaselis illa, quam cepit P. Servilius, non fuerat urbs antea Cilicum et praedonum: Lycii illam, Graeci homines, incolebant. Sed quod erat ejusmodi loco atque ita projecta in altum, ut et exeuntes e Cilicia praedones saepe ad eam necessario devenirent, et quum se ex hisce locis reciperent eodem deferrentur, asciverunt sibi illud oppidum piratae, primo commercio, deinde etiam societate. Mamertina civitas improba antea non erat; etiam erat inimica improborum; quae C. Catonis, illius qui consul fuit, impedimenta

Siculi, quod ipsum] That is, ‘Siculi detrimentum fecerunt quod ipsum.’ “The Sicilians sustained damage in this, that this very amount was not subtracted from the sum total, but it was made a burden on the Centuripini and Halesini.” This ‘quod ipsum’ shows how ‘quod’ is to be taken in the first part of the sentence. This ‘quod,’ if considered as a conjunction, will be misunderstood.

From this it appears that a ‘foederata civitas’ was bound to supply ‘frumentum emptum.’ It would seem strange if a ‘foederata civitas’ owed this duty, and the ‘immunes populi’ did not; a conclusion that some may be inclined to derive from these words. But it is not a necessary conclusion; and we learn from other passages that all Sicily was bound to supply ‘frumentum emptum’ or ‘imperatum.’

Navem] Compare Lib. 1. c. 34, 35, as to the Milesii. We there learn how the Romans maintained a fleet.

10. Phaselis, &c.] ‘Antea’ means ‘originally.’ Phaselis, now Tekrova, was a Lycian town on the coast, on a small peninsula at the foot of Taktalu, the ancient Solyma, the bare summit of which rises 7800 feet above the sea. It had three ports, and there was a lake on the isthmus which joined to the main land the peninsula on which Phaselis stood. Its position is well described by Livy (Lib. 37. c. 23). The flat top of the peninsula is covered with ruins, and the identity of the place is proved by Greek inscriptions: ΦΑΣΗΛΕΙ-ΤΩΝΗΒΟΥΛΗΚΑΙΟΔΗΜΟΣ, &c. See the interesting description of Phaselis in Beaufort’s Karamania.

These Lycii were Greeks, as Cicero observes; and we have an account of their political constitution in Strabo (p. 664, ed. Cas.). The Lycii of Homer appear in the war of Troy.

C. Catonis,] See Lib. 3. c. 80. C. Cato, consul B.C. 114, a grandson of the Censor. He had Macedonia for his province, where he got money improperly, was tried, conretinuit. At cujus hominis? clarissimi potentissimique; qui tamen quum consul fuisset, condemnatus est, [ita] C. Cato, duorum hominum clarissimorum nepos, L. Pauli, et M. Catonis, et P. Africani sororis filius: quo damnato tum quum judicia fiebant, HS IIII milibus lis aestimata est. Huic Mamertini irati fuerunt, qui majorem sumptum quam quanti Catonis lis aestimata est in Timarchidi prandium saepe fecerunt. Verum haec civitas isti praedoni ac piratae Siciliensi Phaselis fuit. Huc omnia undique deportabantur; apud istos relinquebantur: quod celari opus erat, habebant sepositum ac reconditum: per istos quae volebat, clam imponenda, occulte exportanda curabat: navem denique maximam quam onustam furtis in Italiam mitteret apud istos faciendam aedificandamque curavit: pro hisce rebus vacatio data est ab isto sumptus, laboris, militiae, rerum denique omnium: per triennium soli non modo in Sicilia, verum, ut opinio mea fert, his quidem temporibus in omni orbe terrarum, vacui, expertes, soluti ac liberi fuerunt ab omni sumptu, molestia, munere. Hinc illa Verria nata sunt: quod in victed, and fined. As to the 'impedimenta retinuit,' I find no further information.— 'At cujus hominis?' see Lib. 2. c. 45.

[ita] C. Cato,] Zumpt has followed Ernesti in placing these words, 'ita C. Cato . . sororis filius,' in []. He supposes them to have been transferred into the text from a marginal note; and he adds, "Auctor, a quo petita videntur, in promptu est, Velleius, Lib. ii. 8: Mandetur deinde memoriae severitas judiciorum, quippe C. Cato consularis, M. Catonis nepos, Africani sororis filius (nepos igitur L. Aemilii Pauli) repetundarum ex Macedonia damnatus est cum lis ejus IIII aestimaretur." The precise sum is uncertain, owing to the diversity in the MSS. See Lib. 3. c. 80. Klotz (Vorrede, p. 13) contends that the passage is right. He points the disputed part thus: 'condemnatus est: ita C. Cato duorum . . filius;' and explains it thus: 'Yes, C. Cato, &c., was condemned.' He makes 'ita' correspond to the German 'ja, so ist es.' I am not acquainted with this peculiar use of 'ita,' and Klotz is not accustomed to support his explanations by instances. I think, however, that he is right in rejecting Zumpt's supposition that these words have been interpolated from Paterculus. The words are undoubtedly genuine, but there seems to be something wrong in the connexion between 'condemnatus est' and what follows. The blunder appears to be in the 'ita;' and if it is omitted, perhaps the difficulty is removed. Though I cannot accept Klotz's explanation, I leave the words standing, as genuine; and having enclosed 'ita' in the critical [], I commend the passage to the consideration of the learned.

quum judicia fiebant,] Zumpt has 'quum severa judicia fiebant,' and yet he says that 'severa' is wanting in all the better MSS. But it may be omitted. Compare Lib. 5. c. 59: "quum judicia fiebant;" and c. 12: "non jus dici, non judicia fieri." Klotz omits it in this passage. See Lib. 3. c. 90, note on "ad quae exempla."

deportabantur;] 'Deferebantur:' Zumpt, in his larger edition, and Klotz.

On 'clam imponenda,' Zumpt observes, "omisi quae vulgo praemittuntur verba in navem propterea quod absunt a Lambini duobus, et Regio Graevii, nec in Guelff. inveniuntur." 'Imponere' can be thus used absolutely; and, as a mere matter of taste, 'in navem' is better omitted.

vacatio] A release or excuse from a service or duty. The verb occurs in the same sense in the De Sen. c. 11: "ergo . . vacat aetas nostra muneribus," &c. With a noun, the construction is with the genitive, as in the excerpt from Scaevola (Dig. 50. 5. 3): "His qui naves marinas fabricaverunt . . muneris publici vacatio praestatur ob naves."

quod in convivium] These words of course refer to 'Verria,' to the banquets convivium Sex. Cominium protrahi jussit, in quem scyphum de manu jacere conatus est, quem obtorta gula de convivio in vincla atque in tenebras abripi jussit. Hinc illa crux, in quam iste civem Romanum multis inspectantibus sustulit; quam non ausus est usquam defigere nisi apud eos quibuscum omnia scelera sua ac latrocinia communicavit.

XI. Laudatum etiam vos quemquam venitis? qua auctoritate? utrum quam apud senatum an quam apud populum Romanum habere debetis? Ecquae civitas est, non in provinciis nostris verum in ultimis nationibus, aut tam potens, aut tam libera, aut etiam tam immanis ac barbara; rex denique ecquis est qui senatorem populi Romani tecto ac domo non invitet? qui honos non homini solum habetur, sed primum populo Romano, cujus beneficio nos in hunc ordinem venimus, deinde ordinis auctoritati, quae nisi gravis erit apud socios et exterarum nationes, ubi erit imperii nomen et dignitas? Mamertini me publice non invitarunt. Me quum dico, leve est: senatorem populi Romani si non invitarunt, honorem debitum detraxerunt non homini sed ordini. Nam ipsi Tullio patebat domus locupletissima et amplissima Cn. Pompeii Basilisci, quo etiamsi esset invitatus a vobis tamen devertisset: erat etiam Percenniorum, qui nunc item Pompeii sunt, domus honestissima, quo L. frater meus summa illorum voluntate devertit. communicavit.] ‘Communicavisset’ in the inferior MSS. (Zumpt).

11. Ecquae civitas] Zumpt says that it is difficult to decide if we should write ‘ecquae’ or ‘ecqua,’ for there is the authority of the poets for both. Klotz has ‘ecqua.’

domo non invitet?] Lambinus says ‘forte in tectum ac domum,’ on which Graevius says ‘pessime.’ He explains ‘invitare’ to be the same as ‘excipere,’ and refers to Justin. i. 6: “eosdem apparatis epulis invitat.” Zumpt refers to Cic. Phil. xii. 9: “hospitio invitabit.” See Graevius, note on Justin.

exterarum nationes,] ‘Socii et exterae nationes’ evidently comprise all people with whom the Romans had any dealings of any kind. Madvig (quoted by Klotz) says that the ‘exterae nationes’ are those whom the Romans had subdued and made tributary. This is manifestly a mistake. All who were not ‘socii’ were ‘exterae nationes,’ and the ‘provinciales’ were included among ‘socii’ (Lib. I. c. 31: ‘non provinciae,’ &c.). There were nations which were not ‘socii,’ nor yet conquered, with whom the Romans had relations of some kind. Thus Caesar (Bell. Gall. i. 43) speaks of Ariovistus having been addressed by the title of king, and friend of the Roman senate. Certainly he was not a ‘socius’ like the Aedui, nor did he pay a tribute. He belonged to the ‘exterae gentes.’—‘et amplissima:’ Zumpt omits.

nunc item Pompeii] They also were now ‘Pompeii,’ Roman citizens, who had obtained the ‘civitas’ through the favour of Cn. Pompeius.

Verum hominem amentem hoc fugit; minus clarum putavit fore quod de armario quam quod de sacrario esset ablatum. At quomodo abstulit? non possum dicere planius quam ipse apud vos dixit Heius. Quum quaesissem numquid aliud de bonis ejus pervenisset ad Verrem, respondit, istum ad se misisse ut sibi mitteret Agrigentum peripetasmata. Quaesivi an misisset: respondit id, Tu quid, &c.] Here Cicero supposes some one to have said 'Amicum enim,' &c. 'It was because you were bringing our friend to trial.' Cicero answers: 'Tu quid ego privatim,' &c. Hotmann explains 'privatim' to mean 'as a single person,' as opposed to the senatorian 'ordo;' for he says 'publice quidem Cicero negotium hoc gerebat.'—'Imminuendo honore' is the better reading, which Graevius established in place of 'in minuendo honore.' The translation of 'interpretabere' is difficult. Hotmann's explanation of 'privatim' is right. Cicero is contrasting himself and his 'ordo;' and what he means to say is this: 'Will you disparage the honour that is due to a senator, in order to show your opinion of my conduct as a private individual?' for Cicero, though a senator, was not sent to Sicily as a senator, but as a private individual who had undertaken to prosecute Verres. This is what he means to say here, but it may not be consistent with what he has said

si quid . . . agetur,] That is, if the senate shall call you to account for your behaviour in this matter.

Rheginis, quorum] The Rhegini were Roman citizens, since the enactment of the Julia Lex, B.C. 90.

12. Quid illa, &c.] 'You say you bought all these things. Well, did you forget to buy those other matters?' &c. Zumpt joins 'nominata ab eodem Heio.' It seems to me that 'nominata' must be connected with 'Sicilia.' He says that 'nominata,' in the sense of 'celebrata,' cannot be said. That may be so, but the sense of the passage requires it.

'Attalica peripetasmata' were draperies embroidered with gold, which one of the Attali of Pergamum introduced; or he encouraged the manufacture. Plin. H. N., viii. c. 48, ed. Hard. Those who worked at such decorations were ποικιλαί, mentioned by Plutarch, Pericles, c. 12.

Risus populi atque admiratio omnium vestrum facta est. Hic tibi in mentem non venit jubere ut haec quoque referret HS VI millibus D se tibi vendidisse? metuisti ne aes alienum tibi cresceret, si HS VI millibus D tibi constarent ea quae tu facile posses vendere HS ducentis millibus? Quid a Phylarcho Centuripino, homine locuplete ac nobili, phaleras pulcherrime factas, quae regis Hieronis fuisse dicuntur, utrum tandem abstulisti an emisti? In Sicilia quidem quum essem, sic a Centuripinis, sic a ceteris audiebam, (non enim parum res erat clara) tam te has phaleras a Phylarcho Centuripino abstulisse dicebant quam alias item nobiles ab Aristo Panhormitano, quam tertias a Cratippo Tyndaritano. Etenim si Phylarchus vendidisset, non ei posteaquam reus factus es redditurum te promisisses. Quod quia vidisti plures scire, cogitasti si ei reddidisses te minus habiturum, rem nihilominus testatam futuram: non reddidisti. Dixit Phylarchus pro testimonio, se quod nosset tuum istum morbum, ut amici tui appellant, cupisse te celare de phaleris: quum abs te appellatus esset, negasse habere sese: apud alium quoque eas habuisse depositas, ne qua invenirentur: tuam tantam fuisse sagacitatem ut eas per illum ipsum inspiceres ubi erant depositae: tum se deprehensum negare non potuisse: ita ab se invito phaleras ablatas gratis.

XIII. Jam ut haec omnia reperire ac perscrutari solitus sit, iudices, est operae pretium cognoscere. Cibratae sunt fratres quidam, Tlepolemus et Hiero; quorum alterum fingere opinor e cera solitum esse, alterum esse pictorem. Hosce opinor, Cibrae phaleras] 'Equorum ornamenta' (Manutius).

minus habiturum,] In the old editions it was 'minus invidiae habiturum,' but 'invidiae' spoils the sense. Zumpt supposes that Manutius first corrected the passage. The explanation of Manutius shows that he did not admit 'invidiae.' He says 'phaleras ipsas non habiturum.' 'Invidiae' is not in the best MSS. (Zumpt.)

ablatas gratis.] The inferior MSS. have

'ablatas,' and the better have 'sublatas,' which reading Zumpt had in his minor edition. But in his larger edition he prefers 'ablatas' as the proper word to be used when we take a thing from a person who is in possession of it (qui possidet). In c. 13 we have 'ab sese . . abstulisset,' and 'a se esset ablatum.'

13. fingere—e cera] He was a modeller in wax, an art which the Greeks practised. It must have been common at Rome after it became the fashion to make wax busts or 'imagines.' Lib. 5. c. 16.

Nihil aliud optabant quorum poscebatur argentum nisi ut Hieroni et Tlepolemo displiceret.

XIV. Verum mehercule hoc, iudices, dicam. Memini Pamphilum Lilybaetanum, amicum et hospitem meum, nobilem hominem, mihi narrare, quum iste ab sese hydriam Boëthi manu factam, praeclaro opere et grandi pondere, per potestatem abstulisset, se sane tristem et conturbatum domum revertisse, quod vas ejusmodi, quod sibi a patre et majoribus esset relictum, quo solitus esset uti ad festos dies, ad hospitem adventus, a se esset ablatum. Quum Cibyra] Cicero may mean the largest of the three cities of this name, which belonged to the district Milyas, in Pisidia, and, as it was near the borders of Phrygia, is sometimes called a Phrygian city. The site seems uncertain. It was the seat of a Conventus Juridicus under the Romans. The inhabitants were skilled in the working of iron with a cutting tool (Strabo, p. 630).

inanibus syngraphis] 'Syngrapha' has been explained Lib. I. c. 36. It is difficult to conjecture why these 'syngraphae' are called 'inanes.' Zumpt supposes that this is an allusion to the affair of Malleolus (Lib. I. c. 36), and that they were forms of agreement with blanks for the names of the parties, the blanks to be filled up with the name of Verres and the names of the debtors of Malleolus. Cicero is alluding to some act of knavery, but his meaning is doubtful.

Q. Tadius] See Lib. I. c. 49.

quidque esset] P. Manutius corrected the old reading 'quicquid esset.' There is also MS. authority for 'quidque,' or rather for 'quicque,' as Zumpt writes it.

nisi ut Hieroni] 'Nisi ut id,' &c.: Klotz.

14. mehercule] There is a reading 'mehercules,' but Zumpt observes that Cicero prefers 'mehercule.' Orat. 47: "impetratum est a consuetudine ut peccare suavitatis causa liceret; et pomeridianas quadrigas quam postmeridianas libentius dixerim; et mehercule quam mehercules;" a passage which I had not observed when I made the note on 'mehercule,' p. 283.

Boëthi manu] Plinius (H. N., Lib. 33. c. 5, ed. Hard.) names him in conjunction with Acragas and Mys. He was a 'caelator,' or worker in silver. Pausanias (v. 17) calls him a Carthaginian: Βοηθὸς δὲ ἐτόρευσεν αὐτὸν Καρχηδόνιος. But it is suggested by Müller that we should read Καρχηδόνιος, which is likely enough. The word ἐτόρευσεν shows that he practised the toreutic art: he was a τορευτής or 'caelator.' He was also a 'statuarius.'

A 'hydria' was a general name for any vessel adapted to hold a liquid.

ad hospitem adventus,] 'Sic Codd.

Tum illos coepisse praetori dicere, putasse se id quod audissent alicujus pretii scyphos esse Pamphili; luteum negotium esse; non dignum quod in suo argento Verres haberet. Ait ille idem sibi videri. Ita Pamphilus scyphos optimos aufert.

Guelff., Lag. 29, Leid. Havn. coll.' (Zumpt). The common reading is 'adventum.' As to 'adventus,' see Lib. 1. c. 19, note.

scyphi sigillati] These were cups with figures on them, for 'sigillum' is a diminutive of 'signum.' The term may be applied to figures cut or formed on the material itself, as marble. Cicero (Ad Att. i. 10) purchased 'putealia sigillata.' If the figures are separate things, and attached to the vessel, they are expressed by the Greek term 'emblemata,' figures inlaid (c. 17). In c. 21, Cicero speaks of a 'patella' on which there were 'sigilla,' and Verres took off the 'sigilla,' and returned the vessel; and in another instance (c. 21) he pulled off the 'emblema,' and returned the 'tribulum' without the figures. Juvenal (Sat. i. 76):

"Argentum vetus et stantem extra pocula caprum;"

on which Heinrich remarks that the Romans had no name for 'emblema.' The word was used by Lucilius to indicate a kind of Mosaic work, or inlaying of small pieces of various shapes and colours; and, metaphorically, it is applied to a style of writing (Cicero, Orat. c. 44):

"Quam lepide lexeis compostae, ut tessellae omnes Arte pavimento atque emblemate vermiculato."

binos habebam:] 'I had a pair.' In reference to which he uses 'utrosque.'

luteum negotium] See Lib. 3. c. 14. It seems to mean here, as the context shows, that the cups were a poor affair, not fit to have a place in the plate (argentum) of Verres.

Et mehercule, &c.] Graevius says that either 'hoc' or 'ista' is superfluous, in which he is entirely mistaken. It is usual with Cicero to place 'hoc' thus, and then to explain what he means, as in Lib. 1. c. 4: "Nam quis hoc non intelliget istum absolutum," &c.; Lib. 3. c. 65: "Metellus quidem certe jam hoc judicabat eorum rem causamque esse conjunctam." Graevius quite misunderstands the whole passage, the sense of which appears from the following sentence: 'Tum primum intellexi,' &c. Cicero says, "In truth, for my part, before I heard of this affair, though I knew that it (hoc) was but a trifling matter to be a judge of such works of art, yet I used to wonder that Verres had any understanding in these particular things, when I knew that in no one thing had he any resemblance to a human being. Then, for the first time, I learned," &c. The sense of 'ista intelligere' is explained by 'in hisce rebus intelligens esse.'

Mirari stultitiam alii quod in ipso iudicio, ejus ipsius cupiditatis cujus insimularetur suspicionem augeret; alii amentiam, cui comperendinato, quum tam multi testes dixissent, quidquam illorum venisset in mentem. Pueri autem Sisennae, credo, qui audissent quae in istum testimonia dicta essent, oculos de isto nusquam dejicere, neque ab argento digitum discedere. Est boni judicis parvis ex rebus conjecturam facere uniuscujusque et cupiditatis et incontinentiae. Qui reus, et reus lege comperendinatus, re et opinione hominum paene damnatus, temperare non potuerit maximo conventu quin L. Sisennae argentum tractaret et consideraret, hunc praetorem in provincia quisquam putabit a Siculorum argento cupiditatem aut manus abstinere potuisse?

XVI. Verum uti Lilybaeum unde digressa est oratio revertatur, Diocles est, Pamphili gener illius, a quo hydria ablata est, Popillius cognomine. Ab hoc abaci vasa omnia ut exposita fuerant abstulit.

15. L. Sisennam,] It is a conjecture of Ernesti's that L. Sisenna was 'curule aedile' in this year. It seems almost a necessary conclusion from this chapter that he filled some public office. He was an orator and an historian (Krause, Vitae et Frag., &c., p. 300). He is mentioned Lib. 2. c. 45, and Lib. 4. c. 20.

accessit . . . coepit.] The form of the sentence requires 'accesserit . . . coeperit,' which Orelli has. But the indicative appears to be the reading of the MSS. If Cicero wrote thus, we need not be surprised, for, owing to the words interposed after 'ut nuper,' a reader might easily fail to observe the irregularity of the sentence. Zumpt and Klotz point thus: 'hominum honestissimorum: accessit,' &c.

venisset in mentem.] Zumpt and Klotz prefer this to the common reading 'venirent.'

Pueri] 'The slaves,' as Horace often uses 'puer.' This is its ordinary sense when thus used absolutely. We have a definition of 'puer' by Alfenus, a contemporary of Cicero (Paulus, Lib. 2. Epitom. Alfeni, Dig. 50. 16, 204): "pueri appellatio tres significationes habet: unam, quum omnes servos pueros appellaremus, alteram, quum puerum contrario nomine puellae diceremus, tertiam, quum aetatem puerilem demonstraremus."

16. oratio revertatur,] The reading of the English reprint of Zumpt, and, I suppose, of his minor edition. In his larger he has 'oratio, revertamur.' Two MSS. are said to have 'revertamur,' but Zumpt does not say what they are.

abaci] An 'abacus' is a board, or slab of marble, or any thing of the kind on which plate could be arranged, as we often put it on a sideboard. Verres took it all off, just as it was laid out on the 'abacus.' See Lib. 4. c. 59: "mensas Delphicas."

Ede mihi scriptum quid argenti in provincia Sicilia pararis, unde quidque aut quanti emeris. Quid fit? literae, . . factae.] Entries were made; that is, the transaction was entered in the account-books in the usual way.

in donatione histrionum] 'In donationem:' Klotz. Cicero says that Timarchides valued the things very low, as low as any man ever did in the case of a donation or present to the 'histriones' or actors. Zumpt's explanation is this, that they were allowed to keep the 'corollae' which they had worn (deorum honoris causa), on paying a small estimated value. He refers to Pliny (H. N., Lib. 21. c. 3) as to these 'corollae'; and Klotz says it appears that a present of fixed value was given to the actors who were approved of; and, if it was intended to give more, the present was valued below its real value, to avoid breaking the rule. This explanation, I believe, is merely a guess; there is nothing added to give credibility to it. I neither accept it nor reject it. There is a short note on 'corollarium' (Plin. H. N., ix. 35, ed. Hard.): "corollarium apud Ciceronem non semel, et apud Tranquillum, pro munusculo sumitur, ultra legitima praemia exhibito, et quidem quasi additamento debitae mercedis. Unde corollarium hic pro re leviori et appendicula usurpatur." This does not help us much; but the expression 'ultra legitima praemia' may point to the truth: 'legitimus' always means that which is determined by a 'lex.' Manutius says "Locus hic ostendit bonos histriones argento donari solitos." I suppose 'histriones' in those days, as well as now, did not live on nothing, nor act simply to please spectators. They must have been paid some way. Manutius adds, "aestimationi tamen locum esse non video;" but Cicero did, and that is the matter which wants explanation. We know that the Romans had a Lex Cincia De Donis et Muneribus, the provisions of which are very obscurely stated. Savigny (Vermischte Schriften, i. 315) has an essay on this Lex; but he has taken no notice of this passage, nor do I see at present what is to be made of the passage. Still I suspect that it contains an allusion to this Lex. There is a remark in Smyth's Sicily that strikes me as applicable to these gifts or 'corollaria,' for I believe that the 'corollaria' is money. He says of the Sicilian actors: "there is little encouragement given to the profession, and at their benefits they are obliged to submit to the degrading habit of going round and presenting a plate to each of the spectators to receive a contribution" (p. 48). I don't quote this for the purpose of explaining the language of the text; I merely observe that the practice of the spectators putting something in the hat or plate for the 'histriones' may have existed at Rome, and that would be a 'donatio.' transigere] 'Settle by a single word.' See Divin. c. 14, where there is an error in the reference to this passage.

Quid fit?] 'Cur mihi quod postulo scriptum non edis?' (P. Manutius.) This seems to be the meaning. 'However,' says Cicero, 'I ought not to demand of you these accounts; for I ought to have your books, and to produce them;' for he was empowered to take possession of such evidence. But it is all explained by what follows. Verres had no account-books of this date; he had kept no accounts (aliquid confecisse). Manutius explains 'horum annorum' by reference to Lib. 1. c. 23, since the consulship of M. Terentius and C. Cassius. Cicero says 'compone hoc,' &c.: 'make up for me an account about this matter of the silver; I will look after the rest.'

tum habeo nec possum edere.' Quid futurum igitur est? Quid existimas hos iudices facere posse? Domus plena signorum pulcherrimorum jam ante praetoram: multa ad villas tuas posita, multa deposita apud amicos, multa aliis data atque donata: tabulae nullum indicant emptum. Omne argentum ablatum ex Sicilia est; nihil cuiquam quod suum dici vellet relictum: fingitur improba defensio, praetorem omne id argentum coëmissee; tamen id ipsum tabulis demonstrari non potest. Si quas tabulas profers, in his quae habes, quomodo habeas, scriptum non est, horum autem temporum quum te plurimas res emisse dicis tabulas omnino nullas profers, nonne te et prolatis et non prolatis tabulis condemnari necesse est?

deposita] Deposited for safe keeping, and to prevent all his treasures from being seen. 'Deposita' in this sense is a technical term, and 'depositum' is one of the Roman contracts which were made 're' (Inst. Just. iii. tit. 14). He who accepted the deposit was bound to take care of it as he would of his own property. "Depositum est quod custodiendum alicui datum est." (Ulpian, Dig. 16. 8. 1 pr.).

si quas tabulas] I cannot accept Zumpt's punctuation and interpretation of this passage. He has a full stop after 'nullas profers,' and he makes 'nonne' begin a new sentence; whereas it is the apt conclusion after the two premises 'si quas,' &c., and 'horum autem,' &c. He places a semicolon after 'habeas,' and he says, 'tu subintellige ex iis quae sequuntur perscripta sunt.' 'Quae habes' appears to be the true reading. The common reading is 'quid habeas,' which Victorius introduced, but from conjecture, as Zumpt supposes. Klotz takes the passage as I do, for the colon which he places after 'nullas profers' is, if I understand it right, merely a German way of pointing. But Klotz places a comma after 'temporum,' and writes, 'cum . . . dicas;' but 'quum . . . dicis' must be connected with 'horum temporum,' and 'quum' is equivalent to 'per quae,' if that be Latin. The pointing, or the absence of pointing, shows that I consider 'horum temporum' and 'tabulas' in the relation of a noun and its genitive, as Zumpt also does.

17. mensam citream] A table of the wood of the 'citrus,' probably a kind of cypress. Tables were an article of Roman luxury. Pliny (H. N., Lib. 13. c. 15, ed. Harduin) treats of these tables. He mentions one that Cicero himself bought for HS x, which numerals his editor (Harduin) makes to be 'decies,' a sum which is incredible. Harduin says that the 'citrus' is the same as the Greek κυύς (see c. 3, and the note on ξύα). It was an African wood from the Atlas and the country of the Mauri, and was used for making these tables. Pliny mentions one made of two large pieces of wood, each half a circle, which were so cunningly fitted together that the juncture was not apparent. These are the round tables which Martial (ix. 22) calls 'orbes,' and describes as supported by ivory feet:—

"Ut Mauri Libycis centum stent dentibus orbes, Et crepet in nostris aurea lamna toris."

And again:—

"Gemmantes prima fulgent testudine lecti Et Maurusiaci pondera rara citri."

(xii. 66.)

factus est, omnibus scientibus, Lilybaei abstulisti. Non tibi objicio quod hominem dignissimum tuis moribus, Apollonium, Niconis filium, Drepanitanum, qui nunc A. Clodius vocatur, omni argento optime facto spoliasti ac depeculatus es. Taceo. Non enim putat ille sibi injuriam factam, propterea quod homini jam perduto et collum in laqueum inserenti subvenisti, quum pupillis Drepanitanis bona patria erepta cum illo partitus es. Gaudeo etiam si quid ab eo abstulisti, et abs te nihil rectius factum esse dico. Ab Lysone vero Lilybaetano, primo homine, apud quem deversatus es, Apollinis signum ablatum certe non oportuit. Dices te emisse. Scio: HS CIO: ita opinor. Scio, inquam: proferam literas: tamen id factum non oportuit. A pupillo Heio, cui C. Marcellus tutor est, a quo pecuniam grandem eripueras, scaphia cum emblematis Lilybaei utrum empta esse dicis an confiteris erepta? Sed quid ego istius in ejusmodi rebus mediocres injurias colligo, quae tantummodo in furtis istius et damnis eorum a quibus auferebat versatae esse videantur? Accipite, si vultis, judices, rem ejusmodi ut amen- tiam singularem et furorem, non jam cupiditatem ejus perspicere possitis.

XVIII. Melitensis Diodorus est, qui apud vos antea testimonium dixit. Is Lilybaei multos jam annos habitat, homo et domi nobilis et apud eos quo se contulit propter virtutem splendidus et gratiosus. De hoc Verri dicitur, habere eum perbona toreumata; in his pocula quaedam, quae Thericlia nominantur, Mentoris manu name of his benefactor, Q. Lutatius Catulus, and the Praenomen also.—‘Depeculatus es:’ the Cod. of Cujacius has ‘depecuniatus es.’

deversatus es,] The reading before the edition of Lambinus was ‘diversatus es.’ Zumpt affirms that ‘deversatus’ is the true form. But we may doubt.

scaphia] Said to be drinking vessels.

versatae] Zumpt and Klotz have ‘versata.’ “Sic omnes libri et olim editi et manu scripti” (Zumpt), except perhaps one. It is somewhat singular that all should have ‘versata.’ The omission of an e at the end may be easily explained, as the next word begins with an e. Though ‘quae . . . versata’ is intelligible, as Zumpt explains it, ‘quae’ being ‘ea sive talia quae,’ it seems pretty clear that in that case ‘videantur’ should be ‘videntur.’ ‘Quae versatae esse videantur’ is too closely connected with ‘injurias,’ to leave any doubt of the true reading.

non jam cupiditatem] Klotz has ‘et furorem jam, non cupiditatem,’ which seems a wrong position of ‘jam;’ but it is the common reading. Zumpt observes, ‘non jam esse non amplius notum est.’

18. De hoc—eum] A good example of the use of these pronouns. He has just used ‘is’ in the usual way to refer to Diodorus. If he had said ‘De eo Verri,’ this second reference might have appeared rather too remote. He must repeat the word ‘Diodoro,’ or use a pronoun which more directly points to the person; the ‘hoc.’ But ‘eum’ comes again, having the same relation to the ‘hoc’ that the ‘is’ has to Diodorus.

Thericlia] This appears to be the true reading, and not ‘Heraclea,’ which is the common reading. This Thericles was a maker of earthen vessels, and lived in the time of Aristophanes, according to Bentley (Dissertation on the Epistles of Phalaris). The name Thericlia was given to cups made in imitation of those of Thericles; in imitation of the style, of course, for they were made in other summo artificio facta. Quod iste ubi audivit, sic cupiditate inflammatus est non solum inspiciendi verum etiam auferendi ut Diodorum ad se vocaret ac posceret. Ille qui illa non invitus haberet respondet Lilybaei se non habere, Melitae apud quendam propinquum suum reliquisse. Tum iste continuo mittit homines certos Melitam: scribit ad quosdam Melitenses ut ea vasa perquirant: rogat Diodorum ut ad illum propinquum suum det literas: nihil ei longius videbatur quam dum illud videret argentum. Diodorus, homo frugi ac diligens, qui sua servare vellet, ad propinquum suum scribit ut iis qui a Verre venissent responderet, illud argentum se paucis illis diebus misisse Lilybaeum. Ipse interea recedit: abesse a domo paulisper maluit quam praesens illud optime factum argentum amittere. Quod ubi iste audivit, usque eo commotus est ut sine ulla dubitatione insanire omnibus ac furere videretur. Quia non potuerat eripere argentum, ipse a Diodoro erepta sibi vasa optime facta dicebat; minitari absenti Diodoro; vociferari palam; lacrimas interdum vix tenere. Eriphylam accepimus in fabulis ea cupiditate ut quum vidisset monile, ut opinor, ex auro et gemmis, material, wood, silver, and glass. Welcker denies the existence of an artist Thericles, and maintains that these cups were so called from the figures of animals (θήρια), with which they were adorned; but this explanation will hardly be received (Art. Thericles, in Smith's Dictionary of Biography). Mentor was a worker in silver, and the most celebrated of all the Greek artists of his class. His period is fixed to some extent by Pliny's statement (H. N., Lib. 33. c. 12, ed. Hard.), that his works perished either in the conflagration of the temple of Diana, or in that of the Roman capitol. Whatever the fact may be, Pliny supposes that Mentor must have produced his great works before the burning of the temple of Diana, B.C. 356: see also Pliny (H. N., Lib. 7. c. 39). Though the great works of Mentor may have been destroyed, his name survived, and works passed current as his in Martial's time (iii. 41):—

Lacerta vivit et timetur argentum.”

qui illa non invitus] This is only a rhetorical way of saying what he says shortly after: “qui sua servare vellet.”

ad propinquum—scribit] Zumpt's reading. The common reading is ‘propinquo suo scribit.’ Both expressions are Latin. Zumpt observes, that when ‘scribere’ is equivalent to sending a letter, it is used with the accusative; when it signifies to inform by letter, it has generally a dative. There may be some truth in this distinction. Cicero says, for instance (Ad Div. xiv. 8): “nam mihi et scriptum et nuntiatum est te in febrim subito incidisse.”

paucis illis diebus] ‘In those few days which preceded the arrival of the letter.’ See Lib. 2. c. 26. The poets also use this form:—

“In thalamos venere Procae. Proca natus in illis Praeda recens avium quinque diebus erat.”—Ovid, Fasti, vi. 143.

eripere argentum,] ‘Eripere argentum ipse Diodoro, erepta sibi vasa,’ Klotz. Zumpt prefers the preposition with ‘Diodoro.’

Eriphylam] The story is of a woman who sold her husband, Amphiarus, for a chain of gold:—

Μαῖράν τε Κλυμένην τε ἴδον στυγερήν τ’ Ἐριφύλην
ἣ χρυσὸν φίλου ἀνδρὸς ἐδέξατο τιμήεντα.
Od. xi. 326.

The story is told by Diodorus (iv. 65), and Apollodorus, iii. 6. Compare also Sophocles, Electra, 837:—

οἶδα γὰρ ἄνακτ’ Ἀμφιαρέων χρυσο-δέτοις, &c.

pulchritudine ejus incensa salutem viri proderet. Similis istius cupiditas: hoc etiam acrior atque insanior, quod illa cupiebat id quod viderat; hujus libidines non solum oculis sed etiam auribus excitabantur.

XIX. Conquiri Diodorum tota provincia jubet. Ille ex Sicilia jam castra commoverat, et vasa collegerat. Homo ut aliquo modo illum in provinciam revocaret, hanc excogitat rationem, si haec ratio potius quam amentia nominanda est. Apponit de suis canibus quendam qui dicat, se Diodorum Melitensem rei capitalis reum velle facere. Primo mirum omnibus videri, Diodorum reum, hominem quietissimum, ab omni non modo facinoris verum etiam minimi errati suspicione remotissimum: deinde esse perspicuum fieri omnia illa propter argentum. Iste non dubitat jubere nomen deferri: et tum primum opinor istum absentis nomen recepisse. Res clara Sicilia tota propter caelati argenti cupiditatem reos fieri rerum capitalium, neque solum reos fieri sed etiam absentes. Diodorus Romae sordidatus circum patronos atque hospites cursare, rem omnibus narrare. Literae mittuntur isti a patre vehementes, ab amicis item—videret quid ageret de Diodoro, quo progredereetur: rem claram esse et invidiosam; insanire hominem; periturum hoc uno crimine nisi cavisset. Iste etiamtum patrem, si non in parentis, at in hominum numero putabat: ad iudicium nondum se satis instruxerat: primus annus erat provinciae; non ut in Sthenio jam refertus pecunia. Itaque furor ejus paululum non pudore sed metu ac timore repressus est. Condemnare Diodorum non audet absentem: de reis eximit. Diodorus interea praetore isto prope triennium provincia domoque caruit. Ceteri, non solum Siculi sed etiam cives Romani, hoc statuerant, quoniam iste tantum cupiditate progredereetur, nihil esse quod quisquam putaret se quod isti paulo magis placeret conservare aut domi retinere posse. Postea vero quam intellexerunt isti virum fortem, quem summe provincia expectabat, Q. Arrium non succedere, statuerunt nihil se tam clausum neque tam reconditum posse habere quod non istius cupiditati apertissimum promptissimumque esset.

XX. Tum iste ab equite Romano splendido et gratioso, Cn.

19. vasa collegerat.] 'Had packed up his baggage.' 'Vasa' are the moveables of an army, or of a man on a journey; the same as the Greek σκεύη. See Caesar, Bell. Civ. i. 66.

illum in provinciam] 'In provinciam illum:' Klotz, perhaps better. Zumpt has no note here—'tum primum ut opinor,' Klotz. I am not aware of the authority for the 'ut,' nor do I know how it is to be explained.

non audet absentem:] The punctuation of Klotz. Zumpt has the common punctuation, 'non audet: absentem de reis eximit.' I think that the punctuation of Klotz shows the true meaning.

Calidio, cujus filium sciebat senatorem populi Romani et judicem esse, equuleos argenteos nobiles qui Q. Maximi fuerant aufert. Imprudens huc incidi, judices: emit enim, non abstulit: nollem dixisse: jactabit se et in his equitabit equuleis. 'Emi: pecuniam solvi.' Credo, etiam tabulae proferentur. Est tanti: cedo tabulas: dilue sane crimen hoc Calidianum, dum ego tabulas aspicere possim. Verumtamen quid erat quod Calidius Romae quereretur, se, quum tot annos in Sicilia negotiaretur, abs te solo ita esse contemptum, ita despectum, ut etiam una cum ceteris Siculis despoliaretur. Si emeris, quid erat quod confirmabat se abs te argentum esse repetitum, si id tibi sua voluntate vendiderat; tu porro posses facere ut Cn. Calidio non redderes, praesertim quum is L. Sisenna, defensore tuo, tam familiariter uteretur, et quum ceteris familiaribus Sisennae reddidisses? Denique non opinor negaturum esse te homini honesto, sed non gratiosiori quam Cn. Calidius est, L. Curidio te argentum per Potamonem, amicum tuum, reddidisse. Qui quidem ceterorum causam apud te difficiliorem fecit. Nam quum te confirmasses compluribus redditum, posteaquam Curidius pro

20. judicem esse,] He was in the 'decursiae' of the 'judices.'—'equuleos.' Manutius supposes that they were silver vessels, which may be inferred from the words, 'Vende mihi vasa caelata.' The vessels had probably figures of horses on them, or horses' heads. The Q. Maximus may be the Q. Fabius Maximus, the conqueror of the Allobroges, as Manutius supposes. Gulielmus, following Priscian, who quotes these words, conjectures that we should read, 'quique maximi fuerant,' where he explains 'maximi' as equivalent to 'plurimi,' 'of the highest value.' Graevius adopted this reading from the Cod. Regius, and it stands in the Variorum edition; and Zumpt says that it is confirmed by both the Guelff. MSS. He thinks, however, that, if this is the sense of the passage, 'fuerant' ought to be 'erant.' Klotz has the reading 'quique maximi fuerant.' I suppose that, if Cicero meant to speak of the value, he would have said 'plurimi,' and not 'maximi;' and the addition of a word of price after 'nobiles' can hardly be what Cicero meant. Their real value would have been enhanced by having belonged to a Q. Maximus, who was a man of taste.

Est tanti:] 'It is worth your while:' as before. It is worth your while to produce the books, and clear yourself of this charge. It is hardly 'tanti,' perhaps, to remark that Hotmann misunderstood what is so plain: he says, 'tanti sunt venditi.'

despoliaretur.] In the old editions 'spoliaretur,' for which Naugerius wrote 'dispoliaretur.' Ernesti was of opinion that 'dispoliaretur' is the genuine form in Cicero (see Clavis Cic. v. Dispoliare). One does not see the objection to 'despoliare;' but it is a matter to be decided by evidence. It is singular that Ernesti, who is so zealous about 'dispoliare,' should not have taken up the claims of 'describere' in some of the passages which he has under Describere (Clavis, v. Describere).

quid erat quod confirmabat] They who place a comma after 'erat' (Zumpt and others) have, as far as they could, prevented a reader from understanding the text. It means: "if you had bought it, what did he mean when he affirmed that he would bring an action against you for the recovery of the plate, if he had sold it to you of his own free will; and you, on your part, what was there that you could do to prevent your delivering it back to Cn. Calidius?" 'Quid erat quod' must be supplied between 'porro' and 'posses facere.' In the same sentence we have 'quid erat quod,' in two different constructions, but also in two different senses. The sense with the subjunctive is shown by numerous instances, as in c. 55: "quid enim erat quod vectigalibus prospiceret Metellus?" &c. See also Lib. 3. c. 53, p. 333.

testimonio dixit te sibi reddidisse, finem reddendi fecisti; quod intellexisti, praeda te de manibus emissa testimonium tamen effugere non posse. Cn. Calidio, equiti Romano, per omnes alios praetores licuit habere argentum bene factum; licuit posse domesticis copiis, quum magistratum aut aliquem superiorem invitasset, ornare et apparare convivium. Multi domi Cn. Calidii cum potestate atque imperio fuerunt: nemo inventus est tam amens qui illud argentum tam praeclarum ac tam nobile eriperet, nemo tam audax qui posceret, nemo tam impudens qui postularet ut venderet. Superbum est enim, iudices, et non ferendum, dicere praetorem in provincia homini honesto, locupleti, splendido, Vende mihi vasa caelata. Hoc est enim dicere, Non es dignus tu qui habeas quae tam bene facta sunt: meae dignitatis ista sunt. Tu dignior, Verres, quam Calidius qui—ut non conferam vitam neque existimationem tuam cum illius; neque enim est conferenda; hoc ipsum conferam quo tu te superiorem fingis, quod HS ccc millia divisoribus ut praetor renuntiarere dedisti; LXXX accusatori ne tibi odiosus esset; ea re contemnis equestrem ordinem ac despicias?—ea re tibi indignum visum est quidquam quod tibi placeret Calidium potius habere quam te?

apparare] Perhaps an ordinary word in such cases. Horace (1 Carm. xxxviii.) has “Persicos odi, puer, apparatus.”

Multi—cum potestate atque imperio] Governors or others, who had all the powers which the Roman people could confer on a ‘consul,’ or ‘praetor,’ or ‘proconsul.’ The expression often occurs in Cicero, as in Lib. 5. c. 40. The common reading in this passage is ‘cum imperio ac potestate;’ but Zumpt observes, that the order in the text is the more usual order, ‘nam antecedit potestas, insuper datur imperium.’ See Lib. 3. c. 57: “quum ab omnibus . . . propter imperium,” &c. But in Lib. 3. c. 18, Zumpt has ‘summum imperium potestatemque haberet:’ and in this same book, c. 22, ‘pro imperio et potestate.’ The matter is not worth notice, except to show the uselessness of these minute canons.

quae tam bene facta sunt] The question is between ‘sunt’ and ‘sint,’ says Zumpt, who decides for ‘sunt’ on sufficient reasons. Nobody can doubt, who has studied Cicero with any care. He means the ‘vasa’ of Calidius.

qui ut non conferam, &c.] I find no remark on this passage, and yet it presents a difficulty that is worth attempting to explain. Does ‘qui’ refer to ‘Tu—Verres,’ and is it to be connected with ‘contemnis?’ Or does it refer to Calidius, and is the sentence interrupted at ‘qui,’ and a new form given to it? Or what is the true explanation? By looking back we may see what is meant. ‘Non es dignus tu qui habeas—meae dignitatis ista sunt. Cicero then says, ‘Tu dignior, Verres, quam Calidius, qui—;’ and he would have added ‘habeas:’ but he breaks off, and says, ‘ut non conferam . . . tuam,’ &c.; where the ‘tuam’ seems to show that the ‘qui’ must be referred to ‘Tu.’ He proceeds to ‘ac despicias,’ with which words he closes these sarcastically assumed reasons of the greater worthiness of Verres to possess. But, instead of continuing the regular construction, ‘qui habeas,’ which he had rendered impossible by the words interposed, he resumes with a new form of expression, ‘ea re tibi indignum,’ &c. I have endeavoured to point it as I understand it. The pointing of Zumpt and Klotz leaves the whole perfectly unintelligible; at least to me.

equite Romano, turibulum emisti? qui pro testimonio dixit, te, quum inspiciendum poposcisses, evulso emblemate remisisse; ut intelligatis in homine intelligentiam esse, non avaritiam, artificii cupidum non argenti fuisse. Nec solum in Papinio fuit hac abstinentia: tenuit hoc institutum in turibulis omnibus quaecunque in Sicilia fuerunt. Incredibile est autem quam multa et quam praeclara fuerint. Credo tum quum Sicilia florebat opibus et copiis magna artificia fuisse in ea insula. Nam domus erat ante istum praetorem nulla paulo locupletior qua in domo haec non essent, etiamsi praeterea nihil esset argenti, patella grandis cum sigillis ac simulacris deorum, patera qua mulieres ad res divinas uterentur, turibulum. Haec autem omnia antiquo opere et summo artificio facta; ut hoc liceret suspicari fuisse aliquando apud Siculos peraeque pro portione cetera, sed quibus multa fortuna ademisset, tamen apud eos remansisse ea quae religio retinuisset. Dixi, iudices, multa fuisse fere apud omnes Siculos: ego idem confirmo nunc ne unum quidem esse. Quid hoc est? quod hoc monstrum, quod prodigium in provinciam misimus? Nonne vobis id egisse videtur ut non unius libidinem, non suos oculos, sed omnium cupidissimorum insanias, quum Romam revertisset, expleret? Qui simul atque in oppidum quodpiam venerat, immittebantur illi continuo Cibyrici canes, qui investigabant et perscrutabantur omnia. Si quod erat grande vas et majus opus inventum, laeti afferebant: si

21. artificia] The word clearly means the 'arts,' a conclusion that Zumpt has come to, though at first he says that he was inclined to take it for 'officinas caelatorum.' Sicily must have had great artists, and the people great taste for the arts, as we may see from the coins of the island. Every family, it appears, of the moderately wealthy class had its few articles of plate for religious services: a 'patella,' or large open vessel or dish; a 'patera,' or saucer-formed vessel; and a 'turibulum,' or incense holder. In place of 'patella,' several of the better MSS. have 'patina,' which Zumpt objects to, because the 'patina' was not used for religious purposes. 'Patella' is a diminutive form of 'patera,' and 'patina' contains the same root as 'patera.' Manutius thought 'patella' and 'grandis' were contradictory; and he would prefer 'patera grandis,' and then write 'patella' for 'patera.'

peraeque pro portione] The true text is doubtful. Lambinus says of his reading, 'peraequa portione,' that it is the reading of all the MSS. and all the editions; but he is no great authority on this point. He adds, that Adr. Turnebus thought that the true reading is 'peraeque pro portione.' See Lib. 3. c. 63, and Lib. 5. c. 21.

quod hoc monstrum, &c.] Zumpt, in his later edition, adds this 'hoc' on the authority of the better MSS. It must be translated, 'What is this monster that we have sent into the province?' which is an ordinary Greek form of expression as well as Latin.

Qui simul, &c.] This sentence, and the concluding sentence of this chapter, contain examples of the indicative mood, all of which are consistent with Cicero's usage, when he states particular facts. The 'Cibyrici canes' of Verres (c. 13) went a hunting for their master, and were content to get small game (lepusculi) when they could find nothing better. Verres kept a pack of such hounds (Lib. 1. c. 48). All this is plain; but Hotmann goes out of his way to compare the passage, in a letter of Caelius to Cicero (Ad Div. viii. 4), where Caelius says: "item de pantheris, ut Cibyratas arcessas curesque ut mi vehantur."

minus ejusmodi quidpiam venari potuerant, illa quidem certe pro lepusculis capiebantur, patellae, paterae, turibula. Hic quos putatis fletus mulierum, quas lamentationes fieri solitas esse in hisce rebus? quae forsitan vobis parvae esse videantur; sed magnum et acerbum dolorem commovent, mulierculis praesertim, quum eripiuntur e manibus ea quibus ad res divinas uti consuerunt, quae a suis acceperunt, quae in familia semper fuerunt.

XXII. Hic nolite expectare dum ego haec crimina agam ostiatim, ab Æschylo Tyndaritano istum pateram abstulisse, a Thrasone item Tyndaritano patellam, a Nymphodoro Agrigentino turibulum. Quum testes ex Sicilia dabo, quem volet ille eligat quem ego interrogem de patellis, pateris, turibulis: non modo oppidum nullum, sed ne domus quidem ulla paulo locupletior expers hujus injuriae reperietur. Qui quum in convivium venisset, si quidquam caelati aspexerat, manus abstinere, iudices, non poterat. Cn. Pompeius est Philo, qui fuit Tyndaritanus. Is coenam isti dabat apud villam in Tyndaritano. Fecit quod Siculi non audebant; ille, civis Romanus quod erat, impunius id se facturum putavit: apposuit patellam in qua sigilla erant egregia. Iste continuo ut vidit, non dubitavit illud insigne penatium hospitaliumque deorum ex hospitali mensa tollere; sed tamen, quod ante de istius abstinentia dixeram, sigillis avulsis reliquum argentum sine ulla avaritia reddidit. Quid, Eupolemo Calactino, homini nobili, Lucullorum hospiti ac perfamiliari, qui nunc apud exercitum cum L. Lucullo est, non idem fecit? Coenabat apud eum. Argentum ille ceterum purum appo-

22. ostiatim,] It occurs again in c. 24: 'from house to house,' as we say; or 'from door to door.'

apud villam] Zumpt quotes Nonius (cap. 12. nr. 19), who has a note on this use of 'apud' in Cicero, of which this is said to be the only instance in Cicero: "error consuetudinis apud pro in utitur. Itaque vitiose dicimus, cum nos in foro fuisse dicamus, apud forum fuisse, cum apud juxta significat." Nonius also cites the passage of Terence (Andria, ii. 1, 2): "apud forum modo e Davo audiui." Captain Smyth, speaking of the neighbourhood of Tyndaris, says: "a picturesque path, lined with trees, conducts the traveller to a gentle eminence, on which stands the baronial palace of Scalaprotto, where there are some sculptures, vases, and stelae from the neighbouring ruins. The beauty of the situation, with the antiquity of the cisterns, and several local indications, lead me to imagine this to be the site of the villa of Pompeius Philo, from whose dish Verres plucked the fine cameos" (Sicily, p. 102). The 'sigilla,' however, were not cameos; they were silver.

L. Lucullo] L. Lucullus was at the time in Asia (B.C. 70), carrying on the war against Mithridates. See the Life, by Plutarch.

Argentum ille, &c.] Hotmann, who had the reading 'illi,' found the passage difficult; but he saw that 'illi' must be 'ille,' that is, Eupolemus. The use of 'ille' is obvious, for 'ille' is contrasted with 'hic' (Verres). Manutius also suggested 'ille' for 'illi.'

'Purum' means without any workmanship, plain, as in c. 23, where the plate is called 'purum,' when the ornamental part had been taken off.—'cum emblemate:' Klotz. 'Erf. Guelf. Havn. coll. emblemate, mendose, opinor' (Zumpt): but it is not quite certain if it is mendose.

suerat, ne purus ipse relinqueretur; duo pocula non magna, verumtamen cum emblematis. Hic, tamquam festivum acroama, ne sine corollario de convivio discederet, ibidem convivis spectantibus emblemata evellenda curavit. Neque ego nunc istius facta omnia enumerare conor: neque opus est, neque fieri ullo modo potest: tantum uniuscujusque de varia improbitate generis indicia apud vos et exempla profero. Neque enim ita se gessit in his rebus, tamquam rationem aliquando esset redditurus, sed prorsus ita quasi aut reus nunquam esset futurus, aut quo plura abstulisset eo minore periculo in iudicium venturus esset; qui haec quae dico jam non occulte, non per amicos atque interpretes, sed palam de loco superiore ageret, pro imperio et potestate.

XXIII. Catinam quum venisset, oppidum locuples, honestum, copiosum, Dionysiarchum ad se proagorum, hoc est, summum magistratum, vocari jubet: ei palam imperat ut omne argentum quod apud quemque esset Catinae conquirendum curaret et ad se afferendum. Phylarchum Centuripinum, primum hominem genere, viracroama,] Literally, 'a hearing' (ἀκρόαμα), was used to signify a pleasant story, and the like; and also a person who told a merry tale, or pleased his hearers in some such way. So Verres, as if he had amused the company, thought that he ought to get something for his trouble, and he helped himself to the ornamental work on the plate. As to 'corollarium,' see Lib. 3. c. 79; and the note on Sueton. Vespas. c. 19 (ed. Burmann); where another passage from Cicero is quoted: 'ipse non solum spectator, sed actor et acroama fuit.'—'convivis inspectantibus:' the common reading.

tantum uniuscujusque] 'Tantum,' or 'tantummodo,' is the true reading. The English reprint of Zumpt, and, I suppose, his minor edition, has the faulty reading 'tantumque uniuscujusque.'—'de loco superiore.' Becker, Handbuch, ii. 2. p. 51, contends that 'de loco superiore' always means 'tribunal.' Accordingly he rejects the explanation of this expression that is given in Lib. 1. c. 5 (note). There is no doubt that it often does mean the 'tribunal,' as in Lib. 2. c. 42; Lib. 4. c. 40; with which he compares Lib. 2. c. 38, and Lib. 3. c. 59, where 'sella ac tribunal' correspond to 'sella ac locus superior,' in Lib. 4. c. 40. That it does mean 'tribunal' in these passages, is quite clear, for the context shows that. It may, perhaps, mean 'tribunal' here; but there seems no reason in restricting the signification of the words, when they are not restricted by the context.

The passage in Cicero, Ad Att. ii. 24: "postero autem die Caesar, is qui olim quum praetor esset Q. Catulum ex inferiore loco jusserat dicere, Vettium in rostra produxit," which seems to show, as I have no doubt that it does, that 'rostra' is contrasted with an 'inferior locus,' Becker explains thus: since Caesar was Praetor, the 'ex inferiore loco' is to be considered as said in opposition to the 'tribunal.' This is a most forced explanation. Becker indeed shows, that when Cicero means the 'rostra,' as he does in another passage where he does not use the word, he adopts a different form of expression, and does not use 'locus superior.' The passage is Act. i. c. 12: 'quod agam ex eo loco, ex quo me Populus Romanus secum agere,' &c. I think that Becker is wrong in thus limiting the sense of 'locus superior:' but others may be of a different opinion.

23. proagorum,] The reading of the editions before that of Hervagius (1534), and that of Manutius (1559), was 'Pardiorum.' The correct word occurs again in c. 39. 'Proagorus' is not given in the Greek Lexicons. F. Ursini quotes a bronze tablet of the Agrigentini, in his own possession, in which occurs προαγοροῦντος διοκλέους τοῦ διοκλέους. See Gruter, Inscript. p. 401.

primum hominem] The middle-age editors, as Zumpt remarks, altered 'primum' into 'primarium.' Zumpt refers to Lib. 1. c. 26; and Lib. 5. c. 63. See Lib. 1. c. 26.

tute, pecunia, non hoc idem juratum dicere audistis, sibi istum negotium dedisse atque imperasse ut Centuripinis, in civitate totius Siciliae multo maxima et locupletissima, omne argentum conquireret et ad se comportari juberet? Agyrio similiter istius imperio vasa Corinthia per Apollodorum, quem testem audistis, Syracusas deportata sunt. Illa vero optima est, quod, quum Haluntium venisset praetor laboriosus et diligens, ipse in oppidum noluit accedere, quod erat difficili ascensu atque arduo; Archagathum Haluntinum, hominem non solum domi sed tota Sicilia in primis nobilem, vocari jussit: ei negotium dedit ut, quidquid Halunti esset argenti caelati, aut si quid etiam Corinthiorum, ut omne statim ad mare ex oppido deportaretur. Ascendit in oppidum Archagathus. Homo nobilis qui a suis et amari et diligere vellet ferebat graviter illam sibi ab isto provinciam datam, nec quid faceret habebat. Pronuntiat quid sibi imperatum esset: jubet omnes proferre quod haberent. Metus erat summus. Ipse enim tyrannus non discedebat longius: Archagathum et argentum in lectica cubans ad mare infra oppidum expectabat. Quem concursum in oppido factum putatis, quem clamorem, quem porro fletum mulierum? qui videret, equum Trojanum introductum, urbem captam diceret. Effferri sine thecis vasa, extorqueri alia de manibus mulierum, effringi multorum fores, revelli claustra. Quid enim putatis? Scuta si quando conquiruntur a privatis in bello ac tumultu, tamen homines inviti dant, etsi ad salutem communem dari sentiunt; ne quem putetis sine maximo dolore argentum caelatum domo quod alter eriperet protulisse. Omnia deferuntur. Cibyrateae fratres vocantur: pauca improbant: quae probarant, iis crustae aut emblemata detrahebantur. Sic Haluntini excussis deliciis cum argento puro domum revertuntur.

Illam vero optima] 'Intellige res' (Zumpt). See Lib. 2. c. 23, and the note.

Haluntium] Mentioned in Lib. 3. c. 43. I can't make out the modern site. Authorities differ. It was close to the sea, as this passage shows.

illam—provinciam] 'That business.' This is not an improper use of the word 'provincia,' but it is its primary signification (Lib. 2. c. 1, note). Terence, Phormio, i. 2. 24) has a like use:—

"D. O Geta, provinciam Cepisti duram."

'nec . . . habebat:' the uses of 'habeo' in Latin, and ἔχω, are numerous and varied.

A reader learns them as he does other things, by use. Virgil has, Eclog. ii. 2, —"nec quid speraret habebat."

videret,—diceret.] The reading of Zumpt's second edition. In his minor edition he had 'viderent—dicerent.' The singular is certainly the more usual form.

tumultu] Cicero speaks of a requisition for arms made upon private persons in an emergency, a war, or a 'tumultus.' The word 'tumultus' means a sudden rising, or hostile demonstration, several instances of which are mentioned in Livy, who uses the word. (Lib. 34. c. 56, for instance.)

crustae] The passages in Forcellini show the meaning of 'crusta,' which is the XXIV. Quod unquam, iudices, hujusmodi everriculum ulla in provincia fuit? Avertere aliquid de publico quam obscurissime per magistratum solebant; etiam aliquid a privato non nunquam occulte auferebant: et hi tamen condemnabantur. Et si quaeritis, ut ipse de me detraham, illos ego accusatores puto fuisse, qui hujusmodi hominum furta odore aut aliquo leviter presso vestigio persequerentur. Nam nos quidem quid facimus in Verre, quem in luto volutatum totius corporis vestigiis invenimus? Permagnus est in eum dicere aliquid, qui praeteriens, lectica paulisper deposita, non per praestigias, sed palam per potestatem, uno imperio ostiatim totum oppidum compilaverit. At tamen ut posset dicere se emissee, Archagatho imperat ut illis aliquid, quorum argentum fuerat, nummorum dicis causa daret. Invenit Archagathus paucos qui vellent accipere: his dedit. Eos nummos tamen iste Archagathus non reddidit. Vult Romae repetere Archagathus; Cn. Lentulus Marcellinus dissuasit, sicut ipsum dicere audistis. Recita Archagathi et Lentuli testimonium.

Et ne forte hominem existimetis hanc tantam vim emblematum sine causa coacervare voluisse, videte quanti vos, quanti existimationem populi Romani, quanti leges et judicia, quanti testes Siculos negotiatoresque fecerit. Posteaquam tantam multitudinem collegerat emblematum ut ne unum quidem cuiquam reliquisset, instituit officinam Syracusis in regia maximam. Palam artifices omnes, caelatores ac vasculares, convocari jubet: et ipse suos complures habebat. Eo concludit magnam hominum multitudinem. Menses hard outward covering of a thing. Many of these vessels that Verres laid his hands on were not solid metal, but they had a case, or covering of metal. This he took off, and if there were 'emblemata,' or figures attached to the surface, he took them. It is perhaps hardly necessary to remark, that Cicero's expression (aut) shows that 'crustae' and 'emblemata' were different things.

24. Avertere . . . solebant;] The sentence seems awkward without a nominative to 'solebant,' but it may be supplied from the context, 'hujusmodi hominum.' Cicero says that the accusers of such offenders had to track their petty thefts by the scent or light foot-marks: he compares them to dogs. When he says this, it is the same as disparaging his own merits as an accuser (ut ipse de me detraham); for he found the print of the whole body of this hog where he had wallowed in the mud. 'Per-

dicis causa] 'For form's sake;' to give the transaction the show of a purchase; as in the form of testament 'per aes et libram' (Gaius, ii. 103): "nunc vero alius heres testamento instituitur a quo etiam legata relinquuntur, alius dicis gratia propter veteris juris imitationem familiae emptor adhibetur." The word often occurs in Cicero. Forcellini places it under 'dica,' a word which the Romans seem to have borrowed from the Greek (δικη), and he considers 'dicis,' equivalent to δικη; an explanation which does not seem quite satisfactory.

vasculares,] See c. 7, note.

Eo concludit] 'Eos concludit' in the English reprint of Zumpt, and I suppose in his minor edition. Klotz has 'eos concludit.' Orelli's reading is 'eo conducit,' &c.

octo continuos his opus non defuit, quum vas nullum fieret nisi aureum. Tum illa, ex patellis et turibulis quae evellerat, ita scite in aureis poculis illigabat, ita apte in scaphiis aureis includebat ut ea ad illam rem nata esse diceres: ipse tamen praetor, qui sua vigilantia pacem in Sicilia dicit fuisse, in hac officina majorem partem diei cum tunica pulla sedere solebat et pallio. XXV. Haec ego, judices, non auderem proferre, ni vererer ne forte plura de isto ab aliis in sermone quam a me in iudicio vos audisse diceretis. Quis enim est qui de hac officina, qui de vasis aureis, qui de istius pallio non audierit? Quem voles e conventu Syracusano virum bonum nominato: producam: nemo erit quin hoc se audisse aut vidisse dicat. O tempora, O mores! Nihil nimium vetus proferam. Sunt vestrum aliquammulti, qui L. Pisonem cognorunt, hujus L. Pisonis qui praetor fuit patrem. Ei, quum esset in Hispania praetor, qua in provincia occisus est, nescio quo pacto dum armis exercetur annulus aureus quem habebat fractus et comminutus est. Quum vellet sibi anulum facere, aurificem jussit vocari in forum ad sellam Cordubae, et palam appendit aurum: hominem in foro jubet sellam ponere, et facere anulum omnibus praesentibus. Nimium fortasse dicet aliquis hunc diligentem. Hactenus reprehendet si qui volet: nihil amplius. Verum fuit ei concedendum. Filius enim L. Pisonis erat, ejus qui primus de pecuniis repetundis legem tulit. Ridiculum est me nunc de Verre dicere, quum de Pisone Frugi dixerim: verumtamen quantum in-scaphiis aureis] The common reading is 'scyphis aureis.' 'Scaphis' is the reading of a few MSS., and 'scafis' of the older Guelf., and accordingly Gulielmus proposed 'scaphiis' (see c. 17), which Zumpt has adopted.—'includebat: 'concludebat' ambo Guelff. Erf. Cujac. sed siletur de Lamb. et Havn. Coll.' (Zumpt). Klotz has 'concludebat.'

tunica pulla . . et pallio.] "He used to sit among his workmen in the common dark-coloured 'tunica,' which the common Romans wore; and with the 'pallium' on, a Greek article of dress." Hotmann explains the passage fully. He quotes from the oration In Vatinius, "ut in epulo Q. Arrii familiaris mei cum toga pulla accumberes." And again, "Quis unquam caenavit atratus?"

25. de istius pallio] 'Edd. principes et codd. vulgares de istius pallio palla non audierit. In Aldina factum est pulla, in Victoriana denique adjectum de conjectura tunica, ut nunc vulgo editur de istius pal- lio, tunica pulla' (Zumpt). He adds that the better MSS. omit 'tunica,' and read 'pullo.' His conclusion that 'pullo' may be properly omitted seems just. Klotz has the same.

e conventu] 'De conventu:' Klotz. aliquammulti,] Zumpt observes that this expression occurs in no other writer except Appuleius, who was, however, an imitator of the rarer forms of expression in the ancient writers. The reading in the text has the authority of the best MSS.; and it must mean, as Zumpt says, 'satis multi,' for those who knew this Piso could not be many. The grandfather was L. Piso, consul B.C. 133, 'qui primus de repetundis legem tulit.' His son, of whom this story is told, was praetor of Spain B.C. 112, and he was killed perhaps in that year. Two-and-forty years had therefore elapsed between his death and the time of this trial. This Piso was the father of the Piso then living, who had been a colleague of Verres (Lib. 1. c. 46).

tersit videte. Iste quum aliquot abacorum faceret vasa aurea, non laboravit quid non modo in Sicilia verum etiam Romae in judicio audiret; ille in auri semuncia totam Hispaniam scire voluit unde praetori annulus fieret. Nimirum, ut hic nomen suum comprobavit, sic ille cognomen.

XXVI. Nullo modo possum omnia istius facta aut memoria consequi aut oratione complecti. Genera ipsa cupio breviter attingere, ut hic modo me commonuit Pisonis annulus, quod totum effluxerat. Quam multis istum putatis hominibus honestis de digitis annulos abstulisse? nunquam dubitavit, quotiescunque aliqujus aut gemma aut annulo delectatus est. Incredibile dicam, sed ita clarum ut ipsum negaturum non arbitrer. Quum Valentio ejus interpreti epistola Agrigento allata esset, casu signum iste animadvertit in cretula. Placuit ei. Quaesivit unde esset epistola: respondit, Agrigento. Iste ad quos solebat literas misit, ut is annulus ad se primo quoque tempore afferretur. Ita literis istius patrifamilias, L. Titio, civi Romano, annulus de digito detractus est. Illa vero ejus cupiditas incredibilis est. Nam ut in singula conclavia, quae iste non modo Romae sed in omnibus villis habet, tricenos lectos optime stratos cum ceteris ornamentis convivii quaereret, nimium multa comparare videretur. Nulla domus in Sicilia locuples fuit ubi iste non textrinum instituerit. Mulier est Segestana, perdives et nobilis, Lamia nomine: per triennium isti, plena domo telarum, stragulam vestem confecit, nihil nisi conchylio tinctum. Attalus, homo pecuniosus, Neti; Lyso Lilybaei; Critolaus Aetnae; Syracusis Aeschrio, Cleomenes, Theomnastus; Helori aliquot abacorum, &c.] 'Faceret vasa,' says Graevius, is 'colligeret, conquireret, ut facere rem, exercitum.' He was collecting gold vessels enough to load several sideboards.

26. ut hic modo] This passage is quoted by Quintilian, Inst. Or. ix. 2. 61. The passage in Quintilian has 'annulos aureos,' but 'aureos' is wanting in the best MSS. of Cicero, and Lambinus thought that it ought to be rejected, for, as Zumpt observes, it was the workmanship of the stone, not the metal, that attracted the cupidity of Verres.

cretula.] The Romans used wax to seal their letters with. The Greeks used a kind of earth for this purpose (cretula), on which they made a stamp with their seal; hence it is called 'cretula anularia' (Plin. H. N. xxxv. 27). Herodotus (ii. 38) has the expression γῆ σημαντική. In the oration Pro Flacco, c. 16, Cicero says: "Haec quae est a nobis prolata laudatio obsignata erat creta illa Asiatica, quae fere est omnibus nota nobis" (Zumpt).

textrinum] A weaving establishment. Zumpt compares the form 'pistrinum,' but remarks that there is also 'tonstrina' and 'sutrina.'

conchylio] Cicero shortly after uses 'purpuram' exactly in the same sense. In this chapter, then, he takes 'conchylium' and 'purpura' to be the same. 'Conchylium' is a shell-fish, and also the juice of a shell-fish used for dyeing.

Aetnae;] Perhaps the true name. Zumpt has 'Hennae,' but the best MSS., though some of the readings are corrupt, indicate 'Aetnae.'—'Helori' is a correction of F. Ursini for 'Pelori,' the reading of the MSS.; but Pelorus (Lib. 5. c. 34) was not a town. 'Archonidas' (Lib. 3. c. 56) is no Archonidas. Dies me citius defecerit quam nomina. Ipse dabat purpuram tantum, operam amici. Credo: jam enim non libet omnia criminari: quasi hoc mihi non satis sit ad crimen, habuisse tam multum quod daret; voluisse deportare tam multa; hoc denique quod concedit, amicorum operis esse in hujusmodi rebus usum. Jam vero lectos aeratos et candelabra aenea, num cui praeter istum Syracusis per triennium facta esse existimatis? Emebat. Credo. Sed tantum vos certiores, judices, facio, quid iste in provincia praetor egerit, ne cui forte negligens nimium fuisse videatur, neque se satis quum potestatem habuerit instruxisse et ornasse.

XXVII. Venio nunc non jam ad furtum, non ad avaritiam, non ad cupiditatem, sed ejusmodi facinus in quo omnia nefaria contineri mihi atque inesse videantur; in quo dii immortales violati, existimatio atque auctoritas nominis populi Romani imminuta, hospitium spoliatum ac proditum, abalienati scelere istius a nobis omnes reges amicissimi nationesque quae in eorum regno ac ditione sunt. Nam reges Syriae, regis Antiochi filios pueros, scitis Romae nuper fuisse; qui venerant non propter Syriae regnum, nam id sine controversia obtinebant ut a patre et a majoribus acceperant; sed regnum Aegypti ad se et ad Selenen matrem suam pertinere arbitrabantur. Hi ipsi posteaquam temporibus rei publicae exclusi per senatum

purpuram,] Zumpt points 'Ipse dabat purpuram, tantum operam amici.' Perhaps a Roman could tell how this was to be taken without the aid of points. If he could not, his language would be uncertain. Klotz also puts the point after 'purpuram.' Much has been said of this shell-fish dye, which it would be impertinent to discuss here. There are some remarks on it in Smyth's Sicily, p. 24.

27. reges Syriae,] Zumpt has a note on this passage, the substance of which is as follows. These kings were Antiochus and Seleucus, the sons of Antiochus Eusebes, who was now dead. The elder of these two, Antiochus Asiaticus, was afterwards deprived of the Syrian throne by Cn. Pompeius Magnus. They were in possession of Syria, as Cicero observes, so far as their claim was undisputed, for their competitors, the sons of Antiochus Grypus, seem to have been dead; but Tigranes, the son-in-law of Mithridates, was actually in possession of Syria, to which country the Syrians themselves invited him (B.C. 83), being weary of the contentions among the native princes. Zumpt says that Cicero suppressed this fact, that these kings might not appear poor and contemptible personages; and, as Lucullus was now vigorously carrying on the war against Tigranes, the Syrian kings might have some reasonable hopes of being restored, and, indeed, may have come to Rome on this business. Their mother, Selene, was the daughter of Ptolemaeus Physcon, king of Egypt, and the sister of Ptolemaeus Lathyrus, who had been killed, as well as his only legitimate daughter, Berenice; and the throne of Egypt was claimed by Ptolemaeus Auletes, an illegitimate son of Lathyrus. There is great confusion about the marriages of this Selene; but that is immaterial for the present purpose. See Clinton, Fasti, Kings of Syria.

temporibus rei publicae] The commentators are not agreed about these 'tempora;' but there seems no other explanation than that suggested by Zumpt. Cicero alludes to the Servile war in Italy, which was going on while Verres was praetor, in B.C. 73, 72. The war of Mithridates was agere quae voluerant non potuerunt, in Syriam, in regnum patrum profecti sunt. Eorum alter, qui Antiochus vocatur, iter per Siciliam facere voluit. Itaque isto praetore venit Syracusas. Hic Verres hereditatem sibi venisse arbitratus est, quod in ejus regnum ac manus venerat is quem iste et audierat multa secum praeclara habere, et suspicabatur. Mittit homini munera satis large haec ad usum domesticum olei, vini, quod visum est; etiam tritici quod satis esset de suis decumis. Deinde ipsum regem ad coenam vocavit: exornat ample magnificeque triclinium: exponit ea quibus abundabat plurima et pulcherrima vasa argentea: nam haec aurea nondum fecerat: omnibus curat rebus instructum et paratum ut sit convivium. Quid multa? Rex ita discessit ut et istum copiose ornatum et se honorifice acceptum arbitraretur. Vocat ad coenam deinde ipse praetorem: exponit suas copias omnes, multum argentum, non pauca etiam pocula ex auro, quae, ut mos est regius et maxime in Syria, gemmis erant distincta clarissimis. Erat etiam vas vinarium ex una gemma pergrandi, trulla excavata, manubrio aureo, de qua satis, credo, idoneum, satis gravem testem, Q. Minucium dicere audistis. Iste unumquodque vas in manus sumere, laudare, mirari. Rex gaudere praetori populi Romani satis jucundum et gratum illud esse convivium. Posteaquam inde discessum est, cogitare nihil iste aliud, quod ipsa res declaravit, nisi quemadmodum regem ex provincia spoliatum expilatumque dimitteret. Mittit rogatum vasa ea quae pulcherrima apud eum viderat: ait se suis caelatoribus velle ostendere. Rex qui illum non nosset sine ulla suspicione libentissime dedit. Mittit etiam trullam gemmeam rogatum; velle se eam diligentius considerare. Ea quoque ei mittitur.

XXVIII. Nunc reliquum, judices, attendite, de quo et vos audistis, et populus Romanus non nunc primum audiet, et in exteris nationibus usque ad ultimas terras pervagatum est. Candelabrum too distant to be alluded to in this manner, and the same may be said of the war with Sertorius in Spain. The king's visit was not in the last part of the praetorship of Verres, for Cicero says, "nam haec aurea nondum fecerat."

trulla] This word seems to be a diminutive of 'trua,' and to signify a drinking vessel. See the article Trulla, in Forcellini.

28. pervagatum est.] Klotz has 'pervulgatum est,' for which there is good authority. Zumpt defends 'pervagatum.' It may be right or wrong. I don't know. See

Lib. 3. c. 56.

Candelabrum] The 'candelabrum' was only ornamented with the 'gemmae,' for the material was gold (c. 32): "e gemmis auroque perfectum." Candelabra of a large size were made for temples and public buildings. Some of the bronze candelabra of the ancients, which have been found, consist of a long slender brass stand, resting on three legs—goat's legs or legs of other animals. On the top is a cup or open vessel to contain the oil. The ancient candelabra were of varied forms, often very

e gemmis clarissimis, opere mirabili perfectum, reges hi quos dico Romam quum attulissent, ut in Capitolio ponerent; quod nondum perfectum templum offenderant, neque ponere potuerunt, neque vulgo ostendere ac proferre voluerunt; ut et magnificentius videretur, quum suo tempore in cella Jovis Optimi Maximi poneretur, et clarius, quum pulchritudo ejus recens ad oculos hominum atque integra perveniret: statuerunt id secum in Syriam reportare; ut, quum audissent simulacrum Jovis Optimi Maximi dedicatum, legatos mitterent qui cum ceteris rebus illud quoque eximium atque pulcherrimum donum in Capitolium afferrent. Pervenit res ad istius aures, nescio quomodo. Nam rex celatum voluerat: non quod quidquam metueret aut suspicaretur, sed ut ne multi illud ante perciperent oculis quam populus Romanus. Iste petit a rege et eum pluribus verbis rogat ut id ad se mittat; cupere se dicit inspicere, neque se aliis videndi potestatem esse facturum. Antiochus qui animo et puerili esset et regio nihil de istius improbitate suspicatus est: imperat suis ut id in praetorium involutum quam occultissime deferrent. Quo posteaquam attulerunt involucrisque rejectis constituerunt, clamare iste coepit dignam rem esse regno Syriae, dignam regio munere, dignam Capitolio. Etenim erat eo splendore qui ex clarissimis et pulcherrimis gemmis esse debebat: ea varietate operum ut ars certare videretur cum copia: ea magnitudine ut intelligi posset non ad hominum apparatus sed ad amplissimi elegant: they were both useful and ornamental. There is a marble candelabrum in the Townley Gallery, British Museum, about seven feet high, with the representation of a flame at the top. Sometimes the stand was a representation of a human figure, holding in one hand the lamp or cup for the oil. The candelabrum was one of those household articles in which the artists of antiquity displayed their taste.

“Si non aurea sunt juvenum simulacra per aedes, Lampadas igniferas manibus retinentia dextris, Lumina nocturnis epulis ut suppeditentur.”—Lucretius, ii. 24.

There are two candelabra represented on the reverse of a coin of Cyzicus, with a flame at the summit, and a snake twisting round each. A low altar, with a flame on it, stands between the candelabra. The legend is ΚΥΖΙΚΗΝΩΝ ΝΕΟΚΟΡΩΝ.

nondum perfectum] Zumpt has omitted ‘etiam,’ which is generally read after ‘nondum.’

The temple of Jupiter Capitolinus was accidentally burnt B.C. 83, in the consulship of L. Cornelius Scipio and C. Norbanus. Sulla began its restoration, but he did not live to see it completed, the only instance in which his good fortune failed him. It was dedicated by Q. Catulus B.C. 69 (Zumpt). Liv. Ep. 98.

statuerunt] Zumpt and Klotz have ‘integra perveniret. Statuerunt id secum,’ &c. But it seems that ‘statuerunt’ begins the latter member of the sentence, which is only confused by the parenthetical matter, ‘quod nondum . . . perveniret.’

perciperent] The Erfurt MS. has ‘praeciperent,’ and also the Cod. Reg. cited by Graevius. Lallemand says that the Paris MSS. have ‘praeciperent;’ but all depends on the observance of the very minute difference between the abbreviation of ‘per’ and ‘prae,’ and Zumpt has no faith in the accuracy of Lallemand. There is no real objection to ‘perciperent,’ and much to say against ‘praeciperent’ here. Klotz and Orelli have ‘praeciperent.’

templi ornatum esse factum. Quum satis jam perspexisse videretur, tollere incipiunt ut referrent. Iste ait se velle illud etiam atque etiam considerare: nequaquam se esse satiatum: jubet illos discedere et candelabrum relinquere. Sic illi tum inanes ad Antiochum revertuntur.

XXIX. Rex primo nihil metuere, nihil suspicari: dies unus, alter, plures: non referri. Tum mittit, si videatur, ut reddat. Jubet iste posterius ad se reverti. Mirum illi videri: mittit iterum. Non redditur. Ipse hominem appellat: rogat ut reddat. Os hominis insignemque impudentiam cognoscite. Quod sciret, quod ex ipso rege audisset in Capitolio esse ponendum, quod Jovi Optimo Maximo, quod populo Romano servari videret, id sibi ut donaret rogare et vehementissime petere coepit. Quum ille se et religione Jovis Capitolini et hominum existimatione impediri diceret, quod multae nationes testes essent illius operis ac muneris, iste homini minari acerrime coepit. Ubi videt eum nihilo magis minis quam precibus permoveri, repente hominem de provincia jubet ante noctem decedere: ait se comperisse ex ejus regno piratas ad Siciliam esse venturos. Rex maximo conventu Syracusis, in foro, ne quis forte me in crimine obscuro versari atque affingere aliquid suspicione hominum arbitretur, in foro, inquam, Syracusis, flens atque deos hominesque contestans clamare coepit, candelabrum factum e gemmis quod in Capitolium missurus esset, quod in templo clarissimo populo Romano monumentum suae societatis amicitiaeque esse voluisset, id sibi C. Verrem abstulisse: de ceteris operibus ex auro et gemmis quae sua penes illum essent se non laborare: hoc sibi eripi miserum esse et indignum. Id etsi antea ad—templi ornatum] The common reading is 'ornamentum.' 'Secundum deteriores, meliores ornatum' (Zumpt). Though 'ornamentum' by its form indicates a thing and not a purpose, there seems no reason why it may not signify for the purpose of ornament. Zumpt himself refers to an instance in c. 8, "ornamenti causa." Again, in c. 33 we have "omniaque quae ornameto urbi esse possent," where 'ornamento' is not a thing, a 'res,' but means 'all things suitable to the decoration of the city.' And in c. 54, "quae ornameto urbi esse possent." Also in Lib. 1. c. 22. But it seems that 'ornamentum,' when so used, is followed by a dative. 'Ornatus' seems to be followed by a genitive, as in Lib. 4. c. 54: "in ornatu urbis habuit victoriae rationem." Perhaps, then, 'ad templi ornamentum' is hardly Latin, and Zumpt has done right in preferring 'ornatum.'

The skill of the workmanship, says Cicero, vied with the richness and variety of the materials, which Ovid (Met. ii. 5) expresses in another way:

"Materiem superabat opus."

29. Quod sciret, quod] 'Quod sciret, quodque,' &c.: Zumpt.

suspicione hominum] Lambinus altered 'suspicione' into 'suspicioni,' which is the reading of the Erfurt MS. The ablative is easily explained: 'that no one may suppose that I am adding any invention founded on men's suspicions.' Zumpt quotes Tuscul. iii. 23: "qui nihil opinione affingat assumatque ad aegritudinem."

jam mente et cogitatione sua fratrisque sui consecratum esset, tamen tum se in illo conventu civium Romanorum dare, donare, dicare, consecrare Jovi Optimo Maximo, testemque ipsum Jovem suae voluntatis ac religionis adhibere.

XXX. Quae vox, quae latera, quae vires hujus unius criminis querimoniam possunt sustinere? Rex Antiochus qui Romae ante oculos omnium nostrum biennium fere comitatu regio atque ornatu fuisset, is quum amicus et socius populi Romani esset, amicissimo patre, avo, majoribus, antiquissimis et clarissimis regibus, opulentissimo et maximo regno, praeceps provincia populi Romani exturbatus est. Quemadmodum hoc accepturas nationes exterarum, quemadmodum hujus tui facti famam in regna aliorum atque in ultimas terras perventuram putasti, quum audirent a praetore populi Romani in provincia violatum regem, spoliatum hospitem, ejectum socium populi Romani atque amicum? Nomen vestrum populi Romani odio atque acerbitati scitote nationibus exteris, judices, futurum, si istius haec tanta injuria impunita discesserit. Sic omnes arbitrabuntur, praesertim quum haec fama de nostrorum hominum avaritia et cupiditate percrebuerit, non istius solius hoc esse facinus sed eorum etiam qui approbarint. Multi reges, multae liberae civitates, multi privati opulenti ac potentes habent profecto in animo Capitolium sic ornare ut templi dignitas imperiique nostri nomen desiderat; qui si intellexerint, interverso hoc regali dono, graviter vos tulisse, grata fore vobis populoque Romano sua studia ac dona arbitrabuntur. Sin hoc vos in rege tam nobili, in re tam eximia, in injuria tam acerba, neglexisse audierint, non erunt tam amentes ut operam, curam, pecuniam impendant in eas res quas vobis gratas fore non arbitrentur.

30. amicus et socius] There are many instances of kings on whom the senate condescended to confer the title of 'amicus et socius.' Cicero afterwards speaks of 'nationes exterae,' a term which clearly meant countries, which were neither Roman provinces nor countries in friendship and alliance with Rome. The term 'socius' was evidently used in an enlarged sense, compared with its early application to the Italian Socii (Divin. c. 3); for it is applied both to provincials, and to people not provincials, who were in friendship and alliance with Rome. See c. 11, note.

quum audirent] The common reading is 'audierint,' which is inconsistent with 'putasti.' Both 'putasti' and 'audirent' are the readings of the 'Erf. Guelf. Havn.

interverso] The word is not easy to render, but the meaning is plain, as appears from the following passage of Scaevola (Dig. 43. 20. 8, referred to by Forcellini): "cui per fundum iter aquae debetur, quacunque vult in eo rivum faciat licet, dum ne aquaeductum intervertat;" but he must not divert the water from the course that is once fixed. There is also (Dig. 16. 3. 22.) "si duo heredes rem apud defunctum depositam dolo interverterint," "if two 'heredes' have fraudulently appropriated a thing that has been deposited with the deceased."

in re tam eximia, in injuria] Klotz omits 'in' twice.

XXXI. Hoc loco, Q. Catule, te appello. Loquor enim de tuo clarissimo pulcherrimoque monumento: non iudicis solum severitatem in hoc crimine sed prope inimici atque accusatoris vim suscipere debes. Tuus est enim honos in illo templo senatus populi Romani beneficio: tui nominis aeterna memoria simul cum templo illo consecratur: tibi haec cura suscipienda, tibi haec opera sumenda est, ut Capitolium, quemadmodum magnificentius est restitutum, sic copiosius ornatum sit quam fuit; ut illa flamma divinitus extitisse videatur, non quae deleret Jovis Optimi Maximi templum, sed quae praeclarius magnificentiusque deposceret. Audisti Q. Minucium dicere domi suae deversatum esse Antiochum regem Syracusis: se illud scire ad istum esse delatum: se scire non redditum: audisti et audies omni e conventu Syracusano qui ita dicant, sese audientibus illud Jovi Optimo Maximo dicatum esse ab rege Antiocho et consecratum. Si iudex non esses et haec ad te delata res esset, te potissimum hoc persequi, te petere, te agere oporteret. Quare non dubito quo animo iudex hujus criminis esse debeas, qui apud alium iudicem multo acrior quam ego sum actor accusatorque esse deberes.

XXXII. Vobis autem, iudices, quid hoc indignius aut quid minus ferendum videri potest? Verresne habebit domi suae candelabrum Jovis e gemmis auroque perfectum? Cujus fulgore collucere atque illustrari Jovis Optimi Maximi templum oportebat, id apud istum in ejusmodi conviviiis constitueretur quae domesticis stupris flagitiisque flagrabunt? In istius lenonis turpissimi domo simul cum ceteris Chelidonis hereditariis ornamentis Capitolii ornamenta ponentur? Quid huic sacri unquam fore aut quid religiosi fuisse putatis qui nunc tanto scelere se obstrictum esse non sentiat? qui in iudicium veniat, ubi ne precari quidem Jovem Optimum Maximum atque ab eo auxilium petere more omnium possit? a quo etiam dii immortales sua repetunt in eo iudicio quod hominibus ad suas res repetendas est constitutum. Miramur Athenis Minervam, Deli Apollinem, Junonem Sami, Pergae Dianam, multos praeterea ab isto deos tota Asia Graeciaque violatos, qui a Capitolio manus abstinere non potuerit? Quod privati homines de suis pecuniis ornant ornaturique sunt, id C. Verres ab regibus ornari non passus est. Itaque hoc nefario scelere concepto, nihil postea tota in Sicilia neque sacri neque religiosi duxit esse: ita sese in ea provincia per triennium gessit ut ab isto non solum hominibus verum etiam diis immortalibus bellum indictum putaretur.

XXXIII. Segesta est oppidum pervetus in Sicilia, iudices, quod ab Aenea fugiente a Troja atque in haec loca veniente conditum esse demonstrant. Itaque Segestani non solum perpetua societate atque amicitia verum etiam cognatione se cum populo Romano conjunctos esse arbitrantur. Hoc quondam oppidum, quum illa civitas cum Poenis suo nomine ac sua sponte bellaret, a Karthaginiensibus vi captum atque deletum est: omniaque quae ornamento urbi esse possent Karthaginem sunt ex illo loco deportata. Fuit apud Segestanos ex aere Dianae simulacrum, quum summa atque antiquissima praeditum religione, tum singulari opere artificioque perfectum.

33. Segesta] One of the 'civitates liberae' (Lib. 3. c. 6). Cicero here adopts the then popular notion of Aeneas having come from Troy to Italy, and he makes him found Segesta on his way. There was certainly a tradition that the place was founded by Asiatic colonists. Thucydides (vi. 2) says, that some of the Trojans having fled from the Achaei, upon the capture of Troy, sailed to Sicily, and settled close to the Sicani, the old inhabitants of the island, and the two peoples got the common name of Elymi, and their cities were Eryx and Egesta. The Roman form of the name is always Segesta, as it appears. It was the Roman tradition that Acestes, who gave his name to the city, and was born in Sicily of a Trojan mother, was assisted by Aeneas in the founding of the city. There was a temple of Aeneas at Segesta (Dion. Halic. i. 53). The Romans were politic enough to encourage, or to invent the supposed relationship during their contest with the Carthaginians in Sicily; and the Duilian column (B.C. 264) contains the official recognition of this relationship in the words, 'Ecestanos cocratos populi Romani' (P. Ciacconii in Column. Rostrat. Inscriptio-nem, Graevii Thes. Rom. Antiq. iv. 1810; and in Duker's Florus). Nicias, as he is represented speaking by Thucydides, calls the Egestaei 'barbari,' not Hellenes. It was a part of the old story in Thucydides (vi. 2), that certain Phocaeis of those who had been at the siege of Troy, came to dwell near the Egestaei, being driven by stress of weather to Libya first, and thence to Sicily. It was probably a motly population, in which the Greek part at last prevailed.

The remains of Segesta are near Castellamare, in the north-west angle of Sicily. There is a Doric temple, and vestiges of an ancient theatre. The remains "stand in a bleak, deserted sterile situation, to the eastward of the boundary of the ancient city; and the only resting-place for the traveller is the shade of a neighbouring tree, where there is a good spring of fresh water; the scenery and stillness, however, make it appear wild, grand, and impressive." "The temple is somewhat peculiar, probably was never finished, for the 'cella' is wanting; but it is nearly entire" (Smyth's Sicily, 671). Swinburne (Travels in the Two Sicilies, ii. 232) gives the name of Barbara to the site of Egesta. Castellamare was the port of Egesta. He describes the position of the city as very good, "upon a ridge of hills gently sloping towards the northern aspect, sheltered on the southern and eastern quarters by high rocky eminences, at the foot of which two roaring brooks winded their course, and embraced the city." Swinburne describes plainly and clearly what he sees. These two brooks are the Simois and Scamandrus of Strabo (p. 608). Diodorus also (xx. 71) mentions the Scamandrus. The united stream flows to the sea at Castellamare. The names Simois and Scamandrus remind us of the rivers of the Troad, whence, according to the tradition, the settlers of Segesta came.

captum atque deletum] The destruction of Segesta by the Carthaginians is not mentioned elsewhere, so far as I know; and, if there is no evidence except this passage, Cicero may have mis-stated the fact. Agathocles, B.C. 307 or 306, destroyed a large part of the inhabitants with circumstances of the greatest cruelty, in order to get their money. He sold the women and children, and gave the city a new name, Dicaeopolis, and a fresh population (Diod. xx. 71). After his death the remnant of the old inhabitants returned, and the city resumed its former name.

Hoc translatum Karthaginem locum tantum hominesque mutarat, religionem quidem pristinam servabat: nam propter eximiam pulchritudinem etiam hostibus digna quam sanctissime colerent videbatur. Aliquot saeculis post P. Scipio bello Punico tertio Karthaginem cepit: qua in victoria—videte hominis virtutem et diligentiam, ut et domesticis praeclarissimae virtutis exemplis gaudeatis, et eo majore odio dignam istius incredibilem audaciam judicetis—convocatis Siculis omnibus, quod diutissime saepissimeque Siciliam vexatam a Karthaginensibus esse cognorat, jubet omnia conquiri: pollicetur sibi magnae curae fore ut omnia civitatibus quae cujusque fuissent restituerentur. Tum illa quae quondam erant Himera sublata, de quibus ante dixi, Thermitanis sunt reddita: tum alia Gelensibus, alia Agrigentinis; in quibus etiam ille nobilis taurus quem crudelissimus omnium tyrannorum Phalaris habuisse dicitur, quo vivos supplicii causa demittere homines et subjicere flammam solebat. Quem taurum quum Scipio redderet Agrigentinis, dixisse ante dixi,] Lib. 2. c. 36.

Gelensibus,] The people of Gela (Γέλα), one of the old Greek settlements in Sicily, founded by Rhodians from Lindus, and Cretans. The name Gela is from the name of the river near the city; and we observe that several Sicilian towns have the name of the river on which they were situated. This once flourishing city, the parent city of Agrigentum, was a ruin before the age of Cicero; and yet we must suppose that there were still a few inhabitants there, or the statues would not have been restored to Gela. Dionysius destroyed the old aristocratical constitution by massacring the chief inhabitants, and the place was afterwards plundered by the Carthaginians (Diod. xiii. 108). It was again plundered by Agathocles; and finally, it is said, that the remnant of the inhabitants were transferred by Phintias, tyrant of Agrigentum, to his new town of Phintias (Diodorus, Lib. 22. c. 2). But the town of Gela could not have been entirely destroyed, nor all the inhabitants removed, if Cicero's story is true about the restoration of the statues. Besides this, he mentions the Gelenses (Lib. 3. c. 43) as a still existing community. The site of the place, it is generally agreed, is Terra Nuova, where there is, or was not long ago, the fragment of a Doric column, the last remnant of a great city. Swinburne in his Travels gives a sketch of it.

Agrigentinis,] This city, called by the Greeks Acragas, once the largest city in Sicily, requires a history. From its Roman name Agrigentum, is formed the modern corruption Girgenti. It never recovered from the damage which it sustained from the Carthaginians (B.C. 405: Diod. xiii. 90). It finally came under the dominion of Rome about B.C. 207, and the Romans gave it a kind of new constitution (Lib. 2. c. 50; Lib. 4. c. 43). The ruins of the colossal temple of Jupiter, the temple of Concord, as it is now commonly called, which is nearly complete except part of the entablature and the roof, and other remains, make this the most interesting historical town in Sicily. The greater part of the old city appears to have been in the valley of the Acragas. The modern stands on the height once occupied by the ancient citadel.

The period of Phalaris is not quite certain. If his reign commenced B.C. 570, as Eusebius in one passage states, he was a contemporary of Croesus, king of Lydia. This story of a brazen bull, made by Perillus, on whom the tyrant made the first experiment with it, by roasting him in the inside, is told by several writers of antiquity (Diodorus, xiii. 90; Polybius, xii. 25, ed. Bekker). Here Cicero mentions a bull as recovered from the Carthaginians. There seems no reason to doubt the fact of such a work of art existing, but whether it was the bull of Phalaris, or another that was called the bull of Phalaris, may be doubted. Sillig (Catalogus) refers to Göller, De Situ et Origine Syracusarum, and to Böttiger, Kunstmythologie, i. 380, for further information about this bull.

dicatur, aequum esse illos cogitare utrum esset Agrigentinis utilius, suisne servire anne populo Romano obtemperare, quum idem monumentum et domesticae crudelitatis et nostrae mansuetudinis haberent.

XXXIV. Illo tempore Segestanis maxima cum cura haec ipsa Diana de qua dicimus redditur: reportatur Segestam: in suis antiquis sedibus summa cum gratulatione civium et laetitia reponitur. Haec erat posita Segestae sane excelsa in basi, in qua grandibus literis P. Africani nomen erat incisum, eumque Karthagine capta restituisse perscriptum. Colebatur a civibus: ab omnibus advenis visebatur: quum quaestor essem, nihil mihi ab illis est demonstratum prius. Erat admodum amplum et excelsum signum cum stola; verumtamen inerat in illa magnitudine aetas atque habitus virginalis. Sagittae pendebant ab humero; sinistra manu retinebat arcum; dextra ardentem facem praeferibat. Hanc quum iste sacrorum omnium et religionum hostis praedoque vidisset, quasi illa ipsa face percussus esset, ita flagrare cupiditate atque amentia coepit. Imperat magistratibus ut eam demoliantur et sibi dent: nihil sibi gratius ostendit futurum. Illi vero dicere sibi id nefas esse; seque quum summa religione tum summo metu legum et iudiciorum teneri. Iste tum petere ab eis, tum minari, tum spem, tum metum ostendere. Opponebant illi nomen interdum P. Africani: populi Romani illud esse dicebant: nihil se in eo potestatis habere quod imperator clarissimus, urbe hostium capta, monumentum victoriae populi Romani esse voluisset. Quum iste nihilo remissius atque etiam multo vehementius instaret quotidie, res agitur in senatu. Vehementer ab omnibus reclamatur. Itaque illo tempore ac primo istius adventu pernegatur. Postea quidquid utrum . . . suisne . . . anne] ‘Anne pro vulg. an e vet. cod. Lambini et reliquis melioribus scripsimus: Guelf. cum vulgari-bus facit’ (Zumpt). He compares Orat. c. 6: “quaerendum utrum una species et longitudo sit earum anne plures.”

34. amplum et excelsum] This description of the statue is another instance of Cicero’s own language belying his assertions. He had a taste for art, as we have already seen (c. 3, note); and he takes some pains to show that he was not one of those whom Verres called ‘idiotae.’

He describes this Diana (Ἀρτέμις) as a colossal figure, with the characteristics of a young unmarried female, with long drapery, and not with the short frock, as she was sometimes represented. The quiver and the arrows were suspended from her shoulder; and in her left hand she held a bow, and in the right hand a blazing torch. So Sophocles, Oed. Tyr. 201, represents her:

τὰς τε πυρφόρους
Ἀρτέμιδος αἶγλας ξὺν αἷς Λύκι’ ὄρεα διάσσει.

Sometimes she was represented with a torch in each hand, and the bow and quiver hung over her shoulders. The representations of the goddess were numerous, and varied according to the different characters in which she was supposed to act. See Müller, Handbuch der Archäologie der Kunst.

erat oneris in nautis remigibusque exigendis, in frumento imperando, Segestanis praeter ceteros imponebat aliquanto amplius quam ferre possent. Praeterea magistratus eorum evocabat: optimum quemque et nobilissimum ad se arcessebat: circum omnia provinciae fora rapiebat: singillatim unicuique calamitati fore se denuntiabat: universis se funditus eversurum esse illam civitatem minabatur. Itaque aliquando multis malis magnoque metu victi Segestani praetoris imperio parendum esse decreverunt. Magno cum luctu et gemitu totius civitatis, multis cum lacrimis et lamentationibus virorum mulierumque omnium, simulacrum Dianae tollendum locatur.

XXXV. Videte quanta religio fuerit apud Segestanos: repperitum esse, iudices, scitote neminem, neque liberum, neque servum, neque civem, neque peregrinum, qui illud signum auderet attingere. Barbaros quosdam Lilybaeo scitote adductos esse operarios. Hi denique illud ignari totius negotii ac religionis mercede accepta sustulerunt, quod quum ex oppido exportabatur, quem conventum mulierum factum esse arbitramini, quem fletum majorum natu, quorum nonnulli etiam illum diem memoria tenebant, quum illa eadem Diana Segestam Karthagine revecta victoriam populi Romani reditu suo nuntiasset. Quam dissimilis hic dies illi tempori videbatur! Tum imperator populi Romani, vir clarissimus, deos patrios reportabat Segestanis ex urbe hostium recuperatos: nunc nautis remigibusque] From this and other passages we collect that the provincials were liable to requisitions of men for the navy, as well as bound to supply ships in some cases (Lib. 1. c. 34). Segesta, though a 'libera civitas,' was liable to the 'frumentum imperatum,' as we have seen before; but Verres laid the burden unequally on them.

provinciae fora] The 'fora' were the places where the courts or 'conventus' were held; but there may have been more 'fora' than those in the chief cities of the island. He hurried them, says Manutius, about the province, to their great inconvenience, wherever he was going to hold his courts ('conventus agere,' Lib. 5. c. 11); that is, if they had any court business, he made them follow him, instead of hearing their cases at more convenient places.

tollendum locatur.] The Segestani made a contract with somebody for the removal of the statue, or rather gave notice that there was a job to be done, that a 'redemptor' or 'conductor' was wanted to remove the statue. Such contracts, and all other matters relating to public business, were entered in the books (publicae literae) of the town (c. 35). As to like entries, see Lib. 1. c. 34, and Lib. 4. c. 42: "publicae literae sunt," &c.

35. Videte quanta, &c.] The old reading, 'Videte quanta religione fuerit: apud Segestanos,' &c., is faulty several ways. The better MSS. have 'religio,' and thus the sense is clear.

Barbaros quosdam] These barbarians, from Lilybaeum, may have been Sicani, the old inhabitants of the island (Thucyd. vi. 2), for it appears that they were not all expelled by the invasion of the Siculi. Some of the very old inhabitants of Segesta might remember the restoration of their favourite statue after the destruction of Carthage, B.C. 146.

quod quum . . exportabatur,] The common reading is 'quod quum . . exportaretur,' of which Zumpt says, "quod non condemno—verum indicativus . . nihilo deterior, immo describendae rei aptior est." A little further on there is 'quum Diana exportaretur.'

ex urbe sociorum praetor ejusdem populi turpissimus atque impurissimus eosdem illos deos nefario scelere auferebat. Quid hoc tota Sicilia est clarius quam omnes Segestae matronas et virgines convenisse quum Diana exportaretur ex oppido, unxisse unguentis, compllesse coronis et floribus, ture odoribus incensis usque ad agri fines prosecutas esse? Hanc tu tantam religionem si tum in imperio propter cupiditatem atque audaciam non pertimescebas, ne nunc quidem in tanto tuo tuorumque liberorum periculo perhorrescis? Quem tibi aut hominem invitis diis immortalibus, aut vero deum tantis eorum religionibus violatis auxilio futurum putas? Tibi illa Diana in pace atque in otio religionem nullam attulit? quae quum duas urbes in quibus locata fuerat captas incensasque vidisset, bis ex duorum bellorum flamma ferroque servata est; quae Karthaginensium victoria, loco mutato, religionem tamen non amisit, P. Africani virtute religionem simul cum loco recuperavit. Quo quidem scelere suscepto, quum inanis esset basis et in ea P. Africani nomen incisum, res indigna atque intoleranda videbatur omnibus, non solum religiones esse violatas verum etiam P. Africani, viri fortissimi, rerum gestarum gloriam, memoriam virtutis, monumenta victoriae, C. Verrem sustulisse. Quod quum isti renuntiaretur de basi ac literis, existimavit homines in oblivionem totius negotii esse venturos, si etiam basim tamquam indicem sui sceleris sustulisset. Itaque tollendam istius imperio locaverunt; quae vobis locatio ex publicis literis Segestanorum priore actione recitata est.

XXXVI. Te nunc, P. Scipio, te, inquam, lectissimum ornatissimumque adolescentem appello: abs te officium tuum debitum generi et nomini requiro et flagito. Cur pro isto qui laudem honoremque tuum familiaeque tuae depeculatus est pugnas? cur eum defensum esse vis? cur ego tuas partes suscipio? cur tuum munus sustineo? Cur M. Tullius P. Africani monumenta requirit, P. Scipio eum qui illa sustulit defendit? Quum mos a majoribus tra-

Quid hoc . . . clarius quam] Zumpt, following Scheller, refers to three other examples of 'hoc' and 'quam'; Ad Att. iv. 8; De Orat. i. 37; and De Divin. i. 39.

36. P. Scipio,] P. Cornelius Scipio Nasica, a son of a father of the same name, who was praetor B.C. 94. He was adopted by Q. Metellus Pius, probably after the date of this oration. He was consul B.C. 52, and the father of Cornelia, the last wife of Cn. Pompeius Magnus. Scipio was one of the advocates of Verres.

tuum familiaeque tuae] 'Sic olim notatur a Fulvio Ursino et a Lambino inventum esse in codicibus suis, nosque in Guelferbytanis invenimus. Havn. coll. silet' (Zumpt). The common reading, which Klotz has, is 'qui laudem honoremque familiae vestrae depeculatus est'; but Zumpt objects to 'vestrae,' since Cicero is addressing Scipio only. Yet there is in c. 37, "quamobrem si suscipis . . . de vestris monumentis."

ditus sit, ut monumenta majorum ita suorum quisque defendat ut ne ornari quidem nomine alieno sinat, tu isti aderis qui non obstruxit aliqua ex parte monumenta P. Scipionis, sed funditus delevit ac sustulit? Quisnam igitur, per deos immortales, tuebitur P. Scipionis memoriam mortui? quis monumenta atque indicia virtutis, si tu ea relinques aut deseres? nec solum spoliata illa pati, sed etiam eorum spoliatorem vexatoremque defendes? Adsunt Segestani, clientes tui, socii populi Romani atque amici: certiores te faciunt, P. Africanum, Karthagine deleta, simulacrum Dianae maioribus suis restituisse; idque apud Segestanos ejus imperatoris nomine positum ac dedicatum fuisse; hoc Verrem demoliendum et asportandum nomenque omnino P. Scipionis delendum tollendumque curasse: orant te atque obsecrant ut sibi religionem, generi tuo laudem gloriamque restituas, ut quod per P. Africanum ex urbe hostium recuperarint id per te ex praedonis domo conservare possint.

XXXVII. Quid aut tu his respondere honeste potes, aut illi facere nisi ut te ac fidem tuam implorent? Adsunt et implorant. Potes domesticae laudis amplitudinem, Scipio, tueri; potes: omnia sunt in te quae aut fortuna hominibus aut natura largitur. Non praecерpo fructum officii tui: non alienam mihi laudem appeto: non est pudoris mei, P. Scipione, florentissimo adolescente, vivo et incolumi, me propugnatorem P. Scipionis defensoremque profiteri. Quamobrem si suscipis domesticae laudis patrocinium, me non solum silere de vestris monumentis oportebit, sed etiam laetari P. Africani ejusmodi fortunam esse mortui, ut ejus honos ab eis qui ex eadem familia sunt defendatur, neque ullum adventitium auxilium requiratur. Sin istius amicitia te impedit, si hoc quod ego abs te postulo minus ad officium tuum pertinere arbitrare, tu isti aderis] 'Will you give your assistance to this defendant,' &c. See the note on 'adesse,' p. 211.

obstruxit] The old reading is 'obtrusit,' which Manutius attempts to explain, but not satisfactorily. The best MSS. have 'obstruxit' (Zumpt). This word has the sense of stopping up a passage, as a road or a river, by some structure or building, and is followed by the accusative. Zumpt observes that in this passage we must take it to mean the building of something which would prevent a thing from being seen, or would obstruct the approach to it. But in this sense he is inclined to think that the verb would require a dative, as in the expression 'luminibus obstruere,' which means to build up something that interferes with your neighbour's lights, or, as it is otherwise expressed, 'luminibus officere' (Dig. 8. 2. 17, 23). But there seems to be a difference between 'luminibus obstruere' and 'monumentum obstruere,' which may very well mean to build it up, surround it with other buildings. Klotz reads 'monumento.' Zumpt has 'monumentum.'

conservare possint.] 'Conservare possent' in the English reprint, probably an error of the press; a blunder at any rate.

37. Sin . . impedit,] 'Sin . . impediet:' Zumpt.—'vicarius,' see p. 331.

succedam ego vicarius tuo muneri, suscipiam partes quas alienas esse arbitrabar. Deinde ista praeclara nobilitas desinat queri populum Romanum hominibus novis industriis libenter honores mandare semperque mandasse. Non est querendum in hac civitate quae propter virtutem omnibus nationibus imperat virtutem plurimum posse. Sit apud alios imago P. Africani; ornentur alii mortui virtute ac nomine: talis ille vir fuit, ita de populo Romano meritus est, ut non uni familiae sed universae civitati commendatus esse debeat. Est aliqua mea pars virilis, quod ejus civitatis sum quam ille claram, amplam, illustremque, reddidit; praecipue quod in his rebus pro mea parte versor quarum ille princeps fuit, aequitate, industria, temperantia, defensione miserorum, odio improborum: quae cognatio studiorum et artium propemodum non minus est conjuncta quam ista qua vos delectamini generis et nominis.

XXXVIII. Repeto abs te, Verres, monumentum P. Africani: causam Siculorum quam suscepi relinquo; judicium de pecuniis repetundis ne sit hoc tempore; Segestanorum injuriae negligantur: basis P. Scipionis restituatur; nomen invicti imperatoris incidatur, signum pulcherrimum Karthagine captum reponatur. Haec abs te non Siculorum defensor, non tuus accusator, non Segestani postulant; sed is qui laudem gloriamque P. Africani tuendam conser-Deinde ista praeclara] Zumpt gives his reasons for this reading instead of the old reading, 'Nae ista,' &c., which he had in his first edition. Most of the MSS. have 'Ne ista,' which has caused some of the older commentators a difficulty, as they did not perceive that 'ne' is an adverb of affirmation, which we now distinguish from the dehortatory 'ne,' by writing it with a diphthong. It is doubtful if we should write 'nae.' Klotz reads 'Aliquando ista praeclara,' which in his Preface he maintains to be the true reading, as deduced from the indications of the MSS. Lag. 29 has 'deinde.' It is difficult to say what some of the MSS. readings mean. See Zumpt's note.

hominibus novis] Cicero clearly means himself; and he was a 'homo novus.' See p. 269.

in hac civitate quae] The common reading is 'in ea,' &c. It is clear to those who have attended to the use of the pronouns, that 'in hac civitate quae . . . imperat,' the demonstrative 'hac' is required. If Cicero meant to say 'in a city that rules,' meaning any city, he would say, or could say, 'in ea civitate quae . . . imperet.'

imago] 'Let others have the bust or effigies of P. Scipio.' The word 'imago' (εἰκών) is explained by Polybius, vi. 53. 'Imagines' were masks of wax. See the note Lib. 5. c. 14, where the word is fully explained; and the 'jus imaginum.'

Est aliqua mea] The glory and name of P. Scipio belonged to the Roman people; but Cicero says, 'I have some share in it, a full share or portion, because I belong to a state which he made glorious, extensive, and illustrious; particularly because I take my full share in those things in which he was a model, in equity, painstaking, self-restraint, and the defence of the unfortunate.'

Zumpt has preferred the reading 'rebus' to the ordinary reading 'artibus;' and there is good authority for 'rebus.' One reason why Zumpt prefers 'rebus,' is on account of 'artium,' which comes shortly after.

conjuncta] 'i. e. arta' (Zumpt), who refers to a like use of 'conjunctus,' in the Ep. ad Div. iii. 10. He refers to the speech of Iphicrates to the Athenians, about the descendants of Harmodius (Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 23. ed. Bekker). The reader, however, will not find much for the trouble of seeking the passage.

vandamque suscepit. Non vereor ne hoc officium meum P. Servilio iudici non probem, qui quum res maximas gesserit, monumentaque suarum rerum gestarum quum maxime constituat atque in iis elaboret, profecto volet haec non solum suis posteris verum etiam omnibus viris fortibus et bonis civibus defendenda non spolianda improbis tradere. Non vereor ne tibi, Q. Catule, displiceat, cujus amplissimum in orbe terrarum clarissimumque monumentum est, quam plurimos esse custodes monumentorum et putare omnes bonos alienae gloriae defensionem ad officium suum pertinere. Equidem ceteris istius furtis atque flagitiis ita moveor ut ea reprehendenda tantum putem: hic vero tanto dolore afficior ut nihil mihi indignius, nihil minus ferendum esse videatur. Verres Africani monumentis domum suam, plenam stupri, plenam flagitii, plenam dedecoris, ornabit? Verres temperatissimi sanctissimique viri monumentum, 38. suarum . . quum maxime] Zumpt says that it ought to be 'rerum suarum,' &c., and Ernesti adopted this order, though there is no MS. authority for it. The pronouns, 'meus,' 'tuus,' may either stand before their noun or after; and the proper place here seems to be where the pronoun stands. Zumpt quotes 'tuae res gestae,' from the oratio Pro Deiotaro, c. 4. I don't suppose that this being in the genitive case, preceded by '*monumenta*que,' can make any difference.

'Quum maxime,' or 'cummaxime,' as Zumpt has it, is a genuine form; nor is it necessary to erase 'quum,' or to write with the two Guelf. MSS., 'quam maxime.' 'Quummaxime,' says Zumpt, when used adverbially, marks either present time, or time indefinitely; and when it particularly signifies present time, it requires the addition of 'nunc,' as 'nunc quum maxime:' as to time past, we say 'tum maxime.' He refers to Drakenborch, Liv. xxvii. 4, and particularly to the learned note of Duker on Florus, ii. 16. 3 (ed. 1744), which is worth reading. Some of the editors have been disposed to get rid of 'tum maxime,' and change it into 'quum maxime;' but the distinction between them seems pretty clear.

In Cicero (Ad Div. ix. 23) there is "expecta igitur hospitem quum minime edacem tum inimicum coenis sumptuosis." But here the form of the sentence is different, for 'quum' is followed by 'tum;' and this passage cannot be compared with that in the text. In Terence, Phormio, ii. 3. 11, there is—where 'tum' marks the time already expressed by 'quum.' I see no reason why the 'quum' in this passage of Cicero, should not be taken in the same sense as the 'quum' in 'quum res maximas gesserit,' and not 'adverbialiter' with 'maxime.' The use of 'quum,' and 'quum' and 'tum,' still waits for fuller explanation.

elaboret,] 'Ambo Guelf. Lag. 29, laboraret' (Zumpt). The distinction between the two words is generally observed. Zumpt says that 'laborare ob aliquam rem' is 'laborem habere,' 'to be troubled, perplexed,' and so forth. But there are instances of 'laborare' followed by 'ut,' where it is used like 'elaborare;' and Zumpt has in his edition one instance, at least (Lib. 3. c. 56): "atque in hoc laborandum ut omnes intelligant:" but the true reading there is probably 'elaborandum.' In Lib. 3. c. 57: "sedasti etiam lites illorum, et sponsio illa ne fieret laborasti.'

Equidem] The reading of the old editions, and of most of the MSS., appears to be 'et quidem.' There is authority for 'equidem,' and the sense requires it, for Cicero is speaking of himself: 'Ego quidem.' Drakenborch (Liv. vi. 54) shows how frequently the two forms are confounded, even in good MSS.

temperatissimi] 'In margine Lambini legitur al. temperantissimi' (Zumpt). Klotz has 'temperantissimi.' In the ora-Dianae simulacrum virginis in ea domo collocabit in qua semper meretricum lenonumque flagitia versantur?

XXXIX. At hoc solum Africani monumentum violasti. Quid, a Tyndaritanis non ejusdem Scipionis beneficio positum simulacrum Mercurii, pulcherrime factum, sustulisti? At quemadmodum, dii immortales, quam audacter! quam libidinose! quam impudenter! Audistis nuper dicere legatos Tyndaritanos, homines honestissimos ac principes civitatis, Mercurium qui sacris anniversariis apud eos ac summa religione coleretur; quem P. Africanus, Karthagine capta, Tyndaritanis non solum suae victoriae sed etiam illorum fidei societatisque monumentum atque indicium dedisset, hujus vi, scelere, imperioque esse sublatum. Qui ut primum in illud oppidum venit, statim, tamquam ita fieri non solum oporteret sed etiam necesse esset, tamquam hoc senatus mandasset, populus Romanus jussisset, ita continuo signum ut demolirentur et Messanam deportarent imperavit. Quod quum illis qui aderant indignum, qui audiebant incredibile videretur, non est ab isto primo illo adventu perseveratum. Discedens mandat proagoro Sopatro, cujus verba audistis, ut demoliatur: quum recusaret, vehementer minatur: et statim ex illo oppido proficiscitur. Refert rem ille ad senatum: vehementer undique reclamatur. Ne multa: iterum iste ad illos aliquanto post venit, quaerit continuo de signo. Respondetur ei tion Pro Fonteio, c. 13, there is 'homo sanctissimus ac temperantissimus' (ed. Orelli). It seems likely that the Romans used both forms.

39. Tyndaritanis] The place is Tyndaris (Τυνδαρίς), or Tyndarium, on the north coast of Sicily, in the modern gulf of Patti. It was founded by some Greeks, under the elder Dionysius, close to the promontory of the same name (Diod. xiv. 59), and it became a place of some importance. "A fine plain leads from the Marina of Patti, to a pass among the hills called the 'Scala di Tindari,' on the summit of which stood the city of Tyndaris. Numerous ruins attest the once flourishing state of this town, in a situation combining every advantage of health, strength, and beauty" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 101). It seems probable that excavations would lead to valuable discoveries. Smyth adds, that "two colossal statues, and some columns, were cut up to decorate the chapel of the Madonna and Child."

qui . . . apud eos] This is a case where a man, who should now attempt to write Latin, might find a difficulty; and it seems that the Romans found it sometimes, for there is no absolute rule as to the use of the reflective 'se,' in a sentence where two persons, or sets of persons, are mentioned. If Cicero had here used 'se' for 'eos,' his meaning would have been equally clear; but 'se' would not harmonize with the rest of the sentence, "non suae . . . sed illorum;" and 'eos' is necessary. Comp. Lib. 2. c. 17, note, 'ut si ei videatur.'

Refert rem ille] It is the proper word in this case. He laid the matter before the Senate for deliberation. The consuls at Rome are said, in like cases, 'referre ad senatum.' Shortly after, 'rem defert,' where 'rem' is added by Zumpt from the better MSS. One of the Guelf. MSS. has 'refert rem;' but 'defert' is the right word there. At least, we know that it can be used in such a case, for the sense is, 'that he simply informed the Senate.' So in c. 45: 'rem ad magistratus deferunt.'

senatum non permittere; poenam capitis constitutam si injussu senatus quisquam attigisset: simul religio commemoratur. Tum iste: Quam mihi religionem narras? quam poenam? quem senatum? vivum te non relinquam: mori virgis nisi mihi signum traditur. Sopater iterum flens ad senatum rem defert, istius cupiditatem minasque demonstrat. Senatus Sopatro responsum nullum dat, sed commotus perturbatusque discedit. Ille praetoris arcessitus nuntio rem demonstrat; negat ullo modo fieri posse.

XL. Atque haec, nihil enim praetermittendum de istius impudentia videtur, agebantur in conventu, palam, de sella ac de loco superiore. Erat hiems summa, tempestas, ut ipsum Sopatrum dicere audistis, perfrigida, imber maximus, quum iste imperat lictoribus ut Sopatrum de porticu, in qua ipse sedebat, praecipitem in forum dejiciant nudumque constituent. Vix erat hoc plane imperatum quum illum spoliatum stipatumque lictoribus videres. Omnes id fore putabant ut miser atque innocens virgis caederetur: fefellit haec homines opinio. Virgis iste caederet sine causa socium populi Romani atque amicum? Non usque eo est improbus: non omnia sunt in uno vitia: nunquam fuit crudelis. Leniter hominem clementerque accepit. Equestres sunt medio in foro Marcellorum statuae, sicuti fere ceteris in oppidis Siciliae; ex quibus iste C. Marcelli statuam delegit, cujus officia in illam civitatem totamque provinciam recentissima erant et maxima. In ea Sopatrum, hominem quum domi nobilem, tum summo magistratu praeditum, divari- cari ac deligari jubet. Quo cruciatu sit affectus venire in mentem necesse est omnibus, quum esset vinctus nudus in aere, in imbri, in frigore. Neque tamen finis huic injuriae crudelitatisque fiebat, donec populus atque universa multitudo, atrocitate rei misericordiaque commota, senatum clamore coëgit ut isti simulacrum illud Mercurii polliceretur. Clamabant fore ut ipsi se dii immortales ulcisce-arcessitus] 'Accersitus Lag. praeter 29 omnes, sed nec Guelff. nec Regius' (Zumpt). But 'accersitus,' though some editors of Latin books adopt the form, is a mistake, and one that may easily arise in copying.

40. de sella] See Lib. 2. c. 42. This was done 'in conventu,' in full court, in the presence of all the people, 'qui in id forum convenerant.' The 'praetor' was sitting 'in porticu,' under a covered place.

Equestres—statuae,] See Lib. 2. c. 21; and Livy, xxvi. c. 32: and as to C. Marcellus, Lib. 2. c. 3. Verres ordered Sopater to be placed astride the statue (divari- cari), and to be fastened down.

It has been doubted if we should write 'in aëre,' as it is in the English reprint of Zumpt, or 'in aere,' as in his larger edition. The MSS. are of no use here. Cicero clearly means to say, on the 'bronze' or 'metal;' for, as Zumpt observes, it was not the least part of the torture, that he sat on metal, which is colder than stone or wood. Stone, indeed, would be cold enough; but the barbarity of the act was aggravated by seating the man on metal, which is a rapid conductor of heat. One has heard of soldiers being seated astride a cannon by way of punishment.

rentur: hominem interea perire innocentem non oportere. Tum frequens senatus ad istum venit: pollicetur signum. Ita Sopater de statua C. Marcelli, quum jam paene obriguisset, vix vivus aufertur.

XLI. Non possum disposite istum accusare, si cupiam: opus est non solum ingenio verum etiam artificio quodam singulari. Unum hoc crimen videtur esse, et a me pro uno ponitur, de Mercurio Tyndaritano: plura sunt; sed ea quo pacto distinguere ac separare possim nescio. Est pecuniarum captarum, quod signum a sociis pecuniae magnae sustulit. Est peculatus, quod publicum populi Romani signum, de praeda hostium captum, positum imperatoris nostri nomine, non dubitavit auferre. Est majestatis, quod imperii nostri gloriae rerumque gestarum monumenta evertere atque asportare ausus est. Est sceleris, quod religiones maximas violavit. Est crudelitatis, quod innocentem in hominem, in socium nostrum atque amicum, novum ac singulare supplicii genus excogitavit. Illud vero quid sit jam non queo dicere, quo nomine appellem nescio, quod in C. Marcelli statua. Quid est hoc? Patronusne quod erat? Quid tum? quo id spectat? Utrum ea res ad opem an ad calamitatem clientium atque hospitem valere debebat? an ut hoc ostenderes, contra vim tuam in patronis praesidii nihil esse? Quis hoc non intelligeret in improbi praesentis imperio majorem esse vim quam in bonorum absentium patrocinio? An vero ex hoc illa tua singularis significatur insolentia, superbia, contumacia? Detrahare videlicet aliquid te de amplitudine Marcellorum putasti. Itaque nunc Siculorum Marcelli non sunt patroni: Verres in eorum locum substitutus est. Quam in te tantam virtutem esse aut dignitatem arbitratus es ut conarere clientelam tam splendidae, tam illustris provinciae traducere ad te, auferre a certissimis antiquissimisque patronis? Tu ista stultitia, nequitia, inertia, non modo totius Siciliae sed unius tenuissimi Siculi clientelam tueri potes? Tibi Marcelli statua pro patibulo in clientes Marcellorum fuit? tu ex

41. disposite] The words 'ordo' and 'dispositio' sometimes come together in Cicero. He partly explains what he means by 'disposite' by the following words: 'distinguere ac separare.' He says, "I cannot distinctly separate his crimes, were I ever so desirous to do it." For this affair of Tyndaris, which seems to be one offence, contains, says Cicero, several distinct offences, or grounds of accusation.

pecuniarum captarum,] That is, 'crimen,' or the offence of Repetundae. The orator proceeds to explain how many offences are comprehended in this one act of taking the Mercury.

ad opem] "Whether ought the circumstance of Marcellus being their 'patronus' to have secured the protection, or to have brought misfortune on his clients?"—'Quis non hoc?' Klotz. The position of this negative is in some cases very doubtful.

illius honore in eos ipsos qui honorem habuerant supplicia quaerebas? Quid postea, quid tandem tuis statu is fore arbitrabare? An vero quod accidit? Nam Tyndaritani statuam istius quam sibi propter Marcellos, altiore etiam basi, poni jusserat, deturbarunt, simulac successum isti audierunt.

XLII. Dedit igitur tibi nunc fortuna Siculorum C. Marcellum judicem, ut cujus ad statuam Siculi, te praetore, alligabantur, ejus religione te istis devinctum adstrictumque dedamus. Ac primo, judices, hoc signum Mercurii dicebat iste Tyndaritanos M. Marcello huic Æsernino vendidisse; atque hoc sua causa etiam M. Marcellum ipsum sperabat esse dicturum: quod mihi nunquam verisimile visum est, adolescentem illo loco natum, patronum Siciliae, nomen suum isti ad translationem criminis commodaturum. Verumtamen ita mihi res tota provisa atque praecauta est ut, si maxime esset inventus qui in se suscipere istius culpam crimenque cuperet, tamen is proficere nihil posset. Eos enim deduxi testes et eas literas deportavi ut de istius facto dubium esse nemini posset. Publicae literae sunt deportatum Mercurium esse Messanam sumptu publico. Dicent quanti. Praefuisse huic negotio publice legatum Poleam. Quid is, ubi est? Praesto est: testis est. Proagori Sopatri jussu. Quis est hic? Qui ad statuam adstrictus est. Quid is, ubi est? Vidistis hominem, et verba ejus audistis. Demolendum curavit Demetrius gymnasiarchus, quod is ei loco praeerat. Quid, hoc nos dicimus? Immo vero ipse praesens: Romae nuper qui honorem habuerant] The pronoun 'illi' is generally added after 'honorem'; but Zumpt has omitted it on the authority of good MSS. It was probably added by some one who wished to explain the meaning. Cicero asks, "did you seek to turn the statue of Marcellus into a means of punishing those, who had raised the statue to his honour?" See Lib. 1. c. 15: "habuit honorem," &c.

42. te istis devinctum] 'Te isti,' &c., is in Guelff. Leid. Regius; and 'isti' is not in the editions prior to the Aldine. Madvig would write 'istic,' i. e. 'in subsellio ubi reus sedes.' Zumpt writes 'istis,' and makes it refer to the Siculi present at the trial, which is probably right. At least, if we read 'istis,' we must explain it so. Klotz reads 'isti.' Orelli has 'ejus religione te eundem vinctum,' &c.

Æsernino] He is again mentioned in the Brutus, c. 35, where Meyer remarks that M. Claudius Marcellus, the father of Aeserninus, distinguished himself in the war with the Teutones, as a 'legatus' of Marius, B.C. 102. Afterwards, in the Marsic war, after the defeat of the consul L. Julius Caesar, B.C. 90, he fled to the colony Aesernia, and was compelled by famine to surrender to the Samnites (Liv. Ep. 73). His son was called Æserninus from this ignominious circumstance.

Quid is, ubi est?] Cicero first says, 'Quis est hic?' 'Who is he?' 'The man who was fastened to the statue.' Then, 'Well, the man who was fastened to the statue, where is he? You have seen him, you have heard what he said.' Zumpt and Klotz have 'Quid? is ubi est.' I have noticed this absurd mode of pointing several times, but not too often, if it can be got rid of.

ei loco] Demetrius was director of the gymnasium, which word is in substance referred to by the words 'ei loco,' for no place has been mentioned. The statue of Mercury would be appropriately placed in the gymnasium.

istum ipsum esse pollicitum, sese id signum legatis esse redditurum, si ejus rei testificatio tolleretur, cautumque esset eos testimonium non esse dicturos. Dixit hoc apud vos Zosippus et Ismenias, homines nobilissimi et principes Tyndaritanae civitatis.

XLIII. Quid Agrigento, nonne ejusdem P. Scipionis monumentum, signum Apollinis pulcherrimum, cujus in femore literis minutis argenteis nomen Myronis erat inscriptum, ex Æsculapii religiosissimo fano sustulisti? Quod quidem, judices, quum iste clam fecisset, quum ad suum scelus illud furtumque nefarium quosdam homines improbos duces atque adjutores adhibuisset, vehementer commota civitas est. Uno enim tempore Agrigentini beneficium Africani, religionem domesticam, ornamentum urbis, indicium victoriae, testimonium societatis, requirebant. Itaque ab iis qui principes in ea civitate erant praecipitur et negotium datur quaestoribus et aedilibus, ut noctu vigilias agerent ad aedes sacras. Etenim iste Agrigenti—credo propter multitudinem illorum hominum atque virtutem, et quod cives Romani viri fortes atque honesti permulti in illo oppido conjunctissimo animo cum ipsis Agrigentinis vivunt ac negotiantur—non audebat palam poscere aut tollere quae placebant. Herculis templum est apud Agrigentinos, non longe a Dixit . . Zosippus et Ismenias,] Zumpt cites some other similar instances. One is from De Orat. i. 62: "dubitare visus est Sulpicius et Cotta."

43. Agrigento] Ernesti altered this to Agrigenti, as Zumpt says, because 'ex fano' follows. But it ought to be the ablative, whether there is 'ex fano' or not. See c. 50. Zumpt compares Caesar, Bell. Civ. iii. 105: "T. Ampium conatum esse tollere pecunias Epheso, ex fano Dianae;" where there is no various reading. See Lib. 1. c. 19, for various examples of the ablative; and Lib. 5. c. 72: "Henna ex sua sede."

femore] 'Femine' in the English reprint, and in Zumpt's original edition. In his second edition he has adopted this reading from 'Codd. Guelf. et Leid.' Zumpt admits that in the plural number the forms 'femina,' 'feminum,' 'feminibus,' are much more common. It is not likely that this interchange between n and r is due solely to the copyists. It is probable that the Romans used both forms.

minutis] The name of Myron was put on the thigh of the statue, in small letters of silver, let into the bronze. Zumpt refers to Suetonius, Aug. c. 7: "nactus puerilem imagunculam ejus aeream veterem, ferreis ac paene jam exolescentibus literis, hoc nomine inscriptam." Here the figure was of bronze, and the letters of iron, if the readings are right. See Burmann's edition, and the notes.

Herculis templum] One of the great monuments of Agrigentum, which some remains are supposed to represent.

'Rictum' is the neuter. It means the mouth or lips, as this passage of Lucretius shows, v. 1063:—

"Mollia ricta fremunt duros nudantia dentes:"

and another passage in Lib. vi. 1193.

Though 'rictum' does not occur elsewhere in Cicero, we have the authority of Nonius Marcellus in support of 'rictum,' who says, 'rictum neutrius generis;' and refers to 'Marc. Tull. De Signis.' The touching of the chin was one of the forms of supplication among the Greeks. Hotmann quotes the Iliad, i. 501, and refers to Pliny (H. N. xi. 45): "Antiquis Graeciae in supplicando mentum attingere mos erat." Hotmann also cites a passage to the same effect from Arnobius, Contra Gent. Lib. 6. There are other passages which show that to touch the chin was the act of a suppliant; foro, sane sanctum apud illos et religiosum. Ibi est ex aere simulacrum ipsius Herculis, quo non facile dixerim quidquam me vidisse pulchrius, tametsi non tam multum in istis rebus intelligo quam multa vidi, usque eo, iudices, ut rictum ejus ac mentum paulo sit attritius, quod in precibus et gratulationibus non solum id venerari verum etiam osculari solent. Ad hoc templum, quum esset iste Agrigenti, duce Timarchide, repente nocte intempesta servorum armatorum fit concursus atque impetus. Clamor a vigilibus fanique custodibus tollitur, qui primo quum obsistere ac defendere conarentur, male mulcati clavis ac fustibus repelluntur. Postea convulsis repagulis effractisque valvis demoliri signum ac vectibus labefactare conantur. Interea ex clamore fama tota urbe percrebuit expugnari deos patrios, non hostium adventu necopinato neque repentino praedonum impetu, sed ex domo atque ex cohorte praetoria manum fugitivorum instructam armatamque venisse. Nemo Agrigenti neque aetate tam affecta, neque viribus tam infirmis fuit qui non illa nocte eo nuntio excitatus surrexerit, telumque quod cuique fors offerebat arripuerit. Itaque brevi tempore ad fanum ex urbe tota concurritur. Hora amplius jam in demoliendo signo permulti homines moliebantur: illud interea nulla lababat ex parte, quum alii vectibus subjectis conarentur commovere, alii deligatum omnibus membris rapere ad se funibus. Ac repente Agrigentini as Polyxena (Eurip. Hecub. 347) says, addressing Ulysses:—

στρέφοντα μή σου προσθίγω γενειάδος.

The statue could not be of colossal size, if the devotees could kiss it, unless it were reclining, which is not the usual attitude of the statues of Hercules. But the god was represented in several forms; as the ideal of strength and endurance, in a standing posture; and also in a reclining posture, as the hero who rests from his labours, and is received into heaven. See Müller's Handbuch, &c.—“usque eo,” &c. It is not plain at first sight what these words refer to; but I think that they refer to ‘pulchrius;’ and the translation will be “so beautiful, ‘judices,’ that the lips and chin are a little worn, because in their prayers and thanksgivings they are wont not only to worship, but even to kiss it.” We may, perhaps, conclude from this, that it was a statue of Hercules ‘rejuvenescent,’ after the close of his earthly labours and sufferings.

mulcati] This is said to be the true form of the word, when blows and stripes are spoken of, as in Livy, xxiv. 9: “Legatis prius indignum in modum mulcatis.” In this passage the old editions have ‘mulcati’ (Zumpt). See Forcellini, v. Mulco. Whether there are two words ‘mulco’ and ‘mulcto,’ or ‘multo,’ or there is only one, of which the orthography was unsettled, seems to be disputed. A comparison of the usages of these words appears to lead to the conclusion that there is one verb, of which the root is ‘mulc.’ ‘Morte . . . multatos’ occurs, Lib. 1. c. 5.

repagulis] This passage is cited by Festus, v. Repagula, which word is thus explained: “quae patefaciundi gratia ita figuntur, ut ex contrario quae oppanguntur;” so the passage is read in the Delphin edition, but, apparently, it is corrupt.

Hora amplius] There is also MSS. authority for ‘horam amplius,’ which Klotz has. Zumpt cites from the oration Pro Rosc. Com. c. 3, examples of both.

concurrunt: fit magna lapidatio: dant sese in fugam istius praeclari imperatoris nocturni milites: duo tamen sigilla perparvula tollunt, ne omnino inanes ad istum praedonem religionum revertantur. Nunquam tam male est Siculis quin aliquid facete et commode dicant; velut in hac re aiebant, in labores Herculis non minus hunc immanissimum Verrem quam illum aprum Erymanthium referri oportere.

XLIV. Hanc virtutem Agrigentinorum imitati sunt Assorini postea, viri fortes et fideles, sed nequaquam ex tam ampla neque tam ex nobili civitate. Chrysas est amnis qui per Assorinorum agros fluit. Is apud illos habetur deus et religione maxima colitur. Fanum ejus est in agro propter ipsam viam qua Assoro itur Hennam. In eo Chrysaë simulacrum est, praeclare factum e marmore. Id iste poscere Assorinos propter singularem ejus fani religionem non ausus est: Tlepolemo dat et Hieroni negotium. Illi noctu facta manu armataque veniunt: fores aedis effringunt: aeditui custodesque mature sentiunt: signum quod erat notum vicinitati bucina datur: homines ex agris concurrunt: ejicitur fugaturque tam male . . . Siculis] A usual Latin formula: "it is never so ill with the Siculi that they cannot make a joke." See p. 310, note. A like piece of Sicilian wit is mentioned by Quintilian, Inst. Or. vi. 3. 41.

44. Assorus] The town keeps its name, hardly altered, Asaro. The river is the Dittaino, a branch of the Symaethus, now the Giaretta. Zumpt observes, that Guelf I has 'Crisas' without the aspirate, and that the name without the aspirate also occurs on an ancient coin, Eckhel, Doct. Num. Vet. I. p. 198. F. Ursini speaks of a coin in his possession, which has on one side the head of a beardless youth, bound with a fillet, and with long hair, with the legend 'Assoru' for 'Assori,' as 'Menandru' for 'Menandri.' On the other side is the river god, which Cicero describes, with a pitcher in his right hand, and a 'cornucopiae' in his left, and the legend 'Crysas' without the aspirate. I have a cast of a coin which corresponds with this description. The legend ASSORV is very clear; and on the other face CRYsas.

facta . . . armataque] The reading of the MSS. (Zumpt.) There is no MSS. authority for 'armatique.' 'Facere manum,' to collect a body of men, is explained by Zumpt by reference to the oration Pro Caecina, c. 12; and to these orations, Lib.

5. c. 30: "si aliquam manum . . . facere," &c.

aeditui] The keepers of the 'aedes.' All the MSS. have 'aeditui;' but Gellius, xii. 10, says; "In Verrem M. Tullii in exemplaribus fidelissimis ita inveni scriptum 'Aeditumi custodesque mature sentiunt.' In libris autem hoc vulgariis 'Aeditui' scriptum est" (ed. Gronov.). Gellius compares 'Aeditimus' with 'finitimus,' 'legitimus.' He adds, that 'aeditimus' is the old form, but that 'aedituus' was generally used when he wrote. He calls 'aedituus' a new usage, 'quasi a tuendis aedibus appellatus.'

Varro, De L.L. vii. 12 (ed. Müller) says: "Ut cum dicimus Bellum tueor et tueri villam, a quo etiam quidam dicunt illum qui curat aedes sacras, aedituum, non aeditomum." 'Aeditomum' is the reading of the MSS. of Varro, except one, which has 'editonum;' but the word that is meant is 'aeditimum' or 'aeditumum,' as appears from Gellius. In the treatise De R. R. i. 2, Varro says: "Sementinis feriis in aedem Telluris veneram rogatus ab aeditimo, ut dicere didicimus a patribus nostris, ut corrigimur a recentibus urbanis, ab aedituo." These passages are cited by Hotmann. Klotz adopts in his text 'aeditumi.'

Tlepolemus : neque quidquam ex fano Chrysaë præter unum parvulum signum ex aere desideratum est.

Matris magnæ fanum apud Enguinos est : jam enim non modo breviter mihi de unoquoque dicendum, sed etiam prætereunda videntur esse permulta ut ad majora istius et illustriora in hoc genere furta et scelera veniamus : in hoc fano loricas galeasque aeneas, caelatas opere Corinthio, hydriasque grandes, simili in genere atque eadem arte perfectas, idem ille Scipio, vir omnibus rebus præcellentissimus, posuerat et suum nomen inscripserat. Quid jam de isto plura dicam aut querar ? omnia illa, iudices, abstulit : nihil in religiosissimo fano præter vestigia violatæ religionis nomenque P. Scipionis reliquit : hostium spolia, monumenta imperatorum, decora atque ornamenta fanorum posthac, his præclaris nominibus amissis, in instrumento atque in supellectile Verris nominabuntur. Tu videlicet solus vasis Corinthiis delectaris : tu illius aeris temperationem, tu operum lineamenta sollertissime perspicis. Haec Scipio ille non intelligebat, homo doctissimus atque humanissimus : tu sine ulla bona arte, sine humanitate, sine ingenio, sine literis, intelligis et iudicas. Vide ne ille non solum temperantia, sed etiam intelligentia te atque istos, qui se elegantes dici volunt, vicerit. Nam quia quam pulchra essent intelligebat, idcirco existimabat ea non ad hominum luxuriam, sed ad ornatum fanorum atque oppidorum esse facta, ut posteris nostris monumenta religiosa esse videantur.

XLV. Audite etiam singularem ejus, iudices, cupiditatem, audaciam, amentiam, in his præsertim sacris polluendis quæ non modo manibus attingi sed ne cogitatione quidem violari fas fuit. Sacrum Cereris est apud Catinenses, eadem religione qua Romæ, qua in ceteris locis, qua prope in toto orbe terrarum. In eo sacrario

The better orthography seems to be with the one c; for the word, perhaps, contains the same root as 'bu-cula;' and may have meant originally a cow's horn. There is the form 'tibicina.'

Matris magnæ] The temple of the θεῶν μητέρων, according to Diodorus, iv. 79. The Matres were the Cretan women who nursed Zeus, and hid him from his father Cronus. They were rewarded with a place in heaven, καὶ καταστρεψθεῖσας ἄρκτους προσαγορευθῆναι. These goddesses had a large temple at Enguion; and the temple had great possessions: "even a little before my time," says Diodorus, "the goddesses had three thousand sacred cows, and land enough to produce a large income." Plutarch (Marcellus, c. 20) mentions the armour in this temple. As the worship of these divinities came from Crete, it seems probable that Enguion was a Cretan colony, or received Cretan colonists, as Diodorus says.

humanissimus:] See Lib. 3. c. 4, note; to which add the following from Gellius, xiii. 16: "Praxiteles qui propter artificium egregium nemini est paulum modo humaniori ignotus."

intimo signum fuit Cereris perantiquum, quod viri non modo cujusmodi esset sed ne esse quidem sciebant: aditus enim in id sacrum non est viris; sacra per mulieres ac virgines confici solent. Hoc signum noctu clam istius servi ex illo religiosissimo atque antiquissimo loco sustulerunt. Postridie sacerdotes Cereris atque illius fani antistitae, majores natu, probatae ac nobiles mulieres, rem ad magistratus suos deferunt. Omnibus acerbum, indignum, luctuosum denique videbatur. Tum iste permotus illa atrocitate negotii ut ab se sceleris illius suspicio demoveretur, dat hospiti suo cuidam negotium ut aliquem reperiret quem illud fecisse insimularet, daretque operam ut is eo crimine damnaretur, ne ipse esset in crimine. Res non procrastinatur. Nam quum iste Catina profectus esset, servi cujusdam nomen deferitur. Is accusatur: ficti testes in eum dantur. Rem cunctus senatus Catinensium legibus judicabat. Sacerdotes vocantur: ex his quaeritur secreto in curia quid esse factum arbitrarentur, quemadmodum signum esset ablatum. Respondent illae praetoris in eo loco servos esse visos. Res quae esset jam antea non obscura sacerdotum testimonio perspicua esse coepit. Itur in consilium: servus ille innocens omnibus sententiis absolvitur, quo facilius vos hunc omnibus sententiis condemnare possitis. Quid enim postulas, Verres? quid speras? quid exspectas? quem tibi aut deum aut hominem auxilio futurum putas? Eone tu servos ad spoliandum fanum immittere ausus es, quo liberos adire ne orandi quidem causa fas erat? Hisne rebus manus afferre non dubitasti, a quibus etiam oculos cohibere te religionum

45. antistitae,] There is the authority of Gellius (xiii. 20) for this form; and also the authority of Priscian (v. 4. p. 560, Putsch.; 183, Krehl, referred to by Zumpt). The MSS. have both 'antistitae' and 'antistites.' In c. 50, there is 'antistites,' but it applies to all the 'cives.'

judicabat.] The senate, it appears, formed a court for the investigation and trial of this affair; and this was according to the laws of Catina.

Itur in consilium:] 'They deliberate on the verdict.' This is the Roman form of expression applied to a body of men who are acting as judges of a fact. In Lib. 1. c. 9, there is the similar phrase, 'mittam in consilium,' the meaning of which is explained by the context.

religionum jura] The rules of law that concern matters relating to religion. See p. 34, 35. This word (jus, jura) has a very extensive use. It is necessary to distinguish when it has the sense of the rules that relate to a thing, and the rights which persons may have; in fact, between a rule of law and a right which a person claims by virtue of such rule. Poets and prose-writers use the word freely, as Ovid:

"Ne tamen ignores variorum jura dierum" (Fasti, i. 45);

where he means the particular character, religious or other, which usage assigned to the several days of the Calendar. Again he says (Fasti, i. 252):

"Nullus erat justis reddere jura labor;"

jura cogeant? Tametsi ne oculis quidem captus in hanc fraudem tam sceleratam ac tam nefariam decidisti, nam id concupisti quod nunquam videras; id, inquam, adamasti quod antea non aspexeras. Auribus tu tantam cupiditatem concepisti ut eam non metus, non religio, non deorum vis, non hominum existimatio contineret. At ex bono viro credo audieras et bono auctore. Qui id potes qui ne ex viro quidem audire potueris? Audisti igitur ex muliere, quoniam id viri neque vidisse neque nosse poterant. Qualem porro illam feminam fuisse putatis, judices? quam pudicam quae cum Verre loqueretur? quam religiosam quae sacrarii spoliandi rationem ostenderet? An minime mirum quae sacra per summam castimoniam virorum ac mulierum fiant, eadem per istius stuprum ac flagitium esse violata?

XLVI. Quid ergo hoc solum auditione expetere coepit, quum id ipse non vidisset? Immo vero alia complura: ex quibus eligam spoliationem nobilissimi atque antiquissimi fani, de qua priore actione testes dicere audistis: nunc eadem illa, quaeso, audite, et diligenter sicut adhuc fecistis attendite. Insula est Melita, judices, where 'reddere jura' expresses the office of him who declares the law, and establishes the rights of the parties who have come before him. Cicero (De Sen. c. 4) has the expression 'qui mortuis tam religiosa jura tribuerunt,' which refers to the law of interment and sepulchres.

oculis . . captus] Cicero explains his meaning. It was not by the effect produced on his eyes that Verres fell in love with this statue. The expression sometimes has a larger meaning, and signifies one who is so affected in the eyes as to be blind; as in Ovid (Fasti, vi. 204) it is said of Appius:

"Multum animo vidit: lumine captus erat."

Comp. Lib. 5. c. 25.

bono auctore.] See the note Lib. 5. c. 22.

An minime mirum] 'At' in the English reprint of Zumpt, of course without the note of interrogation at the end of the sentence. As to 'an,' Zumpt says 'Sic Stephani vetus et collatio Havn. et . . ambo Guelff.' Madvig maintains that the reading 'at' cannot be admitted; but Zumpt is not convinced of the truth of his remark.

The words 'castimoniam virorum' have caused a difficulty. Zumpt, after rejecting Ernesti's explanation, adds, 'malim intelligere quod a consuetudine mulierum (viri) abstinent, quibus sacra facienda sunt;' which appears to be the true explanation.

46. complura:] 'Compluria:' Klotz, following, I suppose, the authority of Priscian, who quotes 'immo vero compluria' from this oration of Cicero, with the remark that 'complura' occurs in some MSS. But the MSS. that are now extant have 'complura,' which is the true form, if we can trust analogy.

Melita,] The island of Malta. Diodorus (v. 12) describes it as being about eight hundred stadia from Syracuse. It has several good harbours; the inhabitants are rich, for it contains all kinds of artizans, but the best are those who make linen cloth (ὀθόνια), which is remarkable for fineness and softness. The direct distance from Syracuse to the nearest point of Malta is about ninety English miles. Diodorus adds that the island was settled by the Phoenicians, who brought with them the useful arts from their native country. Tyre was noted for its manufactures. Ezekiel (xxvii. 7) speaks of "fine linen with brodered work from Egypt," and of the Syrian merchants (v. 16): "they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and brodered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate." This seems somewhat ambiguous in the English version. But we may conclude that the Tyrians became skilled in many of the arts, and carried them into their colonies.

satis lato a Sicilia mari periculosoque disjuncta, in qua est eodem nomine oppidum quo iste nunquam accessit; quod tamen isti tex-trinum per triennium ad muliebrem vestem conficiendam fuit. Ab eo oppido non longe in promontorio fanum est Junonis antiquum, quod tanta religione semper fuit ut non modo illis Punicis bellis, quae in his fere locis navali copia gesta atque versata sunt, sed etiam in hac praedonum multitudine semper inviolatum sanctumque fuerit. Quin etiam hoc memoriae proditum est, classe quondam Masinissae regis ad eum locum appulsa, praefectum regium dentes eburneos incredibili magnitudine e fano sustulisse, et eos in Africam portasse Masinissaeque donasse. Regem primo delectatum esse munere; post ubi audisset unde essent, statim certos homines in quinqueremi misisse qui eos dentes reponerent. Itaque in his scriptum literis Punicis fuit, Regem Masinissam imprudentem accepisse, re cognita reportandos curasse. Erat praeterea magna vis eboris, multa ornamenta, in quibus eburneae Victoriae, antiquo opere ac summa arte perfectae. Haec iste omnia, ne multis morer, uno impetu atque uno nuntio per servos Venereos, quos ejus rei causa miserat, tollenda atque asportanda curavit.

XLVII. Pro dii immortales, quem ego hominem accuso, quem legibus aut judiciali jure persequor, de quo vos sententiam per hac praedonum] Cicero contrasts the robberies of the pirates, who scoured the Mediterranean in his time, with the state of affairs in the now somewhat remote period of the Punic wars (illis). He alludes to the 'piratae' in the following chapter.

certos homines] 'Sure, trusty men,' as Graevius rightly explains it.

eburneae] Ivory was one of the articles of commerce which reached Tyre (Ezekiel, xxvii. 15), and it was no doubt used as a material for the skill of the carver, and to decorate articles of furniture. There were probably small figures carved in ivory, a branch of art in which we see in modern times some excellent specimens. The colossal statue of Ceres (c. 49) held in the hand a figure of Victory.

47. judiciali jure] Lambinus found a difficulty in 'judiciali,' and he proposed to omit it, or to transpose the word and make it agree with 'tabella.' Ernesti thought as Lambinus did, but he thought also that the passage might be corrected thus: 'legibus, judicio ac jure.' Zumpt thinks the text is right, for there is, he says, another jus according to which Cicero thinks that such a plunderer should be treated, the jus belli, to which is opposed that judiciale jus which is displayed in Judicia.

Cicero, after saying 'Who is the man whom I am prosecuting,' &c., briefly touches on the enormity of this particular crime; and he then adds 'Hic nunc,' &c. 'Now, under such circumstances as these, shall either Verres be called a defendant, or I a prosecutor, or shall this be called a trial?' In the next sentence Graevius writes 'haud suspicionibus' from one MS., which spoils the sense. But there is some difficulty in the interpretation; for it seems as if Cicero were making a general remark: 'for a man's guilt is concluded from the charges, or he is brought to trial on suspicion.' But the context shows that he is speaking of Verres, whose guilt was so manifest that charges (crimina) were not necessary, and still less was he brought to trial on mere suspicion. He was convicted by the clearest evidence, and by his own confession. It was not a case for a trial, but merely for condemnation. The sentence appears to have the force of a kind of interrogation by Cicero; or else to be put in the form of an answer tabellam feretis? Dicunt legati Melitenses publice spoliatum templum esse Junonis; nihil istum in religiosissimo fano reliquisse, quem in locum classes hostium saepe accesserint, ubi piratae fere quotannis hiemare soleant; quod neque praedo violaverit ante, neque unquam hostis attigerit, id ab uno isto sic spoliatum esse ut nihil omnino sit relictum. Hic nunc iste reus, aut ego accusator, aut hoc iudicium appellabitur? Criminibus enim coarguitur, aut suspicionibus in iudicium vocatur. Dii ablati, fana vexata, nudatae urbes reperiuntur: earum autem rerum nullam sibi iste neque inficiandi rationem neque defendendi facultatem reliquit: omnibus in rebus coarguitur a me, convincitur a testibus, urgetur confessione sua, manifestis in maleficiis tenetur, et manet etiam ac tacitus facta mecum sua recognoscit. Nimium mihi diu videor in uno genere versari criminum. Sentio, iudices, occurrendum esse satietati aurium animorumque vestrorum. Quamobrem multa praetermittam. Ad ea autem, quae dicturus sum, reficite vos, quaeso, iudices, per deos immortales, eos ipsos, de quorum religione jamdiu dicimus, dum id ejus facinus commemoro et profero quo provincia tota commota est. De quo si paulo altius ordiri ac repetere memoriam religionis videbor, ignoscite: rei magnitudo me breviter perstringere atrocitatem criminis non sinit.

XLVIII. Vetus est haec opinio, iudices, quae constat ex antiquissimis Graecorum literis ac monumentis, insulam Siciliam totam esse Cereri et Liberæ consecratam. Hoc quum ceterae gentes sic arbitrantur, tum ipsis Siculis ita persuasum est ut in animis eorum insitum atque innatum esse videatur. Nam et natas esse has in iis locis deas, et fruges in ea terra primum repertas arbitrantur, et raptam esse Liberam, quam eandem Proserpinam vocant, ex Hennensium nemore; qui locus, quod in media est insula situs, umbili-to the previous question by some supposed objector: 'Yes, for,' &c. I believe that this explanation may be admitted. If not, I don't understand the passage.

Zumpt has 'aut iste reus,' but the 'aut' appears to be wanting in the MSS., which have been accurately collated.

48. Liberæ] Hotmann refers to the passage of Cicero, De Natura Deorum (ii. 26): "Terrena vis omnis atque natura Diti patri dedicata est," &c. has in iis] 'Has in his' in the English reprint of Zumpt. 'Has in locis' in the larger edition, where 'his' or 'iis' seems to be omitted by a typographical error.

fruges . . repertas]

"Prima Ceres docuit turgescere semen in agris, Falce coloratas subsecuitque comas.
Prima iugo tauros supponere colla coegit, Et veterem curvo dente revellit humum."—Ovid, Am. iii. El. 10.

Quam quum investigare et conquirere Ceres vellet, dicitur inflammasse taedas iis ignibus qui ex Aetnae vertice erumpunt, quas sibi quum ipsa praeferret, orbem omnium peragrasse terrarum. Henna autem, ubi ea quae dico gesta esse memorantur, est loco perexcelso atque edito, quo in summo est aequata agri planities et aquae perennes; tota vero ab omni aditu circumcisa atque directa est: quam circa lacus lucique sunt plurimi atque laetissimi flores omni tempore anni, locus ut ipse raptum illum virginis quem jam a pueris accepimus declarare videatur. Etenim prope est spelunca quaedam, conversa ad aquilonem, infinita altitudine, qua Ditem patrem ferunt repente cum curru Cujus anhelatis ignibus ardet humus.

Illic accendit geminas pro lampade pinus:

quas sibi quum . . peragrasse] This passage may perhaps be compared with the passage 'Siculos sane . . non venisse.' (See the note, p. 60.) It is an instance of the use of 'qui . . quum,' which is very different from the usage of our language. It differs from other passages in which 'qui . . quum' occur, in this, that 'dicitur inflammasse' is connected with 'peragrasse,' and the usage of the Latin language in this case neither requires nor admits the conjunction 'and' between the two infinitive verbs. See p. 483.

Henna] Cicero's descriptions of places are generally very clear. He had an exact eye. He marks the site of Henna in such a way that it cannot be mistaken. Strabo (vi. p. 272, ed. Cas.) speaks of the flowers about Henna, and the legend of the girl who was plucking them when she was carried off by 'gloomy Dis.' The place is described, and the story is told by a great master in this kind (Ovid, Met. v. 385, &c.):

"Haud procul Hennaeis locus est a moenibus altae, Nomine Pergus, aquae—
Silva coronat aquas, cingens latus omne, suisque Fronibus ut velo Phoebeos submovet ictus.

Frigora dant rami, Tyrios humus humida flores.

Perpetuum ver est. Quo dum Proserpina luco

Ludit, et aut violas aut candida lilia carpit," &c.

He has also the story in his Fasti (iv. 419, &c.) of the rape of Proserpine, told in a way that a painter might picture, if he were a master of his art, as the poet is.

directa] 'Dirempta' in the English reprint of Zumpt; but 'directa' in his second edition, about the correctness of which there is no doubt. According to Zumpt there is no MS. authority for 'dirempta.' The readings are either 'direpta' or 'directa.' Zumpt compares Caesar, B. C. i. 45: "prae-ruptus locus erat omni ex parte directus;" and the description of Henna by Diodorus (v. 3), who was a native of Sicily. He says that "the place at the summit is level and perfectly well watered, but all round lofty, and on every side abrupt with precipices; and it is supposed to lie in the middle of the whole island, wherefore it is called the navel of Sicily by some." The passage by which father Dis ascended to carry off his flower-gathering bride, is a large cave, with an opening into the earth turned to the north. There are probably many descriptions of this remarkable spot. There is a very particular description in the 'Lexicon Topographicum Siculum . . studio et labore S. T. D. D. Vitim. Amico et Statella ordinis S. Benedicti, &c. Panormi M.DCC.LVII.'

The place where the god descended with his prize is the fountain Cyane, near Syracuse, "at which," says Diodorus (iv. 4), "the Syracusans annually celebrate a splendid festival."

extitisse, abreptamque ex eo loco virginem secum asportasse, et subito non longe a Syracusis penetrasse sub terras, lacumque in eo loco repente extitisse; ubi usque ad hoc tempus Syracusani festos dies anniversarios agunt, celeberrimo virorum mulierumque conventu.

XLIX. Propter hujus opinionis vetustatem, quod horum in his locis vestigia ac prope incunabula reperiuntur deorum, mira quaedam tota Sicilia privatim ac publice religio est Cereris Hennensis. Etenim multa saepe prodigia vim ejus numenque declarant: multis saepe in difficillimis rebus praesens auxilium ejus oblatum est, ut haec insula ab ea non solum diligi sed etiam incolae custodiri videatur. Nec solum Siculi, verum etiam ceterae gentes nationesque Hennensem Cererem maxime colunt. Etenim, si Atheniensium sacra summa cupiditate expetuntur, ad quos Ceres in illo errore venisse dicitur frugesque attulisse, quantam esse religionem convenit eorum apud quos eam natam esse et fruges invenisse constat? Itaque apud patres nostros, atroci ac difficili rei publicae tempore, quum Ti. Graccho occiso magnorum periculorum metus ex ostentis portenderetur, P. Mucio L. Calpurnio consulibus, aditum est ad libros Sibyllinos; ex quibus inventum est Cererem antiquissimam placari oportere. Tum ex amplissimo collegio decemvirali sacerdotes populi Romani, quum esset in urbe nostra Cereris pulcherrimum et magnificentissimum templum, tamen usque Hennam profecti sunt. Tanta enim erat auctoritas et vetustas illius religionis ut, quum illuc irent, non ad aedem Cereris sed ad ipsam Cererem proficisci viderentur. Non obtundam diutius. Etenim jamdudum vereor, ne oratio mea aliena ab judiciorum ratione et a quotidiana dicendi consuetudine esse videatur. Hoc dico, hanc ipsam Cererem, antiquissimam, religiosissimam, principem omnium sacrorum quae apud omnes gentes nationesque fiunt, a C. Verre ex

49. horum in his] 'Horum in iis: ' Klotz, a variation that is perpetually recurring.

Atheniensium sacra] The ceremonies of Ceres, and more particularly the 'mysteria' of Eleusis. The Athenians received Ceres very kindly when she was traversing the world in search of her lost daughter, and they were rewarded with the precious gift of corn next after the Sicilians (Diod. v. 4).

Ti. Graccho] The tribune Ti. Gracchus, who lost his life at Rome, B.C. 133, in a riot, or whatever name we ought to give to the tumult, led by P. Scipio Nasica. Plu-tarch (Ti. Gracchus, c. 19) tells the story. He says nothing of the Sibylline books being consulted, and of the mission to Henna.

Non obtundam diutius.] The old editions and the inferior MSS. add 'aures vestras.' In Lib. 3. c. 67, there is 'obtuderunt aures,' in the letter of Timarchides. Zumpt says that 'obtundere,' in other passages of Cicero, does not occur without its accusative, which fact is in favour of the words being kept. The word is used absolutely in Terence. As to the excuse, Zumpt compares Pro Arch. c. 2.

suis templis ac sedibus esse sublatam. Qui accessistis Hennam, vidistis simulacrum Cereris e marmore et in altero templo Liberae. Sunt ea perampla atque praeclara, sed non ita antiqua. Ex aere fuit quoddam modica amplitudine ac singulari opere, cum facibus, perantiquum, omnium illorum quae sunt in eo fano multo antiquissimum. Id sustulit; ac tamen eo contentus non fuit. Ante aedem Cereris in aperto ac propatulo loco signa duo sunt, Cereris unum, alterum Triptolemi, pulcherrima ac perampla. His pulchritudo periculo, amplitudo saluti fuit, quod eorum demolitio atque asportatio perdifficilis videbatur. Insistebat in manu Cereris dextra simulacrum pulcherrime factum Victoriae. Hoc iste e signo Cereris avellendum asportandumque curavit.

L. Qui tandem istius animus est nunc in recordatione scelerum suorum, quum ego ipse in commemoratione eorum non solum animo commovear verum etiam corpore perhorrescam? Venit enim mihi fani, loci, religionis illius in mentem: versantur ante oculos omnia: dies ille, quo ego Hennam quum venissem, praesto mihi sacerdotes Cereris cum infulis ac verbenis fuerunt: contio conventusque civium; in quo ego quum loquerer, tanti gemitus fletusque fiebant ut acerbissimus tota urbe luctus versari videretur. Non illi decumarum imperia, non bonorum direptiones, non iniqua iudicia, non importunas istius libidines, non vim, non contumelias quibus vexati oppressique erant conquerebantur: Cereris nomen, sacrorum vetustatem, fani religionem, istius sceleratissimi atque audacissimi supplicio expiari volebant: omnia se cetera pati ac negligere dicebant. Hic dolor erat tantus ut Verres alter Orcus venisse Hennam et non Proserpinam asportasse sed ipsam abripuisse Cererem videretur. Etenim urbs illa non urbs videtur sed fanum Cereris esse: habitare apud sese Cererem Hennenses arbitrantur; ut mihi non dextra simulacrum] In his larger edition Zumpt has 'grande' between 'dextra' and 'simulacrum,' on the authority of 'Guelff. et Havn. coll.' Klotz also has 'grande.' The objection to 'grande' is obvious, and is hardly removed by the consideration that the statue of Ceres was colossal. Most probably the statue of Ceres was in a sitting posture. The size of the figure in the hand would depend on the position of the hand, whether it was outstretched, or rested on the lap. But the usual attitude probably was that of the outstretched hand, in which case the figure held in it could not be large. On a medal of Nerva, which has the legend ROMA RENASCENS, there is a female figure seated

cives illius civitatis, sed omnes sacerdotes, omnes accolae atque antistites Cereris esse videantur. Henna tu simulacrum Cereris tollere audebas? Henna tu de manu Cereris Victoriam deripere, et deam deae detrahare conatus es? quorum nihil violare, nihil attingere ausi sunt, in quibus erant omnia quae sceleri propiora sunt quam religioni. Tenuerunt enim, P. Popillio P. Rupilio consulibus, illum locum servi, fugitivi, barbari, hostes. Sed neque tam servi illi dominorum quam tu libidinum; neque tam fugitivi illi a dominis quam tu ab jure et ab legibus; neque tam barbari lingua et natione illi quam tu natura et moribus; neque tam illi hostes hominibus quam tu diis immortalibus. Quae deprecatio est igitur ei reliqua qui indignitate servos, temeritate fugitivos, scelere barbaros, crudelitate hostes vicerit?

LI. Audistis Theodorum et Numenium et Nicasionem, legatos Hennenses, publice dicere, sese a suis civibus haec habere mandata, ut Verrem adirent et eum simulacrum Cereris et Victoriae reposerent: id si impetrassent, tum ut morem veterem Hennensium conservarent, publice in eum, tametsi vexasset Siciliam, tamen quoniam haec a majoribus instituta accepissent testimonium ne quod dicerent: sin autem ea non reddidisset, tum ut in judicio adessent, tum ut de ejus injuriis judices docerent, sed maxime de religione quererentur. Quas illorum querimonias nolite, per deos immortales, aspernari; nolite contemnere ac negligere, judices. Aguntur injuriae sociorum: agitur vis legum: agitur existimatio Henna tu] In both places the reading was 'Hennae' until Ernesti changed it to 'Henna' in the first instance; but he retained 'Hennae' in the second place; and Klotz does also. See c. 43. The reading is 'Henna' in both places in both the Guelf. MSS.

P. Popillio, &c.] They were the consuls of B.C. 132, during the first Servile war in Sicily. The second Servile war was terminated by M'. Aquillius, B.C. 99. (See Lib. 5.) In the first Servile war, the slaves held Tauromenium and Henna (Orosius, v. 9). The history of their leader Eunus is told by Diodorus (Excerpt. Phot. Lib. 34). These slaves had good reason for rising, and they showed their character in a better way than by respect to Ceres. They protected the daughter of the tyrant master Damophilus of Henna and of his infamous wife Megallis; and, while they punished the master and mistress according to their merits, they sent the innocent young woman safe to Catina.

51. instituta] The common reading is 'constituta,' which Hotmann would have altered to 'instituta' if he could have found MS. authority. But there is good authority for 'instituta,' and it is the word used in such cases. The old reading 'judicio adessent,' which Orelli has retained, was corrected by Lambinus; but 'adesse' with a dative means 'to be present as a helper.' See p. 211.

Aguntur injuriae] This word 'ago' is a word of the most general use in the Latin language. It means here 'the wrongs of the allies are in question.' There is a like passage in Horace, 1 Ep. xviii. 84:

"Nam tua res agitur paries quum proximus ardet."

Zumpt observes that 'aguntur injuriae' may create a difficulty; and he adds 'nam quantum scio, agi dicitur id, quod ne pereat periculum est.' It is perhaps worth noting that the old editions have 'jus legum,' an expression which is not Latin.

veritasque judiciorum. Quae sunt omnia permagna, verum illud maximum: tanta religione obstricta tota provincia est, tanta superstitio ex istius facto mentes omnium Siculorum occupavit, ut quaecunque accidant publice privatimque incommoda propter eam causam sceleris istius evenire videantur. Audistis Centuripinos, Agrinenses, Catinenses, Aetnenses, Herbitenses, compluresque alios publice dicere, quae solitudo in agris esset, quae vastitas, quae fuga aratorum, quam deserta, quam inculta, quam relictata omnia.

The difference between 'uis' and 'ius' is so slight, that such a mistake in the MSS. may easily happen. Zumpt is inclined to write 'severitas' in place of 'veritas'; and he refers to Act. i. c. 1, where he has written 'religionem severitatemque,' according to the conjecture of Manutius, but against all the MSS. except one. In this passage, however, he retains 'veritas,' and in Lib. 3. c. 69, he has 'veritate judiciorum.' There seems no doubt that 'veritas judiciorum' is Latin. In the passage in Act. i. c. 1, there is more excuse for conjecture, as the words 'severe ac religione' are used in the first part of the sentence.

superstitio] Cicero has defined the word (De Nat. Deorum, i. 42): "Nisi forte Diagoram aut Theodorum, qui omnino deos esse negabant, censes superstitiosos esse potuisse. Ego ne Protagoram quidem; cui neutrum licuerit nec esse deos nec non esse. Horum enim sententiae omnium non modo superstitionem tollunt, in qua inest timor inanis deorum, sed etiam religionem quae deorum pio cultu continetur," &c.

The Romans distinguished 'superstitio' from 'religio' (De Nat. Deorum, ii. 28): "non enim philosophi solum verum etiam majores nostri superstitionem a religione separaverunt." The word manifestly contains the same elements as 'superstes,' of which the crude form is 'superstit'; but Cicero assigns an absurd reason for the application of the word. Lactantius (iv. 28), quoted by Forcellini, gives a better reason, though it may not be the true one. Every nation does not distinguish superstition from religion; for the distinction implies a cultivated understanding and an exercise of the reason. Those who distinguish superstition and religion may call the religion of those who do not make the distinction by the name of superstition; but they cannot properly call the religion of those who do make the distinction by the name of superstition. We cannot translate the Latin word 'religio' by the English word 'superstition,' even if we think that the Roman

'religio' was superstition. Lucretius may have used 'religio' as we would use superstition now, when he said (i. 63):

"Humana ante oculos fede quum vita jaceret

In terris oppressa gravi sub religione;"

for he made no distinction between religion and superstition.

publice privatimque] In his minor edition Zumpt has 'publice vel privatim,' which is the common reading. The objection to it is that a single 'vel' is not used in this manner by Cicero, but is used for the purpose of giving more emphasis to a word, or with the addition of 'potius,' or 'dicam,' or 'verius dicam,' for the purpose of correcting something that has been said, or stating it more explicitly (Zumpt).

propter eam causam, &c.] The common reading, says Zumpt, hitherto has been 'propter eam causam scelere istius.' There is obviously something wrong here, and it has been proposed to omit 'scelere istius,' or to omit 'propter eam causam.' But the reading in the text removes all difficulty, and has MS. authority, though Zumpt does not state what MSS. except Guelf. 2. The literal translation is 'on account of that matter of his wickedness,' but the meaning is 'through his crime, which is the cause.' This use of 'causa' with a genitive is defended by Zumpt and Madvig; but it needs no defence, for those who have read Latin authors with care may find plenty of examples. In Lib. 5. c. 9, there is 'sine causa quaestus,' which means 'unless he had the motive or object of gain;' though the word 'causa' has not the same sense as here. In this last passage 'causa' denotes the end or object of an act, a thing future. Here it refers to a thing past, as the antecedent of another thing. The word has both these senses in legal language, and is explained by Unterholzner, Lehre des Römischen Rechts von Schuldverhältnissen, i. p. 67.

Ea tametsi multis istius et variis injuriis acciderunt, tamen haec una causa in opinione Sicularum plurimum valet, quod Cerere violata omnes cultus fructusque Cereris in his locis interisse arbitrantur. Medemini religioni sociorum, judices: conservate vestram. Neque enim haec externa nobis est religio neque aliena. Quodsi esset, si suscipere eam nolletis, tamen in eo qui violasset sancire vos velle oporteret. Nunc vero in communi omnium gentium religione, inque his sacris, quae majores nostri ab exteris nationibus ascita atque arcessita coluerunt, quae sacra, ut erant re vera, sic appellari Graeca voluerunt, negligentes ac dissoluti, si cupiamus esse, qui possumus?

LII. Unius etiam urbis, omnium pulcherrimae atque ornatissimae, Syracusarum direptionem commemorabo et in medium proferam, judices, ut aliquando totam hujus generis orationem concludam atque definiam. Nemo fere vestrum est quin, quemadmodum captae sint a M. Marcello Syracusae, saepe audierit, nonnunquam etiam in annalibus legerit. sic appellari Graeca] Cicero says the same in the oration Pro Balbo, c. 24, where he is speaking of the 'Sacra Cereris:' "Quae quum essent assumpta de Graecia et per Graecas semper curata sunt sacerdotes, et Graeca omnia nominata."

52. annalibus] Cicero refers to the Roman historians who wrote Annales, which treated of Roman affairs. The oldest of these Roman prose writers were Q. Fabius Pictor and L. Cincius Alimentus. Livy refers to these old writers in the same terms that Cicero uses. He has (iv. 7) the expression 'in annalibus priscis;' and (vii. 9) 'in vetustioribus annalibus;' and (iii. 23) 'apud vetustiores scriptores.' Some of these old writers treated of Roman affairs from the origin of the city to their own time. Others treated of particular periods, as, for instance, P. Sempronius Asellio, who served under Scipio Africanus, wrote the history of what he saw (Gellius, ii. 13). The Roman literature was rich in this class of writing. When Cicero refers to the Annales of the conquest of Syracuse, he may perhaps refer to writers contemporary with those events. He would not probably speak of the historical works of any of his contemporaries as Annales. Thus he speaks of L. Cornelius Sisenna, one of the friends of Verres (Lib. 2. c. 45), as a writer of Historia: (Brutus, c. 64:) "hujus omnis facultas ex historia ipsius perspicui potest, quae quum facile omnes vincat superiores, tum indicat tamen, quantum absit a summo, quamque genus hoc descriptionis nondum sit satis Latinis literis illustratum."

Conferte hanc pacem] Cicero (Orat. 50) refers to this passage when he is speaking of 'numerus:' "nos etiam in hoc genere frequentes ut illa sunt in quarto accusationis: Conferte," &c. This, and another passage already referred to (p. 176), show that Cicero merely numbered the books of his Accusatio. The titles, De Signis, and so forth, are doubtless due to somebody else.

adventu Verris Siculorum innocentium sanguine redundasse; portum Syracusanorum qui tum et nostris classibus et Karthaginensium clausus fuisset, eum isto praetore Cilicum myoparoni praedonibusque patuisse: mitto adhibitam vim ingenuis, matresfamilias violatas, quae tum in urbe capta commissa non sunt, neque odio hostili, neque licentia militari, neque more belli, neque jure victoriae: mitto, inquam, haec omnia, quae ab isto per triennium perfecta sunt: ea quae conjuncta cum illis rebus sunt de quibus antea dixi cognoscite. Urbem Syracusas maximam esse Graecarum, pulcherrimam omnium, saepe audistis. Est, judices, ita ut dicitur. Nam et situ est quum munito, tum ex omni aditu vel terra vel mari praeclaro ad aspectum: et portus habet prope in aedificatione aspectuque urbis inclusos; qui quum diversos inter se aditus habeant, in exitu conjunguntur et confluunt. Eorum conjunctione pars oppidi, quae appellatur Insula, mari disjuncta angusto, ponte rursus adjungitur et continetur.

LIII. Ea tanta est urbs ut ex quatuor urbibus maximis constare dicatur: quarum una est ea quam dixi Insula, quae duobus portibus cincta in utriusque portus ostium aditumque projecta est; in qua domus est quae Hieronis regis fuit, qua praetores uti solent. In ea sunt aedes sacrae complures; sed duae quae longe ceteris antecellunt, una Dianae, et altera, quae fuit ante istius adventum adventu Verris] The whole of this passage is laboured 'oratorie,' with more regard to effect than to truth. It was not on the first occasion of Verres entering the city that all this happened, but in the third year of his government. Nor is it true, Zumpt observes, that the Carthaginian fleet did not enter the port, for it went in and out in spite of the Romans (Liv. xxv. c. 25).

Syracusas] The ancient descriptions of Syracuse are in Livy, xxv. 24; Strabo, p. 270; Thucydides, Lib. vi.; and this passage of Cicero. The topography of the place has nothing to do with Cicero's case, and the passage may be considered merely an embellishment. The plans of Syracuse, in Arnold's Thucydides, Vol. iii., and in the maps published by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, will help to the understanding of the text.

The common reading is 'pulcherrimamque,' which, as Zumpt observes, would limit the superiority of Syracuse in beauty to the Greek cities. But, if Syracuse was the finest of Greek cities, we may suppose that it was the finest of all cities then existing. Rome certainly, in Cicero's time, could not be compared with it. However, there is good authority for omitting the 'que,' and the remark will then be general, as it is at the beginning of c. 52. Hotmann thought that 'Graecarum urbium' ought to be placed, in c. 52, between the words 'omnium' and 'pulcherrimae;' but this would be to corrupt the text. Zumpt settles the matter by a quotation from the De Re Publica, iii. 31: "Urbs illa praeclara, quam ait Timaeus Graecarum maximam, omnium autem esse pulcherrimam."

53. Insula,] The island is Ortygia, the original city. Cicero speaks of the two ports, the larger and the smaller, which may be considered as united in the more remote part (exitu) from the sea, by the narrow channel which separated the island from the main land. In the time of Thucydides the island was united to the main land by a mole. Afterwards the mole was cut through, and a bridge was thrown across; and so it was when Strabo saw it (p. 270, ed. Cas.). The channel was again filled up, and modern Syracuse stands on the island and on the isthmus.

In hac insula extrema est fons aquae dulcis, cui nomen Arethusa est, incredibili magnitudine, plenissimus piscium, qui fluctu totus operiretur, nisi munitione ac mole lapidum disjunctus esset a mari. Altera autem est urbs Syracusis, cui nomen Achradina est; in qua forum maximum, pulcherrimae porticus, ornatissimum prytanium, amplissima est curia, tem-have 'antecellant.' Zumpt remarks on 'antecellant:': "sic prorsus Erfurt. Lag. 29. Havn. coll. nec multum abeunt Leid. et Guelf. 2. antecedant, alter autem 1 antece-dunt. Sed hoc verbum nude positum hoc sensu non placet. Conjunctivum autem nemo opinor abjiciet a libris oblatum, quoniam inest iudicii significatio. Vulgo antecellunt." If Cicero means to say that these two temples surpassed all others, there is no other way of expressing it except by the indicative. The remark of Zumpt seems to me founded on a complete misconception. If he meant to say 'two temples, being superior to all the rest, are held in the greatest honour,' he would say 'duae quae longe ceteris antecellant maximo sunt in honore,' as he does in other like cases. I should reject 'antecellant' with perfect confidence, if every MS. had it. But we cannot trust every collator's eyes for distinguishing between a and u, nor trust every copyist.

Minervae.] "The columns of this temple are Doric, with cyathiform capitals; the intercolumniations have been walled up, an overloaded façade has been added, and it is now become the cathedral; having thus been a place of public worship upwards of two thousand five hundred years" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 170).

Arethusa] On the margin of this island (in hac insula extrema) was the noted fountain of Arethusa, now a much diminished source, in which the nymphs of modern Syracuse wash their dirty linen. The Greeks had a legend for every striking natural phenomenon, and they told how the nymph Arethusa, being pursued by the Alpheus, was changed into a fountain by Diana, to save her from the amorous river-god (Ovid, Met. v. 639):

"Delia rumpit humum. Caecis ego mersa cavernis Advehor Ortygiam; quae me cognomine divae Grata meae superas eduxit prima sub auras."

The nymph changed into a fountain, plunged into the cavern, and emerged from the sea in the island of Ortygia.

Diodorus (v. 4) speaks of this fountain, and of its sacred fish, which were protected even to his time, the reign of Augustus. He observes that persons who had eaten of these fish, in times when the city was surrounded by an enemy, suffered from the deity for their daring irreverence. Strabo speaks of the Arethusa as "flowing into the sea, a very river at its source." It is much less copious now. Strabo refutes the story of the river Alpheus flowing under the sea, by serious arguments.

"At the distance of about eighty feet from this fountain (Arethusa), a copious spring, called L'Occhio della Zilica, and probably derived from the same source, rises from the bottom of the harbour (distinguishable only on very calm days) with such force, that it does not intermingle with the salt water until it gains the surface" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 171).

"Sic tibi quum fluctus subter labere Sicanos, Doris amara suam non intermisceat undam."—Virg. Eclog. x. 4.

Perhaps some readers may not see the exact signification of 'extrema,' which I have explained by the translation. The same form occurs a little further on: 'quam ad summam,' 'on the top of which;' an expression that few readers will be liable to mistake. The other, 'in insula extrema,' 'on the outer side or margin,' is sometimes mistaken. The Greek has the same form in ἔσχατος, which contains the root ἐκ or ἐξ:

ἔστιν πόλις Κάνωβος ἐσχάτη χθονός.
Aesch. Prom. 848.

Canobus, on the margin of the sea.

prytanium,] The Greek πρυτανεῖον, a word of perhaps doubtful origin. Herodotus (vii. 197) observes that the Achaeans called their Prytaneium by the term Leiton (λήϊτον), which is as much as to say Publicum; but we have no modern equivalent. The Romans kept their perpetual fire burning in the temple of Vesta; the Greeks in their Prytaneium. But a Prytaneium was used, at Athens at least, for other purposes besides the conservation of the ever-burning fire: it was used for public entertainments plumque egregium Jovis Olympii: ceterae urbis partes una lata via perpetua multisque transversis divisae privatis aedificiis continentur. Tertia est urbs quae, quod in ea parte Fortunae fanum antiquum fuit, Tycha nominata est, in qua gymnasium amplissimum est et complures aedes sacrae; coliturque ea pars et habitatur frequentissime. Quarta autem est quae, quia postrema coaedificata est, Neapolis nominatur; quam ad summam theatrum est maximum: praeterea duo templa sunt egregia, Cereris unum, alterum Liberae, signumque Apollinis, qui Temenites vocatur, pulcherrimum et maximum, quod iste si portare potuisset, non dubitasset auferre.

LIV. Nunc ad Marcellum revertar, ne haec a me sine causa commemorata esse videantur. Qui quum tam praeclaram urbem vi copiisque cepisset, non putavit ad laudem populi Romani hoc pertinere, hanc pulchritudinem ex qua praesertim periculi nihil ostenderetur delere et extinguere. Itaque aedificiis omnibus, publicis privatis, sacris profanis, sic pepercit quasi ad ea defendenda to foreign ambassadors; and it appears that a regular table was kept there for those to whom the state granted free commons.

Zumpt quotes Livy (xli. 20): "Cyzici in prytaneum, id est penetrabile urbis, ubi publice quibus is honos datus est vescuntur;" and he refers to the note of Casaubon, Athenaeus, xv. c. 60. p. 700.

Cicero has not translated Prytaneum, for the Romans had not the thing. The Roman word Curia is the translation of the Greek βουλευτήριον, for it appears from c. 61, that it was the meeting-place of what he calls the Senatus (βουλή) of Syracuse. The official title of a Greek community was ἡ βουλή καὶ ὁ δῆμος, as of Rome it was Senatus Populusque Romanus, p. 418.

Jovis Olympii: ceterae] The passage stands thus in Zumpt: "Jovis Olympii, ceteraque urbis partes, quae una," &c. He has added 'quae' from the best MSS., which it is not easy to explain. Zumpt observes, if we retain the common reading, that is, if we do not accept the 'quae,' we cannot tell what to do with the 'que.' I cannot; and I have struck it out, and thus all becomes plain: "the remaining parts of the city being divided by one broad continuous street, and many cross streets are occupied by private buildings." As to the meaning of 'perpetua,' see p. 64.

Quarta autem est] 'Quarta autem est urbs;' Orelli. 'Urbs abest a bonis omnibus' (Zumpt).

Temenites] The name appears to be corrupted in all the MSS., but P. Manutius suggested that the corrupt reading 'Thesmotes' should be changed to 'Temenites.' The truth of the correction cannot be doubted. This very statue, Apollo Temenites, was brought to Rome in the time of Tiberius, to be placed in the library of a new temple (Sueton. Tiber. c. 74). Stephan. Byz. v. Τέμενος τόπος Σικελίας ὑπὸ τὰς Ἐπιπολάς πρὸς ταῖς Συρακούσαις, οὗ οἰκῆτωρ Τεμενίτης. Lambinus was the first who printed Temenites, and in a note he complains of the learned Adrian Tournaeboeuf (Turnebus) publishing the emendation as his own, in his Adversaria. Finding this and other valuable discoveries appropriated by said Tournaeboeuf, Lambinus set about detecting the theft, and he discovered that the bibliopole used to send this Tournaeboeuf the sheets of Lambinus as they were printed. This bit of history is not out of place in the oration De Signis. I do not know if this distinguished scholar was also a thief. I give the story as Lambinus tells it. See Zumpt's note; and A. Turnebi Adversaria, p. 256.

54. publicis privatis, &c.] The passage was corrupted, as Graevius remarks, by those who inserted 'et' between 'publicis privatis,' and between 'sacris profanis.' Cicero, with his usual fulness of expression, makes a complete enumeration of all edifices, according to the Roman notion, 'public and private,' which is one division of 'res;' devoted to religion, and cum exercitu, non expugnanda venisset. In ornatu urbis habuit victoriae rationem, habuit humanitatis. Victoriae putabat esse multa Romam deportare quae ornamento urbi esse possent; humanitatis, non plane expoliare urbem praesertim quam conservare voluisset. In hac partitione ornatus non plus victoria Marcelli populo Romano appetivit quam humanitas Syracusanis reservavit. Romam quae apportata sunt, ad aedem Honoris et Virtutis, itemque aliis in locis videmus. Nihil in aedibus, nihil in hortis posuit, nihil in suburbano: putavit, si urbis ornamenta domum suam non contulisset, domum suam ornamento urbi futuram. Syracusis autem permulta atque egregia reliquit: deum vero nullum violavit, nullum attigit. Conferte Verrem; non ut hominem cum homine comparetis, ne qua tali viro mortuo fiat injuria; sed ut pacem cum bello, leges cum vi, forum et jurisdictionem cum ferro et armis, adventum et comitatum cum exercitu et victoria conferatis.

LV. Aedis Minervae est in Insula de qua ante dixi; quam Marcellus non attigit, quam plenam atque ornatam reliquit, quae ab isto sic spoliata atque direpta est non ut ab hoste aliquo, qui tamen in bello religionum et consuetudinis jura retineret, sed ut a barbaris praedonibus vexata esse videatur. Pugna erat equestris Agathocli regis in tabulis picta; his autem tabulis interiores templi parietes vestiebantur. Nihil erat ea pictura nobilius, nihil Syracusis quod magis visendum putaretur. Has tabulas M. Marcellus quum omnia victoria illa sua profana fecisset, tamen relinot devoted to religion, which is another division of 'res' (see Gaius, ii. 1, and Justin. Inst. i. tit. 1).

aedem Honoris, &c.] An 'aedes' of Honor was outside the Porta Collina (Cic. De Leg. ii. 23); and he mentions both temples in the De Natura Deorum (ii. 23): "vides Virtutis templum, vides Honoris a M. Marcello renovatum, quod multis ante annis erat bello Ligustico a Q. Maximo dedicatum." There seems to be some error in 'Porta Collina.' See p. 476.

putavit, si urbis] Rightly explained by Hotmann: the absence of decoration in the house of Marcellus would be a proof of his integrity; and the character of the man would be an honour to the state.

adventum] This is a kind of technical word, or at least a word that, like so many Roman words of common use, obtained also a particular signification. It is the 'advent,' or coming of the governor here (see Lib. 1. c. 19). The word appears in a like sense on Roman imperial medals, as on one of Hadrianus, which has the legend ADVENTVS AVG. This medal belongs to the second year of Hadrian, or at least his second consulship, and commemorates his arrival at Rome from the East, where he was when Trajan died.

55. Aedis] Zumpt in his larger edition has 'aedis,' perhaps the genuine form of the nominative.

retineret,] Zumpt admires that all the better MSS. have 'containeret.' Klotz has 'containeret.' We must follow the worse here.

Agathocli] As to this form see the note on c. 2.

The history of this adventurer, who made himself a king, is chiefly told by Diodorus and Polybius. This picture appears to have been on panels of wood.

profana fecisset,] By the law of war gione impeditus non attigit: iste, quum illa jam propter diuturnam pacem fidelitatemque populi Syracusani sacra religiosaque accepisset, omnes eas tabulas abstulit; parietes quorum ornatus tot saecula manserat, tot bella effugerat, nudos ac deformatos reliquit. Et Marcellus, qui si Syracusas cepisset duo templa se Romae dedicaturum voverat, id quod erat aedificaturus his rebus ornare quas ceperat noluit: Verres, qui non Honori neque Virtuti, quemadmodum ille, sed Veneri et Cupidini vota deberet, is Minervae templum spoliare conatus est. Ille deos deorum spoliis ornare noluit: hic ornamenta Minervae virginis in meretriciam domum transtulit. Septem et viginti praeterea tabulas pulcherrime pictas ex eadem aede sustulit; in quibus erant imagines Siciliae regum ac tyrannorum, quae non solum pictorum artificio delectabant sed etiam commemoratione hominum et cognitione formarum. Ac videte quanto taetrius hic tyrannus Syracusanis fuerit quam quisquam superiorum; quia illi tamen ornarunt templa deorum immortalium, hic etiam illorum monumenta atque ornamenta sustulit.

LVI. Jam vero quid ego de valvis illius templi commemorem? Vereor ne haec qui non viderint omnia me nimis augere atque they had become the property of the conquerors, and lost their sacred quality.

illa jam] 'Illa' refers to 'has tabulas.' Verres, by virtue of the long peace and fidelity of the Syracusans, had received all these works of art as things consecrated to the service of religion. All the good MSS., except the Erfurt, have 'cepisset' (Zumpt), a reading which we cannot accept.

manserat, . . . effugerat,] All the good MSS. and the Erfurt have 'manserant . . . effugerant,' and of course 'ornatus' must then be taken for the plural. Klotz has 'manserant . . . effugerant.'

voverat,] These temples of Honor and Virtus, built by Marcellus, before the Porta Capena, were adorned with the spoils of Syracuse, as Livy (xxv. 40) says. Zumpt observes, that he has not seen it remarked that Cicero has made a mistake, in saying that Marcellus made this vow during the siege of Syracuse; for Livy (xxvii. 25) says that he made this vow in his first consulship, B.C. 222, during the Gallic war, when he was before Clastidium. But P. Manutius has remarked on this discrepancy between Cicero and Livy. Becker, Handbuch, p. 509, has collected the passages which relate to these temples, which stood close together, but were separate buildings.

ornare . . . noluit:] 'Ornari—noluit:' 'Cod.

Reg. et fragm. Erfurt.' (Zumpt); and Klotz.

Septem et viginti] We do not know the names of so many kings and tyrants of Syracuse; for Cicero seems to mean Syracuse, though he says 'of Sicily.' Syracuse had many political revolutions, and probably more kings and tyrants than have been recorded—illorum monumenta] 'Illorum' refers to 'illi,' and is the reading of all the good MSS. The common reading is 'deorum' (Zumpt).—'sustulit libri meliores omnes inde a Stephaniano vetere' (Zumpt). The common reading is 'quum illi tamen ornarint—sustulerit.' Klotz has 'quum illi tamen ornarint . . . hic etiam deorum . . . sustulit.' I prefer the reading of Zumpt. As to 'illorum,' it is obviously the reading which the sense requires. The tyrants (illi) ornamented the temples of the gods, but Verres took away even the memorials and decorations of the tyrants (illorum). As to the remainder of the sentence, I am not sure that Zumpt's reading is better than the common reading.

"sed ignotis perierunt mortibus."

56. non viderint] This is Zumpt's correction, founded on the older Guelf MS. The common reading is 'viderunt.' Zumpt ornare arbitrentur; quod tamen nemo suspicari debet tam esse me cupidum ut tot viros primarios velim, praesertim ex iudicum numero qui Syracusis fuerint, qui haec viderint, esse temeritati et mendacio meo conscios. Gorgonis os pulcherrimum cinctum anguibus revellit atque abstulit; et tamen indicavit se non solum artificio sed etiam pretio quaestue duci. Nam bullas aureas omnes ex his valvis, quae erant observes, that as it is not certain persons, who had not seen these things, but all persons are meant who had not seen them, he considers the subjunctive to be necessary. That the subjunctive is required is a certainty, to any person who is familiar with Cicero. I do not choose to follow Zumpt's punctuation: "Vereor, ne, haec qui non viderint, omnia," &c.; nor have I any apprehension that a careful reader will feel any trouble at the absence of stops which are entirely useless.

cupidum] This word means eager or passionate in any matter. Zumpt compares the expression 'cupidi testes' in the oration Pro Flacco, c. 8. Gruter refers to the Pro Caecina, c. 3. Graevius says of Lambinus, who started a difficulty about 'cupidum,' 'hallucinatur;' he quotes Cicero, Pro Fonteio, c. 6: "Potest igitur testibus iudex non credere? Cupidis et iratis . . . non solum potest, sed etiam debet." Again, in a letter to Tiro (Ad Div. xvi. 11): "Nos agimus nihil cupide." In Lib. 3. c. 61, we have the phrase "praetor cupidus existimationis bonae." Poor Lambinus is overwhelmed with evidence against his hallucination.

"Quod tamen nemo," &c. Cicero very frequently uses 'id,' 'illud,' 'hoc,' with reference to something that he is going to say. He uses 'quod' just in the same way, 'quod' being in fact a demonstrative in its original. No person can take 'quod' for what they call a conjunction here. 'Tamen' forbids that. Examples of this form of expression are common.

valvas . . . auro, &c.] 'Valvae' are doors which open inwards, as Garatoni explains by reference to Isidorus, xiii. c. 7; and 'fores' are those which open outwards (foras). I do not take this to be a true explanation. A doorway and a door are things on which an architect can show his taste, and an artist his skill. Some of the great works of art, both of ancient and modern times, are doors and gates. It appears from Cicero that many persons had written about these doors, and yet he does not mention the names of the artists. The 'argumenta' or 'subjects' were in gold and ivory. 'Argumenta' in this sense occurs in Lib. 2. c. 37. The word is used in the same sense by Virgil, Æn. vii. 791, where he describes the armour of Turnus:—

"Argumentum ingens et custos virginis Argus."

Servius, in his note on this passage of Virgil, quotes this passage of Cicero.

The palace of the sun had a splendid door of the same kind, Ovid, Met. ii. 4:—

"Argenti bifores radiabant lumine valvae.
Materiem superabat opus: nam Mulciber illic
Aequora caelarat medias cingentia terras.
Signaque sex foribus dextris, totidemque sinistris."

But here Ovid calls the two parts of the doors 'fores.'

bullas] The heads of the nails, or fastenings, as Hotmann supposes, so called because they were like 'bullae' (see p. 146).

multae et graves, non dubitavit auferre; quarum iste non opere delectabatur sed pondere. Itaque ejusmodi valvas reliquit ut, quae olim ad ornandum templum erant maxime, nunc tantum ad claudendum factae esse videantur. Etiamne gramineas hastas—vidi enim vos in hoc nomine quum testis diceret commoveri, quod erat ejusmodi ut semel vidisse satis esset; in quibus neque manu factum quidquam, neque pulchritudo erat ulla, sed tantum magnitudo incre-

He refers to a passage in the Asinaria of Plautus, ii. 4. 20:

“Jussin’ in splendorem dari bullas has foribus nostris.”

There is a medal of Nero, on the reverse of which is the door of the temple of Janus, as we may conclude from the legend:—PACE·PR·TERRA·MARIQ·PARTA·IANVM·CLVSIT. The door is divided into six panels by a vertical band in the middle, and two transverse bands. In the vertical band there are two large ‘bullae,’ placed respectively at the height of the two cross bands; and in each panel there is a smaller ‘bulla.’ In the upper part of each of the central panels, which are larger than the panels above and below, and right above the ‘bullae’ of these central panels, there is the head of an animal, or whatever it may be, which seems to correspond to a door-handle, or the ‘Gorgonis os’ which Cicero describes.

gramineas hastas] Here the old commentators were entirely at fault, partly from an imperfect notion of the meaning of ‘gramen,’ partly from want of that kind of knowledge in which we, in modern times, have an advantage over them. Hotmann would have ‘fraxineas.’ The spear of Achilles was ‘fraxinea.’ As if there could be any thing surprizing in the size of ‘fraxinea hasta.’ We might make one of a whole tree, if we chose. In this instance, Lambinus, whom Zumpt charges with being a servile follower of Hotmann, does not follow him; but he does not explain ‘gramineas.’ Graevius makes an absurd attempt at explanation. The reading is certain; and Servius (Aen. v. 287) refers to the passage: “Cicero de Hastis: Bene etiamne gramineas hastas: quia gramineum est ex gramine.” So the passage stands in the edition of Virgil, by Maasvicius; but the word ‘Bene’ is the remark of Servius, and should not be in italics. Hotmann, who quotes Servius, has it ‘Cicero de signis,’ &c., which is manifestly false; for Servius means to say that Cicero applies Virgil’s word ‘gramineum’ (Gramineum in campum) to ‘hastae.’ But it does not appear that Servius knew what the passage in Cicero meant. Garatoni has explained the mystery. The ‘gramineae hastae’ are bamboos, a genus of grasses, as botanists term them. Some are thirty feet long, and even more; and as thick as a man’s body for some height from the base. They are well known now, and there is no difficulty in the passage. These ‘hastae’ or canes must have been brought from India, or parts further East. I find no mention of African bamboos, technically so called; but it is probable enough that large canes may occur in some parts of North Africa. These great Indian canes were known to Ctesias (p. 248, ed. Bähr): ὅτι ὁ Ἰνδὸς ποταμὸς ῥέων διὰ πεδίων καὶ δι’ ὀρέων ῥεῖ· ἐν οἷς καὶ ὁ λεγόμενος Ἰνδικὸς κάλαμος φύεται. πᾶχος μὲν ὅσον δύο ἄνδρες περιωργυιμένοι μάλιστα περιλάβουεν· τὸ δὲ ὕψος ὅσον μυριοφόρου νεῶς ιστός. Ctesias has generally a foundation of truth, and a superstructure of lies. He adds, there are both larger and smaller, with the absurd remark, οἷους εἶκος ἐν ὄρει μεγάλῳ. Zumpt refers to Pliny (H. N. xvi. 65, ed. Harduin.), who says among other things: “arundini quidem Indicae arborea amplitudo: qualem vulgo in templis videmus.” He also cites L. Ampelius, Liber Memorialis, c. 8 (Miracula Mundi), who says of the Minerva of Athens: “ipsa autem dea habet hastam de gramine.” These ‘hastae’ were simply canes, for Cicero says, ‘neque manu factum quidquam.’ They were merely wondrous things, which a man may be satisfied with hearing of; to see them more than once would be too often. Nobody, except the stupid, go more than once to look at things simply because they are bigger than usual.

‘Quod erant;’ Zumpt. The old editions, and Lag. 29, have ‘erat;’ and also Klotz. ‘Erat’ agrees better with ‘id concupisti.’ The common reading is ‘etiamne id concupisti;’ but Zumpt observes that the omission of the ‘ne’ is usual in a continued interrogation, where the particle has once been used. He refers to Lib. 5. c. 47, and 58, near the beginning.

dibilis, de qua vel audire satis esset, nimium videre plus quam semel—etiam id concupisti?

LVII. Nam Sappho, quae sublata de prytanio est, dat tibi justam excusationem, prope ut concedendum atque ignoscendum esse videatur. Silanionis opus tam perfectum, tam elegans, tam elaboratum, quisquam non modo privatus sed populus potius haberet quam homo elegantissimus atque eruditissimus Verres? Nimirum contra dici nihil potest. Nostrum enim unusquisque, qui tam beati quam iste est non sumus, tam delicati esse non possumus, si quando aliquid istiusmodi videre volet, eat ad aedem Felicitatis, ad monumentum Catuli, in porticum Metelli; det operam ut admittatur in alicujus istorum Tusculanum; spectet forum ornatum, si quid iste suorum aedilibus commodarit: Verres haec habeat domi; Verres ornamentis fanorum atque oppidorum habeat plenam domum, villas refertas. Etiamne hujus operarii studia ac delicias, judices, 57. Silanionis] He was an Athenian artist of the age of Lysippus. (Plin. H. N. xxxiv. 8).

Verres, says Cicero, was almost excusable for taking the Sappho. It was a perfect work; and, besides, it was a woman.

Nimirum contra] This is the sarcastic answer to the question, the purport of which is, that nobody is fit to have such fine works as Verres. 'To be sure,' says Cicero, 'it is so, it can't be contradicted. Verres is the only man who ought to have such things.' 'Nimirum' means 'strange if it were not so.' Terence sometimes says 'Mirum ni,' &c.

ad aedem Felicitatis,] See c. 2. This was the temple in which were deposited the priceless treasures of art, which the barbarian Roman carried off from Corinth. Mummius was rude and uncultivated, but probably he had a native taste. He liked the things, but he had no idea that they were things which only a few men's genius could create. (See Pliny, H. N. xxxiv. 19.) The noble works of Praxiteles in this temple perished in a fire in the time of Claudius. Fire has devoured of the great works of the Greeks more than time and barbarians have destroyed.

monumentum Catuli,] Not the Capitol, as Zumpt properly reminds us, but the temple of Fortuna which he vowed in the Cimbric war (Plut. Marius, c. 26). Pliny (H. N. xxxiv. 19) speaks of it.

porticum Metelli,] Of Q. Metellus Macedonicus in the ninth 'regio' of the city (Plin. H. N. xxxiv. 14). It was built after his triumph over Macedonia, B.C. 146. On the place see Becker, Handbuch der Röm. Alterthüm. i. p. 608. Pliny says that this Porticus contained the statue of Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi. Plutarch also mentions a statue of Cornelia (C. Gracch. c. 4).

Tusculanum,] Some of the wealthy Romans had 'villae' at Tusculum (Frascati) adorned with sculptures. Cicero himself had one a few years later, which he embellished at great cost. He could hardly have had one now, or he would not here have used this expression. His progress in wealth, or expenditure, at least, was rapid, for a few years after this date he was spending at a great rate and adorning his Tusculanum. Strabo has a passage on Tusculum (p. 239, ed. Casaub.): he says that "Tusculum is adorned with plantations about it and houses, and particularly in the part that is turned towards Rome; for in those parts Tusculum is a fertile eminence, and well watered, and suitable for the most splendid palatial structures."

operarii] An 'operarius' is one of the class of 'operae,' the men with rough hands, those who do the real work of a country. It is explained by what follows. Verres was more fit to be a porter than the possessor of such treasures. The governor of Sicily, we may infer, was a strong-built, brawny fellow, and that is enough for Cicero's sarcasm. He was a thief and a fellow of no principle; but he had taste: that is clear.

The common reading is 'ad deferenda,' which does not express what Cicero means to say. Besides this, there is better auperferetis? qui ita natus, ita educatus est, ita factus et animo et corpore, ut multo appositior ad ferenda quam ad auferenda signa esse videatur. Atque haec Sappho sublata quantum desiderium sui reliquerit dici vix potest. Nam quum ipsa fuit egregie facta, tum epigramma Graecum pernobile incisum est in basi, quod iste eruditus homo et Graeculus, qui haec subtiliter judicat, qui solus intelligit, si unam literam Graecam scisset, certe non sustuthority for 'ad ferenda,' which does express Cicero's meaning. 'Ferenda' expresses what has been expressed before by 'portare,' c. 53: 'si portare potuisset.'

epigramma Graecum] The word 'epigramma' is well understood in the Greek sense. It is something in verse, short and pertinent, which tells us in few words a great deal. The Greeks excelled in this style of composition, the highest style of all; for to express well in few words something that is worth remembering is a work of art. The term is as old as Herodotus, and the example is the simplest possible (Lib. v. 58):

Ἀμφιτρούων μ' ἀνέθηκε νέων ἀπὸ Τηλεβοάων.

Herodotus (vii. 228) has other examples. The best is that on the Spartans who died at Thermopylae, which Cicero has translated, Tuscul. Disput. i. 42. There are many 'epigrammata' on Sappho. Why that of Plato should be selected as the one alluded to here (Zumpt), I don't know. It is in the Antholog. Brunck. l. 171, and of Brodaeus, p. 135, and is the best of the set; if for no other reason, because it is the shortest:

Ἐννέα τὰς μούσας φασὶν τινες· ὥς ὀλιγώρως·

Ἦνιδε καὶ Σαπφὴ Λεσβόθεν ἡ δεκάτη.

I conjecture that the 'epigramma' of the text was something more than this.

certe non sustulisset.] This is the common reading, and the MSS. and the editions offer no help, says Zumpt. I conclude that they have all 'non.' Klotz keeps the common reading. Zumpt says of this 'non,' 'sententiam prorsus evertit,' and he must descend to conjecture. His conjecture, or rather that of one Herelius, is 'una,' which he adopts. Garatoni would simply strike out the 'non.' One of the two things must be done, he says. Let us see if there is not a third. Let it stand, and see what it means. I don't take 'quod' to be governed, as they call it, by 'sustulisset.' That is the origin of the blunder. 'Quod' is used as it often is; it refers to what precedes, but it occurs again in 'unam literam Graecam.' Cicero says this: "The statue of Sappho was of excellent workmanship, and there was a very famous inscription cut on the pedestal; now this inscription, this scholar of yours and ape of the Greeks, he who is so excellent a judge of these matters, in fact the only judge, if he had understood a single Greek letter, he would not have carried off the statue. For now what is written on the bare pedestal tells us what was there, and shows that it has been taken away." I admit that the objection against 'non' is very specious; almost convincing on the first impression. The inscription contained something which showed that there ought to be a statue above it. The inscription and the statue were parts of one whole. If, then, Verres had carried off the two together, there would have been the statue and the inscription entire: the integrity of the work would have been preserved. But if Verres kept the work entire, statue and inscription, he would have been betrayed; for the thing and the inscription, I assume, were appropriate to the place. At any rate, it was notorious where it had been; and, if kept entire, the evidence of the theft would have been only perpetuated by the integrity of the work. Well; but he might have kept the statue and removed the basis, as he did in another case (c. 35). True; he might have done so; nor does Cicero deny it. He simply says that, if he had understood the inscription on the basis, he would not have taken the statue. He does not say that he would not have taken both of them. That was nothing to his purpose. He did take the statue and he left the basis; and he certainly would not have done this, says Cicero, if he had understood a single Greek character. Zumpt has corrupted the text through misunderstanding what Cicero meant to say, as I conceive it. He refers to the case in c. 35, as confirmatory of his emendation. In that case Verres carried off the statue and afterwards had the basis removed, because he knew what was on it. If he had known what was on this lisset. Nunc enim quod scriptum est inani in basi declarat quid fuerit, et id ablatum indicat.

LVIII. Quid, signum Paeanis ex aede Æsculapii praeclare factum, sacrum ac religiosum, non sustulisti? quod omnes propter pulchritudinem visere, propter religionem colere solebant. Quid, ex aede Liberi simulacrum Aristaei non tuo imperio palam ablatum est? Quid, ex aede Jovis religiosissimum simulacrum Jovis Imperatoris, quem Graeci Urion nominant, pulcherrime factum, nonne abstulisti? Quid, ex aede Liberae parvum caput illud pulcherrium, quod visere solebamus, num dubitasti tollere? Atque ille Paean sacrificiis anniversariis simul cum Æsculapio apud illos colebatur: Aristaeus, qui, ut Graeci ferunt, Liberi filius, inventor olei esse dicitur, una cum Libero patre apud illos eodem erat in templo consecratus. Jovem autem Imperatorem quanto honore in suo templo fuisse arbitramini? Conjicere potestis, si recordari basis, he might have removed this basis also, or have destroyed the inscription; but he did not destroy it, and that fact furnished Cicero with his argument, such as it is. It is worth noting that Cicero speaks (c. 35) of removing the basis (tollendam locaverunt). The words 'tollere' and 'sustulisset' are properly applied to removing a basis; but if Zumpt's interpretation of this passage (c. 57) is right, 'sustulisset' would apply to the 'epigramma.' I do not deny that we might say 'tollere epigramma;' but if Cicero meant to speak of simply destroying it, he would perhaps have used another word; and if he meant to speak of removing the basis, as in c. 35, he would have said 'basim sustulisset.' I wonder Zumpt did not also change 'quod iste' into 'quam iste,' &c. Klotz explains the text in a different way from what I do; but he makes 'non sustulisset' apply to the statue, and not to the 'epigramma.' See c. 66, note on 'quod.'

58. Jovis Imperatoris,] This name occurs three times in this chapter without any variation in the MSS.; and this is sufficient, as Zumpt observes, to deter all attempts at correction. It has been proposed to correct the word Imperator, not because of any doubt about a Jupiter Imperator (Livy, vi. 29; Plin. Panegy. c. 5, ed. G. H. Schaefer, and the notes), but because of his being made the same with Jupiter Urius, that is, the Zeus of favourable winds. The proposed corrections of Imperator, in order to make it suit the meaning of Urius, are not worth recording. Cicero says that there were three statues of Jupiter Imperator, which were great works of art. There might be more than three, but there were three which were most conspicuous; one was the Macedonian, which, says Cicero, we have seen in the capitol; a second was at the entrance of the Euxine, that is, at the eastern end of the channel of Constantinople, on the Asiatic side; and the third was at Syracuse. No Roman statue is mentioned; and that which was formerly in the capitol must be the Macedonian statue. It all comes to this then, that the Macedonian statue, to which the Greeks gave the name of Ζεὺς Οὐριος, the Romans called by the name of Imperator; and it is a mistake to attempt to force out of Imperator, as Zumpt does, by a false etymology, a meaning which should correspond to that of Urius.

Paean] Paean got a place in the temple of Aesculapius, and received honours with his landlord. Paean is mentioned by Homer (Il. v. 401 and 899).

Aristaeus,] The words 'ut Graeci ferunt, Liberi filius' cause a difficulty, for Aristaeus was the son of Apollo, as Cicero himself calls him (De Nat. Deorum, iii. 18). The words 'Libero patre' mean simply 'father Liber;' and these words almost decisively prove that the words 'Liberi filius' are spurious. Virgil (Georg. iv. 317) has told the story of Aristaeus and his bees. Aristaeus has the credit of having first made cheese and oil, and also of having kept bees (Justin. xiii. 7). His useful inventions gave him a claim to be in company with father Liber.

volueritis, quanta religione fuerit eadem specie atque forma signum illud, quod ex Macedonia captum in Capitolio posuerat Flamininus. Etenim tria ferebantur in orbe terrarum signa Jovis Imperatoris uno in genere pulcherrime facta; unum illud Macedonicum, quod in Capitolio vidimus; alterum in Ponti ore et angustiis: tertium, quod Syracusis ante Verrem praetorem fuit. Illud Flamininus ita ex aede sua sustulit ut in Capitolio, hoc est, in terrestri domicilio Jovis poneret. Quod autem est ad introitum Ponti, id, quum tam multa ex illo mari bella emergerint, tam multa porro in Pontum invecta sint, usque ad hanc diem integrum inviolatumque servatum est. Hoc tertium, quod erat Syracusis, quod M. Marcellus armatus et victor viderat, quod religioni concesserat, quod cives atque incolae Syracusani colere, advenae non solum visere, verum etiam Flamininus.] 'Fuerit' and 'posuerat' imply that the statue did not exist when Cicero wrote this, and it doubtless perished in the conflagration of the capitol, B.C. 84. This statue of Jupiter Imperator, however, according to Livy (vi. 29), was brought from Praeneste, B.C. 379, by the Dictator, T. Quinctius Cincinnatus. Cicero, we must suppose, is speaking of the same statue; and he says that T. Quinctius Flamininus, consul B.C. 197, who defeated king Philip at Cynoscephalae, in Thessaly, brought it to Rome. Zumpt concludes that one of the two is mistaken, which is quite certain, if they are speaking of the same statue. He fixes the blunder on Cicero, and suggests that the sameness of the name T. Quinctius, may have deceived him; a most insufficient explanation, which is not, however, his own, for it was suggested by Graevius, or rather by Lipsius, who thinks that the blunder arose from the inscription on the statue being T. Quinctii only, and some referring it to one T. Quinctius, and some to the other. But it could not in Cicero's time be a matter of doubt, whether Flamininus brought a statue to Rome from Macedonia, a statue which was a great work of art. Zumpt objects, that it is certain that Flamininus did not penetrate into any part of Macedonia with his army, and accordingly it is not clear where the statue came from. In answer to this we have this passage. I conclude that Flamininus certainly brought from the Macedonian war a statue, which in excellence might vie with that of Syracuse. As to the Praenestine statue, we cannot suppose that this was one of the first statues in the world, though it may have been a Jupiter. It is clear enough that there were two, one from Praeneste, if Livy is right; and another, certainly from Macedonia, for Cicero, who does make mistakes sometimes, would hardly have published so notorious a blunder, if the fact were that Flamininus did not bring a Jupiter to Rome. Another thing is clear, that the Romans gave Jupiter the epithet Imperator, without respect to the Greek name. Manutius and Graevius saw this. Graevius says: "Latinos autem Jovem, quem Graeci dixerunt ὄψριον, Imperatorem appellasse, nulla habita ratione Graecae vocis, constat non modo ex sequentibus, uti Jovis Imperatoris signum, quod in Capitolio fuit, ex Macedonia adportatum est, quod tamen Livius Lib. vi. Praeneste advectum scribit, sed et ex Plinii Panegyrico c. 5, et P. Victore ut ibi Lipsius docet."

quod—vidimus;] The MSS., all, it is said, have 'videmus;' but the oldest editions have 'vidimus,' which the sense requires.

in Ponti ore] This statue belonged to a temple on the Bosporus, on the Asiatic side, at the point where the channel opens to the Euxine. Here was the temple of Ζεὺς Ὀψριος, and a statue of the god. See Demosthen. adv. Leptin., ed. Wolff, § 29, and his note. An inscription belonging to this statue was discovered by Wheler and Spon, and printed in Chishull's Antiqq. Asiatic., p. 61, and frequently since. The original inscription is now in the British Museum.

cives atque incolae] "Qui cives non sunt, incolae dicuntur;" P. Manutius. He refers to Lib. 3. c. 40: "Quid Halicyenses, quorum incolae decumas dant, ipsi agros immunes habent." See also Lib. 4.

venerari solebant, id C. Verres ex templo Jovis sustulit. Ut saepius ad M. Marcellum revertar, iudices, sic habetote; plures esse a Syracusanis istius adventu deos quam victoria Marcelli homines desideratos. Etenim ille requisisse etiam dicitur Archimedem illum, summo ingenio hominem ac disciplina, quem quum audisset interfectum, permoleste tulisse: iste omnia quae requisivit, non ut conservaret, verum ut asportaret, requisivit. Jam illa quae leviora videbuntur ideo praeteribo: quod mensas Delphicas e marmore, crateras ex aere pulcherrimas, vim maximam vasorum Corinthiorum ex omnibus aedibus sacris abstulit Syracusis. Itaque, iudices, hi qui hospites ad ea quae visenda sunt solent ducere et unumquidque ostendere, quos illi mystagogos vocant, conversam jam habent demonstrationem suam. Nam ut ante demonstrabant quid ubique esset, item nunc quid undique ablatum sit ostendunt.

LIX. Quid tum, mediocrine tandem dolore eos affectos esse arbitramini? Non ita est, iudices: primum, quod omnes religione moventur, et deos patrios quos a maioribus acceperunt colendos sibi diligenter et retinendos esse arbitrantur: deinde hic ornatus, haec opera atque artificia, signa, tabulae pictae, Graecos homines

c. 11: "itemque incolis vestris civibus Romanis;" that is, Roman citizens resident at Rhegium.

Archimedes] He was killed by a Roman soldier, as it is said, at the capture of Syracuse by Marcellus, B.C. 212 (Liv. xxv. 31; Plutarch, Marcellus, c. 19). Cicero, in another place (Tusc. Disp. v. 23), tells us that he discovered the tomb of the great geometrician, when he was 'quaestor' in Sicily.

'Quem quum audisset.' The common reading is 'eumque quum audisset interfectum,' of which Zumpt says, 'satis perspicua interpolatorum vestigia prodit.' I suppose he means to say that the 'interpolatores' tried to mend the passage; but why, it is hard to say. The reading in the text has good MSS. authority, and, as a matter of choice, is preferable to the common reading. Zumpt adds, that Garatoni cites a similar passage from Act. i. 9. He means the passage in p. 60, on which there is a note. I don't know why an ordinary construction of the Latin language should cause a difficulty, or require to be defended. See Lib. 4. c. 48: "quas sibi quum . . . peragrassae," and the note.

Delphicas] A Delphica was a slab of marble, resting on some support; sometimes used as an 'abacus,' as Martial (xii. 66, ed. Schneidew.) shows:—

"Argentum atque aurum non simplex Delphica portat."

So called, says Zumpt, from the resemblance to the 'mensa,' on which the Pythia sat when she delivered her oracles. The passage of Pliny (H. N. xxxiv. 3) is: "ex aere factitavere et cortinas, tripodum nomine Delphicas, quoniam donis maxime Apollinis Delphici dicabantur." These were of bronze, whatever the form might be, and supported on legs. It seems, however, that Delphica was used among the Romans to signify a marble table (Juv. Sat. iii. 204; and the Scholiast). Probably some of them were tables made of different specimens of stone. Plutarch (Ti. Gracch. c. 2) has the expression, δελφίνας ἀργυροῦς, which has been altered to δέλφικας ἀργυροῦς by Coraes (ed. Sintenis); but it is said that all the MSS. have δελφίνας. I suppose that the editors who adopt the correction δέλφικας, mean to give it the sense of 'Delphicas' here; but it ought to be δέλφικας ἀργυρᾶς.

'Crateras:' the form 'cratera' is not limited to the poets, as Zumpt shows. Ernesti's proposal to write 'pulcherrimos' is therefore unnecessary.

mystagogos] He gives the Greek word. If their business was only to show strangers the wonders, we know exactly what they were. The race still exists.

nimio opere delectant. Itaque ex illorum querimoniis intelligere possumus, haec illis acerbissima videri quae forsitan nobis levia et contemnenda esse videantur. Mihi credite, iudices, tametsi vosmetipsos haec eadem audire certo scio, quum multas acceperint per hosce annos socii atque exteræ nationes calamitates et injurias, nullas Graeci homines gravius ferunt ac tulerunt quam hujusmodi spoliationes fanorum atque oppidorum. Licet iste dicat emissee se, sicuti solet dicere: credite hoc mihi, iudices; nulla unquam civitas tota Asia et Graecia signum ullum, tabulam pictam, ullum denique ornamentum urbis, sua voluntate cuiquam vendidit. Nisi forte existimatis, posteaquam judicia severa Romae fieri desierunt, Graecos homines haec venditare coepisse, quae tum non modo non venditabant, quum judicia fiebant, verum etiam coëmebant: aut nisi arbitramini, L. Crasso, Q. Scaevolae, C. Claudio, potentissimis hominibus, quorum aedilitates ornatissimas vidimus, commercium istarum rerum cum Graecis hominibus non fuisse, his qui post judiciorum dissolutionem aediles facti sunt fuisse.

LX. Acerbiorem etiam scitote esse civitatibus falsam istam et simulatam emptionem quam si quis clam surripiat aut eripiat palam atque auferat. Nam turpitudinem summam esse arbitrantur referri in tabulas, pretio adductam civitatem et pretio parvo ea quae accepisset a maioribus vendidisse atque abalienasse. Etenim mirandum in modum Graeci rebus istis quas contemnimus delectantur.

59. desierunt,] 'Desierint' the common reading.

quum judicia fiebant,] That is 'severa.' 'Post judiciorum dissolutionem' means the same as 'postquam . . . severa fieri desierunt.'

'Nisi forte existimatis' implies a negation, as Manutius remarks. It is a form of expression which has the purport of a negation. The argument is this. During the time that the 'judicia' were strict at Rome, the Greeks were so far from being ready to sell their works of art, that they were even purchasers of such things. It is not likely that they would be ready to sell when the 'judicia' ceased to be severe. If they were so fond of these things as to refuse to part with them, when, if they sold them at all, they could command their own price, they would not be ready to sell them when they might be forced by a governor to part with them at his price. Or, he says, can you suppose that L. Crassus, Q. Scaevola, and C. Claudius, who exhibited such splendour in their 'aedlship,' and among other objects of display there would be statues (Lib. i. c. 22), could not trade with the Greeks for such things; and that those who have been 'aediles' since could trade with them. He does not mean that these three men did trade in this way, though Manutius takes it so. He means to say, you must not suppose that they could not, and that others could. He means that nobody could. Manutius has mistaken the meaning of 'commercium.' The explanation of Lambinus is nearer the mark.

As to L. Crassus and the others, see De Offic. Lib. ii. 16; and this oration, c. 3, 4.

60. referri in tabulas,] Klotz adds 'publicas.'

abalienasse.] 'Alienasse' the common reading; and that of Klotz: but the better MSS. have 'abalienasse,' of which Zumpt says, 'ad augendam rei indignitatem appositius.' This is an idle remark. 'Abalienatio' is a technical word: "abalienatio est ejus rei quae Mancipi est aut traditio alteri nexu aut in jure cessio inter quos ea jure civili fieri possunt" (Cic. Top. c. 5). Comp. 'pecore abalienato,' Lib. 3. c. 50; and Gaius, i. 119.

quas contemnimus] 'Vulgo nos con-

Itaque majores nostri facile patiebantur haec esse apud illos quam plurima, ut imperio nostro quam ornatissimi florentissimique essent; apud eos autem, quos vectigales aut stipendiarios fecerant, tamen haec relinquebant, ut illi quibus haec jucunda sunt, quae nobis levia videntur, haberent haec oblectamenta et solatia servitutis. Quid arbitramini Rheginos, qui jam cives Romani sunt, merere velle ut ab iis marmorea Venus illa auferatur? quid Tarentinos, ut Europam in tauro amittant, ut Satyrum qui apud illos in aede temnimus' (Zumpt). Cicero did not despise them. His own language in these orations shows that he did not, and the passion for sculpture that he afterwards indulged in. A man, like Cicero, humanized by the literature of the Greeks, could not but admire their taste and artistic skill, the great and enduring legacy which they have left to all nations. But his hearers, or many of them, either cared not for these things, or knew nothing about them. The mission of the Roman was conquest and civil administration; and it seems as if the arts do not find their home in a nation that is busy in getting money, and subduing the world. Virgil, who was himself not deficient in taste, claims no great amount of it for his countrymen:—

“Excudent alii spirantia mollius aera, Credo equidem, vivos ducent de marmore vultus—Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento.”—Aen. vi. 848.

quam plurima, ut, &c.] Klotz has “quam plurima: apud socios, ut,” &c. ‘Apud socios’ is found in Guelff. Leid. Havn. Coll. Zumpt omits ‘apud socios;’ perhaps rightly. For the ‘illos’ are the Greeks, manifestly, who are opposed to the ‘vectigales aut stipendiarios,’ who were under more severe terms of obedience to Rome. It is probable, then, that ‘apud socios’ is an interpolation, made for the purpose of explaining the text. But, as Zumpt remarks, the ‘vectigales et stipendiarii’ are also called ‘socii,’ as we see in the case of Sicily, for Cicero sometimes calls all the Sicilians ‘socii.’ Zumpt adds, that the phrase which is opposed to ‘socii’ in the larger sense, is ‘Liberi populi,’ such as most of the Greek states were, the Cyziceni, Rhodii, Athenienses, Rhegini. But as to the Rhegini he is not correct, for they were Roman citizens now. See the note on ‘socii et exterae nationes,’ c. 11; where Madvig’s error is noted, for such it is. Cicero often uses ‘exterae nationes,’ but in such a way as to show that they are not the subjects of Rome.

merere velle] ‘What do you think that the Rhegini would take for their marble statue of Venus?’ The word is wrongly explained by Manutius. It means to earn as wages, or receive as pay. It follows that the old readings ‘ut—ne auferatur,’ ‘ut ne—amittant’ are wrong; and these readings have since been corrected from the better MSS. The word ‘meritasset’ is used in a similar sense, Lib. 3. c. 50. Zumpt quotes Cicero, De Natura Deorum, i. 24: “quid enim mereas ut Epicureus esse desinas?” and De Fin. ii. 22: “quid mereas igitur ut te dicas in eo magistratu omnia voluptatis causa facturum esse?” (ed. Orelli.)

Europam in tauro] After which the common editions and Orelli add the idle word ‘sedentem.’ The old stories of the Greeks and their art were inseparable. The real elements of art existed in the minds of the people, and the artist had only to embody them. It is different with us, among whom the idea does not exist, and consequently either cannot be embodied, or if a man arises who has the idea and the power to give it form, there are few who understand what he has done. He has given a form to an idea which does not exist in the mind of the people.

A modern artist has placed a female on a leopard’s back, which people admire, or affect to admire, though it is, to most who see it, a naked woman in marble seated on a beast, and no more. Ovid has the story of Europa (Met. ii. 850):

Ovid has materials for an artist who can use them. There is a large folio Dutch translation of the Metamorphoses, by Vondel, ‘with beautiful copper-plates’ (Amsterdam, 1703). Some of them are not bad. They show what a man of genius might do, if he took Ovid for his master.

Satyrum] Satyrus, says Zumpt, was the Vestae est, ut cetera? quid Thespienses, ut Cupidinis signum propter quod unum visuntur Thespieae? quid Cnidios, ut Venerem marmoream? quid, ut pictam, Coos? quid Ephesios, ut Alexandrum? quid Cyzicenos, ut Ajacem aut Medeam? quid Rhodios, ut Ialysum? quid Athenienses, ut ex marmore Iacchum, aut Paralum pictum, aut ex aere Myronis buculam? Longum est et non necessarium commemorare quae apud quosque visenda sunt tota Asia et Graecia; verum illud est quamobrem haec commemorem, quod existimare vos hoc volo, mirum quendam dolorem accipere eos ex quorum urbibus haec auferantur.

LXI. Atque ut ceteros omittamus, de ipsis Syracusanis cognoscite. Ad quos ego quum venissem, sic primum existimabam, ut native deity of the Tarentini. Hence Saturnum Tarentum (Virg. Georg. ii. 197) is explained, though Servius supposes a town, Saturnum or Satureium, near Tarentum; and also Steph. Byzant. v. Σατύριον. Heindorf also adopts this explanation of the scholiast on the line of Horace, 1 Sat. vi. 60:

Cnidios,] The Cnidii possessed the famous statue of Aphrodite (Venus), the work of Praxiteles, which Lucian (Amores, 14; Imag. 6) has described with the skill of an artist and the feeling of a man of taste. It was a naked figure. It has been supposed that the Medicean Venus is a copy of it. We may perhaps infer from Lucian's description of the Cnidian Venus, that the attitude was imitated by the sculptor of the Medicean Venus.

Coos?] The people of Cos had also a Venus of Praxiteles, a draped statue, inferior to the naked figure of the Cnidii. (Plin. H. N. 34, 8; 36, 5, ed. Hard.) But the pride of Cos was the Aphrodite Anadyomene of Apelles, in the temple of Aesculapius, Venus rising from the waves, and pressing from her hair the water which dripped from her like a transparent veil. Ovid (Trist. ii. 527), who could paint much in few words, has preserved the characteristics of this picture:

“Sic madidos digitis siccat Venus uda capillos,
Et modo maternis tecta videtur aquis.”

The model was Pancaste, or, according to others, Phryne. The picture was carried to Rome in the time of Augustus, who took it in lieu of certain demands that the Romans had on the people of Cos. It was placed in the temple of the Divus Julius. The picture was damaged on the voyage, and was in such a bad state in the time of Nero, that a copy of it was made by Dorotheus. It is not known what became of it. The Alexander, in the temple of Diana of Ephesus, was another picture of Apelles, the Ceraunophorus, or lightning-darter. Apelles, like most great painters, was a master in portrait. (Plin. H. N. 35, 10.)

Cyzicenos,] The dictator Caesar is said to have bought two pictures by Timomachus, a Medea and an Ajax, for eighty talents (Plin. vii. 38), for the purpose of placing them in the temple of Venus Genetrix. Zumpt makes a difficulty about what Pliny says in another place (xxxv. 11), that Timomachus painted these pictures in the time (aetate) of Caesar. But there seem no grounds for fixing the birth of Timomachus with any accuracy; and we know that his period came at least near enough to the time of Caesar to allow Pliny to use this expression. Caesar did not buy the pictures from Timomachus, for Cicero here speaks of them (B.C. 70) as being in possession of the Cyziceni.

Ialysum?] The Ialysus and Paralus were the work of Protogenes. The Ialysus was taken to Rome and placed in the temple of Pax (Plin. xxxv. 10). It is not known what Iacchus is meant.

Myronis buculam?] This cow or heifer of Myro, one of the great works of the class of mere imitative art, was, as it here appears, at Athens. Ausonius (58—68) has eleven epigrams on it. Propertius (ii. 31, 7) mentions four ‘Myronis . . boves.’

dolorem, &c.] ‘Dolorem accidere eis,’ the common reading, but Zumpt doubts if the expression can be found elsewhere.

61. non modo lenitudine] 'Modo' was added by Stephanus and Lambinus from their MSS., and there is no other MS. authority for it. Zumpt observes that all the passages of Cicero at least cited by Garatoni here and in his notes on Lib. 3. c. 1, and on Agr. ii. 16, and those which Duker defends (Florus, ii. 2, 20), where modo is omitted when sed etiam follows, are not only doubtful, but ought not to be produced.

ex literis Syracusanorum] He means the 'literae publicae,' the books, the records of the town.—'tabulas exquirebam:' 'was engaged in examining.' Manutius has 'exscribebam' (ed. 1540), a conjecture; the inferior MSS. have 'scribebam,' both false readings.

Romanis, hominibus] Zumpt added 'hominibus' in his larger edition, on good authority; but he does not accept 'illius Verrutios,' which the same authority offers in place of 'illos Verrucios.' Klotz has 'illius Verrucios' (See Lib. 2. c. 70, 76). Zumpt seems to approve of the orthography 'Verrucios;' and he says 'quippe cum nomine verruca derivandum videretur.'

qui sacerdos—fuisset,] 'Homo nobilis qui,' &c. Cicero could of course say 'fuerat' or 'fuit,' which is the reading of all the inferior MSS. But he means to say that he was a man distinguished for having held this high office (Lib. 2. c. 51).

fratre meo] Some of the best MSS. have 'cum Q. fratre meo;' but it was his cousin Lucius (c. 65). We might perhaps insert the true 'praenomen' L. here in place of Q., as Zumpt remarks.

esse in curia:] "In curiam legitur in ambobus Guelff. et Havn. collatione" (Zumpt). See the note on Lib. 2. c. 27, p. 209.

dorus Timarchidi; cujus omnis oratio hanc habuit primo sententiam: senatum et populum Syracusanum moleste graviterque ferre, quod ego quum in ceteris Siciliae civitatibus senatum populumque docuissem quid eis utilitatis, quid salutis afferrem, et quum ab omnibus mandata, legatos, literas, testimoniaque sumpsissem, in illa civitate nihil ejusmodi facerem. Respondi, neque Romae in conventu Siculorum, quum a me auxilium communi omnium legationum consilio petebatur causaque totius provinciae ad me deferbatur, legatos Syracusanorum affuisse, neque me postulare ut quidquam contra C. Verrem decerneretur in ea curia in qua inauratam C. Verris statuam viderem. Quod posteaquam dixi, tantus est gemitus factus aspectu statuæ et commemoratione ut illud in curia positum monumentum scelerum non beneficiorum videretur. Tum pro se quisque, quantum dicendo assequi poterat, docere me coepit ea quae paulo ante commemoravi, spoliata urbem, fana direpta: de Heraclii hereditate, quam palaestritis concessisset, multo maximam partem ipsum abstulisse; neque postulandum fuisse ut ille palaestritas diligeret, qui etiam inventorem olei deum sustulisset; neque illam statuam esse ex pecunia publica neque publice datam, sed eos qui hereditatis diripiendae participes fuissent faciendam statuendamque curasse; eosdem Romae fuisse legatos, illius adjuutores improbitatis, socios furtorum, conscios flagitiorum; eo minus mirari me oportere si illi communi legatorum voluntati et saluti Siciliae defuissent.

LXIII. Ubi eorum dolorem ex istius injuriis non modo non minorem sed prope majorem quam ceterorum Siculorum esse cognovi, tum meum animum in illos, tum mei consilii negotiique totius suscepti causam rationemque proposui; tum eos hortatus sum ut causae communi salutique ne deessent; ut illam laudationem quam se vi ac metu coactos paucis illis diebus decresse dicebant tollerent.

62. Diodorus Timarchidi;] This is the true reading, and not 'Diodorus Timarchides,' as Zumpt shows. The Greeks mentioned in these orations have more than one name only when they are Romanized Greeks: they retain their Greek name with Roman 'praenomina' and 'nomina.' But it is consistent with Greek usage to designate a man by the addition of his father's name. It is an honourable way of mention, to say that the man has a father, and to give his name. (See Lib. 2. c. 42.)

Respondi,—quum—petebatur] I suppose that this is a case in which we should have 'peteretur,' as the words are the reported words of Cicero. But he reports them himself.

quantum dicendo] I think Hotmann is right in explaining this to mean that the Sicilians tried to express themselves in Latin, a language that the Greeks had no great liking for, and generally spoke ill. Cicero afterwards spoke Greek in the senate, which was beneath the dignity of a Roman.

olei deum] See c. 58.

63. paucis illis diebus] The expression

Itaque, iudices, Syracusani haec faciunt, istius clientes atque amici. Primum mihi literas publicas quas in aerario sanctiore conditas habebant proferunt, in quibus ostendunt omnia quae dixi ablata esse perscripta, et plura etiam quam ego potui dicere: perscripta autem hoc modo, Quod ex aede Minervae hoc et illud abesset, quod ex aede Jovis, quod ex aede Liberi. Ut quisque iis rebus tuendis praefuerat, ita perscriptum erat, quum rationem ex lege redderent et quae acceperant tradere deberent, petisse ut sibi quod hae res abessent ignosceretur: itaque omnes liberatos discessisse, et esse has been explained before. It means in the few days before Cicero's arrival; and is in fact explained by the words at the end of the chapter: 'posteaquam meus adventus appropinquaret, imperasse eum,' &c.; that is, L. Metellus, then the governor, forced them to this 'laudatio' just before Cicero arrived; a most scandalous affair for Metellus. If it is true, he was as bad as Verres.

aerario sanctiore] Cicero uses a Roman term, not in the Roman sense. He simply means that these documents were kept in the most secure place in the Aerarium.

Ut quisque . . . ita perscriptum erat,] 'As to every person who had been set over these things to take care of them, there was the following entry: when they were giving in their accounts pursuant to the law, and were bound to deliver up all that they had received, they prayed that they might be excused as to the deficiency in these things to which I have already referred.'

The old readings, 'redderet—acceperat—deberet,' are changed by Zumpt into the plural, on the authority of Leid. Guelff. and two other MSS., as to 'redderent—deberent;' but they have 'acceperat,' which we must take to be a blunder of their copyists. It is no objection to the plural that Cicero does not use 'quisque,' 'unusquisque,' with the plural; on which Zumpt has a note (Act. i. c. 14; Lib. 2. c. 39).

Zumpt writes 'e lege' in place of 'ex lege.' He is not quite certain whether there is any difference between 'e lege' and 'ex lege.' On this matter 'subdubitat,' and he refers to his note on Lib. 2. c. 17, where he has 'e lege,' 'lege,' 'ex lege,' all in the same chapter; and I have followed his text there. It may be doubtful whether Cicero wrote 'e lege' or 'ex lege,' though not doubtful that the Romans generally would write it both ways. But Cicero was particular in such matters, and may have preferred one form to the other, though

I do not recollect if he has any where, among his multifarious communications, given us his opinion on this matter. The supposition of any difference in meaning between 'e lege' and 'ex lege' is rather too trifling to be discussed.

But there is another matter here that requires notice. Guelff. 2 and Reg., according to Graevius, have 'lege' only; and Zumpt apprehends that 'lege' by itself is not good Latin; and he recollects no instance of it, except in the common formula 'lege agere.' He has apparently forgotten 'lege Rupilia,' in Lib. 2. c. 17; for if we can say 'ex lege Rupilia,' 'e lege Rupilia,' 'lege Rupilia,' and 'ex lege,' we may perhaps say 'lege' simply. Again, he has in a note on Lib. 5. c. 5, the following passage from Quintilian (Inst. v. 7. 9, &c.): "duo genera sunt testium aut voluntariorum aut eorum quibus in judiciis lege denuntiari solet." Zumpt was a good critic, and a sensible man, but his memory was not strong. I have not confidence in many of his minor canons. That 'lege' can be so used is certain. (See Lib. 2. c. 17, note.) As 'lex,' in its proper sense, means a 'lex,' it is usual to join the name to it, as 'Julia,' and so forth; but when the 'lex' has been mentioned, or it is clearly understood what 'lex' is meant, the qualifying name may be omitted. Zumpt takes 'ex lege' here to be the same in sense as in Lib. 1. c. 54: 'Rabonius qui legem nosset:' the terms of the contract. I am rather inclined to think that he means a law proper, under which the care of these things was given to certain people, and they were bound to give them up as they received them. The 'lex,' in fact, contained the terms by which they were bound; but it was not here 'id quod contractum Icti vocant,' as Zumpt says. In this passage Ernesti would make 'lege' equivalent to 'inventario,' which is a mistake.

ignotum omnibus: quas ego literas obsignandas publico signo deportandasque curavi. De laudatione autem ratio sic mihi reddita est. Primum quum a C. Verre literae aliquanto ante adventum meum de laudatione venissent, nihil esse decretum: deinde, quum quidam ex illius amicis commonerent oportere decerni, maximo clamore esse et convicio repudiatos: posteaquam meus adventus appropinquaret, imperasse eum qui summam potestatem haberet ut decernerent: decretum ita esse ut multo plus illi laudatio mali quam boni posset afferre. Id adeo, iudices, ut mihi ab illis demonstratum est, sic vos ex me cognoscite.

LXIV. Mos est Syracusis ut, si qua de re ad senatum referatur, dicat sententiam qui velit: nominatim nemo rogatur; et tamen, ut quisque aetate et honore antecedit, ita primus solet sua sponte dicere, idque a ceteris ei conceditur: sin aliquando tacent omnes, tum sortito coguntur dicere. Quum hic mos esset, refertur ad senatum de laudatione Verris. In quo primum, ut aliquid esset morae multi interpellant: de Sex. Peducaeo, qui de illa civitate totaque provincia optime meritus esset, sese antea quum audissent ei negotium facessitum, quumque eum publice pro plurimis ejus et maximis meritis laudare cuperent, a C. Verre prohibitos esse: iniquum esse, tametsi Peducaeus eorum laudatione jam non uteretur, tamen non id prius decernere quod aliquando voluissent quam quod obsignandas publico signo] Cicero carried off these entries, and had their authenticity attested by the seal of the city. Thus we see that in those days, artificial persons, as cities, and Res Publicae of various kinds, had their seal as the evidence of the act of the artificial person. The practice has been transmitted to our own days.

appropinquaret,] The reading of Zumpt, in his larger edition, in place of 'appropinquarit.'

Id adeo,] Zumpt gives to these words the meaning which he has explained in his Grammar, § 349, 'ut fere potius sit.' Let the reader substitute 'potius' for 'adeo,' and see if he can understand it. Zumpt, perhaps, relies on such examples as occur in Lib. 2. c. 8, where the meaning of 'adeo' seems plain, and is consistent with its etymon 'ad' and 'eo' the pronoun. It is used in the clause which strengthens and exemplifies what has been said before. 'Id adeo' occurs in the next chapter (c. 64), and Lib. 5. c. 4.

64. Mos est Syracusis] Cicero explains this because the Roman fashion was different. The Roman senators were called on according to a certain rule. If there were 'consules designati,' they spoke first. If there were no 'consules designati,' the consuls called on the 'princeps senatus,' and then on such persons as he thought proper, but yet in such wise as to call on a 'consularis' before a 'praetorius,' and so on. See Becker, Handbuch, ii. 2, p. 425.

idque a ceteris] 'Itaque a ceteris:' Klotz.—'sin—tacent:' 'sin—taceant' in the reprint of Zumpt, and I suppose in his minor edition. In his larger one he has properly taken the better reading, 'sin—tacent,' which Klotz also has.

ut aliquid esset morae] 'Ut eum diem interpellatione eximerent:' Hotmann. This was done by some who were the friends of Verres, or the tools of Metellus. There were some; for he says, c. 65, 'prope cunctis sententiis.' He does not say all.

negotium facessitum,] 'Reum esse factum' (Manutius). He quotes a letter of Cicero to Appius, in which the same expression occurs. In Divin. c. 14, the expression is "ne innocenti periculum faceris."

tunc cogherentur. Conclamant omnes et approbant ita fieri oportere. Refertur de Peducaeo. Ut quisque aetate et honore antecederet, ita sententiam dixit ex ordine. Id adeo ex ipso senatus consulto cognoscite; nam principum sententiae perscribi solent. Recita. Quod verba facta sunt de Sex. Peducaeo. Dicit qui primi suaserint. Decernitur. Refertur deinde de Verre. Dic, quaeso, quomodo. Quod verba facta sunt de C. Verre. Quid postea scriptum est? Quum surgeret nemo, neque sententiam diceret—Quid est hoc? Sors ducitur. Quamobrem? nemo erat voluntarius laudator praeturae tuae, defensor periculorum, praesertim quum inire a praetore gratiam posset? Nemo. Illi ipsi tui convivae, consiliarii, conscii, socii, verbum facere non audent. In qua curia statua tua stabat, et nuda filii, in ea nemo fuit quem ne nudus quidem filius et nudata provincia commoveret. Atque etiam hoc me docent, ejusmodi senatus consultum fuisse laudationis ut omnes intelligere possent non laudationem, sed potius irrisionem esse illam, quae commonefaceret istius turpem calamitosamque praeturam. Etenim scriptum esse ita, Quod is virgis neminem cecidisset; a quo cognostis nobilissimos homines atque innocentissimos securi esse percussos: Quod vigilanter provinciam administrasset; cujus omnes vigilias in stupris constat esse consumptas. Hoc vero scriptum esse quod proferre non auderet reus, accusator de Peducaeo.] He was praetor of Sicily in the years B.C. 76, 75, in the second of which years Cicero was quaestor under him. Zumpt supposes him to be the man who is mentioned De Fin. ii. 18. He had two sons, one of whom is called Sextus, and is often named in Cicero's letters. C. Sacerdos was praetor of Sicily in B.C. 74; Verres in the years B.C. 73, 72, 71; and now, B.C. 70, L. Metellus was praetor.

nuda filii, . . ne nudus quidem] Hotmann entirely mistook the meaning of this. It is an ungenerous insinuation against the son of Verres, repeated for the fourth time. Hotmann discovered it before. Lib. 2. c. 59. —All the MSS. have 'ne quem' (Zumpt), which Klotz has, with ? after 'commoveret.'

senatus consultum fuisse laudationis] The common reading is 'senatus consulto fecisse laudationem.' Reg. has the same, except that it has 'laudationis.' Graevius denies that 'facere laudationem' is Latin. He proposes to write 'ejusmodi senatus-consulti fuisse laudationem.' Zumpt observes that 'fecisse' and 'fuisse' are sometimes confounded. He writes 'ejusmodi senatusconsultum fuisse laudationis.' If we write 'laudationem,' and omit 'senatus-consulti,' there is no difficulty. 'Ejusmodi,' in the sense of 'talem,' will refer to 'ut.' In some of the MSS., at least, we have for 'senatusconsulti' the abbreviation S. C.; but, in place of this, some of the inferior MSS. have 'Siciliam' or 'Sicilia.' The evidence is in favour of the reading 'laudationes' or 'laudationis;' but it seems clear, from what follows, that the singular is intended. The reading 'laudationis,' then, must be taken to be the true one; and we must either omit 'senatusconsultum,' or, if we let it stand, interpret it as 'senatusconsultum ejusmodi laudationis ut.' I do not clearly understand how Zumpt takes it, because I cannot understand his Latin note, in which he explains the passage. Klotz has 'ejus modi senatusconsultum fecisse laudationis,' &c.

esse consumptas.] The passage stands thus in Klotz: "esse consumptas: cuius modi, constat: hoc autem scriptum esse," &c. Zumpt says of these words, "sine sensu e prioribus mendose, opinor, repetita."

recitare non desineret, Quod praedones procul ab insula Sicilia prohibuisset Verres; quos etiam intra Syracusanam insulam recepisset. Haec posteaquam ex illis cognovi, discessi cum fratre e curia ut nobis absentibus si quid vellent decernerent.

LXV. Decernunt statim, primum, Ut cum fratre L. hospitium publice fieret, quod is eandem voluntatem erga Syracusanos suscepisset quam ego semper habuissem. Id non modo tum scripserunt, verum etiam in aere incisum nobis tradiderunt. Valde hercule te Syracusani tui quos crebro commemorare soles diligunt; qui cum accusatore tuo satis justam causam conjungendae necessitudinis putant, quod te accusaturus sit et quod inquisitum in te venerit. Postea decernitur, ac non varie sed prope cunctis sententiis, Ut laudatio quae C. Verri decreta esset tolleretur. In eo, quum jam non solum discessio facta esset sed etiam perscriptum atque in tabulas relatum, praetor appellatur. At quis appellat? Magistratus aliquis? Nemo. Senator? Ne id quidem. Syracusanorum aliquis? Minime, Quis igitur praetorem appellat? Qui quaestor istius fuerat, Caesetius. O rem ridiculam! o desertum hominem!

Haec posteaquam] The common reading is 'Quae posteaquam;' a matter of indifference.

65. in aere incisum] 'Hospitii publici tesseram significat:' Hotmann. Graevius explains by several inscriptions what 'hospitium facere' is. One inscription contains the words 'tesseram hospitalem cum eo fecerunt.' Another is 'Senatus Populusque Timiligensis hospitium fecerunt cum C. Silio C. F. Aviola, &c., eumque posterosque ejus sibi posterisque suis patronum ceperunt.' That these 'tabulae hospitales' were on bronze, appears from the termination of one of them in these terms: "tabula hospitali incisa hoc decreto in domo sua posita permittat censuere." Graevius says that there are other examples in Tomasinus, cap. 2, de tesseris hospitalitatis.

cunctis] 'Vulgo legebatur conjunctis sententiis ex deterrimis codicibus' (Zumpt). See the note on 'cunctus,' p. 9.

In eo,] 'At vero' is the common reading. The inferior MSS. have 'an eo,' which is certainly wrong. 'In eo legitur in Havn. coll. Guelf. Lag. 29.' Lambinus edited from conjecture: 'Cum jam in id non solum,' &c., where 'in id' is rightly connected with 'discessio;' but it is only a conjecture. 'In eo' must be connected with 'appellatur.' Hereupon the praetor is appealed to.

But the reading of Zumpt does not set all right. For if the passage stands as he has it, we must translate it 'therein (in eo), in respect to that matter, though the division had not only taken place, but (something) had been drawn up and entered on the records.' The 'something' is the 'senatus consultum;' and Hotmann's conjecture, that the usual abbreviation S. C. has been omitted by the copyists, is a reasonable conjecture. If this is not so, we must supply 'id,' derived from the 'eo.' The 'in eo' seems to be well explained by the words 'illud S. C. in quo' (c. 66).

discessio] The word applied to a division in the Roman senate, for the purpose of ascertaining the votes (Gellius, xiv. 7).

Caesetius.] The common reading in the editions is 'Caecilius,' which can be by no means endured, says Zumpt, as Garatoni has shown; and one of his arguments settles the matter—that Caecilius had long ago left the province, had opposed Cicero in the matter of the choice of a prosecutor, that he had failed, and thereupon Cicero had gone to Sicily to collect his evidence. All which we know already; and it is not the slightest presumption against this Caecilius being in Sicily again, for he could go as well as Cicero. The real argument is, that the MSS. have a different reading, 'Caesetius,' and 'Caesetius.' One P. Caesetius is mentioned in Lib. 5. c. 25.

desperatum, relictum a magistratu Siculo! Ne senatus consultum Siculi homines facere possent, ne suum jus suis moribus, suis legibus obtinere possent, non amicus istius, non hospes, non denique aliquis Siculus, sed quaestor populi Rom. praetorem appellat. Quis hoc vidit? quis audivit? Praetor aequus et sapiens dimitti jubet senatum. Concurrit ad me maxima multitudo. Primum senatores clamare sibi eripi jus, eripi libertatem: populus senatum laudare, gratias agere: cives Romani a me nusquam discedere. Quo quidem die nihil aegrius factum est, multo labore meo, quam ut manus ab illo appellatore abstinerentur. Quum ad praetorem in jus adissemus, excogitat sane acute quid decernat. Nam antequam verbum facerem, de sella surrexit atque abiit. Itaque tum de foro, quum jam advesperasceret, discessimus.

LXVI. Postridie mane ab eo postulo ut Syracusanis liceret senatus consultum quod pridie fecissent mihi reddere. Ille enimvero negat: et ait indignum facinus esse quod ego in senatu Graeco verba fecissem; quod quidem apud Graecos Graece locutus essem, id ferri nullo modo posse. Respondi homini, ut potui, ut debui, ut volui. Tum multa, tum etiam hoc me memini dicere, facile esse perspicuum quantum inter hunc et illum Numidicum, verum ac germanum Metellum, interesset: illum noluisse sua laudatione juvare L. Lucullum, sororis virum, quicum optime convenisset; hunc homini alienissimo a civitatibus laudationes per vim et metum relictum] Zumpt rightly rejects Madvig's proposed full stop after 'relictum.' Madvig would connect 'a magistratu Siculo' with 'quis igitur praetorem appellat.' This distinguished scholar sometimes does good service to the ancient texts, but he is not always right. It is unnecessary to show reasons against his proposed punctuation. Any one who will read the chapter attentively will find them. Klotz adopts Madvig's conjecture; at least his text stands thus: 'o desertum hominem, desperatum, relictum. A magistratu Siculo, ne,' &c. It is not denied that this is Latin; it is proved by the oration Pro Quintio, c. 20, 'a praetore tribunos appellare,' and other passages. There is also no objection to 'relictum' thus used absolutely. In c. 51 there is 'quam deserta, quam inculta, quam relictia omnia.' Manutius, so far as I can collect from his commentary, for I have not his edition, made the words 'A magistratu' begin a sentence, and explained it as Madvig does.

66. Postridie mane] See Lib. 1. c. 27, and Lib. 2. c. 38.

in senatu Graeco] Hotmann quotes a passage from Valerius Maximus (ii. 2, 2): "magistratus vero prisci quanto opere suam Populique Romani majestatem retinentes se gesserint, hinc cognosci potest; quod inter cetera obtinendae gravitatis indicia, illud quoque magna cum perseverantia custodiebant, ne Graecis unquam nisi Latine responsa darent," &c.

Numidicum,] Q. Caecilius Metellus Numidicus, who commanded in the war against Jugurtha, consul B.C. 109. His sister married L. Lucullus, the father of the L. Lucullus who was now (B.C. 70) carrying on the war against Mithridates. This L. Lucullus, the father, was prosecuted by the augur Servilius for peculation (κλοπή), and convicted (Plutarch, Lucullus, c. 1). It appears that Metellus refused to make a laudatory speech, or to give evidence in favour of the character of his brother-in-law.

comparare. Quod ubi intellexi multum apud illum recentes nuntios, multum tabellas non commendaticias sed tributarias valuisse, admonitu Syracusanorum ipsorum impetum in eas tabulas facio in quibus S. C. perscripta erant. Ecce autem nova turba atque rixa, ne tamen istum omnino Syracusis sine amicis, sine hospitibus, plane nudum esse ac desertum putetis. Retinere incipit tabulas Theomnastus quidam, homo ridicule insanus, quem Syracusani Theoractum vocant, qui illic ejusmodi est ut eum pueri sectentur, ut omnes quum loqui coepit irrideant. Hujus tamen insania, quae ridicula est aliis, mihi tum molesta sane fuit: nam quum spumas ageret in ore, oculis arderet, voce maxima vim me sibi afferre clamaret, copulati in jus pervenimus. Hic ego postulare coepi, ut mihi tabulas obsignare ac deportare liceret. Ille contradicere: negare esse illud S. C. in quo praetor appellatus esset; negare id mihi tradi oportere. Ego legem recitare, omnium mihi tabularum et literarum fieri potestatem. Ille furiosus urgere nihil ad se nostras leges pertabellas] Zumpt, in his larger edition, prefers 'tabellas' to the common reading 'tabulas;' whether with good reason, I hardly know. As to these letters, see Lib. 2. c. 26. The 'literae commendatitiae,' or letters of recommendation to the governor, were common. Many are extant in the collection of Cicero's letters. Hotmann explains 'tabellae tributariae,' as if there were such things. He says they were 'tabellae' which were sent 'si quando provincialibus aliquod tributum sit imperandum;' to which explanation the objections are very numerous. One is enough. It does not explain the text at all; and so Hotmann saw, for he adds, that by 'translata significatione,' they here mean letters 'quae praetori tribuerent et promitterent;' that is, they mean something quite different from the explanation that he has just given. Forcellini, v. Tributarius, refers to Lib. 4. c. 26.

Quod ubi intellexi] 'Quod pro sed,' says Manutius, for the second time; and refers to two other instances, one of which is Lib. 1. c. 46: "quod vos oblitos esse," &c. The use of 'quod' misleads many critics.

S. C. perscripta] 'Codd. et edd. veterae sigilla habent' (Zumpt). The common reading 'singula' is supposed to be a correction of Naugerius. But 'singula' would have no meaning here. The blunder has perhaps arisen from the interpretation of S. C., which some MSS. have; and S. C.

is doubtless the true reading. But as only one S. C. is spoken of, it is possible that 'S. C. perscriptum erat' is the genuine text (Zumpt). This opinion seems to be confirmed by what follows. Klotz has 'senatusconsultum perscripserant;' on which Zumpt remarks, 'perscripserant ne ipse quidem probarim, quandoquidem monitores illi scribae certe non videntur fuisse.'

Theoractum] Theomnastus had a nickname, which among the Greeks was no unusual thing; or Cicero, to enliven his speech, invents one for him, and fathers it on the Syracusans. This 'quidam' is the man who was elected priest of Zeus in such an extraordinary way (Lib. 2. c. 51). To indicate his rabid temper, Cicero calls him Theoractus, or god-struck. Cicero represents himself as seizing the 'tabulae,' and Theomnastus as laying hold of them too. Thus they came 'in jus' before the praetor, 'copulati,' as if fastened together by a 'copula.' Cicero makes as ridiculous a figure as the madman.

legem] The Lex Cornelia, under the authority of which Cicero was collecting evidence. See Lib. 2. c. 74. Cicero speaks of the 'legis sanctionem poenamque.' The 'poena,' or penalty, was in fact the 'sanctio;' that which gave to the 'lex' its efficiency. (Just. Inst. ii. tit. 1. s. 10: "ideo et legum eas partes quibus poenas constituimus adversus eos qui contra leges fecerint sanctiones vocamus.") tinere. Praetor intelligens negare sibi placere, quod senatus consultum ratum esse non deberet, id me Romam deportare. Quid multa? nisi vehementius homini minatus essem, nisi legis sanctionem poenamque recitassem, tabularum mihi potestas facta non esset. Ille autem insanus, qui pro isto vehementissime contra me declamasset, postquam non impetravit, credo, ut in gratiam mecum rediret, libellum mihi dat in quo istius furta Syracusana perscripta erant: quae ego jam antea ab illis cognoram et acceperam.

LXVII. Laudent te jam sane Mamertini quoniam ex tota provincia soli sunt qui te salvum velint: ita tamen laudent ut Heius qui princeps legationis est adsit: ita laudent ut ad ea quae rogati erunt mihi parati sint respondere. Ac ne subito a me opprimantur, haec sum rogaturus: Navem populo Romano debeantne? fatebuntur. Praebuerintne praetore C. Verre? negabunt. Aedificarintne navem onerariam maximam publice quam Verri dederunt? negare non poterunt. Frumentum ab his sumpserintne C. Verres quod populo Romano mitteret, sicuti superiores? negabunt. Quid militum aut nautarum per triennium dederint? nullum datum dicent. Fuisse Messanam omnium istius furtorum ac praedarum receptricem negare non poterunt: permulta multis navibus illinc exportata: hanc navem denique maximam a Mamertinis datam onustam cum isto profectam fatebuntur. Quamobrem tibi habe sane istam laudationem Mamertinorum: Syracusanam quidem civitatem, ut abs te affecta est, ita in te esse animatam videmus; apud quos etiam Verria illa flagitiosa sublata sunt. Etenim minime conveniebat ei deorum honores haberi qui simulacra deorum abstulisset. Etiam hercule illud in Syracusanis merito reprehenderetur, si, quum diem festum ludorum de fastis suis sustulissent celeberrimum et sanctissimum, quod eo ipso die Syracusae a Marcello captae esse dicuntur, iidem diem festum Verris nomine agerent, quum iste a Syracusanis quae ille calamitosus dies reliquerat ademisset. At videte hominis impudentiam atque arrogantiam, iudices, qui non solum Verria postquam non impetravit,] 'Miror Stephani veterem (Havn. coll.) Guelff. Leid. concordare in eo, quod impetravisset habent pro impetravit, quod non adducor ut verum arbitrer' (Zumpt). Klotz has 'impetravisset,' undoubtedly a false reading.

67. quam Verri dederunt?] Ernesti thought that the Latin idiom requires 'dederint.' Zumpt is of a different opinion: 'nam aedificandi consilium si Cicero exprimere voluisset, scripsisset, opinor, quam Verri darent, si conjunctam actionem, eamque Verri dederint. Intellige igitur eam, quam Verri dederunt.' (See Lib. 5. c. 17.) I follow Zumpt.

si, quum diem festum . . iidem] I find no variation noted here; but it may be observed that 'iidem' ought to have something to correspond to it in the former part of the sentence, and this would be 'qui.' 'Si, qui diem,' &c., would express exactly the same meaning as the text, and it would have the advantage of a word that correlates with 'iidem.'

haec turpia ac ridicula ex Heraclii pecunia constituerit, verum etiam Marcellia tolli imperarit, ut ei sacra facerent quotannis, cujus opera omnium annorum sacra deosque patrios amiserant; ejus autem familiae dies festos tollerent per quam ceteros quoque festos dies recuperarant.

ACTIONIS SECUNDAE
IN C. VERREM

LIBER QUINTUS.

DE SUPPLICIIS.

I. Nemini video dubium esse, iudices, quin apertissime C. Verres in Sicilia sacra profanaque omnia et privatim et publice spoliarit, versatusque sit sine ulla non modo religione verum etiam dissimulatione in omni genere furandi atque praedandi. Sed quaedam mihi magnifica et praeclara defensio ejus ostenditur, cui quemadmodum resistam multo mihi ante est, iudices, providendum. Ita enim causa constituitur, provinciam Siciliam virtute istius et vigilantia singulari, dubiis formidolosisque temporibus, a fugitivis atque a belli periculis tutam esse servatam. Quid agam, iudices? quo accusationis meae rationem conferam? quo me vertam? ad omnes enim meos impetus quasi murus quidam boni nomen imperatoris opponitur. Novi locum; video ubi se jactaturus sit Hortensius. Belli pericula, tempora rei publicae, imperatorum penuriam commemorabit: tum deprecabitur a vobis, tum etiam pro suo jure contendet, ne patiamini talem imperatorem populo Romano Siculorum testimoniis eripi, neve obteri laudem imperatoriam criminibus avaritiae velitis. Non possum dissimulare, iudices: timeo ne C. Verres

1. multo mihi ante, &c.] 'Multo ante est mihi providendum:' Zumpt.

Novi locum;] 'I am familiar with this topic.' 'Ubi' refers to 'locum.' It is a topic on which Hortensius will make a great display. It will supply him with matter. Cicero (Top. 2) defines a 'locus' after Aristotle: "Sic enim appellatae ab Aristotele sunt hae quasi sedes e quibus argumenta promuntur. Itaque licet definire, locum esse argumenti sedem, argu-mentum autem quae rei dubiae faciat fidem." See De Or. ii. 72.

pro suo jure] 'As consul,' as Zumpt remarks, who refers to the oration Pro Murena, c. 37. But this interpretation is doubtful, Manutius says "carpit eum quasi dominari soleret in judiciis," which appears to be the meaning. Compare 'pro meo jure' (De Or. ii. 72).

neve obteri] 'Ne obteri:' Orelli, who prefers the ἀσύνδετον.

propter hanc eximiam virtutem in re militari omnia quae fecit impune fecerit. Venit enim mihi in mentem in iudicio M'. Aquillii quantum auctoritatis, quantum momenti oratio M. Antonii habuisse existimata sit; qui, ut erat in dicendo non solum sapiens, sed etiam fortis, causa prope perorata, ipse arripuit M'. Aquillium, constituitque in conspectu omnium, tunicamque ejus a pectore abscidit, ut cicatrices populus Romanus iudicesque aspicerent adverso corpore exceptas: simul et de illo vulnere quod ille in capite ab hostium duce acceperat multa dixit, eoque adduxit eos qui erant iudicaturi vehementer ut vererentur, ne, quem virum fortuna ex hostium telis eripuisset, quum sibi ipse non pepercisset, hic non ad populi Romani laudem sed ad iudicium crudelitatem videretur esse servatus. Eadem nunc ab illis defensionis ratio viaque temptatur: idem quaeritur. Sit fur, sit sacrilegus, sit flagitiorum omnium vitiorumque princeps. At est bonus imperator, at felix et ad dubia rei publicae tempora reservandus. Non agam summo jure tecum: non dicam id quod debeam forsitan obtinere, quum iudicium certa

M'. Aquillii] He was tried (B.C. 98) for Repetundae. His offence was committed in Sicily, where he put an end to the Servile war. Whether we should write 'Aquillius' or 'Aquilus' is doubtful. The MS. of Gaius has 'Aquila lex.'

M. Antonius is the great orator, who perished in the Marian proscription. He is introduced by Cicero (De Orat. ii. 47) speaking of the artifice which he employed on this occasion. Antonius was one of the greatest masters in his profession that has ever lived. See his remarks on his way of dealing with a case (De Or. ii. 72).

felix] 'Felix' means 'fortunate.' Sulla took the name of Felix. Good fortune was part of a general's recommendation, as we see from the encomium on Cn. Pompeius (Pro Lege Manilia, c. 16).

summo jure] 'I will not insist on the utmost rigour of law,' if 'jure' is here to be taken in what some people call its objective sense. But it may mean 'I will not insist on my strict right in this prosecution,' which right would be, inasmuch as Verres was tried under a particular lex (certa lege) and for a particular offence (repetundae), not to allow him to urge in his defence that which, if true, was no answer to this charge.

The old editions and the inferior MSS. have 'constitutum' after 'sit.' See Lib. 4. c. 8, note. But it appears to be rightly omitted on MSS. authority. Ernesti says that 'iudicium constitutum' is rather said of the first establishment of a kind of trial by a new 'lex,' than of the several trials which take place according to that 'lex.' Madvig has a remark to the same effect: "nam iudicium constitui dicitur aut quum lege lata aut edicto, ut de re aliqua iudicio agi possit, efficitur; aut quum praetor iudice dato rem certa ratione agi jubet. Hoc a nostro loco alienum est; illud minus h. l. commodè dicitur de prima constitutione iudicii;" for, as he adds, Cicero is speaking of a case as tried under a certain 'lex.' I have in this and a few other instances quoted a Latin note, either because the meaning was not quite clear to me, or for some other reason that seemed to me sufficient. If I understand this right, 'iudicium constitutum certa lege' is taken to mean a kind or form of trial established by a 'lex;' that is, a general form applicable to all the cases to which it applies. Whether, if 'constitutum' is used, 'certa lege' is properly used without 'e' or 'ex,' I am not quite sure; but I think that it is. The words 'certa lege' imply a special case, and if 'constitutum' can be used with 'certa lege,' it follows that 'constitutum' may apply to a special case. Who would ever say that a 'iudicium' (general), a general form of trial or procedure, was established by a 'certa lex?' It seems that 'constitutum' may apply either to a general rule (Lib. 1. c. 9), or to what is arranged and ordered in a particular case. (Divin. c. 15: "si tu eris actor constitutus.") lege sit, non quid in re militari fortiter feceris, sed quemadmodum manus ab alienis pecuniis abstinueris, abs te doceri oportere: non, inquam, sic agam; sed ita quaeram, quemadmodum te velle intelligo, quae tua opera et quanta fuerit in bello.

II. Quid dicis? an bello fugitivorum Siciliam virtute tua liberatam? Magna laus et honesta oratio: sed tamen quo bello? nos enim post illud bellum quod M'. Aquilius confecit sic accepimus, nullum in Sicilia fugitivorum bellum fuisse. At in Italia fuit. Fateor, et magnum quidem ac vehemens. Num igitur ex eo bello partem aliquam laudis appetere conaris? num tibi illius victoriae gloriam cum M. Crasso aut Cn. Pompeio communicatam putas? Non arbitror hoc etiam tuae deesse impudentiae, ut quidquam ejusmodi dicere audeas. Obstitisti videlicet ne ex Italia transire in Siciliam fugitivorum copiae possent. Ubi? quando? qua ex parte? quum aut ratibus aut navibus conarentur accedere. Nos enim nihil unquam prorsus audivimus: et illud audivimus, M. Crassi, fortissimi viri, virtute consilioque factum ne ratibus conjunctis freto fugitivi ad Messanam transire possent; a quo illi conatu non tanto opere prohibendi fuissent, si ulla praesidia in Sicilia ad illorum adventum opposita putarentur. At quum esset in Italia bellum tam prope a Sicilia, tamen in Sicilia non fuit. Quid mirum? ne quum in Sicilia quidem fuit, eodem intervallo pars ejus belli in Italiam ulla pervasit.

III. Etenim propinquitas locorum ad utram partem hoc loco profertur? utrum aditum facilem hostibus an contagionem imitandi belli periculosam fuisse? Aditus omnis hominibus sine ulla facultate navium non modo disjunctus sed etiam clausus est; ut illis quibus Siciliam propinquam fuisse dicis facilius fuerit ad Oceanum pervenire quam ad Peloridem accedere. Contagio autem ista servilis belli cur abs te potius quam ab iis omnibus, qui ceteras tuae deesse] Ernesti found a difficulty here, and thought that we should write 'esse.' That which caused a difficulty to him, may cause a difficulty to others. 'I don't suppose that you would carry your impudence so far as to venture to say this,' would express the meaning pretty nearly; but this form of expression is not exactly that of Cicero, which is this: 'I don't think that your impudence requires this to complete it.'

2. At in Italia] This was the war which Spartacus stirred up B.C. 73, and it cost the Romans some trouble to put down this vigorous rebel and his bands. L. Crassus at last succeeded in breaking the force of Spartacus; and Cn. Pompeius, on his return from Spain (B.C. 71), got more credit for destroying a remnant of them than he deserved. Plutarch (Crassus, c. 11, and Pompeius, c. 21) has told the story.

conarentur accedere.] The editions place a note of interrogation after 'accedere,' as if a question were contained in 'quum . . . accedere,' which is manifestly a mistake.

At quum esset] This is supposed to be urged on the side of Verres, to which 'Quid mirum?' is the answer.

provincias obtinuerunt, praedicatur? An quod in Sicilia jam ante bella fugitivorum fuerunt? At ea ipsa causa est cur ista provincia minimo in periculo sit et fuerit. Nam posteaquam illinc M'. Aquillius decessit, omnium instituta atque edicta praetorum fuerunt ejusmodi ut ne quis cum telo servus esset. Vetus est quod dicam, et propter severitatem exempli nemini fortasse vestrum inauditum; L. Domitium praetorem in Sicilia, quum aper ingens allatus esset ad eum, admiratum requisisse quis eum percussisset: quum audisset pastorem cujusdam fuisse, eum ad se vocari jussisse: illum cupide ad praetorem quasi ad laudem atque praemium accurrisse: quae-sisse Domitium quî tantam bestiam percussisset: illum respondisse venabulo: statim deinde jussu praetoris in crucem esse sublatum. Durum hoc fortasse videatur, neque ego ullam in partem disputo: tantum intelligo, maluisse Domitium crudelem in animadvertendo quam in praetermittendo dissolutum videri.

IV. Ergo his institutis provinciae jam tum quum bello sociorum tota Italia arderet, homo non acerrimus nec fortissimus, C. Norbanus, in summo otio fuit; perfacile enim sese Sicilia jam tuebatur ut ne quod ex ipsa bellum posset existere. Etenim quum nihil tam conjunctum sit quam negotiatores nostri cum Siculis usu, re, ratione, concordia; et quum ipsi Siculi res suas ita constitutas ha-

3. L. Domitium] His praetorship belongs to a period after the retirement of M'. Aquillius from Sicily, and before the Social war, B.C. 91, 90. It was probably B.C. 96.—'Vetus' is explained by Orelli: "per-vagatum exemplum, saepe commemoratum."

in crucem . . sublatum.] 'Sublatus' is one of the terms applied to crucifixion. 'Suffigere' (Hor. 1 Sat. iii. 82) is another. Our word 'cross' does not fully render 'crux,' for the 'crux' was of various forms. It might be in the form of the trunk of a tree, or upright post, or it might have cross-pieces to fasten the hands to. It is called 'arbor infelix' (Livy, i. 26), and was an ancient mode of punishment even for free men. In Cicero's time it was peculiarly a mode of punishing slaves; but under the emperors, at least, it was sometimes also the punishment of free men. Lipsius has a treatise De Cruce (J. Lipsii Opera, iii. p. 1141, ed. Vesal. 1675). In c. 6, 'ad palum alligati' is equivalent to 'in crucem sublati.'

ullam in partem] Compare 'utram in partem' in this chapter. 'In nullam partem disputare' means 'to dispute or question in no way.'

4. bello sociorum] This is the true reading, as the best MSS. show, and the context proves. The common reading is 'bello fugitivorum.' After the establishment of tranquillity in Sicily by M'. Aquillius, the Social war, or Marsic war, as it is often called, broke out in Italy. The Italian Socii were dissatisfied with the Roman supremacy, which brought with it heavy requisitions for the army, and they attempted to establish a kind of federal system of their own. During this commotion Sicily was quiet: the slaves had just felt the Roman scourge, and were not willing to provoke it again. The Sicilian praetorship of C. Norbanus must have preceded that of Sex. Peducaeus (B.C. 76, 75), and was therefore before the Servile war in Italy, which coincided with the praetorship of Verres (B.C. 73—71). The praetorship of Norbanus must belong to B.C. 91 or 90, the time during which the Social war was raging. Zumpt supposes Norbanus to be the Tribune Plebis, B.C. 95, who was accused of Majestas by Sulpicius Rufus, and defended by M. Antonius, as Cicero mentions in several passages of the De Oratore, Lib. 2. c. 25, 47—50.

beant ut iis pacem expediat esse, imperium autem populi Romani sic diligant ut id imminui aut commutari minime velint; quumque haec a servorum bello pericula et praetorum institutis et dominorum disciplina provisa sint; nullum est malum domesticum quod ex ipsa provincia nasci possit. Quid igitur, nulline motus in Sicilia servorum Verre praetore, nullaene consensiones factae esse dicuntur? Nihil sane quod ad senatum populumque Romanum pervenerit; nihil quod iste publice Romam scripserit: et tamen coeptum esse in Sicilia moveri aliquot locis servitium suspicor. Id adeo non tam ex re quam ex istius factis decretisque cognosco.

V. Ac videte quam non inimico animo sim acturus: ego ipse haec quae iste quaerit, quae adhuc nunquam audistis, commemorabo et proferam. In Triocalino, quem locum fugitivi jam ante tenuerunt, Leonidae cujusdam Siculi familia in suspicionem vocata est conjurationis. Res delata ad istum. Statim, ut par fuit, jussu ejus homines qui fuerant nominati comprehensi sunt, adductique Lilybaeum: domino denuntiatum est: causa dicta: damnati. Quid deinde? quid censetis? Furtum fortasse aut praedam exspectatis aliquam. Nolite usquequaque idem quaerere. In metu belli furandi locus qui potest esse? etiam si qua fuit in hac re occasio, praetermissa est. Tum potuit a Leonida nummorum aliquid auferre, quum denuntiavit ut adesset. Fuit nundinatio aliqua, et isti non nova, ne causam diceret: etiam alter locus, ut absolverentur.

ut iis pacem] Orelli. Zumpt has 'ut his pacem.'

Romam scripserit:] The common reading is 'conscripserit,' contrary to the usage in such cases, which is 'scripserit.' Orelli has 'conscripserit,' which, he says, means 'de consilii sententia scripserit.' He adds that this reading is one of those in which the 'vulgares codices' have preserved the genuine hand of Cicero. It is true that the 'vulgares' are sometimes the better.

5. quaerit,] 'What is he looking for.' I will supply him with some facts in proof of there being some movement of the slaves in Sicily.

Triocalino,] The place is Triocala, or Tricala, or Tricalon (Steph. Byz. ed. Meineke). It was situated between Selinus and Heraclea, at a place now called Troccoli. Diodorus (36. Exc. Phot.) says that one Trypho, a rebel slave, made this place his head-quarters.

denuntiatum] 'Ut adesset' is generally added after 'denuntiatum,' but it is not in the better MSS., though it is clearly meant, for it is added shortly after: 'denuntiavit ut adesset.' 'Denuntiatum' means that notice was given to the owner to appear and defend his slaves.

causa dicta: damnati.] I have followed Orelli's text here. Zumpt has 'causa dicta damnati.' But 'causa dicta' is the nominative.

ne causam diceret: . . . absolverentur.] Graevius says that his Reg. has 'dicerent,' and that this reading is confirmed by 'ut absolverentur.' Quite the contrary. The slaves could not be said 'dicere causam.' The slaves were tried and condemned, and what followed then? Cicero intends to surprise us by the termination of the affair. 'Verres might have got some money from Leonidas at the time when he summoned him. There was room for some bargaining—no new thing to Verres—that Leonidas should not be called on to defend the case; there was even another subject-matter for a bargain, their acquittal.' But they were already convicted, and after conviction comes execution. Klotz has 'diceret' in his text, Damnatis quidem servis quae praedandi potest esse ratio? produci ad supplicium necesse est. Testes enim sunt qui in consilio fuerunt: testes publicae tabulae: testis splendidissima civitas Lilybaetana: testis honestissimus maximusque conventus civium Romanorum. Fieri nihil potest: producendi sunt. Itaque producuntur et ad palum alligantur. Etiam nunc mihi expectare videmini, iudices, quid deinde factum sit, quod iste nihil unquam fecit sine aliquo quaestu atque praeda. Quid in ejusmodi re fieri potuit? Quod commodum est expectate, facinus quam vultis improbum: vincam tamen expectationem omnium. Homines sceleris conjurationisque damnati, ad supplicium traditi, ad palum alligati, repente multis millibus hominum inspectantibus soluti sunt et Triocalino illi domino redditi. Quid hoc loco potes dicere, homo amentissime, nisi id quod ego non quaero,—quod denique in re tam nefaria, tametsi dubitari non potest, tamen, ne si dubitetur quidem, quaeri oporteat—quid, aut quantum, aut quomodo acceperis? Remitto tibi hoc totum, atque ista te cura libero. Neque enim metuo ne hoc cuiquam persuadeatur ut ad quod facinus nemo praeter te ulla pecunia adduci potuerit, id tu gratis suscipere conatus sis. Verum de ista furandi praedandique ratione nihil dico: de hac imperatoria jam tua laude disputo.

VI. Quid ais, bone custos defensorque provinciae? Tu quos servos arma capere ac bellum facere in Sicilia voluisse cognoras et de consilii sententia judicaras, hos ad supplicium jam more majorum traditos, et ad palum alligatos, ex media morte eripere ac liberare ausus es, ut quam damnatis crucem servis fixeras, hanc indemnatis videlicet civibus Romanis reservares? Perditae civitates, desperatis jam omnibus rebus, hos solent exitus exitiales habere, ut but he has a note in favour of 'dicerent,' a reading which is not to be rejected solely because 'dicere causam' cannot properly be said of a slave; for it may mean here simply 'that they should not be tried.' But I take 'diceret' to be the genuine text.

Fieri nihil potest:] Orelli omits 'fieri,' following the 'vulgares,' as the conservators of the genuine text. In this way the 'vulgares' have a chance of becoming the 'meliores.'

Quod commodum est, &c.] Zumpt has 'quod commodum est? Expectate' &c. We may feel surprised that he found no difficulty in 'quod commodum est?' 'Quod commodum est' is the answer, and means 'just what you please.' Madvig set this right, and Orelli follows him. Orelli's text is 'Quod commodum est expectate facinus quam vultis improbum.' Klotz has 'Quod commodum est, expectate facinus, quam vultis improbum.' The answer is 'Quod commodum est expectate,' and then a pause, followed by the further explanation, 'facinus quam vultis improbum.'

6. Quid ais, &c.] A sarcastic address, such as a man would use in ordinary life.

et ad palum alligatos,] Zumpt omits these words in his larger edition. They have been used above. Cicero might repeat them for the purpose of effect. The men were tied to be flogged to death.

exitus exitiales] Klotz cites a passage from De Leg. Agr. ii. 4: "qui civitatum afflictarum perditis jam rebus extremi exi-damnati in integrum restituantur, vincti solvantur, exules reducantur, res judicatae rescindantur. Quae quum accidunt, nemo est quin intelligat ruere illam rem publicam: haec ubi eveniunt, nemo est qui ullam spem salutis reliquam esse arbitretur. Atque haec sicubi facta sunt, facta sunt ut homines populares aut nobiles supplicio aut exilio levarentur: at non ab his ipsis qui judicassent; at non statim; at non eorum facinorum damnati quae ad vitam et ad fortunas omnium pertinerent. Hoc vero novum et ejusmodi est ut magis propter reum quam propter rem ipsam credibile videatur; ut homines servos, ut ipse qui judicaret, ut statim e medio supplicio dimiserit, ut ejus facinoris damnatos servos quod ad omnium liberorum caput et sanguinem pertineret. O praeclarum imperatorem, nec jam cum M'. Aquillio, fortissimo viro, sed vero cum Paullis, Scipionibus, Mariis conferendum! Tantumne vidisse in metu periculoque provinciae! Quum servitiorum animos in Sicilia suspensos propter bellum Italiae fugitivorum videret, ne quis se commovere auderet quantum terroris injecit! Comprehendi jussit: quis non pertimescat? causam dicere dominos: quid servis tam formidolosum? 'Fecisse videri' pronuntiat: exortam videtur flammam paucorum dolore ac morte restinxisse. Quid deinde sequitur? Verbera atque ignes, et illa extrema ad supplicium damnatorum, metum ceterorum, cruciatus et crux. Hisce omnibus suppliciis sunt liberati. Quis dubitet quin servorum animos summa formidine oppresserit, quum viderent ea facilitate praetorem ut ab eo sceleris conjurationisque damnatorum vita vel ipso carnifice internuntio redimeretur?

VII. Quid, hoc in Apolloniensi Aristodamo? quid, in Leonte tiorum solent esse exitus;" but Orelli thinks that this passage is corrupt.

in integrum restituantur, . . rescindantur.] See the Index.

populares aut nobiles] The term 'nobiles' is explained elsewhere. 'Populares' is a common Roman term to express the leaders of the 'populus' in the sense which the word had in Cicero's time, or those who affected to consult the interests of the many as opposed to the interests of the few, or of the 'nobiles.' In this passage the 'nobiles' and the 'populares' are put in opposition, as the two rival parties in a state, but Cicero generally contrasts 'populares' with 'optimates,' the best people in the state, as they called themselves, the conservative party, which consisted of the senate, the rest of the nobility, and the Equites; in fact, all who attached themselves to the party. Yet as 'popularis' is one who favours the 'populus,' of whatever rank he might be, it often happened that one of the 'nobiles' chose the popular side, as the best means of promoting his own interests; and thus, though a 'nobilis,' he would not be one of the 'optimates,' but a 'popularis.' Cicero on several occasions explains the terms 'optimates' and 'populares,' and gives to each the complexion that suits his purpose (Pro Sestio, c. 45, 65; Pro Cluentio, c. 34). Thus his 'popularis homo' is sometimes the same as 'turbulentus.' Machiavelli (Istor. Fiorent. iii.) uses the same terms, "gli uomini Popolari e i Nobili," and characterizes them with his usual precision.

sed vero] Orelli remarks that 'sed' and 'vero' are seldom united in Cicero, so that 'vero' retains its original signification.

Imacharensi non idem fecisti? Quid, iste motus servorum bellicque subita suspicio, utrum tibi tandem diligentiam custodiendae provinciae an novam rationem improbissimi quaestus attulit? magnae pecuniae,] Ernesti prefixed 'et' to these words solely from conjecture. Zumpt properly ejected it; but he connects 'magnae pecuniae' with 'villicus,' and explains it to be a 'villicus' of great value. Klotz follows him. There is no doubt of the value of a good 'villicus,' and a master might gladly pay a large sum to save him. But the value of the 'villicus' was not so important here as the wealth of the master. Zumpt gives no instance to show that 'magnae pecuniae' can be taken in his sense. The instance which he quotes from Sallust (Bell. Jug. c. 85), to show the opinion of C. Marius of the relative value of a 'cook' and a 'villicus,' does not help us in the explanation. I take 'magnae pecuniae' to be the same as 'pecuniosus,' which occurs in this chapter, and in Lib. 4. c. 25. Orelli, who understands the passage aright, observes that some interpreters have connected 'magnae pecuniae' with 'insimulatus': 'qua servitia concitare posset.' But he observes that 'insimulari' occurs in c. 41 without any case. It is unnecessary to state all the objections against the common interpretations. There is no doubt about the sense of the passage.

honoris causa] 'Out of regard to Matrinus,' as Zumpt correctly explains it, or 'to show his respect to Matrinus.' Ernesti thought that 'Matrinii causa' would be sufficient, and so it might be; but Cicero did not think so. Zumpt cites Caesar (Bell. Gall. ii. 15): "Caesar honoris Divitiaci . . causa;" Cicero, Pro Rosc. Am. c. 35; Ad Attic. xv. 14. Also Livy, 32. c. 34.

mirabar] Better than the common reading 'mirari,' which would not agree with the fact. 'I was wondering,' says one of the by-standers, 'that Apollonius remained so long safe from the attacks of Verres.' He was no longer safe. Compare "nam sperabam, inquit" &c., Lib. 3. c. 85.—'excogitavit nescio quid: attulit:' Schuetz. I have followed Zumpt and Orelli.

Expectatio . . quidnam] This is the same as if he had said 'expectabant omnes quidnam;' so that the noun seems in a manner to perform the office of a verb. There are other instances in Cicero where this is still clearer, as where 'scientia' is followed by 'quid' (Act. i. c. 18): "scientiam quid agatur memoriamque quid a quoque dictum sit." In c. 14: "habeo rationem quid a populo Romano acceperim;" but in c. 28: "habebant rationem esset, quum exanimatus subito ipse accurrit cum adolescente filio; nam pater grandis natu jam diu lecto tenebatur. Nominat iste servum quem magistrum pecoris esse diceret: eum dicit conjurasse et familias concitasse. Is omnino servus in familia non erat. Eum statim exhiberi jubet. Apollonius affirmare se omnino nomine illo servum habere neminem. Iste hominem abripi a tribunali et in carcerem conjici jubet. Clamare ille quum raperetur, nihil se miserum fecisse, nihil commisisse, pecuniam sibi esse in nominibus, numeratam in praesentia non habere. Haec quum maxime summa hominum frequentia testificaretur, ut quivis intelligere posset eum quod pecuniam non dedisset, idcirco illa tam acerba injuria affici; quum maxime, ut dico, hoc de pecunia clamaret, in vincula conjectus est.

VIII. Videte constantiam praetoris, et ejus praetoris qui in iis rebus non ita defendatur ut mediocris praetor, sed ita laudetur ut optimus imperator. Quum servorum bellum metueretur, quo supplicio dominos indemnatos afficiebat, hoc servos damnatos liberabat: Apollonium, hominem locupletissimum, qui si fugitivi bellum in Sicilia facerent amplissimas fortunas amitteret, belli fugitivorum nomine, indicta causa, in vincla conjecit: servos quos ipse cum consilio belli faciendi causa consensisse judicavit, eos sine consilii sententia, sua sponte, omni supplicio liberavit. Quid, si aliquid ab Apollonio commissum est quamobrem jure in eum animadverteretur, tamenne hanc rem sic agemus ut crimini aut invidiae reo putemus esse oportere, si quo de homine severius judicaverit? Non agam tam acerbe: non utar ista accusatoria consuetudine, si quid est factum clementer, ut dissolute factum criminer; si quid vindicatum est severe, ut ex eo crudelitatis invidiam colligam. Non agam ista ratione; tua sequar judicia; tuam defendam auctoritatem, quoad tu voles: simul ac tute coeperis tua judicia rescinomnes quotidie piratarum qui securi ferirentur." The use of accusatives neuter, both in Greek and Latin, is much more loose or free than in the case of other words.—'omnium:' 'hominum:' Zumpt.

exhiberi] 'To be produced.' See Lib. 2. c. 78, note.

in nominibus,] He had money due to him, which in the next chapter is called 'pecuniis creditis.' See the explanation of 'nomina' (p. 116). 'Pecunia numerata' is money in coin. If he had it, he meant to say, he was ready to give it to the praetor.

cum consilio] 'Boni Codd. omnes de consilio' (Zumpt). I suppose that the 'mali' have 'cum consilio;' and they may be right. Lambinus suspects that Cicero wrote 'de consilii sententia.' This was a criminal affair, and was tried by the 'praetor' and a body of 'judices,' his 'consilium.' In c. 9 there is 'sententia sine consilio.' I suppose, then, we may say 'cum consilio.' Klotz, who has 'de consilio,' applies it to the slaves in the sense of 'purposely,' 'designedly.' If this is the explanation, it is an additional argument against the reading.

dere, mihi succensere desinito: meo enim jure contendam eum qui suo judicio damnatus sit juratorum judicum sententiis damnari oportere. Non defendam Apollonii causam, amici atque hospitis mei, ne tuum iudicium videar rescindere; nihil de hominis frugalitate, virtute, diligentia dicam; praetermittam illud etiam, de quo antea dixi, fortunas ejus ita constitutas fuisse familia, pecore, villis, pecuniis creditis, ut nemini minus expediret ullum in Sicilia tumultum aut bellum commoveri: non dicam ne illud quidem, si maxime in culpa fuerit Apollonius, tamen in hominem honestissimae civitatis honestissimum tam graviter animadverti causa indicta non oportuisse. Nullam in te invidiam ne ex illis quidem rebus concitabo, quum esset talis vir in carcere, in tenebris, in squalore, in sordibus, tyrannicis interdictis tuis, patri exacta aetate et adolescenti filio adeundi ad illum miserum potestatem nunquam esse factam. Etiam illud praeteribo, quotiescunque Panhormum veneris illo anno et sex mensibus, nam tamdiu fuit Apollonius in carcere, toties te senatum Panhormitanum adisse supplicem cum magistratibus sacerdotibusque publicis orantem atque obsecrantem ut aliquando ille miser atque innocens calamitate illa liberaretur. Relinquo haec omnia; quae si velim persequi, facile ostendam tua crudelitate in alios omnes tibi aditus misericordiae iudicum jampridem esse praeclusos.

IX. Omnia tibi ista concedam et remittam. Praevideo enim quid sit defensurus Hortensius: fatebitur apud istum neque senectutem patris, neque adolescentiam filii, neque lacrimas utriusque plus valuisse quam utilitatem salutemque provinciae: dicet rem publicam administrari sine metu ac severitate non posse: quaeret quamobrem fasces praetoribus praeferantur, cur secures datae, cur carcer aedificatus, cur tot supplicia sint in improbos more majorum constituta? Quae quum omnia graviter severeque dixerit, quaeram cur hunc eundem Apollonium Verres idem, repente, nulla re nova allata, nulla defensione, sine causa de carcere emitti jusserit: tantumque in hoc crimine suspicionis esse affirmabo ut jam ipsis iudicibus sine mea argumentatione conjecturam facere permittam, quod hoc genus praedandi, quam improbum, quam indignum, quamfasces praetoribus] Hotmann informs us that in the provinces 'lictors' carried six 'fasces' before a 'propraetor,' at the extremity of which were the axes. This could hardly be news, even in his time.

Cicero makes an apt allusion to these symbols of authority in his letter to his brother Quintus (i. 1. c. 4), when he was governor of Asia: "majoraque praeferant fasces illi ac secures dignitatis insignia quam potestatis."

que ad magnitudinem quaestus immensum infinitumque esse videatur. Nam quae iste in Apollonio fecit, ea primum breviter cognoscite, quot et quanta sint; deinde haec expendite atque aestimate pecunia: reperietis idcirco haec in uno homine pecunioso tot constituta, ut ceteris formidines similium incommodorum atque exempla periculorum proponerentur. Primum insimulatio est repentina capitalis atque invidiosi criminis: statuite quanti hoc putetis et quam multos redemisse: deinde crimen sine accusatore, sententia sine consilio, damnatio sine defensione: aestimate harum omnium rerum pretia, et cogitate in his iniquitatibus unum haesisse Apollonium, ceteros profecto multos ex his incommodis pecunia se liberasse: postremo tenebrae, vincula, carcer, inclusum supplicium, a conspectu parentum ac liberum, denique a libero spiritu atque a communi luce seclusum: haec vero, quae vel vita redimi recte possint, aestimare pecunia non queo. Haec omnia sero redemit Apollonius, jam maerore ac miseriis perditus; sed tamen ceteros docuit ante istius avaritiae ac sceleri occurrere: nisi vero existimatis hominem pecuniosissimum sine causa quaestus electum ad tam incredibile crimen, aut sine eadem causa repente e carcere emissum; aut hoc praedandi genus ab isto in illo uno adhibitum et temptatum, et non per illum omnibus pecuniosis Siculis metum propositum et injectum.

sine causa quaestus] ‘Sine aliqua causa quaestus,’ the common reading; but all the good MSS. omit ‘aliqua’ (Zumpt). As to ‘causa,’ see Lib. 4. c. 51.

10. non ad Q. Maximi] Zumpt and Klotz and Orelli have made this the beginning of a new sentence. The words ‘ne diutius’ have generally been made the beginning of the sentence, but these editors re gerunda celeritatem, neque ad hujus qui postea fuit singulare consilium, neque ad Paulli rationem ac disciplinam, neque ad C. Marii vim atque virtutem, sed ad aliud genus imperatorum sane diligenter retinendum et conservandum—quaeso, cognoscite. Itinerum primum laborem qui vel maximus est in re militari, judices, et in Sicilia maxime necessarius, accipite quam facilem sibi iste et jucundum ratione consilioque reddiderit. Hic have attached them to the end of the preceding sentence.

Zumpt also reads 'ne quis diutius . . possit,' following three MSS. He also reads 'sed aliud genus imperatoris,' upon the authority of 'secundum Stephanum et Codd. Reg. Guelf. 1.' The words 'plura genera . . ex quo genere sit,' are against this. The sense, then, of the first sentence is this: "The sum of the matter results in this; you must learn, since there are several kinds of 'imperatores,' what kind Verres belongs to."

Klotz says that the construction of the sentence 'non ad,' &c., appears somewhat abrupt, and that we must supply a 'qui accedat' in the first member.

The text of Orelli and Klotz is the same as Zumpt's, except that they have 'ne qui diutius,' &c. But these editors don't agree about the interpretation. The 'ad,' according to Graevius and Orelli, means 'in comparison with' (im Vergleich—mit); and the passages Pro Deiot. 8: "Veteres credo," &c.; and De Or. ii. 6: "nihil ad Persium," are quoted. Zumpt objects to this: his explanation is the following: "Cognoscite eum, qualis fuerit, non ut Maximum aliquem aut Scipionem aut Marium sed ut aliud quoddam novum genus imperatoris in civitate diligenter retineatis." This, I think, is nearer the meaning, and it is unimportant whether the 'ad' before 'aliud' is added or omitted. I prefer keeping it. There only then remains the difference between 'imperatoris' and 'imperatorum;' and the question whether the sentence begins with 'ne diutius,' or 'ne quis diutius,' and 'non ad.' I have adopted the reading of Orelli's larger edition, with the punctuation slightly altered. The meaning is this: "That in such a dearth of brave men, you may no longer be strangers to such an imperator—I pray you, make yourselves acquainted with him." The words 'non ad Q. Maximi . . retinendum et conservandum' are thrown in parenthetically, and I explain them as Zumpt does.

fluminum] The rains in Sicily are often very heavy in the winter, and owing to the hilly nature of the country, and their short course, the streams become difficult to pass during heavy rains. The regular rains do not commence till November, between which month and March they fall often in heavy torrents. "The violent rains that deluge the island at this season swell the rivers, damage the roads, and set the Fiumare running: these are torrents, occasioned by the waters descending from the mountains into deep ravines, through which they rush with impetuosity into the sea, carrying every thing before them.—The boisterous force of the Fiumare while flowing, the badness of the roads, and the want of bridges, render travelling in the winter dangerous, and at times wholly impracticable" (Smyth's Sicily, p. 7).

solem] This happy climate, where the sun is seen every day in the year, is also attributed to Rhodes by Pliny, and to Alexandria by Ammianus Marcellinus (xxii. 16). Seneca, in the consolation to Marcia (c. 17), says the same of Syracuse, but he gives a bad account of the summer climate. Compare Livy, xxv. 25.—'quin . . viderent,' is the common reading and that of Ernesti. Zumpt wonders that he did not see that it ought to be 'viderint.' Madvig, quoted by Orelli, remarks: "nulla est hic temporum historica, quam dicunt, consecutio, sed absolute unam certam definitamque rem omnino factam dicit."

Nam, ut mos fuit Bithyniae regibus, lectica octophoro ferebatur, in qua pulvinus erat perlucidus Melitensis, rosa fartus: ipse autem coronam habebat unam in capite, alteram in collo, reticulumque ad nares sibi admovebat, tenuissimo lino, minutis maculis, plenum rosae. Sic confecto itinere, quum ad aliquod oppidum venerat, eadem lectica usque in cubiculum deferebatur. Eo veniebant Siculorum magistratus, veniebant equites Romani, id quod ex multis juratis audistis: controversiae secreto deferebantur, paulo post palam decreta auferebantur. Verres waited for the blooming of the roses. He did not reckon the commencement of spring in the usual way. Varro (De R. R. 1. 28), quoted by Hotmann, says "dies primus est veris in Aquario," &c. Zumpt refers to Pliny, H. N. xxi. 11.

sedentem viderit.] 'Videret' is the common reading; but there is better authority for 'viderit.' These forms are often confounded. Madvig remarks that 'videret' is a universal negation, and is not much more than 'videre soleret;' the perfect, with the addition of 'nemo unquam,' signifies that it did not take place even once.

octophoro] He was carried in a litter or palanquin by eight men. His cushion was of the fine linen of Malta (Lib. 2. c. 72), stuffed with rose-leaves. He had a small bag of the finest thread, with small spots or prints upon it, probably worked with the needle of some of the skilful women of Malta, and in this he kept his roses.

Travelling in a lettiga (lectica) is still used in Sicily. The lettiga is a kind of narrow chaise, with room for two persons to sit opposite to each other, mounted on two long poles, and carried by mules at the average rate of three miles and a half an hour (Smyth's Sicily, p. 8). But this is not a Roman 'lectica,' which was intended for reclining. The 'sella' was for sitting, a kind of sedan.

Klotz refers to Böttiger's Sabina, Th. ii. p. 181, 204, 212. He adds that at a later period the Roman ladies generally used such 'lecticae,' and that the practice was derived from Asia, whence they also got chair-bearers (lecticarii). The use of these 'lecticae' was not confined to luxurious persons, for Servius Sulpicius used one (Cicero, Ep. ad Div. iv. 12). His health was probably not good. Lipsius (Elect. i. c. 19. Vol. 1. ed. Vesal.) has, as usual, all the learning in this matter. The 'lectica' was not common in Italy about the time of C. Gracchus, as an extract from one of his speeches shows (Gellius, x. 3). The Bithynian origin of the 'lectica' seems hinted at by Catullus, or at least Bithynia was a country where a man might supply himself with porters for his 'lectica.'

"At certe tamen, inquiunt, quod illic Natum dicitur esse, comparasti Ad lecticam homines."

Nam scitote oppidum esse in Sicilia nullum ex iis oppidis in quibus consistere praetores et conventum agere solent, quo in oppido non isti ex aliqua familia non ignobili delecta ad libidinem mulier esset. Itaque nonnullae ex eo numero in convivium adhibebantur palam; si quae castiores erant, ad tempus veniebant, lucem conventumque vitabant. Erant autem convivia non illo silentio praetorum populi Rom. atque imperatorum, neque eo pudore qui in magistratuum conviviiis versari solet, sed cum maximo clamore atque convicio: nonnunquam etiam res ad pugnam atque ad manus vocabatur. Iste enim praetor severus ac diligens qui populi Romani legibus nunquam paruisset, illis diligenter legibus quae in poculis ponebantur obtemperabat. conventum . . solent,] Zumpt has 'soleant' from some MSS., I am not quite certain which. Of 'soleant' he says, "prorsus e consuetudine scriptoris, ubi ambitus rei accuratius definiendus est." I don't clearly understand him; but the indicative is admissible here. And we have the form in this chapter 'qui . . versari solet.' Madvig says "solent non improbandum per se est," which is rather an unmeaning expression; however, he gives a reason for preferring 'soleant.' I believe either form will do, but with the indicative it expresses "the towns in which the praetors are accustomed to hold a 'conventus,'" and there was a limited number. With the subjunctive it would mean 'any towns in which,' &c. A little further Orelli writes 'qui in magistratuum . . soleat:' and he has 'soleant' here.

Zumpt concludes from Lib. 2. c. 26, that the four cities in which the 'conventus' were held were Syracusae, Agrigentum, Lilybaeum, and Panhormus; and it may be so. But we cannot with certainty conclude from that chapter that there were not others. These four cities were conveniently placed for the division of the island into four 'conventus;' for the term 'conventus' was also applied to the district of which the people 'conveniebant in quemdam locum.' Thus Pliny says (H. N. iv. 22) of Lusitania: "Universa provincia dividitur in conventus tres, Emeritensem, Pacensem, Scalabitanum.

offendit,] Some of the old editions have 'ostenditur,' a conjecture. Naugerius restored the reading of the most MSS. (offenditur); and Hervagius, having got a MS. of a better family, wrote 'offendit.' The active termination is in the best MSS., even the Guelf (Zumpt). Klotz and Orelli, who have 'offendit,' adopt Madvig's explanation, that 'servos' is to be supplied, and we are to consider that Cicero is speaking of the season in which the slaves, on account of the oppressive labour, are most easily excited to rebellion. Zumpt, following the opinion of Lambinus, takes 'offenditur' to be the true reading, and to have the sense of 'deprehenditur.' But, as Madvig observes, Zumpt cannot produce an instance of this use of 'offenditur.' Madvig considers all the passage, down to 'non impedit,' to refer to the slaves, and that Cicero enumerates all those things which at this season of the year could chiefly excite the slaves to a rising. This passage is difficult, and, as opinions may differ about it, I give Madvig's full interpretation: "Scilicet haec omnia ad servos referenda sunt, enumeranturque ea, quae servos ad bellum hoc potissimum anni tempore concitare possunt; quod ne oriatur, ideo praetor provinciam obire tum solet: aestate familiae congregabantur; itaque occultae conjurationis occasio erat; magnitudo servitii perspiciebatur; ergo vires fiduciam dabant; labor messis gravissimus erat; itaque animi offensi et irati, ad arma proni; frumenti copia parata bellantibus, tempus anni rebus gerendis aptum." Zumpt has 'et frumenti,' but 'et' is omitted by the best MSS.; and the omission makes the sense plainer. 'Tempus anni non impedit' clearly refers to the convenience of the praetor. His object in visiting the province was to see the amount of produce; and the words 'frumenti copia commonet' refer to the praetor. He went to see the slaves too. He would have the opportunity of seeing them collected, and of ascertaining their numbers. I do not doubt that one object of the praetor's circuit was to look after the slaves; but that was not all. As to the revolt of the slaves, the best season for them would be the winter, when the communications were difficult. I do not believe that Madvig's interpretation of 'labor operis maxime offendit' is true. But it is very difficult to suggest what is meant.

dicatur turbas, quum indigne pateretur uxor Cleomenis Syracusani, nobilis mulier, itemque uxor Aeschrionis, honesto loco nata, in conventum suum mimi Isidori filiam venisse. Iste autem Hannibal qui in suis castris virtute putaret oportere non genere certari, sic hanc Tertiam dilexit ut eam secum ex provincia deportaret. Ac per hos dies quum iste cum pallio purpureo talarique tunica versaretur in conviviis muliebribus, non offendeabantur homines; neque moleste ferebant abesse a foro magistratum, non jus dici, non judicia fieri, locum illum littoris percrepare totum mulierum vocibus cantuque symphoniae, in foro silentium esse summum causarum atque juris: non ferebant homines moleste; non enim jus abesse videbatur a foro neque judicia, sed vis et crudelitas et bonorum acerba et indigna direptio.

XIII. Hunc tu igitur imperatorem esse defendis, Hortensi? hujus furta, rapinas, cupiditatem, crudelitatem, superbiam, scelus, audaciam rerum gestarum magnitudine atque imperatoriis laudibus tegere conaris? Hic scilicet est metuendum ne ad exitum defensionis tuae vetus illa Antoniana dicendi ratio atque auctoritas proferatur; ne excitetur Verres, ne denudetur a pectore, ne cicatrices populus Romanus aspiciat, ex mulierum morsu vestigia libidinis atque nequitiae. Dii faciant ut rei militaris, ut belli mentionem facere audeas. Cognoscentur enim omnia istius aera illa vetera, ut non solum in imperio verum etiam in stipendiis qualis fuerit intelligatis. Renovabitur prima illa militia, quum iste e foro abduci, non, ut ipse praedicat, perduci solebat: aleatoris Placentini Hannibal] The allusion is, as Manutius supposes, to the expression of Hannibal, as we have it in Ennius (p. 100, ed. Hessel):

“Hostem qui feriet mihi erit Carthaginensis Quisquis erit.”

per hos] The common reading is ‘per eos.’

talarique] The MSS. have ‘parique,’ in which there is no sense. The text is an emendation of Naugerius, founded on the expression in c. 33.

The ‘pallium’ was a Greek garment, or rather the Roman name for it. The ‘tunica talaris’ was a woman’s dress, as Gellius (vii. 12) informs us: “feminisque solis vestem longe lateque diffusam decoram existimaverunt ad ulnas cruraque adversus oculos protegenda.”

Horace (1 Sat. ii. 25) describes the two extremes of the tunicated vest:

“Malthinus tunicis demissis ambulat: est qui Inguen ad obscenum subductis usque facetus.”

13. aera illa vetera,] His old campaigns, the ‘aera’ being the soldiers’ pay. Here ‘aera’ is equivalent to ‘stipendia.’

abduci,] This is a foul allusion. The sense of ‘perduci’ is not so clear. ‘Ad meretrices,’ says Manutius, as Verres would have it, to avoid a worse imputation. Graevius has a note on the passage. He takes ‘perduci’ in the ordinary sense, like ‘duci,’ not in the sense in which ‘perductores’ occurs in Lib. 1. c. 12, and elsewhere. He says that ‘perduci’ here means ‘in forum duci, ut solebant nobiles pueri quum primum praetextam deponerent.’ Klotz takes ‘abduci’ in the same sense that others do; as to ‘perduci,’ he says that it means ‘in forum,’ and adds that the expression ‘per-castra commemorabuntur, in quibus quum frequens fuisset, tamen aere dirutus est: multa ejus in stipendiis damna proferentur quae ab isto aetatis fructu dissoluta et compensata sunt. Jam vero quum in ejusmodi patientia turpitudinis aliena non sua satietate obduruisset, qui vir fuerit, quot praesidia, quam munita, pudoris et pudicitiae vi et audacia ceperit, quid me attinet dicere, aut conjungere cum istius flagitio cujusquam praeterea dedecus? Non faciam, judices: omnia vetera praeternittam: duo sola recentia sine cujusquam infamia ponam, ex quibus conjecturam facere de omnibus possitis: unum illud, quod ita fuit illustre notumque omnibus ut nemo tam rusticanus homo L. Lucullo et M. Cotta consulibus Romam ex ullo municipio vadimonii causa venerit quin sciret jura omnia praetoris urbani nutu atque arbitrio Chelidonis meretriculae gubernari: alterum, quod, quum paludatus exisset, votaue pro imperio suo communique re publica nuncupasset, noctu stupri causa lectica in urbem introferri solitus est ad mulierem, nuptam uni, propositam omnibus, contra fas, contra auspicia, contra omnes divinas atque humanas religiones.

XIV. O dii immortales, quid interest inter mentes hominum et cogitationes? Ita mihi meam voluntatem spemque reliquae vitae duci in forum' is sufficiently known. His translation is 'wo er sich vom Forum entfernen, als Knabe zu schändlichem Dienste, nicht hinführen liess, um daselbst sich zu unterrichten.' Orelli's remark is "abduci, a creditore aliquo propter aes alienum: perduci, ad amatorem a lenone." I cannot explain the passage.

aere dirutus] Explained by Festus and others. Festus: "Dirutum aere militem dicebant antiqui, cui stipendium ignominiae causa non erat datum: quod aes diruebatur in fiscum, non in militis sacculum." Festus should have said 'in aerarium.' Verres is compared to a soldier who lost his pay through misconduct in his campaigns (in stipendiis)—"sed eandem diminutionem pecuniae Verres cum sensisset, quod nimis frequens in istis castris aleatoriis esset, detrimentum resarsit pudicitia prodenda," as Zumpt has it.

Romam . . . vadimonii causa] See Lib. 3. c. 15. The year of these consuls was the year of the praetorship of Verres at Rome, B.C. 74.

praetoris urbani] 'Populi Romani,' the common codices and the old editions. Orelli also has it. But several of the best MSS. have 'praetoris urbani.' Orelli says that 'jura omnia praetoris urbani' is an expression of which there is no other instance. Here it must be taken as equivalent to 'omne jus praetorium.' "Solita confusio notarum pr. et p. r. et r. p. turbas h. l. dedit" (Zumpt).

paludatus] When the consul or praetor went forth with 'imperium,' he put on the 'paludamentum.' "Paludamenta (Varro, De L. L. vii. 37, ed. Müller) insignia et ornamenta militaria." He gives an absurd etymology of the word. The exercise of the 'militare imperium,' which was conferred on a consul or a praetor, "began from the moment when the consul or the praetor, after making the solemn vows in the capitol, left the city preceded by the lictors, 'secundum vota in Capitolio nuncupata paludatus cum lictoribus proficiscebatur,' or 'in provinciam ibat;' and it ended as soon as he returned and crossed the 'pomoerium, or if he had a triumph, as soon as it was over" (Becker, Handbuch, &c., 2^{ter} Th. p. 65).

Some of the passages in Livy, as to the 'votorum nuncupatio' and the 'paludamentum' are the following: xxi. 63; xxxi. 14; xlii. 49; xlv. 39.

communiqué re publica] 'Communique populi Romani,' the common reading. Orelli observes, "exempla hujus formulae collegit Gronov. Obs. 1, 12, p. 83."

vestra populi que Romani existimatio comprobet, ut ego quos adhuc mihi magistratus populus Romanus mandavit, sic eos accepi ut me omnium officiorum obstringi religione arbitrarer. Ita quaestor sum factus ut mihi illum honorem tum non solum datum sed etiam creditum et commissum putarem: sic obtinui quaesturam in Sicilia provincia ut omnium oculos in me coniectos esse arbitrarer, ut me quaesturamque meam quasi in aliquo terrarum orbis theatro versari existimarem; ut semper omnia, quae jucunda esse videntur, ea non modo his extraordinariis cupiditatibus sed etiam ipsi naturae ac necessitati denegarem. Nunc sum designatus aedilis: habeo rationem quid a populo Romano acceperim: mihi ludos sanctissimos maxima cum cura et caerimonia Cereri, Libero Liberaeque faciendos, mihi Floram matrem populo plebique Romanae ludorum celebritate placandam, mihi ludos antiquissimos, qui primi Romani appellati

14. datum . . . creditum, &c.] Zumpt says 'damus simpliciter, credimus quod grave putamus, committimus quod carum habemus.' No doubt Cicero means to strengthen his expression. But these distinctions which critics make are not worth much. 'Credimus' is properly said of something that is to be restored, whence we have the correlatives 'creditor' and 'debitor,' which indeed comprehend any case in which one person has a claim on another, and that other owes to him a duty. Cicero in another place (Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 8) expresses the notion of a thing intrusted, which is to be restored by qualifying 'datum' thus: "quonam modo retinenda sunt iis quibus imperium ita datum est ut redderent." 'Committo' is often applied to cases where we intrust something, of course which is dear to us, to a person's good faith. Examples are abundant.

theatro] Cicero has the same form of expression in a corrupted passage in the letter Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 14: "Quare quoniam ejusmodi theatrum est," &c.

designatus aedilis:] He was 'aedilis curulis.' The duties of the 'aediles' are fully discussed in Becker's Handbuch, &c., 2^{ter} Th. 2^{te} Abth. p. 291. Cicero (Pro Murena, c. 19) mentions his superintendence of the Ludi Cereales, the Floralia, and the Ludi Romani. The words 'Cereri, Libero Liberaeque' must be referred to the Cerealia. Orelli compares Tacit. Ann. ii. 49: 'Libero Liberaeque et Cereri.' The superintendence of the temples is here mentioned as within the province of the 'aediles' (sacrarum aedium procuratio), which is explained to mean, that they had to see that the temples and other public buildings were maintained in good condition, and were not used improperly by private persons, or injured. See the Tab. Heracl. l. v. 68. QVAE LOCA PVBLICA, &c. They had also the general superintendence of police, and of matters which concerned the public health (totam urbem . . . commissam). Their duties were indeed very multifarious.

Among other privileges Cicero mentions 'antiquiorem . . . locum.' The aedile had a prior rank (antiquior) in giving his opinion in the senate, that is, he took precedence by virtue of his office. The 'sella curulis' was the official seat or chair of the 'aedilis curulis,' and of the 'magistratus' who were above the 'aediles curules.' The seat 'sella,' a diminutive from the form 'sedi,' as if it were 'sedula,' was ornamented with ivory, whence the expression 'curule ebur.' It is most usually spoken of with reference to the 'praetor,' and is often simply called 'sella,' as in these orations. The etymology which Gellius gives (iii. 18, after Gabius Bassus) from 'currus' is incorrect, nor can the derivation from 'curia' be accepted. In Sueton. Augustus, c. 22, there is, however, the expression 'Curulis triumphus.'

Plutarch (Marius, c. 5) derives 'curulis' from the curved form of the chair, or rather the legs, so that it would contain the crude form 'curvo:' δύο γὰρ εἰσι τάξεις ἀγορανομίων, ἡ μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν δίφρων τῶν ἀγκυλοπόδων ἐφ' ὧν καθιζόμενοι χρηματίζουσιν ἔχουσα τοῦνομα τῆς ἀρχῆς. This corresponds with the form of the legs in what are supposed to be representations of the 'sella curulis,' as they are given in Smith's Dict. of Antiquis.

sunt, cum dignitate maxima et religione Jovi, Junoni, Minervaeque esse faciundos, mihi sacrarum aedium procurationem, mihi totam urbem tuendam esse commissam: ob earum rerum laborem et sollicitudinem fructus illos datos, antiquiorem in senatu sententiae dicendae locum, togam praetextam, sellam curulem, jus imaginis ad memoriam posteritatemque prodendam. Ex his ego rebus omnibus, iudices, ita mihi omnes deos propitios velim, etiamsi mihi jucundissimus est honos populi, tamen nequaquam capio tantum voluptatis quantum et sollicitudinis et laboris, ut haec ipsa aedilitas, non quia jus imaginis] See Lib. 3. c. 4. In this passage the 'codd. vulgares et edd. vet.' have 'jus, imagines . . . prodendam.' But the best MSS. have 'imaginis.' As to 'prodendam,' all the MSS. agree, but Gronovius altered it to 'prodendae.' The expression in the oration Pro Rabirio Post. c. 7, is "imago ipsa ad posteritatis memoriam prodita." The form in which it is given, p. 270, is simply a quotation from Becker, which of course I did not alter. Zumpt has altered the text to 'prodendae,' as he does not think that 'prodendam' is capable of explanation. Orelli also has 'prodendae.' If 'posteritatemque' were omitted, there would be no difficulty. The 'jus imaginis' would be for the purpose of transmitting a memorial of the person. 'Posteritas' is the state or condition of 'posteri,' and is generally used by Latin writers precisely as our word 'posterity' is. But there is perhaps no reason against its being taken in the sense of a 'futurity' generally, 'an after existence,' or something of the kind. There is a passage in Cicero in which it seems to have a sense very near this, Tusc. l. 15: "quum optimus quisque posteritati maxime serviat," which Forcellini explains to mean 'famae apud posteros.' Klotz defends 'prodendam,' and maintains that 'posteritas' can have the sense of our 'futurity;' and he considers 'ad memoriam posteritatemque' to be equivalent to 'ad memoriam posteritatis,' a phrase which Quintilian uses (Inst. Or. x. 1, 41). There is a use of 'posteritas' in Lib. 3. c. 50 and 55, which seems to help a little to the understanding of 'posteritas' in this passage.

The two principal passages as to the 'imagines' are Polybius (vi. 53) and Pliny (H. N. xxxv. 2). These 'imagines' or masks of wax (expressi cera vultus) were made to represent the person both in features and complexion; and they were placed in wooden boxes or niches (armaria) on the walls of the Atrium. The 'tituli' of the deceased, the titles of honour which he had gained in his life were written near the receptacle of the 'imago;' and the 'imagines' were so arranged and connected by lines (lineae) as to show the degrees of consanguinity of the several persons. This arrangement of the figures by lines made what the Romans called a 'stemma.' Probably the arrangement was something like our fashion of drawing up a pedigree. Pliny says "stemmata vero lineis discurrebant ad imagines pictas." The allusions to this practice are numerous in the Roman writers (Juvenal, viii. 1). It appears from a passage of Isidorus (Orig. ix. 6)—"stemmata dicuntur ramusculi, quos advocati faciunt in genere, cum gradus cognationis partiuntur,"—that the lawyers adopted this practice of drawing up degrees of consanguinity, as we see in the table of consanguinity in any of the ordinary editions of the Institutes of Justinian. These 'imagines' were not made until after death; and of course a 'novus homo,' like Cicero, could have no 'imagines.' He could only transmit his 'imago' to his descendants. The 'imagines' of a family were taken out of their cases on funeral occasions, and carried in the funeral procession (Tacit. Ann. iv. 9). The effigies of ancestors with their 'tituli' were placed in the 'atria,' that their descendants might not only see the records of their virtues, but imitate them also (Val. Max. v. 8. 3). Polybius considered this practice as conducing to a spirit of emulation. Whether a modern portrait gallery in a large house has this effect or not, I do not know. Becker, Handbuch ii. 1. p. 220, has collected the passages concerning the 'imagines.'

ita mihi . . . deos] See Divin. c. 13, where the better order is 'ita mihi deos,' instead of 'ita deos mihi.'

necesse fuerit, alicui candidato data, sed quia sic oportuerit, recte collocata et iudicio populi in loco posita esse videatur.

XV. Tu, quum esses praetor renunciatus, quoquo modo—mitto enim et praetereo quid tum sit actum—sed quum esses renunciatus, ut dixi, non ipsa praeconis voce excitatus es qui te toties seniorum juniorumque centuriis illo honore affici pronuntiavit, ut hoc putares aliquam rei publicae partem tibi creditam? annum illum unum domo tibi carendum esse meretricis? Quum tibi sorte obtigisset uti jus diceres, quantum negotii, quid oneris haberes nunquam cogitasti? neque illud rationis habuisti, si forte expergefacerere te posses, provinciam illam, quam tueri singulari sapientia atque integritate difficile esset, ad summam stultitiam nequitiamque venisse? Itaque non modo a domo tua Chelidonem in praetura excludere noluisti, sed in Chelidonis domum praeturam totam detulisti. Secuta provincia est: in qua nunquam tibi venit in mentem, non tibi idcirco fasces ac secures et tantam imperii vim tantamque ornamentorum omnium dignitatem datam, ut earum rerum vi et auctoritate omnia repagula pudoris officiique perfringeres, ut omnium bona praedam tuam duceres, ut nullius res tuta, nullius domus clausa, nullius vita septa, nullius pudicitia munita contra tuam cupiditatem et audaciam in loco] 'i.e. suo et idoneo:' Zumpt. And we do not require the addition of 'digno,' which is in some old editions.

15. toties seniorum, &c.] On the voting in the Comitia Centuriata, see Becker, Handbuch, ii. 3, p. 100, &c. A 'praeco' proclaimed the result of the votes; probably there were many 'praecones' (Cic. De Leg. Agr. ii. 2: "neque singulae voces praecorum"). Zumpt asks how often proclaimed; and he answers, at least 97 times, for all the 'centuriae' are 193. There were 18 'centuriae' of the 'equites'; and five 'centuriae' in each tribe distributed into 'juniores' and 'seniores.' The 'tribus' were summoned according to age (Liv. xxvi. 22) and 'classes' (Cic. Philipp. ii. 33). Each age, that is the 'juniores' and 'seniores,' had two 'centuriae' and a half. The first 'classis' alone had one 'centuria' out of the 'juniores' and 'seniores,' which would give to the first 'classis' 70 'centuriae.' The remaining one and a half were distributed among the other 'classes.' Accordingly Cicero (De Re Pub. ii. 22) becomes intelligible, when he says, that if the 'equites' are added to the first 'classis,' with one 'centuria' of Fabri, which in all make 89, there is no occasion to summon out of the rest more than eight 'centuriae,' for a majority of 97 will thus be obtained. Zumpt adds at the end of this note: "I nunc et querere locum illum desperatum esse." It would be foreign to the purpose to investigate this matter further, as it does not belong to the explanation of the text. The Classes and Centuriae are discussed by Becker, Handbuch, ii. 1, p. 198, where there are ample references to the ancient texts and to the modern writers on this subject. The passage of Cicero, De Re Pub. ii. 22, is discussed. Both Livy and Dionysius assign 80 'centuriae' to the first 'classis.' Savigny (Vermischte Schriften, vol. 1) has an essay on the 'Verbindung der Centurien mit den Tribus.'

provinciam illam,] That is 'jurisdictio,' which is said properly of the Praetor Urbanus et Peregrinus only. Orelli has 'eam provinciam.'

ad summam stultitiam, &c.] 'Ad te omnium stultissimum ac nequissimum:' Manutius. Hotmann misunderstood the passage, and thought it was corrupted.—'praeturam tuam totam:' Orelli.

posset esse: in qua tu te ita gessisti, ut omnibus quum tenere rebus, ad bellum fugitivorum confugas; ex quo jam intelligis non modo nullam tibi defensionem sed maximam vim criminum exortam. Nisi forte Italici fugitivorum belli reliquias atque illud Tempsanum incommodum proferes; ad quod recens quum te peropportune fortuna attulisset si quid in te virtutis aut industriae habuisses, idem qui semper fueras inventus es.

XVI. Quum ad te Valentini venissent, et pro his homo disertus ac nobilis, M. Marius, loqueretur ut negotium susciperes, ut, quum penes te praetorium nomen esset, ad illam parvam manum extinguendam ducem te principemque praeberes, non modo id refugisti, sed eo ipso tempore quum esses in littore, Tertia illa tua quam tu tecum deportaras erat in omnium conspectu; ipsis autem Valentinis, ex tam illustri nobilique municipio, tantis de rebus responsum dedisti quum esses cum tunica pulla et pallio. Quid hunc proficiscentem, quid in ipsa provincia fecisse existimatis, qui quum jam ex provincia non ad triumphum, sed ad iudicium decederet, ne illam quidem infamiam fugerit quam sine ulla voluptate capiebat? O divina senatus frequentis in aede Bellonae admurmuratio! Memoria tenetis, iudices, quum advesperasceret et paulo ante esset de hoc Tempsano incommodo nuntiatum, quum inveniretur nemo qui in illa loca cum imperio mitteretur, dixisse quendam, Verrem esse non longe a Tempa. Quam valde universi admurmuraverunt, quam Tempsanum] The place is Temesa or Tempa, mentioned by Homer as it seems (Od. i. 184); and by Strabo (p. 255). From this we may collect that it was seized by some of the bands of Spartacus at the close of the Servile war, for Verres at this time was returning to Rome from Sicily.

16. Valentini] The Valentini were the inhabitants of Vibo, or Vibo Valentia, as it was sometimes called. Its original name was Hippo and Hipponium. It is now Monte Leone, on the west coast of Italy, and the name is preserved in Bivona, the name of the port. Cicero calls it a 'municipium'; but Livy (xxxv. 40) and Paterculus call it a Roman colony. The difference at this time was unimportant, for after the passing of the Lex Julia the inhabitants were Roman citizens.

responsum] Orelli observes that Regius and Leid. have 'responsum' only without 'nullum.' Zumpt has 'nullum,' and does not notice this variation. Madvig asks, what is the meaning of its being said, what dress he wore, not when he did something, but when he did nothing? The scandal was, that he gave his answer on such an occasion to such people in such a dress.

pulla et pallio.] He wore a dark-coloured 'tunica,' the dress of slaves and of the lowest class, and the 'pallium,' or Greek upper vest, instead of the Roman light-coloured 'tunica' and the 'toga' with the insignia of a senator on them.

proficiscentem.] Ernesti refers this to the time when Verres was leaving Rome for his province. Zumpt to his being in the province, or, as he expresses it, 'proficiscentem in provincia,' and refers to c. 11.

admurmuraverunt.] Zumpt, on the authority of the codd. Guelf., has the indicative instead of the common reading 'admurmurarint;' and he then corrects the common reading 'contradixerint.' Orelli says that Cod. Leid. has 'dixerunt contra;' and he observes that 'contra dicere' in Cicero is always written in two words. Klotz has the subjunctive.

palam principes contradixerunt? Et his tot criminibus testimoniisque convictus in eorum tabella spem sibi aliquam proponit, quorum omnium palam causa incognita voce damnatus est?

XVII. Esto, nihil ex fugitivorum bello aut suspicione belli laudis adeptus est, quod neque bellum ejusmodi neque belli periculum fuit in Sicilia neque ab isto provisum est ne quod esset: at vero contra bellum praedonum classem habuit ornatam, diligentiamque in eo singularem; itaque ab isto praeclare defensa provincia est. Sic de bello praedonum, sic de classe Siciliensi, iudices, dicam ut hoc jam ante confirmem, in hoc uno genere omnes inesse culpas istius maximas, avaritiae, majestatis, dementiae, libidinis, crudelitatis. Haec dum breviter expono, quaeso, ut fecistis adhuc, diligenter attendite. Rem navalem primum ita dico esse administratam, non uti provincia defenderetur sed uti classis nomine pecunia quaeretur. Superiorum praetorum consuetudo quum haec fuisset, ut naves civitatibus certusque numerus nautarum militumque imperaretur, maximae et locupletissimae civitati Mamertinae nihil horum imperavisti. Ob hanc rem quid tibi Mamertini clam dederint pecuniae, post si videbitur ex ipsorum literis testibusque quaeremus. Navem vero cybaeam maximam, triremis instar, pulcherrimam atque ornatissimam, palam aedificatam sumptu publico, sciente tota Sicilia, per magistratum senatumque Mamertinum tibi datam donatamque esse dico. Haec navis, onusta praeda Siciliensi, quum ipsa quoque

17. bellum ejusmodi] 'Nor was there any such war,' a common use of 'ejusmodi' in these orations.—'neque ab isto provisum.' Manutius observes "potius opera data est ut aliquod esset liberatis post condemnationem Leonidae servis." He understands it to be said ironically, but it may be understood in its plain sense. 'Well, it may be said that he got no glory from a servile war, or from the alarm of a servile war, because there was not any war of the kind, nor danger of a war in Sicily, nor did he take any precautions against there being a war. But, on the other hand, to oppose a piratical war he had a well-equipped fleet, and showed in that matter unusual activity; accordingly the province was well defended by this governor now before you.'

ab isto praeclare] 'Ab isto praetore praeclare:' Orelli.

naves . . imperaretur,] See Lib. 1. c. 34. As to 'cybaeam,' Lib. 4. c. 8. instar,] Is a noun not declined, and means 'magnitude,' 'size,' and the like, as appears from c. 34. It is used by Ulpian palam aedificatam, &c.] If we accept all that several of the MSS. offer, we shall have 'palam aedificatam sumptu publico, tuo nomine, publice.' Zumpt and Orelli agree that some of these words are a gloss, but they differ as to which must be ejected. Orelli writes 'aedificatam tuo nomine, publice,' for he says that 'sumptu publico' is the gloss of 'publice.' Zumpt thinks that 'tuo nomine publice' have been taken in from the margin. I see no objection to all the words. Zumpt omits 'senatumque,' and has 'magistratumque.' He explains it thus: "senatus populusque Mamertinus dedit per magistratum suum quem unum habebant." Other instances of a single 'magistratus,' a 'proagorus,' in Sicilian towns are mentioned in Lib. 1. c. 17, 34; Lib. 2. c. 67; Lib. 3. c. 38; Lib. 4. c. 23. For these reasons and for the MSS. authority, 'magistratum' is preferable to the reading 'magistratus' of Graevius.

(Dig. 39. 1. 21) thus: "instar quoddam operis et quasi facies quaedam facti operis."

esset ex praeda, simul quum ipse decederet, appulsa Veliam est cum plurimis rebus et iis quas iste Romam mittere cum ceteris furtis noluit, quod erant carissimae maximeque eum delectabant. Eam navem nuper egomet vidi Veliae, multique alii viderunt, pulcherrimam atque ornatissimam, iudices. Quae quidem omnibus qui eam aspexerant, prospectare jam exilium atque explorare fugam domini videbatur.

XVIII. Quid mihi hoc loco respondebis, nisi forte id quod tametsi probari nullo modo potest, tamen dici quidem in iudicio de pecuniis repetundis necesse est, de tua pecunia aedificatam esse navem? Aude hoc saltem dicere, quod necesse est. Noli metuere, Hortensi, ne quaeram qui licuerit aedificare navem senatori. Antiquae sunt istae leges, et mortuae, quemadmodum tu soles dicere, quae vetant. Fuit ista res publica quondam, fuit ista severitas in iudiciis, ut istam rem accusator in magnis criminibus objiciendam putaret. Quid enim tibi navi? qui si quo publice proficisceris, praesidii et vecturae causa sumptu publico navigia praebentur, privatim autem nec proficisci quoquam potes nec arcessere res transmarinas ex iis locis in quibus te habere nihil licet: deinde cur quidquam contra leges parasti? Valeret hoc crimen in illa vetere severitate ac dignitate rei publicae. Nunc non modo te hoc crimine

18. aedificare navem] Cicero alludes, as it seems, to a Lex Claudia (Liv. xxi. 63): "ne quis senator cuive senatorius pater fuisset maritimam navem quae plus quam trecentarum amphorarum esset haberet. Id satis habitum ad fructus ex agris vectandos: quaestus omnis patribus indecorus visus est." This rule was applied by the Romans in their legislation for other places, as in the case of Halesa, Lib. 2. c. 49. Cicero speaks of these 'leges' as 'antiquae et mortuae,' as having fallen into desuetude. It is an indisputable principle of Roman law, that custom (consuetudo) was efficient to abolish a 'lex,' and substitute for it a different rule of law, or to abolish it simply. This is distinctly expressed by Julian (Dig. 1. 3. 32. § 1): "quare rectissime etiam illud receptum est, ut leges non solum suffragio legislatoris, sed etiam tacito consensu omnium per desuetudinem abrogentur" (Savigny, System, &c., i. p. 152). The English system does not acknowledge this principle.

Quid enim tibi, &c.] "Vulgo quid enim tibi nave opus fuit, sed omittunt opus fuit boni omnes:" Zumpt. These same MSS. have 'navi,' except one, which is said to have 'navim.' The text is intelligible, for it is the Roman fashion in such a case to omit the verb.

qui si quo] Lambinus altered 'cui' to 'qui.' There is no doubt that 'cui' or 'quoi' and 'qui' have often been confounded by the copyists; but 'qui' is right here. The position of 'qui' in such cases is common, though all the instances are not the same. In Lib. 2. c. 6 there is "Qui simul atque ei sorte provincia Cilicia obvenit, statim Romae . . coepit," which there is no reason for correcting.

te habere nihil licet:] 'Sic Lambini codices Guelff. Havn.' (Zumpt.) The common reading is 'tibi habere mercari nihil licet.' Zumpt shows that there is no objection to the 'te,' for it is so used, the dative being understood, as in c. 32 and 59. 'Mercari' has been added from the inferior MSS. Lambinus erased 'habere' and allowed 'mercari' to stand. A senator by the old law might have been forbidden to have (habere) lands out of Italy. To forbid him 'mercari,' to be a 'mercator,' would hardly be necessary. Usage had long settled that a senator could not make himself a trader. Orelli has 'in quibus te habere, mercari nihil licet.'

non arguo, sed ne illa quidem communi vituperatione reprehendo: tu tibi hoc nunquam turpe, nunquam criminis, nunquam invidiosum fore putasti, celeberrimo loco palam tibi aedificari onerariam navem in ea provincia quam tu cum imperio obtinebas? Quid eos loqui qui videbant, quid existimare eos qui audiebant arbitrare? inanem te navem esse illam in Italiam deducturum? naviculariam quum Romam venisses esse facturum? Ne illud quidem quisquam poterat suspicari, te in Italia maritimum habere fundum et ad fructus deportandos onerariam navem comparare. Ejusmodi voluisti de te sermonem esse omnium palam ut loquerentur, te illam navem parare quae praedam ex Sicilia deportaret, et ad ea furta quae reliquisses commear? Verum haec omnia, si doces navem de tua pecunia aedificatam, remitto atque concedo. Sed hoc, homo amentissime, non intelligis priore actione ab istis ipsis Mamertinis, tuis laudatoribus, esse sublatum? Nam dixit Heius, princeps istius legationis quae ad tuam laudationem missa est, navem tibi operis publicis Mamertinorum esse factam eique faciendae senatorem Mamertinum publice praefuisse. Reliqua est materies. Hanc Rheginis, ut ipsi dicunt, tametsi tu negare non potes, publice, quod Mamertini materiem non habent, imperavisti.

XIX. Si et ex quo fit navis et qui faciunt, imperio tibi tuo, non pretio, praesto fuerunt, ubi tandem istuc latet quod tu de tua pecunia dicis impensum? At Mamertini in tabulis nihil habent. Primum video potuisse fieri ut ex aerario nihil darent: etenim vel Capitolium, sicut apud majores nostros factum est, publice coactis fabris operisque imperatis gratis exaedificari atque effici potuit: deinde id quod perspicio et quod ostendam quum ipsos produxero ex ipsorum literis, multas pecunias isti erogatas in operum locationes falsas atque inanes esse perscriptas. Nam illud minime naviculariam . . facturum?] "To carry on the business of 'navicularius,' a 'ship-carrier.' So the Romans said 'argentariam (rem) facere.' Graevius mistook the meaning of this passage.

princeps istius] 'Princeps civitatis, princeps istius legationis:' Orelli.

19. Capitolium,] The old story was, that Tarquinius impressed people of the 'plebes' to work at the capitol (Livy, i. 56). This is 'publice coactis,' &c.

deinde id quod, &c.] This is the MSS. reading, which Zumpt has altered on very slight grounds, and Orelli follows him. Zumpt's reading is 'deinde perspicio, id quod ostendam,' which seems easier to understand, but we cannot alter the text simply to make it clearer. Madvig defends the vulgate with this remark: "optime Cicero, quum Verres rem confectam putaret tabulis Mamertinorum, opponit, etiamsi in illis tabulis nihil sit, videre se, id est, ex rei natura intelligere, fieri potuisse aliquid, quod deinde factum quoque esse dicat se perspicere ex certis vestigiis literarum. Tantum illa quae sequuntur (multas pecunias, &c.) conjungenda sunt cum verbis proximis, perspicio et ostendam."

erogatas . . perscriptas.] Sums of money paid to Verres (erogatae) were entered (perscriptae) as expended on the undertakings of works which were never really done.

mirum est, Mamertinos, a quo summum beneficium acceperant, quem sibi amiciorem esse quam populo Romano cognoverant, ejus capiti literis suis pepercisse. Sed si argumento est, Mamertinos tibi pecuniam non dedisse, quia scriptum non habent, sit argumento, tibi stare gratis navem quia quid emeris, aut quid locaveris, scriptum proferre non potes. At enim idcirco navem Mamertinis non imperasti quod sunt foederati. Dii approbent: habemus hominem in fetialium manibus educatum; unum praeter ceteros in publicis religionibus foederum sanctum ac diligentem: omnes qui ante te fuerunt praetores dedantur Mamertinis, quod iis navem contra pactionem foederis imperarint. Sed tamen tu, sancte homo ac religiose, cur Tauromenitanis item foederatis navem imperasti? An hoc probabis in aequa causa populorum sine pretio varium jus et disparem conditionem fuisse? Quid si ejusmodi esse haec duo foedera duorum populorum, judices, doceo, ut Tauromenitanis nominatim cautum et exceptum sit foedere, ne navem dare debeant; Mamertinis in ipso foedere sanctum atque praescriptum False entries were made as to expenditure in order to conceal the real objects of the expenditure, a usual and vulgar trick of knaves who have the management of other people's money. See Lib. 3. c. 72.

quid emeris, aut quid locaveris,] 'Because you cannot show any written evidence of what you have bought or what you have contracted for building.' 'Emere' (to purchase) is one way of getting a thing. 'Locare' (to agree to give so much for a piece of work to be done) is the only other usual way of getting a thing. There remain two other ways, by gift, and by fraud or theft. Verres must have either bought the ship (emere), or he must have furnished materials and engaged (locare) some person to build it for him; or he must have got it in some irregular way.

Dii approbent:] Said sarcastically. "We have a man brought up among the 'fetiales:'" so expert is he in the Jus Fetiale. Varro, De L. L. iv. 15: "Fetiales fidei publicae inter populos praeerant. Per hos enim fiebat ut justum conciperetur bellum et ut foedere fides constitueretur." The Jus Fetiale was that branch of law, improperly so called, which had reference to treaties, the declaring of war and peace, the condition of ambassadors, and so forth; the original of that kind of law which we sometimes call the Law of Nations, or International Law.

The Romans had a short way and a good way of dealing with men who violated the Jus Fetiale, or, in fact, dealt with an enemy in any way that they did not like. They gave him up (dederunt) to the enemy, and so eased themselves of him. Here we learn that some places, by the terms of their 'foedus,' were relieved from the contribution of ships, or ship-money. The following passage of Varro is quoted by Nonius: "si cujus legati violati essent, qui id fecissent, quamvis nobiles essent, uti dederentur civitati statuerunt, fetialesque viginti qui de his rebus cognoscerent, judicarent, statuerent, constituerunt."

These foreign dependencies of Rome were not solely protected at the expense of Rome. They were required to supply the means for their own protection, and they also furnished contributions to the ruling state. So different is the modern system, and particularly the English system. The English acquire foreign possessions by conquest, the protection of which is paid for by the taxes levied on the people at home. Even the wages of labour, when they reach above a certain amount, are taxed (1851), in order to supply, among other things, the means of defending foreign possessions which make no contribution to the ruling state. The management of their extensive dominions by the East India Company is an exception, and is conducted more after the Roman fashion. The subjects pay every thing, and get little in return. For instance, from 1830 to 1834, the gross revenue from salt alone, in the three presidencies of India, averaged £2,184,415 annually. This is worse than Roman tyranny.

sit, ut navem dare necesse sit; istum autem contra foedus et Tauromenitanis imperasse et Mamertinis remisisse? numquid dubium poterit esse quin Verre praetore plus Mamertinis cybaea quam Tauromenitanis foedus opitulatum sit? Recitentur foedera.

XX. Isto igitur tuo quemadmodum ipse praedicas beneficio, ut res indicat, pretio atque mercede, minuisti majestatem rei publicae, minuisti auxilia populi Romani, minuisti copias majorum virtute ac sapientia comparatas: sustulisti jus imperii, conditionem sociorum, memoriam foederis. Qui ex foedere ipso navem vel usque ad Oceanum, si imperassemus, sumptu periculoque suo armatam atque ornatam mittere debuerunt; hi ne in freto ante sua tecta et domos navigarent, ne sua moenia portusque defenderent, pretio abs te jus foederis et imperii conditionem redemerunt. Quid censetis in hoc foedere faciundo voluisse Mamertinos impendere laboris, operae, pecuniae, ne haec biremis adscriberetur, si id ullo modo possent a nostris majoribus impetrare? Nam, quum hoc munus imponebatur tam grave civitati, inerat nescio quo modo in illo foedere societatis quasi quaedam nota servitutis. Quod tum recentibus suis officiis, integra re, nullis populi Romani difficultatibus, a majoribus nostris foedere assequi non potuerunt; id nunc, nullo officio suo, tot annis post, jure imperii nostri quotannis usurpatum ac semper retentum, summa in difficultate navium, a C. Verre pretio assecuti sunt; ac non hoc solum assecuti ne navem darent: ecquem nautam, ecquem militem, qui aut in classe aut in praesidio esset, te praetore, per triennium Mamertini dederunt?

XXI. Denique quum ex senatus consulto, itemque ex lege Terencybaea,] See Lib. 4. c. 8.

20. majestatem] See p. 36; and Lib. 4. c. 41: 'est majestatis,' &c. Cicero (De Invent. ii. 17) has a formal definition of 'majestatem minuere': "Majestatem minuere est de dignitate aut amplitudine aut potestate populi aut eorum quibus potestatem dedit, aliquod derogare." This definition not only comprehends the case in this chapter—a direct attack on the 'majestas' of the Roman people, but also any attack on the authority or dignity of those who are the representatives of the people, such as the higher 'magistratus.' The passages relating to 'majestas,' in the Republican period, are collected by Becker, Handbuch, ii. 2, p. 69. The 'majestas' of the Imperial period is a different thing.

quum . . . imponebatur] The inferior MSS. have 'quum imponeretur.' recentibus . . . officiis,] He seems to allude to the time when the Mamertini first joined the Romans, B.C. 264 (Polybius, i.

7, &c.). Orelli has 'nullo novo officio.'

usurpatum . . . retentum,] A better reading than the old reading, 'usurpato . . . retento.' 'Id . . . usurpatum' means 'retained by constant use:' there was no intermission of the usage. 'Usurpo,' which is supposed to be compounded of 'usu' and 'rap,' is rather a difficult word to explain in all its senses. One common meaning, and the meaning here, is to exercise a right without interruption (Lib. 5. c. 62). But 'usurpatio' has another sense, 'usucapionis interruptio,' which will not apply here (Dig. 41. 3. 2).

ac non . . . solum] The old editions have 'at non solum,' which makes these words the defence of Verres, and at the same time nonsense, for they contain a fresh charge. Lambinus corrected the passage by omitting 'non,' which means, 'but you will say, this is all they got from Verres, not to supply a ship.' Guelff. 2 and Havn. have 'ac,' the true reading. It is a continuation of what has been said.

tia et Cassia frumentum aequabiliter emi ab omnibus Siciliae civitatibus oporteret, id quoque munus leve atque commune Mamertinis remisisti. Dices frumentum Mamertinos non debere. Quomodo non debere? an ut ne venderent? non enim erat hoc genus frumenti ex eo genere quod exigeretur, sed ex eo quod emeretur. Te igitur auctore et interprete, ne foro quidem et commeatu Mamertini populum Romanum juvare debuerunt. Quae tandem civitas fuit quae deberet? Qui publicos agros arant, certum est quid e lege censoria debeant: cur his quidquam praeterea ex alio genere imperasti? Quid decumani, num quid praeter singulas decumas ex lege Hieronica debent? cur his quoque statuisti quantum ex hoc genere frumenti empti darent? Quid immunes, hi certe nihil debent. At eis non modo imperasti, verum etiam quo plus darent quam poterant, haec sexagena millia modium quae Mamertinis remiseras addidisti. Neque hoc dico ceteris non recte imperatum; sed Mamertinis, qui erant in eadem causa, et quibus superiores omnes praetores item ut ceteris imperarant, pecuniamque ex senatus consulto et ex lege dissolverant, his dico non recte remissum. Et ut hoc beneficium, quemadmodum dicitur, trabali clavo figeret, cum consilio causam Mamertinorum cognoscit, et de consilii sententia Mamertinis se frumentum non imperare pronuntiat. Audite decre-

21. omnibus . . civitatibus] This chapter shows that all the Sicilian 'civitates' were liable to furnish corn at a price (frumentum emptum). See Lib. 3. c. 6. The argument in this chapter is liable to be misunderstood. Cicero says clearly that all the 'civitates' were liable to furnish the 'frumentum emptum.' If any one 'civitas' obtained a remission, the deficiency would have to be supplied by further demands on the rest. Cicero says 'Neque hoc dico ceteris non recte imperatum; sed Mamertinis,' &c. The Mamertini ought to have supplied their share. The two modes of purchasing are mentioned in Lib. 3. c. 70: "emendi duo genera fuerunt." From the 'decumani' were bought the 'alterae decumae,' and this was properly called 'emptum.' There was also the 'emptum' which was distributed equally among all the 'civitates,' and this was properly called 'imperatum.' It appears, then, that the 'decumani' were liable both to the 'emptum' and the 'imperatum,' for Cicero says of the 'imperatum,' that it was required of all alike. This 'imperatum,' which was required from all alike, is called by Cicero indifferently 'emptum' and 'imperatum.'

Quae tandem civitas] These words are to be explained by a reference to 'debuerunt.' If the Mamertini were not bound to supply 'frumentum emptum,' what state was there which owed this duty? The demands on the 'aratores' of the 'ager publicus' were fixed; the demands on the 'decumani' were fixed; they owed 'singulae decumae.' The 'immunes' owed nothing in the shape of tax. Yet Verres called on them for 'frumentum emptum,' without calling on the Mamertini. That was his offence. As to 'publicos agros,' see p. 274, note.

omnes praetores] Orelli. Zumpt omits 'praetores.' Orelli says "ego retinui cum G. Facile scil. excidit compendium PR."

trabali clavo] This seems to be a proverb (quemadmodum dicitur): 'to clench the matter,' as we say, to fix it, and make it sure. Horace, l Carm. xxxv., has adopted this ordinary expression:

"Te semper anteit saeva Necessitas Clavos trabales et cuneos manu Gestans athena."

But in Carm. iii. 24, he has, as Zumpt observes, the more poetic form, or the form further removed from ordinary language, 'clavos adamantinos.'

tum mercenarii praetoris ex ipsius commentario, et cognoscite quanta in scribendo gravitas, quanta in constituendo jure sit auctoritas. Recita commentarium d.c.s. 'Libenter' ait 'se facere:' itaque perscribit. Quid, si hoc verbo non esses usus, 'libenter?' nos videlicet invitum te quaestum facere putaremus? Ac 'de consilii sententia.' Praeclarum recitari consilium, judices, audistis. Utrum vobis consilium tandem praetoris recitari videbatur quum audiebatis nomina, an praedonis improbissimi societas atque comitatus? En foederum interpretes, societatis pactores, religionis auctores. Nunquam in Sicilia frumentum publice est emptum quin Mamertinis pro portione imperaretur, antequam hoc delectum praeclarumque consilium iste dedit, ut ab his nummos acciperet ac sui similis esset. Itaque tantum valuit istius decreti auctoritas quantum debuit ejus hominis, qui a quibus frumentum emere debuisset, iis decretum vendidisset. Nam statim L. Metellus ut isti successit, ex C. Sacerdotis et Sex. Peducaei instituto ac literis frumentum Mamertinis imperavit.

XXII. Tum illi intellexerunt se id quod a malo auctore emis-

Praeclarum . . consilium,] The word has evidently two meanings in this chapter. It means the 'consilium' or advisers of Verres, and also that which was determined. The sense of a deliberation or resolution is a secondary sense. The primary sense is that of the congregation of persons in one place, for I take 'consilium' to be 'considium.' As to the words 'delectum praeclarumque consilium,' Orelli remarks that 'consilium' in this passage cannot mean 'consilii sententia,' as appears from the word 'delectum.' I don't see how this appears from 'delectum.' If it were omitted, we should have 'praeclarum consilium dedit,' which would seem to mean "published this famous 'consilium' or resolution;" but whether this is Latin or not, I don't know. At any rate, 'delectum' does not seem to me to increase the difficulty. Orelli remarks that 'dare consilium,' for 'consilium constituere,' is a strange expression; and he suggests the emendation, 'isti dedit scil. facultatem, ei permisit, concessit, ut cet.'

pactores,] "Ἀπαξ λεγόμενον, servatum a G., in R. L. corruptum in pactiones:' Orelli.

pro portione] See Lib. 3. c. 63, note.

22. malo auctore] 'They then saw that they could not keep (obtinere) any longer that which they had bought from a man who had no title to sell.' A seller is sometimes called 'auctor,' as (Dig. 21. 2. 28): "sed si ex utriusque persona, et auctoris et emptoris." The seller seems to have been so called with reference to his obligation to the buyer, in case the buyer should be evicted from his purchase. If the seller gave a 'fidejussor' or surety in case of eviction, the surety was commonly called 'auctor secundus' (Dig. 21. 2. 4).

The uses of 'auctor' and 'auctoritas,' in the Roman writers, are so copious, and so closely connected with technical matters, that a full explanation of them would go beyond the limits of a note. 'Auctor' contains the root 'aug,' to cause to wax or grow, to strengthen, confirm, and so forth. One of the most common uses of 'auctor' and 'auctoritas' appears in the case of 'pupilli,' for many of the acts of 'pupilli' were not valid without the knowledge and consent of a 'tutor,' whose experience and years were intended to supply the defects in the experience and years of the 'pupillus' (Inst. i. 21): "tutor autem statim in ipso negotio praesens debet auctor fieri, si hoc pupillo prodesse existimaverit." The doctrine is contained in the following words (Dig. 41. 2. 32. § 2): "infans possidere recte potest, si tutore auctore coepit, nam iudicium infantis suppletur auctoritate tutoris;" and in the following passage of Paulus (Dig. 26. 8. 3): "etiamsi non interrogatus tutor auctor fiat, valet auctoritas ejus quum se prosent diutius obtinere non posse. Age porro, tu, qui tam religiosum existimari te voluisti interpretem foederum, cur Tauromenitanis frumentum, cur Netinis imperasti, quarum civitatum utraque foederata est? At Netini quidem sibi non defuerunt: ac simul pronuntiasti libenter te Mamertinis remittere, te adierunt et eandem suam causam foederis esse docuerunt. Tu aliter decernere eadem in causa non potuisti. Pronuntias Netinos frumentum dare non debere: et ab his tamen exigis. Cedo mihi ejusdem praetoris literas et rerum decretarum et frumenti imperati. LITERAE RERUM DECRETARUM. Quid potius in hac tanta et tam turpi inconstantia suspicari possumus, judices, quam id quod necesse est; aut isti a Netinis pecuniam quum posceret non datam, aut id esse actum ut intelligerent Mamertini bene se apud istum tam multa pretia ac munera collocasse, quum idem alii juris ex eadem causa non obtinerent? Hic mihi etiam audebit mentionem facere Mamertinae laudationis? in qua quam multa sint vulnera, quis est vestrum, judices, quin intelligat? Primum, ut in judiciis, qui decem lauda-bare dicit id quod agitur: hoc est enim auctorem fieri."

Generally, then, 'auctoritas' is that which gives to a thing its efficiency or completeness, according to the nature of the case. There is 'auctoritas' in what a man of good character says and does. There is 'auctoritas' in him who holds a public office, and he has it by virtue of his office. A trustworthy person, one on whose evidence we can rely, is 'auctor idoneus.' Livy calls Polybius 'auctor non spernendus,' a man whose evidence and statements may be relied on. Compare Lib. 4. c. 45: "bono auctore." So we have as an 'auctor' one who sets an example, as "unum cedo auctorem tui facti" (c. 26, and elsewhere). In c. 50: "auctores testesque produco."

There are other technical significations of 'auctor' and 'auctoritas,' the explanation of which would be foreign to the matter which is explained in this note; but a reference to them may be useful. The phrase 'patres auctores' (Livy, i. 17, 22, 32, and elsewhere), is explained by Becker, Handbuch, ii. 1, p. 314, &c. The difficulty lies in the application of the term; but, in order to understand it, we must recur to the sense of 'auctor,' which has been already explained.

The meaning of 'auctoritas' follows that of 'auctor,' for he who is 'auctor' gives his 'auctoritas.' Thus, in the old Roman legislation, the vote of the 'centuriae' and the 'auctoritas patrum' made a complete act.

The voting of a 'lex,' or the choice of a person at an election, was made complete by the 'auctoritas patrum.' The identity of the expressions 'auctor fieri,' and 'fieri pati,' appears from Gaius (i. 99): "quia et is qui adoptat rogatur, id est, interrogatur, an velit eum quem adoptaturus sit, justum sibi filium esse; et is qui adoptatur rogatur, an id fieri patiatur," where he is speaking of 'adrogatio.' Cicero (Pro Domo, c. 29) uses the expression 'auctorne esses,' which was the old formula, in the same sense in which Gaius says 'an id fieri patiatur.' Compare also Gellius (v. 19).

As to the 'auctoritates' of the Senatus, see Becker, Handbuch, ii. 2, p. 441. The extreme difficulty of finding adequate expressions for the word 'auctor' will appear from a passage in this oration, c. 67: "senatores . . . legum et judiciorum et juris auctores." He who can give an adequate translation of these words has learned something of the Latin language, and of Roman affairs.

ut in judiciis,] This 'ut' has caused a difficulty. I doubt if any of the commentators have explained it right. Zumpt's explanation is not clear to me. It is a mode of expression which is perhaps elliptical. It seems like the case mentioned in p. 37, 'ut meretrix.' So this means: 'First of all, considering it the case of a trial.' Klotz says that Cicero intended to proceed with a 'sic' or 'ita,' in order to show how the case was with Verres, but he gave the sentores dare non potest, honestius est ei nullum dare quam illum quasi legitimum numerum consuetudinis non explere. Tot in Sicilia civitates sunt quibus tu per triennium praefuisti: arguunt ceterae: paucae et parvae et metu repressae silent: una laudat. Hoc quid est nisi intelligere quid habeat utilitatis vera laudatio, sed tamen ita provinciae praefuisse ut hac utilitate necessario sit carendum? Deinde, quod alio loco antea dixi, quae est ista tandem laudatio cujus laudationis legati principes et publice tibi navem aedificatam et privatim se ipsos abs te spoliatos expilatosque esse dixerunt? Postremo quid aliud isti faciunt quum te soli ex Sicilia laudant, nisi testimonio nobis sunt omnia te sibi esse largitum quae tu rei publicae nostrae detraxeris? Quae colonia est in Italia tam bono jure, quod tam immune municipium, quod per hosce annos tam commoda vacatione omnium rerum sit usum quam Mamertina civitas per triennium? Soli ex foedere quod debuerunt non dederunt; soli isto praetore omnium rerum immunes fuerunt; soli in istius imperio ea conditione vixerunt ut populo Romano nihil darent, Verri nihil denegarent.

XXIII. Verum ut ad classem quo ex loco sum digressus revertar, accepisti a Mamertinis navem contra leges; remisisti contra foedera: ita in una civitate bis improbus fuisti, quum et remisisti quod non oportebat et accepisti quod non licebat. Exigere te oportuit navem quae contra praedones, non quae cum praeda navigaret; quae defenderet ne provincia spoliaretur, non quae spolia provinciae portaret. Mamertini tibi et urbem quo furta tence a new turn, by which the expression is rendered more animated. He adds, "this slight anacoluthie has been already set in a true light by the interpreters." But the interpreters don't agree. Manutius and Beck take it as Klotz explains it. Garatoni explains it thus: "ut in judiciis fit, more judiciorum." Madvig finds the passage difficult, and suspects that there is some error in the word 'judiciis.'

'Laudatores' were persons who came forward to give the defendant a character, such as we see sometimes called to support a lame defence. Ten, it seems, was the number at Rome; not required by any law (legitimus), but by custom, that had the semblance of a positive institution (quasi legitimus). See Index, on the meaning of 'legitimus.' Compare Lib. 4. c. 66: "illum noluisse sua laudatione juvare;" and Cic. Ad Div. ix. 1: "Quum Pompeius ut laudaret P. Sextium introisset in urbem."

colonia . . . municipium,] A 'colonia' was either a Romana or Latina colonia. A 'municipium' was an Italian town, in a political relationship to Rome. See the article Colonia, in Smith's Dict. of Antiqu. The distinction between the two is unimportant at this time, as to those parts of Italy that had received the Roman 'civitas.'

denegarent.] 'Vulgo editur nihil denegarent, fortiore verbo, sed ob hanc ipsam, opinor, causam minus apto' (Zumpt). Orelli follows G, and he observes that the copyists more frequently err in substituting the simple for the compound, than the other way. He also thinks that 'darent . . . denegarent' make a better opposition, by both beginning with the same letter, and having the same termination. There is some weight in this remark.

23. contra leges;] According to Zumpt, the better MSS. have 'leges,' as before, c. 18, though only one 'lex' is meant. So he says 'foedera,' though only one 'foedus' is meant.

undique deportares, et navem in qua exportares, prae-buerunt. Illud tibi oppidum receptaculum praedae fuit: illi homines testes custodesque furtorum: illi tibi et locum furtis et furtorum vehiculum comparaverunt. Itaque ne tum quidem quum classem avaritia ac nequitia tua perdidisti, Mamertinis navem imperare ausus es; quo tempore in tanta inopia navium tantaque calamitate provinciae, etiamsi precario essent rogandi, tamen ab iis impetraretur. Reprimebat enim tibi et imperandi vim et rogandi conatum praeclara illa, non populo Romano reddita biremis sed praetori donata cybaea. Ea fuit merces imperii, auxilii, juris, consuetudinis, foederis.

XXIV. Habetis unius civitatis firmum auxilium amissum ac venditum pretio: cognoscite nunc novam praedandi rationem ab hoc primum excogitatam. Sumptum omnem in classem frumento, stipendio, ceterisque rebus suo quaeque navarcho civitas semper dare solebat. Is neque ut accusaretur a nautis committere audebat, et civibus suis rationes referre debebat; in omni illo negotio non modo labore sed etiam periculo suo versabatur. Erat hoc, ut dico, factitatum semper, nec solum in Sicilia sed in omnibus provinciis; etiam in sociorum et Latinorum stipendio ac sumptu tum quum illorum auxiliis uti solebamus. Verres post imperium constitutum primus imperavit ut ea pecunia omnis a civitatibus sibi adnumeraretur, ut is eam pecuniam tractaret quem ipse praefeprecario . . impetraretur.] There is no doubt that 'precario' can go with 'rogari'; but the conjecture of Graevius, that it has got out of place, and should go with 'impetraretur,' thus, 'precario tamen impetraretur,' seems a probable conjecture. 'Impetraretur,' says Zumpt, is for 'esset impetranda.'—'precario . . . rogandi:' see p. 218, and to the references there add Gaius, ii. 60: "si neque conduxerit eam rem a creditore debitor neque precario rogaverit ut eam rem possidere liceret." Garatoni defends the passive form, 'precario . . . rogandi,' by this example, against Ernesti, who incloses 'precario' in the damnable []. As 'precario rogare' is Latin, there seems no reason why 'precario . . . rogandi' is not.

24. rationes referre] Zumpt has 'rationes ferre,' and says 'sic Regius et Guelff. Vulgo rationem referre.' 'Rationes referre' is the common expression in these orations (Lib. I. c. 14), but 'rationem referre' also occurs. Orelli has 'referre.'

in omni illo] 'Et in illo omni' (Zumpt), following Stephanus and Lambinus. There is no evidence of any MS. authority for the 'et.' It is a small matter in itself, the omission or insertion of 'et,' but not unimportant, if it is a question of Cicero's Latinity. Orelli prefers the ἀσύνδετον. Besides, he observes that, 'neque' having been followed by 'et,' the addition of another 'et' seems inappropriate. This is a matter for a careful student's inquiry.

sociorum et Latinorum] Cicero is speaking of the Italian Socii and the Latini before the enactment of the Julia Lex. He says 'tum quem illorum,' &c. See p. 10, note. Ernesti entirely mistook this passage, and erased the 'et' in opposition to all the MSS.; a blunder that is unpardonable. Zumpt corrects it. But Ernesti made a blunder of the same kind in the De Am. c. 3, where, instead of the true reading, 'Populo Romano, sociis et Latinis,' he wrote 'Populi Romani sociis et Latinis.'

cisset. Cui potest esse dubium quamobrem et omnium consuetudinem veterem primus immutaris, et tantam utilitatem per alios tractandae pecuniae neglexeris, et tantam difficultatem cum crimine, molestiam cum suspicione susceperis? Deinde alii quaestus instituuntur ex uno genere navali, videte quam multi: accipere a civitatibus pecuniam ne nautas darent: pretio certo missos facere nautas: missorum omne stipendium lucrari; reliquis quod deberet non dare. Haec omnia ex civitatum testimoniis cognoscite. Recita testimonia civitatum. Huncine hominem! huncine impudentiam, iudices! hanc audaciam! civitatibus pro numero militum pecuniarum summas describere; certum pretium, sexcenos nummos, nautarum missionis constituere; quos qui dederat, commeatum totius aestatis abstulerat, iste quod ejus nautae nomine pro stipendio frumentoque acceperat lucrabatur. Ita quaestus duplex unius missionis fiebat. Atque haec homo amentissimus in tanto praedonum impetu tantoque periculo provinciae sic palam faciebat ut et ipsi praedones scirent, et tota provincia testis esset.

XXV. Quum propter istius hanc avaritiam nomine classis esset in Sicilia, re quidem vera naves inanes, quae praedam praetori, non quae praedonibus metum afferrent; tamen, quum P. Caesetius et P. Tadius decem navibus suis semiplenis navigarent, navem quandam piratarum, praeda refertam, non ceperunt sed abduxerunt, onere suo plane captam atque depressam. Erat ea navis plena juventutis formosissimae, plena argenti facti atque signati, multa cum stragula veste. Haec una navis a classe nostra non capta est sed inventa ad Megaridem, qui locus est non longe a Syracusis. Quod ubi isti nuntiatum est, tametsi in acta cum mulierculis jacebat ebrius, erexit se tamen, et statim quaestori legatoque suo custodes misit complures ut omnia sibi integra quam primum exhiberentur. Appellitur navis Syracusas: expectatur ab omnibus Huncine] So Zumpt writes it in his larger edition. He says that in this passage all the MSS., as far as he knows, have the word with one c.—‘describere.’ I suspect that this should be ‘discrībēre.’

commeatum . . abstulerat,] The ‘nauta’ got leave of absence, and Verres pocketed the money. This sense of ‘abstulerat,’ ‘carried off’ or ‘got,’ is common in these orations. Manutius has mistaken the meaning of this passage, though it is not doubtful.

25. onere . . captam] ‘It was overloaded.’ As to the use of ‘captus,’ see Forcellini; and Lib. 4. c. 45, note.

argenti facti, &c.] ‘Argentum factum’ is silver vessels. ‘Argentum signatum’ is money.

Megaridem,] He appears to mean Megara Hyblaea, near Syracuse.

in acta] ‘Sic codices meliores—Vulgares noctu, crassa haud dubie Minerva’ (Zumpt). ‘In acta’ occurs afterwards (c. 31). Manutius defends ‘noctu,’ for Verres did not remove his quarters to the ‘acta’ till after the capture of this ship (c. 31). Verres heard of the news at night, as appears from the words ‘nox illa,’ &c. I don’t think that it would prove a man to be ‘crassa Minerva,’ if he should prefer ‘noctu.’

supplicium. Iste, quasi praeda sibi advecta, non praedonibus captis, si qui senes aut deformes erant, eos in hostium numero ducit; qui aliquid formae, aetatis, artificiique habebant, abducit omnes; nonnullos scribis suis, filio cohortique distribuit; symphoniacos sex cuidam amico suo Romam muneri misit. Nox illa tota in exinaniunda navi consumitur. Archipiratam ipsum videt nemo, de quo supplicium sumi oportuit: hodieque omnes sic habent, (quid ejus sit vos conjectura assequi debetis,) istum clam a piratis ob hunc archipiratam pecuniam accepisse. XXVI. Conjectura est. Judex esse bonus nemo potest qui suspicione certa non movetur. Hominem nostis; consuetudinem omnium tenetis, qui ducem praedonum aut hostium ceperit, quam libenter eum palam ante oculos omnium esse patiatur. Hominem in tanto conventu Syracusis vidi neminem, judices, qui archipiratam captum sese vidisse diceret; quum omnes, ut mos est, ut solet fieri, concurrerent, quaererent, videre cuperent. Quid accidit cur tanto opere iste homo occultaretur ut eum ne casu quidem quisquam aspicere posset? Homines maritimi Syracusis qui saepe istius ducis nomen audissent, saepe timuissent, quum ejus cruciatu atque supplicio pascere oculos animumque exsaturare vellent, potestas aspiciendi nemini facta est. Unus plures praedonum duces vivos cepit P. Servilius quam omnes antea. Ecquando igitur isto fructu quisquam caruit ut videre piratam captum non liceret? At contra, quacumque iter fecit, hoc jucundissimum

sic habent,] 'Persuasum' is generally added after 'habent;' but it is not in the best MSS. It is also not Cicero's mode of expression, as Zumpt says; for Cicero writes 'persuasum mihi est.' 'Sic habent,' in the sense of 'existimant,' is common. Orelli quotes Cato, De Re Rustica, c. 1: "maiores nostri sic habuerunt;" and Graevius from the Pro Caelio, c. 2: "quibus . . non aequae est cognitio, hi sic habeant."—Manutius explains 'quid ejus sit' by examples from Terence, one of the best sources for explaining Cicero's ordinary language. It means, 'how much truth there is in it, you must judge from conjecture.' 'Conjectura est' means, 'it is only a conjecture, I admit.' Orelli takes it to be the remark of a friend of Verres, which comes to the same. The common reading is 'conjectura bona est;' but 'bona' is an idle interpolation.

26. maritimi] Opposed to 'mediterranei,' a term that Cicero applies to the Centuripini (c. 27), an inland people.—'cruciatu . . pascere:' Cicero's language, in compliance with the notions of his time, is cruel.

The men were to be tortured, to please those who had once feared them. It is just that a pirate should die as soon as he is caught, but that is enough.

P. Servilius] Lib. 3. c. 90. Zumpt has 'victorum captorumque.' He says of the common reading, "ὑστερολογία est vix ferenda." He adds, that the examples which he has collected (Divin. c. 2) in the note on the words 'meum factum aut consilium,' are not to be compared with this; and yet he calls them examples of ὑστερολογία, or, as the grammarians sometimes name it, 'hysteron proteron.' He cites from Terence, Hauton. iii. 1. 21: "valet atque vivit:" Liv. xxxii. 33: "incendere ac diripere urbes." An enemy cannot be 'captus,' he says, before he is 'victus.' He seems not to have thought of the possible case that he may become 'victus' by being 'captus,' and not before. We may argue that Cicero would mention, as the striking object of the spectacle, men in chains (vincti), which at once suggests the notion of 'capti.' I prefer 'victorum,' which Orelli also has.

spectaculum omnibus victorum captorumque hostium praebebat. Itaque ei concursus fiebant undique, ut non modo ex his oppidis qua ducebantur sed etiam ex finitimis visendi causa convenirent. Ipse autem triumphus quamobrem omnium triumphorum gratissimus populo Romano fuit et jucundissimus? Quia nihil est victoria dulcius; nullum est autem testimonium victoriae certius quam quos saepe metueris eos te vinctos ad supplicium duci videre. Hoc tu quamobrem non fecisti? quamobrem ita pirata iste occultatus est quasi eum aspici nefas esset? quamobrem supplicium non sumpsisti? quam ob causam hominem reservasti? ecquem scis in Sicilia antea captum archipiratam qui non securi percussus sit? unum cedo auctorem tui facti: unius profer exemplum. Vivum tu archipiratam servabas, quem per triumphum, credo, quem ante currum tuum duceres. Neque enim quidquam erat reliquum nisi uti, classe populi Romani pulcherrima amissa, provinciaque lacerata, triumphus tibi navalis decerneretur.

XXVII. Age porro, custodiri ducem praedonum novo more quam securi feriri omnium exemplo magis placuit. Quae sunt istae custodiae? apud quos homines? quemadmodum est asservatus? Lautumias Syracusanas omnes audistis; plerique nostis. Opus est ingens, magnificum, regum ac tyrannorum: totum est e saxo in mirandam altitudinem depresso, et multorum operis penitus exciso: nihil tam clausum ad exitum, nihil tam septum undique, nihil tam tutum ad custodiam nec fieri nec cogitari potest. In has lautumias, si qui publice custodiendi sunt, etiam ex ceteris oppidis Siciliae deduci imperantur. Eo quod multos captivos cives Romanos conjecerat, et quod eodem ceteros piratas condi imperarat, intellexit, si hunc subditivum archipiratam in eandem custodiam dedisset, fore servabas, quem, &c.] I have followed the 'vulgata.' Zumpt has 'servabas: quam ob rem? per triumphum, credo,' &c. Orelli: 'servabas: quo? Per triumphum, credo,' &c., the reading of Cod. Reg. and Paris., 7774, which Madvig approves. This is an instance in which the genuine hand of Cicero is uncertain. 'Per triumphum ducere' occurs in c. 30.

erat reliquum] 'Tibi erat reliquum:' Zumpt. But 'tibi' spoils the sense, as Orelli remarks. It would mean 'you had no hope left except,' &c.

27. Lautumias] They are described in Smyth's Sicily, p. 167. Cicero cannot have supposed, as Zumpt imagines, that these quarries were mainly made for prisons; nor do his words imply that at all. He must have known what every body knew. The common reading is 'depressum . . . excisum,' and perhaps as good a reading as that in the text.

subditivum] The common reading is 'subdititium' or 'subditicium,' a form which may be compared with 'dedititius.' The form in 'ivus' certainly occurs as in Horace, Epod. ii. 19:

"Ut gaudet insitiva decerpens pyra."

Both the Guelf. and Lag. 29, 42 have 'subditivum' here. Most of the inferior MSS. have 'subdituum,' which is a possible form; but Zumpt takes it merely as a tendency (tendere) towards 'subditivum.' Cicero ut a multis in lautumiis verus ille dux quaereretur. Itaque hominem huic optimae tutissimaeque custodiae non audet committere: denique Syracusas totas timet: amandat hominem—quo? Lilybaeum fortasse. Video: tamen homines maritimos non plane reformidat. Minime, iudices. Panhormum igitur? Audio: quamquam Syracusis, quoniam in Syracusano captus erat, maxime, si minus supplicio affici, at custodiri oportebat. Ne Panhormum quidem. Quo igitur? quo putatis? Ad homines a piratarum metu et suspicione alienissimos, a navigando rebusque maritimis remotissimos, ad Centuripinos, homines maxime mediterraneos, summos aratores; qui nomen nunquam timuissent maritimi praedonis, unum te praetore horruissent Apronium, terrestrem archipiratam. Et ut quivis facile perspiceret, id ab isto actum esse ut ille suppositus facile et libenter se illum qui non erat esse simularet, imperat Centuripinis ut is victu ceterisque rebus quam liberalissime commodissimeque adhiberetur.

XXVIII. Interea Syracusani, homines periti et humani, qui non modo ea quae perspicua essent videre, verum etiam occulta suspicari possent, habebant rationem omnes quotidie piratarum qui securi ferirentur; quam multos esse oporteret, ex ipso navigio quod erat captum et ex remorum numero conjiciebant. Iste, quod omnes qui artificii aliquid habuerant aut formae removerat atque abduxerat, reliquos si, ut consuetudo est, universos ad palum alligasset, clamorem populi fore suspicabatur, quum tanto plures abducti essent means that the real archpirate was let loose and a false man put in his place. He calls him shortly after 'ille suppositus.'

quo? Lilybaeum fortasse.] Cicero's imaginary dialogue is not very clear. It is not easy at first to distinguish between what he says himself and what he supposes others to say. I see no way of explaining how I understand the passage except by translating it: "he sends the man off. But whither? To Lilybaeum perhaps. I see what you mean; you still suppose that he is not altogether afraid of a maritime people. But he does not send him there, iudices. To Panhormus then? I hear what you say: though, as he was captured in the Syracusan territory, Syracuse would have been the proper place for his custody, if not for his punishment. But he did not send him even to Panhormus. Where did he send him then? Where do you think," &c. mediterraneos,] Yet these Mediterranean men, 'summi aratores,' supplied a ship, adhiberetur.] Lag. 29 has 'haberetur.' 'Adhiberetur' is thus used by Cicero, Ad Att. x. 12; Ad Q. Fr. i. 1. c. 5: "quos ego universos adhiberi liberaliter" &c. (Zumpt.) Graevius 'negat se ferre posse' the 'adhibere' in Cic. Ad Att. x. 12; but he must put up with it, whether he will or not. Orelli follows Zumpt, but 'invitus paene.'

removerat atque] 'Omittunt ambo Guelferbytani et Havn. collatio' (Zumpt); and he omits them. Orelli retains them.

tanto plures] Here Hotmann is at work. He thinks 'tanto plures,' 'so many more,' won't do. But it is one of the most ordinary things in the Latin language to use 'tanto,' 'tam,' 'ita,' in this way to express a great degree, without 'quanto,' 'quam,' or 'ut' following. In c. 29 'tanto post.' The objection in this chapter is perhaps merely quam relictī. Propter hanc causam, quum instituisset alios alio tempore producere, tamen in tanto conventu nemo erat qui non rationem numerumque haberet, et reliquos non desideraret solum, sed etiam posceret et flagitaret. Quum magnus numerus deesset, tum iste homo nefarius in eorum locum, quos domum suam de piratis abduxerat, substituere et supponere coepit cives Romanos quos in carcerem antea conjecerat: quorum alios Sertorianos milites fuisse insimulabat et ex Hispania fugientes ad Siciliam appulsos esse dicebat: alios qui a praedonibus erant capti, quum mercaturas facerent, aut aliquam ob causam navigarent, sua voluntate cum piratis fuisse arguebat. Itaque alii cives Romani ne cognoscerentur, capitibus obvolutis e carcere ad palum atque ad necem rapiiebantur: alii, quum a multis civibus Romanis cognoscerentur, ab omnibus defenderentur, securi feriebantur. Quorum ego de acerbissima morte crudelissimoque cruciatu dicam, quum eum locum tractare coepero; et ita dicam, ut, si me in ea querimonia, quam sum habiturus de istius crudelitate et de civium Romanorum indignissima morte, non modo vires verum etiam vita deficiat, id mihi praeclarum et jucundum putem. Haec igitur est gesta res, haec victoria praeclara: myoparone piratico capto, dux liberatus, symphoniaci Romam missi: formosi homines et adolescentes et artifices domum abducti: in eorum locum et ad eorum numerum cives Romani hostilem in modum cruciati et necati: omnis vestis ablata: omne aurum et argentum ablatum et aversum.

XXIX. At quemadmodum ipse se induit priore actione? Qui tot dies tacuisset, repente in M. Annii, hominis splendidissimi, testimonio, quum is civem Romanum dixisset, archipiratam negasset securi esse percussum, exiit: conscientia sceleris et furore ex founded on the comparative 'plures' being joined with 'tanto;' but the objection is not the stronger for that reason.

nemo erat qui non] Cod. Vat. has 'quin' for 'qui non,' and omits 'et flagitaret' at the end of the sentence. Cod. Vat. has 'C. R. quos cervos in carcerem;' and Mai, who believes his codex to be infallible, or nearly so, writes 'quos certos,' which I don't believe to be Latin or sense.

Sertorianos] The men who were dispersed after the assassination of Sertorius in Spain, B.C. 72.

civibus Romanis cognoscerentur,] The reading of the better MSS., instead of which we have in some editions, as in the Variorum, 'civ. Rom. recognoscerentur.' Zumpt refers to various critics who show that 'cognoscere' is used in the sense of 'agnoscere.' But perhaps something more is meant than 'agnoscere.' In Lib. 5. c. 65, "neque semper cum cognitoribus esse possunt" occurs, and "cognosceret hominem." It seems to mean the recognition of a man by another who is himself well known, and a sufficient voucher for the character of another.—'et artifices:' 'et' is omitted in the English reprint; but it is necessary.—'aversum:' wrongly appropriated by Verres.

29. se induit] 'Entangles himself,' as in Lib. 2. c. 42: "hic videte in quos se laqueos induerit;" and Lib. 5. c. 64: "sua confessione induatur," &c.

maleficiis concepto excitatus dixit, se, quod sciret sibi crimini datum iri pecuniam accepisse neque de vero archipirata sumpsisse supplicium, ideo se securi non percussisse: domi esse apud sese archipiratas dixit duos. O clementiam populi Romani, seu potius patientiam miram ac singularem! Civem Romanum securi esse percussum, M. Annius, eques Romanus, dicit; taces: archipiratam negat; fateris. Fit gemitus omnium et clamor, quum tamen a praesenti supplicio tuo continuus populus Romanus se et repressit, et salutis suae rationem iudicum severitati reservavit. Quid, sciebas tibi crimini datum iri? Quamobrem sciebas? quamobrem etiam suspicabare? Inimicum habebas neminem: si haberes, tamen non ita vixeras ut metum iudicii propositum habere deberes. An te, id quod fieri solet, conscientia timidum suspiciosumque faciebat? Qui igitur quum esses cum imperio jam tum iudicium et crimen horrueris, is quum tot testibus arguere, potes de damnatione dubitare? Verum si crimen hoc metuebas, ne quis suppositum abs te esse diceret qui pro archipirata securi feriretur, utrum tandem tibi ad defensionem firmiter fore putasti, in iudicio, coactu atque efflagitatu meo, producere ad ignotos tanto post eum quem archipiratam esse diceres; an recenti re, Syracusis, apud notos, inspectante Sicilia paene tota, securi ferire? Vide quid intersit utrum faciendum fuerit. In illo reprehensio nulla esse potuit; hic defensio nulla est. Itaque illud semper omnes fecerunt: hoc quis ante te, quis praeter te fecerit, quaero. Piratam vivum tenuisti. Quem ad finem? Dum cum imperio fuisti. Quam ob causam? quo exemplo? cur tamdiu? cur, inquam, civibus Romanis, quos piratae ceperant, securi statim percussis, ipsis piratis lucis usuram tam diuturnam dedisti? Verum esto; sit tibi illud liberum omne tempus quod salutis suae] This is the reading of G. and of the 'alii codd. vulgares,' as Orelli calls them. Reg. and Guelff., which are of the superior class, have 'suae,' and Zumpt says that nothing is more manifest. Madvig is of the same mind. Orelli and Bake stand up for 'tuae.' Zumpt's sarcastic argument against 'tuae' is, "scilicet populus saluti Verris consultum voluit," which is not worth answering. Cicero could say that the Roman people checked themselves, and reserved the consideration of the case of Verres (tuae) for the strictness of the judges. Bake, who defends 'tuae,' refers to Lib. 1. c. 28: "istum fortuna non tam," &c.

Inimicum habebas, &c.] Said ironically.

Qui igitur . . . dubitare?] I have let this passage stand as it is in Zumpt, without being convinced of the correctness of his settlement of the text. It stands thus in the Variorum ed.: "Qui igitur, cum esses in imperio, jam tum iudicium et crimen horrebas: reus cum tot testibus arguere, potes de damnatione dubitare?" But the old editions have 'quid igitur,' &c. There is good authority for 'horrueris,' but I believe that 'horrebas' is the true reading. 'Reus' is not in the better MSS. 'Is' is an addition by Zumpt. 'In imperio' will do; but 'cum imperio' is perhaps better here. It is impossible to say what is the genuine text. Orelli has 'Qui igitur . . . crimen et iudicium horrebas: reus quum . . . coarguere,' &c. ad ignotos] 'To those who did not know him;' a common use of the word.

cum imperio fuisti: etiamne privatus, etiamne reus, etiamne paene damnatus hostium duces privata in domo retinuisti? Unum, alterum mensem, prope annum denique, domi tuae piratae, a quo tempore capti sunt, quoad per me licitum est, fuerunt; hoc est, quoad per M'. Glabrionem licitum est, qui postulante me produci atque in carcerem condi imperavit.

XXX. Quod est hujusce rei jus, quae consuetudo, quod exemplum? Hostem acerrimum atque infestissimum populi Romani, seu potius communem hostem gentium nationumque omnium, quisquam omnium mortalium privatus intra moenia domi suae retinere poterit? Quid, si pridie quam a me tu coactus es confiteri, civibus Romanis securi percussis, praedonum ducem vivere, habitare apud te; si, inquam, pridie domo tua profugisset, si aliquam manum contra populum Romanum facere potuisset, quid diceres? 'Apud me habitavit: mecum fuit: ego illum ad iudicium meum, quo facilius crimen inimicorum diluere possem, vivum atque incolumem reservavi.' Itane vero tu tua pericula communi periculo defendes? tu supplicia quae debentur hostibus victis ad tuum non ad rei publicae tempus conferes? populi Romani hostis privati hominis custodiis asservabitur? At etiam qui triumphant, eoque diutius vivos hostium duces reservant ut his per triumphum ductis pulcherrimum spectaculum fructumque victoriae populus Romanus percipere possit, tamen, quum de foro in Capitolium currum flectere incipiunt, illos duci in carcerem jubent, idemque dies et victoribus imperii et victis vitae finem facit. Et nunc cuiquam credo esse dubium quin quodcum imperio] 'Vulgo quod' (Zumpt). 'Quoad' is said to be the reading of the best MSS. Zumpt has the remark from Garatoni, that "quod, si ad tempus referatur, posse servari, sed praestare quoad." What else can 'quod' refer to except 'tempus?' 'Quoad,' which occurs shortly afterwards, has a different sense: it means up to the time when my intervention took them out of your house. In this passage either 'quod' or 'quoad' may be explained. Zumpt and Orelli have 'quoad.' See the remarks of Gellius on 'quoad,' Lib. 7. c. 21.

30. mecum fuit:] Klotz remarks that 'esse cum aliquo' not only means to live with a person, but to have confidential communication with him. He refers to the passage in the Tusculan Disp. iii. 34.

Itane vero,] 'Itane vero?' Zumpt, thus always, I think. I have left the (?) after 'vero,' I believe, in one or two instances, incorrectly. 'Itane vero' may indeed be a sentence, that is, an incomplete sentence.

vivos . . reservant] Ernesti defends 'reservant' against the common reading 'servant;' but he says that 'vivos' should be removed. Nobody can tell why. 'Reservare' is 'servare' for some particular purpose. Zumpt has already given his opinion of Lambinus. The following is his judgment of Ernesti: "fuit omnino Ernestius, prout animus ferebat, inconstantior in probando et improbando, sed semper paratus ad tuendam lectionem vulgatam, si quis alius reprehendisset."

victis vitae finem] This passage is authority, with others, for one of the shameful parts of Roman history, the execution of the conquered generals. Cicero here writes as a Roman. The story of Jugurtha's strangulation, after appearing in the triumph, is told by Plutarch (Marius, c. 12). Zumpt refers to the death of Simon, the leader in tu id commissurus non fueris, praesertim quum statuisses, ut ais, tibi causam esse dicendam, ut ille archipirata non potius securi feriretur, quam, quod erat ante oculos positum, tuo periculo viveret. Si enim esset mortuus, tu qui crimen ais te metuisse, quaero, cui probares? quum constaret istum Syracusis a nullo visum esse archipiratam, ab omnibus desideratum; quum dubitaret nemo quin abs te pecunia liberatus esset; quum vulgo loquerentur suppositum in ejus locum quem pro illo probare velles; quum tu te fassus esses id crimen tanto ante metuisse; si eum diceres esse mortuum, quis te audiret? Nunc quum vivum nescio quem istum producis, tamen te derideri vides: quid, si aufugisset, si vincla rupisset ita ut Nico ille, nobilissimus pirata, fecit, quem P. Servilius, qua felicitate ceperat, eadem recuperavit; quid diceres? Verum hoc erat: si ille semel verus pirata securi percussus esset, pecuniam illam non haberes: si hic falsus esset mortuus aut profugisset, non esset difficile alium in suppositi locum supponere. Plura dixi quam volui de illo archipirata: et tamen ea quae certissima sunt hujus criminis argumenta praetermisi. Volo enim esse totum mihi crimen hoc integrum. Est certus locus, certa lex, certum tribunal, quo hoc reservetur.

the Jewish war, who was strangled after appearing in the triumph of Vespasian and Titus (Josephus, Bell. Jud. vii. 5).

Et nunc cuiquam, &c.] This is the reading which appears to be conformable to the best MSS. The common reading is 'Et non credo esse dubium.' 'Credo' generally stands alone in this form of expression, as in Lib. 1. c. 24: "At, credo, in hisce solis rebus;" but it may be joined with the infinitive also. Manutius, who read 'Est nunc, credo, cuiquam dubium,' calls this 'implicata sententia;' but he saw the meaning, which is, 'you would not have kept this archpirate in your house with so much danger before your eyes (quod erat ante oculos positum):' the danger was a trial for 'majestas,' which is again mentioned at the end of this chapter. But the sentence is incomplete: 'you would not have run this risk unless you had got something by it.' He has not, however, pointed out the real connexion of the parts of this confused passage. Cicero, after 'tuo periculo viveret,' instead of finishing his sentence, passes to the supposed case of the man having died while he was in the custody of Verres, or having escaped, and to the consequence of such a contingency; and he resumes 'Verum hoc erat,' which must be connected with this sentence that ends with 'tuo periculo viveret.'

tamen te derideri vides:] This is the reading of all the MSS. except Guelf. 1, which has 'tantum' for 'tamen;' and Zumpt adopts 'tantum,' in which he is followed by Orelli. But 'tamen,' as Madvig explains it, appears to be the true reading: "Now when you do produce alive some prisoner or other of yours, still you see that you ridiculed;" that is, nobody believes. "What would you have said if he had escaped?" This is all consistent and clear. Zumpt explains 'tantum' thus: "nunc nihil aliud nisi derideris, sed si aufugisset ille et ad socios redisset, gravissimam culpam subires."

crimen hoc integrum.] See Lib. 1. c. 5. Zumpt apprehends that Cicero would have failed in this 'majestatis judicio,' unless he could have produced some better proof of the archpirate being released for a sum of money; for all that is proved is, that Verres kept him at his house after he left the province. Would not that be enough? He ought to have executed him. Besides, Cicero does not admit that this was the real man. Verres would have to prove that. He was bound to show what became of this piratical captain. This is a sample of the idle way of talking about things

XXXI. Hac tanta praeda auctus, mancipiis, argento, veste locupletatus, nihilo diligentior ad classem ornandam, milites revocandos alendosque esse coepit, quum ea res non solum provinciae saluti verum etiam ipsi praedae posset esse. Nam aestate summa, quo tempore ceteri praetores obire provinciam et concursare consuerunt, aut etiam in tanto praedonum metu et periculo ipsi navigare, eo tempore ad luxuriam libidinesque suas domo sua regia, quae regis Hieronis fuit, qua praetores uti solent, contentus non fuit: tabernacula, quemadmodum consuevit temporibus aestivis, quod antea demonstravi, carbaseis intenta velis, collocari iussit in littore; quod est littus in Insula Syracusis post Arethusae fontem, propter ipsum introitum atque ostium portus, amoeno sane et ab arbitris remoto loco. Hic dies aestivos populi Romani praetor, custos defensorque provinciae, sic vixit ut muliebria quotidie convivia essent, vir accumberet nemo praeter ipsum et praetextatum filium; tametsi recte sine exceptione dixeram virum quum isti essent neminem fuisse. Nonnunquam etiam libertus Timarchides adhibebatur. Mulieres autem nuptae, nobiles praeter unam mimi Isidori filiam, quam iste propter amorem ab Rhodio tibicine abduxerat; Pipa quaedam, uxor Aeschrionis Syracusani, de qua muliere which in no way concern the explanation of the text. I would not have it supposed that I believe all that Cicero says. I am very ready to disbelieve him often. But, when we know no more of a thing than what he tells us, we must take it as he tells it, and see whether it is for his case or against him. The Roman orator is a match for any number of commentators in handling his matter. Klotz approves of Zumpt's remark. He knows more than he is told by his author.

31. provinciae saluti] 'Provinciae praesidio:' Cod. Vat.

concursare] Cicero uses this word to express being active and busy, as in c. 12; and so he uses 'concurrere' in Pro Quint. c. 16, as Graevius remarks. In c. 35, 'concursabat . . multitudo' is not the meeting of the multitude, but the running to and fro of all the persons.

quae regis, &c.] These words have occurred before, see Lib. 4. c. 53; but this is not a sufficient reason for supposing that they are not the genuine words of Cicero here. Klotz observes that each of these books is complete in itself, and that they were at first published separately, though he does not state the evidence for this. It is, however, common for a man to repeat the same expression when he is speaking a second time of the same thing, and to do it without thinking of what he has said before. Klotz refers to what Cicero says of Thespiæ (Lib. 4. c. 2, and 60); and he also compares Lib. 2. c. 8, and Lib. 5. c. 41. Orelli keeps the words 'quae regis,' &c.

arbitris] 'In a pleasant spot, and one safe against all intruders; visitors, comers. For 'arbitrator' is one who comes to a place, from 'ar' (ad), and the root 'bit,' to 'come' or 'go.'

tametsi] Zumpt corrects the common reading 'tametsi,' following certain MSS. He says though 'quamquam' is the proper word when a man is thus correcting what he has said, yet 'tametsi' and 'etsi' can be used for it. If so, we gain nothing by his alteration. In Lib. 1. c. 2, there is 'tametsi de absolutione,' which is Zumpt's reading; and he says in his note, 'Guelf. etsi, quod non sane contemno.' Here he prefers it. 'Tametsi' is very generally followed by 'tamen' in these orations. But if we take the cases where it stands at the beginning of a sentence, and is not followed by 'tamen,' we find that 'tametsi' is the usual word, and not 'etsi,' in these orations. In c. 34 there is "etsi in hac quadriremiti."

plurimi versus qui in istius cupiditatem facti sunt tota Sicilia percelebrantur. Erat Nice, facie eximia, ut praedicatur, uxor Cleomenis Syracusani. Hanc Cleomenes vir amabat: verumtamen hujus libidini adversari nec poterat nec audebat: et simul ab isto donis beneficiisque multis devinciebatur. Illo autem tempore iste, tametsi ea est hominis impudentia quam nostis, ipse tamen quum vir esset Syracusis, uxorem ejus parum poterat animo soluto ac libero tot in acta dies secum habere. Itaque excogitat rem singularem: naves quibus legatus praefuerat Cleomeni tradit; classi populi Romani Cleomenem Syracusanum praeesse jubet atque imperare. Hoc eo facit ut ille non solum abesset a domo tum quum navigaret, sed etiam libenter cum magno honore beneficioque abesset: ipse autem, remoto atque ablegato viro, non liberius quam antea—quis enim unquam istius libidini obstitit?—sed paulo solutior tamen animo secum illam haberet, si non tamquam virum, at tamquam aemulum removisset. Accipit naves sociorum atque amicorum Cleomenes Syracusanus.

XXXII. Quid primum aut accusem aut querar, judices? Siculone homini legati, quaestoris, praetoris denique potestatem, honorem, auctoritatem dari? Si te impediabat ista conviviorum mulierumque occupatio, ubi quaestores? ubi legati? ubi ternis denariis aestima-

Erat Nice,] Zumpt's former reading was 'Erat et Nice;' but he struck out 'et' in his larger edition, for it is in no MS. There is probably some error here. The preceding sentence begins: 'There were, besides, certain married women, women of rank, except one, the daughter of the mimus Isidorus, whom Verres had taken away from the Rhodian flute-player;' and then we come to the enumeration of these noble ladies, of whom Pipa is first; and then the sentence is interrupted. The verb which is to be supplied with 'mulieres,' &c., is 'adhibebantur.'

ipse tamen] Zumpt observes that it is wonderful (mirum) that, in all the editions after P. Manutius, a point is put after 'tamen,' as if 'tamen' and 'ipse vir' were purposely separated, though all the 'sententiae vis' and 'constructionis ratio' depend on the connexion of these words. I don't know what his smaller edition has, but the English reprint, which labours under a most vicious punctuation, puts a comma after 'tamen.' Zumpt observes, that by frequent punctuation, not following reason, but custom, we separate things that go together, as is often the case with this particle.—'tum quum:' Zumpt has 'dum.'

si non tamquam virum, at, &c.] So this stands in the English reprint, and I suppose in the smaller edition of Zumpt. In the larger edition he follows Madvig, who writes 'e Steph. vet. et coll. Havn.' 'sed tamquam aemulum.' By looking in the Guelff. MSS. again, Zumpt found that they have 'sed.' But there is no doubt that 'at' is conformable to the usage of Cicero; and Mai and Orelli have retained it. Zumpt says that 'si' belongs to 'removisset,' and the opposition is this, 'non virum' and 'sed aemulum.' There is no doubt that 'si' belongs to 'removisset;' there is nothing else for it to belong to. It is also true that 'non—sed' are opposed, and 'si non—at;' and Zumpt says that 'at' would do, if it were in this form: "ut eam secum haberet, si non tamquam uxorem, at tamquam amicam." But in Lib. 3. c. 4, there is "si non virtute, &c., at sermone . . . ejus delectamini;" and in Lib. 4. c. 19: "si non in parentis, at in hominum numero putabat." 'At' is the true word here, and 'sed' spoils the sense.

32. ubi quaestores? ubi legati?] He then asks where is the 'frumentum,' estimated at three denarii the modius, and the mules, and the tents, &c.; that is, where are all the means which the Roman state tum frumentum? ubi muli? ubi tabernacula? ubi tot tantaque ornamenta magistratibus et legatis a senatu populoque Romano permissa et data? denique ubi praefecti, ubi tribuni tui? Si civis Romanus dignus isto negotio nemo fuit; quid civitates quae in amicitia fideque populi Romani perpetuo manserant? ubi Segestana? ubi Centuripina civitas? quae quum officiis, fide, vetustate, tum etiam cognatione populi Romani nomen attingunt. O dii immortales! Quid, si harum ipsarum civitatum militibus, navibus, navarchis Syracusanus Cleomenes jussus est imperare, nonne omnis honos ab isto dignitatis, aequitatis, officiique sublatus est? Ecquod in Sicilia bellum gessimus quin Centuripinis sociis, Syracusanis hostibus uteremur? Atque haec ego ad memoriam vetustatis, non ad contumeliam civitatis referri volo. Itaque ille vir clarissimus summusque imperator, M. Marcellus, cujus virtute captae, misericordia conservatae sunt Syracusae, habitare in ea parte urbis quae insula est Syracusanorum neminem voluit. Hodie, inquam, in ea parte Syracusanum habitare non licet. Est enim locus quem vel pauci possent defendere. Committere igitur eum non fidelissimis hominibus noluit; simul quod ab illa parte urbis navibus aditus ex alto est. Quamobrem qui nostros exercitus saepe excluserant, iis claustra loci committenda non existimavit. Vide quid intersit inter tuam libidinem majorumque auctoritatem, inter amorem furoremque tuum et illorum consilium atque prudentiam. Illi aditum littoris Syracusanis ademerunt: tu imperium maritimum concessisti. Illi habitare in eo loco Syracusanum qua naves accedere possent noluerunt: tu classi et navibus Syracusanum praeesse voluisti. Quibus illi urbis suae partem ademerunt, iis tu nostri imperii partem dedisti:

put at your command for defending the island. Hotmann quotes (Liv. xlii. 1): "Ante hunc consulem nemo unquam sociis in ulla re sumptui aut oneri fuit: ideo magistratus mulis tabernaculisque et omni alio instrumento militari ornabantur, ne quid tale imperarent sociis." Compare Lib. 4. c. 5, note. "If your 'quaestores' and 'legati' could not take the command," Cicero continues, "where were your 'praefecti' and 'tribuni,' who were under the immediate orders of the 'praetor?'" populi Romani nomen] The reading of the good MSS., Madvig remarks, is 'populum Romanum.' Zumpt explains the text to mean that these people deserve to be called almost Romans, as they are so intimately connected with the Romans by good faith and blood.

nonne omnis] 'Sic unum Guelff. 1. fa-teor, sed tamen in apodosi vix aliter videtur esse. Vulgo non' (Zumpt). He refers to Lib. 2. c. 59, and Lib. 3. c. 52, where he made the same change, on the authority of the best MSS. See Lib. 3. c. 52, and the note. Orelli has 'non omnes,' the reading of Reg. Vat. and G.

quae insula est] 'Quae in insula est:' Cod. Vat., not to be followed here. See Lib. 4. c. 53, and Lib. 5. c. 38.—'Syracusanorum neminem:' Orelli has 'Syracusanum neminem,' according to Cod. Vat. and G.—'quem vel pauci possent:' 'possunt' is the reading of the inferior MSS., and 'possint' of Ernesti.

libidinem] 'Your caprice or pleasure.' This is merely remarked, to prevent any one taking it to mean any thing else here.—'eos Syracusano dicto:' Orelli.

et quorum sociorum opera Syracusani nobis dicto audientes sunt, eos Syracusanis dicto audientes esse jussisti.

XXXIII. Egreditur in Centuripina quadriremi Cleomenes e portu: sequitur Segestana navis, Tyndaritana, Herbitensis, Heracliensis, Apolloniensis, Haluntina: praeclara classis in speciem, sed inops et infirma propter dimissionem propugnatorum atque remigum. Tamdiu in imperio suo classem iste praetor diligens vidit, quamdiu convivium ejus flagitiosissimum praetervecta est: ipse autem qui visus multis diebus non esset tum se tamen in conspectum nautis paulisper dedit. Stetit soleatus praetor populi Romani cum pallio purpureo tunicaque talari, muliercula nixus, in littore. Jam hoc istum vestitu Siculi civesque Romani permulti saepe viderunt. Posteaquam paulum provecta classis est, et Pachynum quinto die denique appulsa, nautae fame coacti radices palmarum agrestium, quarum erat in illis locis, sicut in magna parte Siciliae, multitudo, colligebant; et his miseri perditique alebantur. Cleomenes autem, qui alterum se Verrem quum luxuria ac nequitia tum etiam imperio putaret, similiter totos dies in litore, tabernaculo posito, perpotabat.

XXXIV. Ecce autem repente, ebrio Cleomene, esurientibus ceteris, nuntiatur naves esse piratarum in portu Odysseae, nam ita is locus nominatur; nostra autem classis erat in portu Pachyni. Cleomenes autem, quod erat terrestre praesidium non re, sed nomine, speravit iis militibus quos ex eo loco deduxisset explere se numerum nautarum et remigum posse. Reperta est eadem istius hominis avarissimi ratio in praesidiis quae in classibus; nam erant perpauci reliqui, ceteri dimissi. Princeps Cleomenes in quadriremi Centuripina malum erigi, vela fieri, praecidi ancoras imperavit; et simul ut se ceteri sequerentur signum dari jussit. Haec Centuripina navis erat incredibili celeritate velis; nam scire isto praetore nemo poterat quid quaeque navis remis facere posset; etsi in hac

33. soleatus] See Quintil. Inst. Or. viii. 3, 64, referred to by Zumpt. Hotmann refers to Gellius (xiii. 21) as to this wearing of 'soleae,' mere coverings for the soles of the feet: "omnia enim ferme id genus quibus plantarum calces tantum infimae teguntur, cetera prope nuda et teretibus habenis vineta sunt, soleas dixerunt, nonnumquam voce Graeca crepidulas."

palmarum] Zumpt stumbled at 'radices,' and thought that 'spadices' might be the word; because Gellius (iii. 9) says "palmae termes ex arbore cum fructu avulsus spadix dicitur." But 'botanice' taught him that it was the root of the 'Chamaerops humilis' of Linnaeus. This instance shows that we should not be in too great a hurry to make alterations in old texts. The port of Pachynus is supposed by Smyth to be the modern Passaro, where "the sailors were compelled by hunger to devour the roots of the dwarf palm, a plant that still flourishes in prodigious quantity" (Sicily, p. 181).

34. Odysseae] The small map shows the position of this place. It seems to be the shallow bay of La Marza (Smyth's Sicily, p. 186).

quadriremi propter honorem et gratiam Cleomenis minime multi remiges et milites deerant. Evolarat jam e conspectu fere fugiens quadriremis quum etiamtum ceterae naves uno in loco moliebantur. Erat animus in reliquis. Quamquam erant pauci, quoquo modo res se habebat, pugnare tamen se velle clamabant; et, quod reliquum vitae viriumque fames fecerat, id ferro potissimum reddere volebant. Quodsi Cleomenes non tanto ante fugisset, aliqua tamen ad resistendum ratio fuisset. Erat enim sola illa navis constrata, et ita magna ut propugnaculo ceteris posset esse; quae si in praedonum pugna versaretur, urbis instar habere inter illos piraticos myoparones videretur: sed tum inopes, relictī ab duce praefectoque classis, eundem necessario cursum tenere coeperunt. Helorum versus ut ipse Cleomenes ita ceteri navigabant; neque hi tam praedonum impetum fugiebant quam imperatorem sequebantur. Tum ut quisque in fuga postremus, ita in periculo princeps erat: postremam enim quamque navem piratae primam adoriebantur. Ita prima Haluntinorum navis capitur cui praeerat Haluntinus, homo nobilis, Phylarchus, quem ab illis praedonibus Locrenses postea publice redemerunt; ex quo vos priore actione jurato rem omnem causamque cognostis. Deinde Apolloniensis navis capitur, et ejus praefectus Anthropinus occiditur.

XXXV. Haec dum aguntur, interea jam Cleomenes ad Helori littus pervenerat; jam sese in terram e navi ejecerat, quadrirememque fluctuantem in salo reliquerat. Reliqui praefecti navium, quum in terram imperator exisset, quum ipsi neque repugnare neque mari effugere ullo modo possent, appulsis ad Helorum navibus, Cleomenem persecuti sunt. Tum praedonum dux Heracleo, repente praeter spem, non sua virtute sed istius avaritia nequitiaque victor, classem pulcherrimam populi Romani, in littus expulsam et ejectam, quum primum advesperasceret, inflammari incendique jussit. O tempus miserum atque acerbum provinciae Siciliae! o casum illum multis innocentibus calamitosum atque funestum! o istius nequitiam ac turpitudinem singularem! Una atque eadem nox erat qua praetor amoris turpissimi flamma, classis populi Romani praemoliebantur.] They were busy in getting ready for flight, and had some trouble about it.

navis constrata,] 'A decked vessel,' as appears from c. 40. 'Navis constrata' is opposed to 'navis aperta.' It is the Greek word κατάφρακτος.

Helorum] This is a conjecture of Antonio Agostini, communicated to F. Ursini.

When Agostini was in Sicily, he saw that 'Pelorum,' the MSS. reading, could not be the true one. The same blunder occurs twice in the next chapter. This is a case which criticism can safely deal with. There is the same mistake in Lib. 4. c. 26, in the name 'Helori,' where the MSS. have 'Pelori.'

donum incendio conflagrabat. Affertur nocte intempesta gravis hujusce mali nuntius Syracusas: curritur ad praetorium quo istum ex illo praeclaro convivio reduxerant paulo ante mulieres cum cantu atque symphonia. Cleomenes, quamquam nox erat, tamen in publico esse non audet: includit se domi: neque aderat uxor quae consolari hominem in malis posset. Hujus autem praeclari imperatoris ita erat severa domi disciplina ut in re tanta et tam gravi nuntio nemo admitteretur, nemo esset qui auderet aut dormientem excitare aut interpellare vigilantem. Jam vero, re ab omnibus cognita, concursabat urbe tota maxima multitudo. Non enim, sicut erat nuper consuetudo, praedonum adventum significabat ignis e specula sublatus aut tumulto; sed flamma ex ipso incendio navium et calamitatem acceptam et periculum reliquum nuntiabat.

XXXVI. Quum praetor quaereretur et constaret neminem ei nuntiasse, fit ad domum ejus cum clamore concursus atque impetus. Tum iste excitatus audit rem omnem ex Timarchide: sagum sumit. Lucebat jam fere: procedit in medium, vini, somni, stupri plenus. Excipitur ab omnibus ejusmodi clamore ut ei Lampsaceni periculi similitudo versaretur ante oculos. Hoc etiam majus videbatur quod in odio simili multitudo hominum haec erat maxima. Tum istius acta commemorabatur: tum flagitiosa illa convivia: tum appellabantur a multitudine mulieres nominatim: tum quaerebant ex ipso palam, tot dies continuos, per quos nunquam visus esset, ubi fuisset, quid egisset? tum imperator ab isto praepositus Cleomenes flagitabatur: neque quidquam propius est factum quam ut illud Uticense exemplum de Hadriano transferretur Syracusas, ut duo sepulchra duorum praetorum improborum duabus in provinciis constituerentur. Verum habita est a multitudine ratio temporis, habita est tumultus, habita etiam dignitatis existimationisque communis, quod is est conventus Syracusis civium Romanorum ut non modo illa provincia verum hac etiam re publica dignissimus existimetur. Confirmant ipsi se quum hic etiamtum semisomnus stupe- ret: arma capiunt: totum forum atque Insulam quae est urbis

35. ignis e specula] A beacon light on some eminence. The Greek is φρυκτώριον: and φρυκτοί are torches or other combustibles lighted for signals. Compare Thucydides (iii. 22): φρυκτοί . . . πολέμιοι: and Aeschylus, Agamem. v. 30: ὡς ὁ φρυκτὸς ἀγγέλλων πρόπει.

36. Lampsaceni] Lib. 1. c. 27, where Hadrianus is mentioned.—‘acta commemorabatur:’ the MSS. reading is ‘acta commemorabantur,’ but the allusion is to the ‘acta,’ where Verres had been spending his time in debauchery. This is an emendation of Hotmann, as he says; of Eric Memmius, as Lambinus says.

semisomnus] The reading of Lag. 27, 29, and Cod. Vat. The common reading is ‘semisomnis,’ which is a genuine Latin word, but a poetical form, as it is said.

magna pars complent. Unam illam noctem solam praedones ad Helorum commorati, quum fumantes etiam nostras naves reliquissent, accedere incipiunt ad Syracusas. Qui videlicet saepe audissent nihil esse pulchrius quam Syracusarum moenia ac portus, staterant se, si ea Verre praetore non vidissent, nunquam esse visuros.

XXXVII. Ac primo ad illa aestiva praetoris accedunt, ipsam illam ad partem littoris, ubi iste per eos dies, tabernaculis positis, castra luxuriae collocarat. Quem posteaquam inanem locum offenderunt et praetorem commosse ex eo loco castra senserunt, statim sine ullo metu in ipsum portum penetrare coeperunt. Quum in portum dico, iudices, explanandum est enim diligentius eorum causa qui locum ignorant, in urbem dico atque in urbis intimam partem venisse piratas. Non enim portu illud oppidum clauditur, sed urbe portus ipse cingitur et continetur; ut non alluantur mari moenia extrema sed ipse influat in urbis sinum portus. Hic te praetore Heracleo pirata cum quatuor myoparonibus parvis ad arbitrium suum navigavit. Pro dii immortales! piraticus myoparo, quum imperii populi Romani nomen ac fasces essent Syracusis, usque ad forum Syracusanorum et ad omnes crepidines urbis accessit: quo neque Karthaginensium gloriosissimae classes quum mari plurimum Unam illam] Cod. Vat. has 'nam illam.' — 'accedere . . ad Syracusas:' but the better MSS. omit 'ad.' Zumpt adds that Mai has kept the 'ad;' 'sed relinquitur dubitatio an recte legere potuerit.' Perhaps he means that it is doubtful if he read his MSS. right. But Zumpt keeps 'ad' in c. 37: "ad omnes crepidines urbis accessit;" and in c. 49 he has "ad Heracliam . . accederem." It seems that the 'ad' can be omitted, as it is in some passages, if the readings are right.

37. portu . . clauditur,] The piratical captain entered the large port, which is bounded on one side by the island of Ortygia, and on the other by the peninsula Plemmyrium. 'Claudi' has the sense of 'terminated' or 'bounded' in this passage. Graevius has a long note on the word, and cites various instances. One will suffice (Liv. xxi. 43): "dextra laevaue duo maria claudunt." — 'cingitur et concluditur' is the common reading. There is authority for both. See Smyth's Sicily, Appendix, p. xv. on the approach to Syracuse and its fine harbour. The position of the port is such that it may be said to be contained within the city, for an enemy, when inside the port, was within Ortygia; but it is an exaggeration to say that the whole port was surrounded by the city, which certainly did not extend south of the Anapus, though there might have been buildings here and there in all parts of the port.

Heracleo] Orosius (vi. 3) briefly tells this story; but the name of the piratical captain is Pyrganio in the text of Orosius, ed. Havercamp.

imperii] The editions have generally 'imperium;' but 'imperii' is the reading of all the good MSS. (Zumpt.) Orelli has 'imperii.' — 'ad forum Syracusanum:' Orelli.

crepidines] These are the artificial works, moles, sea-walls, and the like, by which the port was strengthened or made more convenient. The word appears to have been taken from the Greek κηπίς, and not to be a genuine Latin word. It often signifies 'foundations,' the substructure on which something rests. The scholiast on Juvenal (v. 8) attempts absurdly to derive it from 'concrepito,' and gives an explanation which does not suit the passage that he is professing to explain; for there it means the basement or steps of a house or any public building.

poterant, multis bellis saepe conatae, unquam aspirare potuerunt; neque populi Romani invicta ante te praetorem gloria illa navalis unquam tot Punicis Siciliensibusque bellis penetrare potuit: qui locus ejusmodi est ut ante Syracusani in moenibus suis, in urbe, in foro hostem armatum ac victorem, quam in portu ullam hostium navem viderint. Hic te praetore praedonum naviculae pervagatae sunt, quo Atheniensium classis sola post hominum memoriam ccc navibus vi ac multitudine invasit; quae in eo ipso portu loci ipsius natura victa atque superata est. Hic primum opes illius civitatis comminutae depressaeque sunt: in hoc portu Atheniensium nobilitatis, imperii, gloriae naufragium factum existimatur.

XXXVIII. Eone pirata penetravit, quo simulatque adisset, non modo a latere sed etiam a tergo magnam partem urbis relinqueret? Insulam totam praetervectus est, quae est urbs Syracusis suo nomine ac moenibus, quo in loco majores, ut ante dixi, Syracusanum habitare vetuerunt; quod qui illam partem urbis tenerent, in eorum potestatem portum futurum intelligebant. At quemadmodum est pervagatus? Radices palmarum agrestium quas in nostris navibus invenerant jactabant, ut omnes istius improbitatem et calamitatem Siciliae possent cognoscere. Siculosne milites, aratorumne liberos, quorum patres tantum labore suo frumenti exarabant ut populo Romano totique Italiae suppeditare possent, eosne in insula Cereris natos, ubi primum fruges inventae esse dicuntur, eo cibo esse usos a quo majores eorum ceteros quoque frugibus inventis removerunt? Te praetore Siculi milites palmarum stirpibus, piratae Siculo frumento alebantur. O spectaculum miserum atque acerbum! ludibrio esse urbis gloriam! populi Romani nomen! hominum conventum atque multitudinem! piratico myoparone in portu Syracusano de classe populi Romani triumphum agere piratam, quum praetoris nequissimi inertissimique oculos praedonum remi respergerent! Posteaquam e portu piratae non metu aliquo affecti sed satietate Atheniensium classis] In the battle which was fought in the great port, Thucydides (vii. 70) says that the whole number of the two fleets, Athenian and Syracusan, was not quite two hundred. The Athenian ships were eighty-six (Thucyd. vii. 52). It is, as Orelli calls it, an 'immanis hyperbole.'—'loci portusque natura:' Cod. Vat. omits 'portusque.'

38. Syracusanum] 'Quemquam' is generally added after 'Syracusanum,' but it is omitted by Zumpt on the authority of the best MSS.—'jactabant:' 'sic Guelff.

in eorum potestatem] This is the reading of the better MSS. See the remark, p. 209.

populi Romani, &c.] The passage stands as follows in Orelli, who follows Madvig: "populi Romani nomen in hominum conventu atque multitudine piratico myoparone; in portu" &c. I don't believe that Zumpt's reading is all right, though I follow it; nor do I think that the genuine text of Cicero can be established. See Zumpt's note.

exierunt, tum coeperunt quaerere homines causam illius tantae calamitatis. Dicere omnes et palam disputare, minime esse mirandum si, remigibus militibusque dimissis, reliquis egestate et fame perditis, praetore tot dies cum mulierculis perpotante, tanta ignominia et calamitas esset accepta. Haec autem istius vituperatio atque infamia confirmabatur eorum sermone qui a suis civitatibus illis navibus praepositi fuerant, qui ex illo numero reliqui Syracusas classe amissa refugerant. Dicebant quos ex sua quisque nave missos sciret esse. Res erat clara: neque solum argumentis sed etiam certis testibus istius audacia tenebatur.

XXXIX. Homo certior fit agi nihil in foro et conventu tota die nisi hoc quaeri ex navarchis, quemadmodum classis sit amissa: illos respondere et docere unumquemque missione remigum, fame reliquorum, Cleomenis timore et fuga. Quod posteaquam iste cognovit, hanc rationem habere coepit. Causam sibi dicendam esse statuerat jam ante quam hoc usu venit, ita ut ipsum priore actione dicere audistis. Videbat illis navarchis testibus tantum hoc crimen sustinere se nullo modo posse. Consilium capit primo stultum, verumtamen clemens. Navarchos ad se vocari jubet. Veniunt. Accusat eos quod ejusmodi sermones de se habuerint: rogat ut [id facere desistant, et] in sua quisque dicat navi se tantum habuisse nautarum quantum oportuerit, neque quemquam esse dimissum. Illi enimvero se ostendunt quod vellet esse facturos. Iste non procrastinat: advocat amicos statim: quaerit ex his singillatim quot quisque nautas habuerit: respondit unusquisque ut erat praeceptum. Iste in tabulas refert: obsignat signis amicorum providens homo; ut contra hoc crimen si quando opus esset hac videlicet testificatione uteretur. Derisum esse credo hominem amentem a suis consiliariis, et admonitum hasce ei tabulas nihil profuturas; etiam plus ex nimia praetoris diligentia suspicionis in eo crimine futurum. Jam iste erat hac stultitia multis in rebus usus ut publice audacia tenebatur.] Graevius has 'avaritia,' from Reg. only; and he thinks that 'audacia' is out of place here. But 'audacia' means the impudence of Verres, his audacity in fraud, in enriching himself to the damage of the public service.

39. ante quam, &c.] 'Before it turned out, in fact, to be so.' The older readings, 'venerit' and 'veniret,' are properly rejected by Zumpt, who has 'venit.' Madvig observes that a certain time is named, before which time Verres came to this conclusion. The subjunctive after 'ante quam,' he adds, is not used, if we follow the MSS. in the direct form of expression, except when a future thing is spoken of, and a thing which is the object of deliberation, hope, or fear. Accordingly, if 'veniret' were written, the meaning would be, not that Verres had come to this conclusion before (hoc constituisse), but had come to the conclusion that he would have to defend himself before this happened (ante quam hoc eveniret).

[id . . desistant.] These words are wanting in the better MSS.

quoque quae vellet in literis civitatum et tolli et referri juberet; quae omnia nunc intelligit sibi nihil prodesse, posteaquam certis literis, testibus, auctoritatibusque convincitur.

XL. Ubi hoc videt, illorum confessionem, testificationem suam, tabellas sibi nullo adjumento futuras, init consilium non improbi praetoris, nam id quidem esset ferendum, sed importuni atque amentis tyranni. Statuit, si hoc crimen extenuari vellet, nam omnino tolli posse non arbitrabatur, navarchos omnes, testes sui sceleris, vita esse privandos. Occurrebat illa ratio; quid de Cleomene fiet? poterone animadvertere in eos quos dicto audientes esse jussi; missum facere eum cui potestatem imperiumque permisi? poterone eos afficere supplicio qui Cleomenem secuti sunt, ignoscere Cleomeni qui secum fugere et se consequi jussit? poterone esse in eos vehemens qui naves non modo inanes habuerunt sed etiam apertas, in eum dissolutus qui solus habuerit constratam navem et minus exinanitam? pereat Cleomenes una. Ubi fides? ubi execrationes? ubi dexteræ complexusque? ubi illud contubernium muliebris militiae in illo delicatissimo littore? fieri nullo modo poterat quin Cleomeni parceretur. Vocat Cleomenem: dicit ei se statuisset animadvertere in omnes navarchos; ita sui periculi rationes ferre ac postulare. Tibi uni parcam; et potius istius culpaе crimen vituperationemque inconstantiae suscipiam quam aut in te sim crudelis, aut tot tam graves testes vivos incolumesque esse patiar. Agit gratias Cleomenes, approbat consilium: dicit ita fieri oportere. Admonet tamen illud quod istum fugerat, in Phalacrum Centuripinum, navarchum, non posse animadverti propterea quod secum una fuisset in Centuripina quadriremi. Quid ergo, iste homo ex ejusmodi civitate, adolescens nobilissimus, testis relinquetur? In praesentia, inquit Cleomenes, quoniam ita necesse est; sed post aliquid videbimus ne iste nobis obstare possit.

XLI. Haec posteaquam acta et constituta sunt, procedit iste in literis civitatum] The 'integriores' MSS. have 'in litteras civ. tolli et referri,' which leads, says Zumpt, to a suspicion that 'et tolli' is an interpolation, particularly as in this passage the question is not of erasion but of interpolation.

40. quid de Cleomene fiet?] Orelli has 'quid Cleomene fiet?' Both are Latin, but perhaps there is some little difference in meaning. Orelli makes this distinction in meaning: 'quid Cleomene fiet?' 'what will become of Cleomenes?' 'quid de Cleomene fiet?' 'what will be done with Cleo-menes?' There is also the Latin expression 'quid Cleomeni fiet?' 'what will happen to Cleomenes?'

execrationes?] The word means oaths by which parties bound themselves to fidelity, one form of oath being an imprecation, if a man should prove faithless.

aut in te sim] 'Ut in te sim,' Graevius, from Reg. But the double 'aut' seems to be required; and Zumpt refers to Drakenborch (Liv. xxxvii. 37), who shows that after 'prius,' 'citius,' 'potius quam,' the 'ut' may be omitted or not.

repente e praetorio, inflammatus scelere, furore, crudelitate: in forum venit: navarchos vocari jubet. Qui nihil metuerent, nihil suspicarentur, statim accurrunt. Iste hominibus miseris innocentibus injici catenas imperat. Implorare illi fidem praetoris, et quare id faceret rogare. Tum iste hoc causae dicit, quod classem praedonibus prodidissent. Fit clamor et admiratio populi, tantam esse in homine impudentiam atque audaciam ut aut aliis causam calamitatis attribueret quae omnis propter avaritiam ipsius accidisset, aut, quum ipse praedonum socius arbitraretur, aliis prodicionis crimen inferret: deinde, hoc quintodecimo die crimen esse natum postquam classis esset amissa. Quum haec ita fierent, quaerebatur ubi esset Cleomenes: non quo illum ipsum, cujusmodi est, quisquam supplicio propter illud incommodum dignum putaret: nam quid Cleomenes facere potuit? non enim possum quemquam insimulare falso: quid, inquam, magno opere potuit Cleomenes facere, istius avaritia navibus exinanitis? Atque eum vident sedere ad latus praetoris, et ad aurem familiariter ut solitus erat insusurrare. Tum vero omnibus indignissimum visum est, homines honestissimos, electos ex suis civitatibus, in ferrum et vincula conjectos; Cleomenem propter flagitiorum ac turpitudinum societatem familiarissimum esse praetori. Apponitur his tamen accusator Naevius Turpio quidam, qui C. Sacerdote praetore injuriarum damnatus est, homo admiratio] Cod. Vat. has 'admurmuratio;' also Orelli.

41. vocari jubet.] 'Ad se venire jubet:' Cod. Vat. — 'innocentibus:' Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'innocentibusque.'

arbitraretur,] The common reading is 'putaretur.' Gruter refers to a passive use of the word in the Pro Murena, c. 16; and Zumpt refers to another instance, Ad Att. i. 11; but it is not certain that 'arbitrari' is to be taken in a passive sense there.

cujusmodi est,] According to Hotmann this is for 'cujuscunque modi.' Manutius would prefer 'cujuscujusmodi,' but one can hardly suppose that Cicero would use such an intolerably awkward form, unless perchance 'cujus' was simply pronounced 'coos,' as a monosyllable. Zumpt writes in his second edition 'cuicuiusmodi,' which according to Priscian was for 'cujuscujusmodi.' But I would not compare this form with 'nulli' for 'nullius,' as Zumpt does, but rather take it as representing the crude form of 'quisquis.' There is no authority, as it appears, for 'cuicuiusmodi' in this passage. Havn. coll. has 'cuimodi,' and Cod. Vat. 'qui cujusmodi.' Bake, in his edition of Cicero De Legibus, ii. c. 12, has "neque in populo lex, cuicuiusmodi fuerit illa," and the following remark: "cuicuiusmodi habent optimi mei: quare accedat hoc testimonium ei, quod Madvigius de Codd. MSS. excitavit ad Fam. iii. 9, 30." See Key's Latin Grammar.—'illum ipsum:' Zumpt om. 'illum.'

Apponitur] A word which Cicero uses in such cases, as Manutius shows (Lib. 2. c. 8): "apponit qui petat Veneri Erycinae illam hereditatem;" this same Naevius Turpio.—'tum accusator:' Zumpt, who has this note: "Tum dedi e Guelf. Vulgo tamen notarum confusione. Nam tamen dici, cum antea iam catenae iniectae sint hominibus, quo pertinet?" Cod. Vat., Reg., and G. have 'tamen,' which Orelli adopts for this reason: 'Verres does not put them to death immediately without being tried; but that there still (tamen) might be the appearance of a lawful trial, he appoints a prosecutor.' This may seem a trifling matter, but the decision of it involves the question of a nice perception of the author's meaning. The reading that I have adopted shows which opinion I prefer.

XLII. Veniunt Syracusas parentes propinque miserorum adolescentium, hoc repentino calamitatis suae commoti nuntio: vinctos aspiciunt catenis liberos suos, quum istius avaritiae poenam collo et cervicibus suis sustinerent: adsunt, defendunt, proclamant, fidem tuam quae nusquam erat, neque umquam fuerat, implorant. Pater aderat Dexo Tyndaritanus, homo nobilissimus, hospes tuus, cujus tu domi fueras, quem hospitem appellaras. Eum quum illa auctoritate miseria videres praeditum, non te ejus lacrimae, non senectus, non hospitii jus atque nomen a scelere aliquam ad partem humanitatis revocare potuit? Sed quid ego hospitii jura in hac immani bellua commemoro? Qui Sthenium Thermitanum, hospitem suum, cujus domum per hospitium exhausit et exinanivit, absentem in reos rettulerit, causa indicta capite damnarit, ab eo nunc hospitiorum jura atque officia quaeramus? cum homine enim crudeli nobis res est, an cum fera atque immani bellua? Te patris lacrimae de innocentis filii periculo non movebant: quum patrem domi reliquisses, filium tecum haberes, te neque praesens filius de liberorum caritate, neque absens pater de indulgentia patria commonebat. Catenas habebat hospes tuus Aristeus, Dexonis filius. Quid ita? Prodiderat classem. Quod ob praemium? Deseruerat exercitum: quid Cleomenes? Ignavus fuerat. At eum tu ob virtutem corona ante donaras. Dimiserat nautas. Ab omnibus tu mercedem missionis acceperas. Alter parens ex altera parte erat Herbitensis Eubulida, homo domi suae clarus et nobilis, qui quia Cleomenem in defendendo filio laeserat, nudus paene est destitutus. Quid erat autem quod quisquam diceret aut defenderet? Cleomenem nominare non licet. At causa cogit. Moriere, si appelilla auctoritate] The common reading is 'illa auctoritate et miseria.' Zumpt thinks the connexion of 'auctoritas' and 'miseria' singular. 'Et' however does not occur in the better MSS. We may therefore read the text as it stands here, and refer 'illa auctoritate' to the rank and condition of the man, though Zumpt doubts if we can say of a man 'illa auctoritate.' He observes, however, that 'auctoritate' is so abbreviated in the MSS., that it may easily be confounded with 'aetate;' and if we must have a correction, his is the best that can be made. But it is not necessary. There is no difficulty about 'praeditus' being connected with 'miseria.' Zumpt refers to Tusc. v. 41: "metu praeditus." Orelli has 'auctoritate.'

laris: nunquam enim iste cuiquam est mediocriter minatus. At remiges non erant. Praetorem tu accusas? frange cervices. Si neque praetorem neque praetoris aemulum appellare licebit, quum in his duobus tota causa sit, quid futurum est?

XLIII. Dicit etiam causam Heraclius Segestanus, homo domi suae nobilissimo loco natus. Audite, ut vestra humanitas postulat, iudices: audietis enim de magnis incommodis injuriisque sociorum. Hunc scitote fuisse Heraclium in ea causa qui propter gravem morbum oculorum tum non navigarit, et jussu ejus qui potestatem habuit in commeatu Syracusis remanserit. Is certe neque classem prodidit, neque metu perterritus fugit, neque exercitum deseruit. Etenim tunc esset hoc animadversum, quum classis Syracusis proficiscebatur. Is tamen in eadem causa fuit, quasi esset in aliquo manifesto scelere deprehensus; in quem ne falsi quidem causa criminis conferri potuit. Fuit in illis navarchis Heracliensis quidam Furius, nam habent illi nonnulla hujusmodi Latina nomina, homo, quamdiu vixit, domi suae, post mortem tota Sicilia clarus et nobilis. In quo homine tantum animi fuit non solum ut istum libere laederet, nam id quidem, quoniam moriendum videbat, sine periculo se facere intelligebat: verum morte proposita, quum lacrimans in carcere mater noctes diesque assideret, defensionem causae suae scripsit; quam nunc nemo est in Sicilia quin habeat, quin legat, quin tui sceleris et crudelitatis ex illa oratione commonefiat. In qua docet quot a civitate sua nautas acceperit: quot et quanti quemque dimiserit: quot secum habuerit: item de ceteris navibus dicit: quae quum apud te diceret, virgis oculi verberabantur. Ille morte proposita facile dolorem corporis patiebatur: clamabat, id quod scriptum reliquit, 'Facinus esse indignum, plus impudicisin ea causa qui] This is easy to understand; difficult to express. It is in form like 'ejusmodi' followed by 'ut,' which 'ut' is a form of 'qui.' 'You must know that the case of Heraclius was this, that he did not join the fleet,' &c.

43. Heraclius] The Greek is 'Ἡρακλειῶς. The MSS. have often the form 'Heracleus.'

in commeatu] The MSS. reading, though 'cum commeatu' is the ordinary reading in the editions. Both modes of expression are used. Orelli refers to Livy, 7, c. 39, for the expression 'in commeatus mittere.'

domi suae,] Zumpt has settled this passage as Lallemand did, but he is not satisfied with it: 'non domi suae solum, post mortem' &c. The editions generally have 'domi suae non solum post,' &c. I have followed Graevius, who suggests that 'non solum' may have crept into our texts from what follows 'non solum ut istum.' We cannot be certain that the omission of 'non solum' gives us the genuine text, but it gives us what Cicero might have written. Manutius omits 'non' and keeps 'solum.' Orelli approves of Zumpt's reading.

causae suae scripsit;] The reading of all the MSS. It is easy to conjecture that we should have 'scripserit,' as Lambinus and Ernesti proposed; but it is not necessary, and the evidence of the MSS. is against it.

simae mulieris apud te de Cleomenis salute quam de sua vita lacrimas matris valere.' Deinde etiam illud video esse dictum, quod, si recte vos populus Romanus cognovit, non falso ille de vobis jam in morte ipsa praedicavit: 'Non posse Verrem testes interficiendo crimina sua extinguere: graviolem apud sapientes iudices se fore ab inferis testem quam si vivus in iudicium produceretur: tum avaritiae solum si viveret, nunc quum ita esset necatus, sceleris, audaciae, crudelitatis testem fore.' Jam illa praeclara, 'Non testium modo catervas, quum tua res ageretur, sed ab diis manibus innocentium poenas scelerumque furias in tuum iudicium esse venturas: sese ideo leviolem suum casum fingere, quod jam ante aciem securium tuarum, Sextiique, tui carnificis, vultum et manum vidisset, quum in conventu civium Romanorum jussu tuo securi cives Romani ferirentur.' Ne multa, iudices; libertate quam vos sociis dedistis, hac ille in acerbissimo supplicio miserrimae servitutis abusus est.

XLIV. Condemnat omnes de consilii sententia: tamen neque iste in tanta re, tot hominum causa, T. Vettium ad se arcessit, quaestorem suum, cujus consilio uteretur; neque P. Cervium, talem virum, legatum, qui, quia legatus isto praetore in Sicilia fuit, primus ab isto iudex rejectus est: sed de latronum, hoc est, de comitum suorum sententia, condemnat omnes. Hic cuncti Siculi, fidelissimi atque antiquissimi socii, plurimis affecti beneficiis a maioribus nostris, graviter commoventur et de suis periculis fortunisque omnibus pertimescunt. Indigne ferunt illam clementiam man-crimina sua] "Mirum quod in Leid. Guelf. 2. et Havn. coll. nos, in Guelf. 1. vos legitur, non crimina sua." The words 'crimina sua' seem to be an interpolation; for 'crimina' does not mean 'crimes' in Cicero, nor in other prose writers of his age, but the charges made against a man. It may however perhaps be used here in the sense in which 'meis criminibus' is used in Livy (xxxv. 19), to signify the things with which a man is charged. Madvig suspects that the true reading lurks under 'vos;' and he conjectures 'voces,' but with no great confidence.

abusus est.] Misexplained by Manutius. It must not be rendered 'abused.' It is, as Hotmann says, 'ad extremum usus.' See Lib. 1. c. 9, note, p. 84.

44. T. Vettium] 'P. Vettium:' Zumpt, Orelli. But Madvig shows, by referring to Lib. 3. c. 71, 72, that the brother of the 'quaestor' was named P. Vettius, and therefore the 'quaestor' had another name. And this is confirmed by Par. 7774 A, which has 'tot hominum, t. veccium' (T. Vettium). The word 'causa' is placed in brackets by Orelli, and perhaps it ought to be omitted.

Indigne ferunt illam] 'Indigne ferunt,' from Cod. Vat., Reg. and Leid.; 'indigni ferunt,' Guelf. Zumpt omits 'indigne ferunt,' as being the addition of some person who wanted to explain the use of the infinitive, and yet did not explain it right. People view things in different ways. I believe that the words are genuine. Orelli follows Zumpt. Next we have Ernesti quarrelling with the words 'et recte nihil videtur,' which Zumpt defends. Madvig compares Lib. 3. c. 72: "et recte non putant." See also Lib. 1. c. 5: "et recte putat," and the note.—'Sed secum, &c.:' Zumpt. But Cod. Vat. omits 'Sed;' and the reading of Reg. Leid. G, 'sed cum ipse,' seems to indicate that 'sed' should be omitted (Orelli).

suetudinemque nostri imperii tantam in crudelitatem inhumanitatemque esse conversam. Condemnari tot homines uno tempore, nullo crimine! Defensionem suorum furtorum praetorem improbum ex indignissima morte innocentium quaerere. Nihil addi jam videtur, iudices, ad hanc improbitatem, amentiam, crudelitatemque posse: et recte nihil videtur. Nam si cum aliorum improbitate certet, longe omnes multumque superavit. Secum ipse certat: id agit ut semper superius suum facinus novo scelere vincat. Phalarum Centuripinum dixeram exceptum esse a Cleomene, quod in ejus quadriemi Cleomenes vectus esset; tamen, quia pertimuerat adolescens, quod eandem suam causam videbat esse quam illorum qui innocentes peribant, accedit ad hominem Timarchides: a securi negat esse ei periculum; virgis ne caederetur monet ut caveat. Ne multa, ipsum dicere adolescentem audistis se ob hunc metum pecuniam Timarchidi numerasse. Levia haec sunt in hoc reo. Metum virgarum navarchus nobilissimae civitatis pretio redemit; humanum est: alius ne condemnaretur pecuniam dedit; usitatum est. Non vult populus Romanus obsoletis criminibus accusari Verrem: nova postulat, inaudita desiderat: non de praetore Siciliae sed de nefario tyranno fieri iudicium arbitratur.

XLV. Includuntur in carcerem condemnati: supplicium constituitur in illos; sumitur de miseris parentibus navarchorum: prohibentur adire ad filios: prohibentur liberis suis cibum vestitumque ferre. Patres hi quos videtis jacebant in limine, matresque miserae pernoctabant ad ostium carceris, ab extremo complexu liberum exclusae; quae nihil aliud orabant nisi ut filiorum suorum postremum spiritum ore excipere liceret. Aderat janitor carceris, carnifex praetoris, mors terrorque sociorum et civium Romanorum, lictor Sextius; cui ex omni gemitu doloreque certa merces comparabatur. Ut adeas, tantum dabis: ut tibi cibum intro ferre liceat, tantum. Nemo recusabat. Quid, ut uno ictu securis afferam mortem filio tuo, quid dabis? ne diu crucietur? ne saepius feriat? ne cum sensu doloris aliquo spiritus auferatur? Etiam ob hanc causam humanum est:] This passage is cited by Quintilian, Inst. Or. viii. 4, 19. 'Humanum' here means such a thing as may happen in the usual course of human affairs. —'ne condemnaretur:' all the MSS. of Cicero; but Quintilian has 'securi feriretur.' Quotations by ancient authors cannot always be relied on.

obsoletis] 'Obsoletus' means that which has become common by use; ordinary, and the like. Here it is opposed to 'nova.'

45. complexu] 'Conspectu:' Zumpt.—'filiorum suorum:' 'suorum' added by Zumpt and Orelli; omitted in the older texts.

ore excipere liceret.] Quintilian, Inst. Or. ix. 4, 108, quotes these words, and he must have found 'ore' in his MSS., as the point of his remark turns upon it. Yet 'ore' is omitted even in some of the better MSS. —'tibi cibum vestitumque:' Cod. Vat., and Quintil. ix. 4, 71.

pecunia dabatur. O magnum atque intolerandum dolorem! O gravem acerbamque fortunam! Non vitam liberum sed mortis celeritatem pretio redimere cogeabantur parentes. Atque ipsi etiam adolescentes cum Sextio suo de plaga et de uno illo ictu loquebantur, idque postremum parentes suos liberi orabant ut levandi cruciatus sui causa lictori pecunia daretur. Multi et graves dolores inventi parentibus, et propinquis multi: verumtamen mors sit extrema. Non erit. Estne aliquid ultra quo progredi crudelitas possit? Reperietur. Nam illorum quum erunt securi percussi ac necati corpora feris objicientur. Hoc si luctuosum est parenti, redimat pretio sepeliendi potestatem. Onasum Segestanum, hominem nobilem, dicere audistis se ob sepulturam Heraclii navarchi pecuniam Timarchidi numerasse, ne hoc posses dicere, 'Patres enim veniunt, amissis filiis, irati:' vir primarius, homo nobilissimus, dicit; neque de filio dicit. Jam hoc quis tum fuit Syracusis quin audierit, quin sciat, has Timarchidi pactiones sepulturae cum vivis etiam illis esse factas? Non palam cum Timarchide loquebantur? non omnes omnium propinqui adhibebantur? non palam vivorum funera locabantur? Quibus omnibus rebus actis atque decisis, producuntur e carcere, deligantur ad palum.

XLVI. Quis tam fuit illo tempore ferreus, quis tam inhumanus, praeter unum te, qui non illorum aetate, nobilitate, miseria commoveretur? ecquis fuit quin lacrimaretur, quin ita calamitatem pecunia dabatur.] Cod. Vat. is said to have 'pecunia lictori datur.' But Zumpt's best MSS. have 'dabatur,' and omit 'lictori.' He adds "nam in diligentissimo hoc verborum delectu quicquid supervacuum est aut secure repetitur, ferri non potest." It is not easy to see the force of this remark. One might as easily make an argument in favour of 'lictori' and the present 'datur.'

Sextio suo] The common reading is 'cum Sextio de eadem plaga.' 'Eadem' is certainly an idle word. As to the addition of 'suo,' though it is found in good MSS., I doubt. Zumpt approves of it "cum pertinere videatur ad custodiam carceris, cui praepositus ille fuit." It must rather be taken as a word of endearment; they called him their good Sextius, if he would only release them from their fears by one stroke of his axe.

et propinquis multi:] Quintilian, Inst. Or. ix. 3. 34, reads the passage thus: "Respondent primis et ultima: 'Multi et graves dolores inventi parentibus, et propinquis multi.'" Zumpt says briefly, 'fallitur;' and he and Orelli have 'propinquis: multi.' I follow the Roman.

parenti, redimat] Cod. Vat.—'parentibus, redimant:' Zumpt.

ne hoc posses] The common reading and that of Cod. Vat. is 'numerasse. Hoc (ne possis dicere . . irati) vir primarius dicit;' which may perhaps appear to some readers to express the meaning of the passage more clearly. The fact of a man paying money for the interment of another, who was not his son, stops Verres from saying by way of objection to the veracity of the witnesses, 'Yes, but there are fathers who come, who have lost their sons, men under the influence of passion.'

deligantur ad palum.] 'Ad palum' omitted by Regius, Leidensis, both the Guelff. and Cod. Vat. Zumpt observes "quanta vis sit in hac ipsa articulatum dicendi forma, nemo non sentit admonitus." I do not perceive it. Those who do may erase 'ad palum.' Madvig and Orelli approve of omitting 'ad palum.'

46. lacrimaretur,] Cod. Vat. has 'lacrimaret,' but all the other MSS., except Lag. 29 and another, have 'lacrimaretur.' Dio-illam putaret illorum, ut fortunam tamen non alienam, periculum autem commune arbitraretur? Feriuntur securi. Laetaris tu in omnium gemitu et triumphas, testes avaritiae tuae gaudes esse sublato. Errabas, Verres, et vehementer errabas, quum te maculas furtorum et flagitiorum tuorum sociorum innocentium sanguine eluere arbitrabare: praeceptis amentia ferebare qui te existimares avaritiae vulnera crudelitatis remediis posse sanare. Etenim quamquam illi sunt mortui sceleris tui testes, tamen eorum propinqui neque tibi neque illis desunt: tamen ex ipso illo numero navarchorum aliqui vivunt et adsunt; quos, ut mihi videtur, ad illorum innocentium poenas fortuna et ad hanc causam reservavit. Adest Phylarchus Haluntinus, qui quia cum Cleomene non fugit, oppressus a praedonibus et captus est: cui calamitas saluti fuit: qui nisi captus a piratis esset, in hunc praedonem sociorum incidisset. Dicit is pro testimonio de missione nautarum, de fame, de Cleomenis fuga. Adest Centuripinus Phalacrus, in amplissima civitate amplissimo loco natus: eadem dicit; nulla in re discrepat.

XLVII. Per deos immortales, quo tandem animo sedetis, iudices, aut haec quemadmodum audistis? Utrum ego desipio et plus quam satis est doleo tanta calamitate miseriaque sociorum, an vos quoque hic acerbissimus innocentium cruciatus et maeror pari sensu doloris afficit? Ego enim quum Herbitensem, quum Heracliensem securi percussum esse dico, versatur mihi ante oculos indignitas calamitatis. Eorumne populorum cives, eorum agrorum alumnos, ex quibus maxima vis frumenti quotannis plebi Romanae illorum operis ac laboribus quaeritur, qui a parentibus spe nostri imperii nostraeque aequitatis suscepti educatique sunt, ad C. Verris nefariam immanitatem et ad ejus funestam securim esse servatos?

medes the grammarian (p. 377, Putsch., quoted by Zumpt) says "lacrymo, lacrymas: nec quisquam esse lacrymor credat, quamvis Ovidius (Fast. i. 339) dixerit: lacrymatas cortice myrras." calamitatem illam] 'Illam' is added by Zumpt on good MSS. authority, and he thinks that it is necessary.

ad illorum . . reservavit.] The common reading is 'ab illorum innocentium poena fortuna ad hanc causam reservavit.' The reading in the text, which is Zumpt's, is founded on good MSS. authority. 'Poena innocentium' is explained by Zumpt to mean 'ut illis innocentibus poenas dares crudelitatis.'

47. plus quam satis est doleo] 'Plus quam satis doleo.' Mai from Cod. Vat.

'Nec tamen moveor' (Zumpt). I state the fact, that others may see whether they are moved or not.

alumnos,] 'Colonos' the reading of most of the inferior MSS.

suscepti] Graevius has a note on this passage, written in the style of some of those old commentators whose knowledge was got only from books. What he really means to say is well enough; that in times of prosperity and security there are more marriages, and more children are raised; and as the exposure of children seems to have been not uncommon among the Greeks and Romans, we may assume that more children were exposed in unprosperous than in prosperous times.

Quum mihi Tyndaritani illius venit in mentem, quum Segestani, tum jura simul civitatum atque officia considero. Quas urbes P. Africanus etiam ornandas esse spoliis hostium arbitratus est, eas C. Verres non solum illis ornamentis sed etiam viris nobilissimis nefario scelere privavit. En quod Tyndaritani libenter praedicent: 'Nos in septemdecim populis Siciliae numeramur: nos semper omnibus Punicis Siciliensibusque bellis amicitiam fidemque populi Romani secuti sumus: a nobis omnia populo Romano semper et belli adjumenta et pacis ornamenta ministrata sunt.' Multum vero haec his jura profuerunt in istius imperio ac potestate. Vestros quondam nautas contra Karthaginem Scipio duxit: at nunc navem contra praedones paene inanem Cleomenes ducit. Vobiscum Africanus hostium spolia et praemia laudis communicavit: at nunc per hunc spoliati, nave a praedonibus abducta, ipsi in hostium loco numeroque ducimini. Quid vero illa Segestanorum non solum literis tradita, neque commemorata verbis, sed multis officiis illorum usurpata et comprobata cognatio, quos tandem fructus hujusce necessitudinis in istius imperio tulit? Nempe hoc jure fuit, iudices, ut ex sinu patriae nobilissimus adolescens istius carnifici Sextio septemdecim . . numeramur:] The reading 'non eramus' is properly rejected by Zumpt and Orelli for 'numeramur.' Manutius, in his note on Lib. 3. c. 6, 'perpaucae Siciliae civitates,' observes that Cicero well knew the number of these 'civitates,' for he says (Lib. 5. c. 47) that they were seventeen; and that now he magnifies the services of the Tyndaritani by showing that, though so many states opposed the Romans, the Tyndaritani did not join them. Of course it will be seen that he read 'non eramus.' But the negative presents a difficulty, which is obvious. It would seem strange that the Tyndaritani should begin their own eulogium by a negation. The Variorum edition is in this instance a good sample of the confusion that reigns there between the notes and the text. In the text the reading is 'numeramur;' and the note that is at the foot of the page, one from Hotmann, is adapted to explain the reading 'non eramus.'

Zumpt shows that these seventeen cities were the cities that had been faithful to Rome in the wars; and this is consistent. The Tyndaritani claim the merit of having always been among the cities friendly to Rome. A passage from Diodorus (iv. 83) makes all clear. He is speaking of the temple at Eryx and the favour shown to it by the Romans: ἡ τε σύγκλητος τῶν Ῥωμαίων εἰς τὰς τῆς θεοῦ τιμὰς φιλοτιμηθεῖσα, τὰς μὲν πιστοτάτας τῶν κατὰ τὴν Σικελίαν πόλεων οὕσας ἑπτακαίδεκα χρυσοφορεῖν ἔδογμάτισε τῇ Ἀφροδίτῃ καὶ στρατιώτας διακοσίους τηρεῖν τὸ ἱερόν.

a nobis . . . populo] 'Omnia a nobis populo:' Zumpt omits 'omnia.'

Vestros quondam . . at nunc per hunc . . ducimini.] The words of Verres, as Hotmann observes. The words 'vestros' and 'per me' show this, if we read 'per me.' But the difficulty is cured by the reading of Cod. Vat. 'at nunc per hunc.' Zumpt has 'per me,' but I follow Orelli, who adopts the reading of Cod. Vat., 'per hunc.'

The common reading and that of Cod. Vat. is 'naves . . inanes,' instead of the singular. The last part of the passage stands thus in Cod. Vat.: 'at nunc per hunc spoliata navi a praedonibus ipsi in hostium loco numeroque ducimini.'

illa Segestanorum] See Lib. 4. c. 33.

ex sinu patriae] 'Deteriores MSS. et vulgo editi ex sinu patris.' Then there follows 'et e complexu matris ereptus innocens filius.' Zumpt and Orelli make objections to the general form of the expression 'ex sinu patris nobilissimus adolescens et e complexu . . filius;' but experience teaches dederetur. Cui civitati majores nostri maximos agros atque optimos concesserunt, quam immunem esse voluerunt, haec apud te cognationis, fidelitatis, vetustatis, auctoritatis ne hoc quidem juris obtinuit ut unius honestissimi atque innocentissimi civis mortem ac sanguinem deprecaretur.

XLVIII. Quo confugient socii, quem implorabunt, qua spe denique ut vivere velint tenebuntur, si vos eos deseretis? Ad senatumne venient? Quid ut de Verre supplicium sumat? non est usitatum, non est senatorium. Ad populum Romanum confugient? Facilis est populi causa; legem enim se sociorum causa jussisse et vos ei legi custodes ac vindices praeposuisse dicet. Hic locus igitur est unus quo perfugiant: hic portus, haec arx, haec ara sociorum; quo quidem nunc non ita confugiunt, ut antea in suis repetendis rebus solebant. Non argentum, non aurum, non vestem, non mancipia repetunt; non ornamenta quae ex urbibus fanisque erepta sunt: metuunt homines imperiti ne jam haec populus Romanus concedat et ita fieri velit. Patimur enim multos jam annos et silemus, quum videamus ad paucos homines omnes omnium nationum pecunias pervenisse. Quod eo magis ferre animo aequo et concedere videmur, quia nemo istorum dissimulat, nemo laborat ut obscura sua cupiditas esse videatur. In urbe nostra pulcherrima atque ornatissima quod signum, quae tabula picta est, quae non ab hostibus victis capta atque deportata sit? At istorum villae sociorum fidelissimorum plurimis et pulcherrimis spoliis ornatae reus to give no great weight to such remarks. The words 'et e complexu,' &c., are not in Guelff. Leid. nor in Reg. according to Graevius; but they are in Cod. Vat., except that Mai has omitted 'filius,' whether intentionally or not, is not certain.

ne hoc quidem juris] The genuine text, preserved by Cod. Vat. Zumpt has 'ne hoc quidem jus.' 'Juris' is correctly explained by Orelli "ne hanc quidem minimam juris sui partem." He compares 'hoc causae,' c. 41. It is a common form of expression: "neque illud rationis habuisti," &c. (Lib. 4. c. 15); "homo qui . . . jam id aetatis esset" (Lib. 1. c. 26); "ac si hoc juris . . . edixisses" (Lib. 1. c. 42); and in the same chapter there is 'hoc jus,' perhaps not quite in the same sense.—'atque innocentissimi:' om. Cod. Vat.

48. deseretis?] The common reading is 'deseritis.' Cicero does sometimes use the present thus, in careless writing, as we may suppose. But 'deseretis,' for which there is the authority of two MSS., or 'deserueritis' is the correct form, as Zumpt observes.—'ad senatumne:' Cod. Vat. and Orelli. Zumpt omits 'ne.'

supplicium sumat?] Cod. Vat. and Orelli: 'senatus' being understood. Zumpt has 'sumant.'

senatorium] The common reading and that of the reprint of Zumpt is 'senatorium.' If we write 'senatorum' the meaning is intelligible, and 'senatores' must be supplied with the verb 'sumant.' Orelli remarks on Zumpt's reading 'non senatorum,' "solita in talibus imperatorium, augurium (jus), oratorium corruptela." There is an instance in the De Sen. c. 4, where in place of 'juris augurii,' the true reading, some MSS. have 'juris et augurii.'—'non est senatorium:' Cod. Vat. Zumpt om. 'est.'

haec arx] Zumpt omits these words; but they are in Cod. Vat., and perhaps genuine. Orelli retains them.—'omnes omnium nationum:' Cod. Vat., Orelli. Zumpt omits 'omnes.'—'pervenire:' Zumpt.

fertaeque sunt. Ubi pecunias exterarum nationum esse arbitramini quae nunc omnes egent, quum Athenas, Pergamum, Cyzicum, Miletum, Chium, Samum, totamque Asiam, Achaïam, Graeciam, Siciliam tam in paucis villis inclusas esse videatis? Sed haec, ut dico, omnia jam socii vestri relinquunt et negligunt, iudices. Ne publice a populo Romano spoliarentur officiis ac fide providerunt: paucorum cupiditati tum quum obsistere non poterant, tamen sufficere aliquo modo poterant: nunc vero jam adempta est non modo resistendi verum etiam suppeditandi facultas. Itaque res suas negligunt: pecunias, quo nomine iudicium hoc appellatur, non repetunt; relinquunt. Hoc jam ornatu ad vos confugiunt. Aspicite, aspicite, iudices, squalorem sordesque sociorum.

XLIX. Sthenius hic Thermitanus cum hoc capillo atque veste, domo sua tota expilata, mentionem tuorum furtorum non facit; sese ipsum abs te repetit, nihil amplius: totum enim tua libidine et scelere ex sua patria, in qua multis virtutibus ac beneficiis princeps fuit, sustulisti. Dexo hic quem videtis, non quae publice Tyn- daride, non quae privatim sibi eripuisti, sed unicum miser abs te filium optimum atque innocentissimum flagitat. Non ex litibus aestimatis tuis pecuniam domum, sed ex tua calamitate cineri atque ossibus filii sui solatium vult aliquod reportare. Hic tam grandis natu Ebulida hoc tantum exacta aetate laboris itinerisque suscepit, non ut aliquid de suis bonis recuperaret, sed ut quibus oculis cruentas cervices filii sui viderat iisdem te condemnatum videret. Si per L. Metellum licitum esset, iudices, matres illorum miserorum, uxores, sororesque veniebant: quarum una, quum ego totamque Asiam,] Cod. Vat. has ‘totam denique Achaïam,’ and it omits ‘Asiam.’

Sed, haec ut dico, &c.] Zumpt has (in the English reprint) ‘sed, ut dico, haec omnia,’ manifestly a feeble expression, and contrary to the best MSS. Orelli, who has the reading in the text, cites Zumpt’s first edition. In his larger edition Zumpt has ‘sed haec, ut dico,’ &c.

49. princeps fuit,] The ‘vulgata’ is ‘princeps floruit,’ which Zumpt does not allow to be Latin; nor does Madvig, who observes that we can say ‘florere beneficiis,’ and ‘princeps esse,’ but not ‘florere princeps.’ Cod. Vat. ‘floruit princeps.’

iisdem te condemnatum] Cod. Vat. and G. Zumpt has ‘iis te,’ &c.—‘ab inferis filium:’ Reg. Vat., Orelli; ‘filium ab inferis:’ Zumpt.

Si...licitum esset,...veniebant:] Zumpt has a note on this passage. “Ceterum veniebant pro venissent historicorum more, id quod olim negavi in Gramm. § 519 fieri a Cicerone nisi per partem aliquam. Verum concedo nunc, quoniam licitum esset vere Plusquamperf. esse (non Imperfectum) intelligo e locis a Schellero in lexico allatis, quorum duo sunt harum oratt. iii. 48, init. et Epist. xiv. 4.” (Zumpt.) He adds a like example, Epist. xii. 10: “praeclare viceramus nisi Lepidus recepisset Antonium.” I don’t perfectly comprehend all this note, and I give it as it is. I am not aware that there is any difficulty about the form of expression. The instance (iii. 48) I can’t find. There is one in Lib. 3. c. 52, which will serve: “Illi ipsi, &c., relicturi agros omnes erant, nisi ad eos Metellus ad Heracliam noctu accederem, cum omnibus matronis ejus civitatis et cum multis facibus mihi obviam venit, et ita, me suam salutem appellans, te suum carnificem nominans, filii nomen implorans, mihi ad pedes misera jacuit quasi ego ejus excitare ab inferis filium possem. Faciebant hoc idem ceteris in civitatibus grandes natu matres, et item parvi liberi miserorum; quorum utrorumque aetas laborem et industriam meam, fidem et misericordiam vestram requirebat. Itaque ad me, judices, hanc querimoniam praeter ceteras Sicilia detulit: lacrimis ego huc, non gloria inductus accessi; ne falsa damnatio, ne carcer, ne catenae, ne verbera, ne secures, ne cruciatus sociorum, ne sanguis innocentium, ne denique etiam exsanguia corpora mortuorum, ne maeror parentum ac propinquorum magistratibus nostris quaestui posset esse. Hunc ego si metum Siciliae damnatione istius per vestram fidem et severitatem dejecero, judices, satis officio meo, satis illorum voluntati qui a me hoc petiverunt factum esse arbitrabor.

L. Quapropter si quem forte inveneris qui hoc navale crimen conetur defendere, is ita defendat: illa communia quae ad causam nihil pertinent praetermittat; me culpaе fortunam assignare, calamitatem crimini dare; me amissionem classis objicere, quum multi viri fortes in communi incertoque periculo belli et terra et mari saepe offenderint. Nullam tibi objicio fortunam: nihil est quod Romam literas misisset." Both of these examples are used by Professor Key (Gramm. 1214, 5) in his remarks on hypothetical sentences. He translates this: "Their mothers, wives, sisters, were coming (and would actually have come), if Metellus had permitted." This is the meaning, but I prefer the version without the parenthetical matter. He represents them as coming (which was not the fact) if they had not been prevented. The object is to give greater animation to the form of expression, which is effected by the indicative, though the strict expression in a case like this would require the subjunctive in both clauses. There are many sentences in which the indicative might stand in place of the subjunctive in the clause which corresponds to the hypothetical clause; and instead of being examples of ordinary construction, they would resemble the present instance, in which Cicero could have used 'venissent' in place of 'veniebant.'

The following is another example (Lib. 1. c. 47): "at ille libertus, nisi ex testamento patroni jurasset, scelus se facturum arbitratur:" "but that freedman was thinking that he should commit a crime if he did not swear to observe the testament of his 'patronus.'" If this case should not be admitted to be exactly of the same kind as those above, as I think it is, it will not be denied that a subjunctive might stand in the place of 'arbitratur.'

On the matter of hypothetical sentences, the reader may consult Key's Grammar.—Zumpt omits 'uxores.'

exsanguia corpora] Cod. Vat. supplies the true reading 'exsanguia,' in place of 'exsanguium.' Zumpt, however, writes the word without s, on the authority of the Guelff.

50. culpaе fortunam] The reading of Cod. Vat. and Orelli. The reading of Zumpt is 'culpam fortunae,' which he attempts to explain. The meaning of the text is clear: 'culpaе assignare' corresponds to 'crimini dare,' and means to "make fortune, or man's ill luck, a cause of blame." Cicero says shortly after, 'nullam tibi objicio fortunam.' 'Sceleri assignare' occurs in Cicero (Ad Quint. Fr. i. Ep. 4, quoted by Orelli).

ceterorum res minus commode gestas proferas: nihil est quod multorum naufragia fortunae colligas. Ego naves inanes fuisse dico: remiges nautasque dimissos: reliquos stirpibus vixisse palmarum: praefuisse classi populi Romani Siculum, perpetuo sociis atque amicis Syracusanum: te illo ipso tempore superioribusque diebus omnibus in littore cum mulierculis perpotasse dico: harum rerum omnium auctores testesque produco. Num tibi insultare in calamitate, num intercludere perfugium fortunae, num casus bellicos exprobrare aut objicere videor? tametsi solent hi fortunam sibi objici nolle qui se fortunae commiserunt, qui in ejus periculis sunt ac varietate versati. Istius quidem calamitatis tuae fortuna particeps non fuit. Homines enim in proeliis, non in conviviis, belli fortunam periclitari solent: in illa autem calamitate non Martem fuisse communem sed Venerem possumus dicere. Quodsi fortunam tibi objici non oportet, cur tu fortunae illorum innocentium veniam ac locum non dedisti? Etiam illud praecidas licet, te quod supplicium more majorum sumpseris securique percusseris, idcirco a me in crimen et invidiam vocari. Non in supplicio crimen meum vertitur: non ego nego securi quemquam feriri oportere: non ego metum ex re militari, non severitatem imperii, non poenam flagitii tolli dico oportere. Fateor non modo in socios sed etiam in cives militesque nostros persaepe esse severe ac vehementer vindicatum. Qua re haec quoque praetermittas licet.

LI. Ego culpam non in navarchis sed in te fuisse demonstro: te pretio remiges militesque dimisisse arguo. Hoc navarchi reliqui dicunt: hoc Netinorum foederata civitas publice dicit: hoc Amestratini, hoc Herbitenses, Agyrinenses, Tyndaritani publice dicunt: tuus denique testis, tuus imperator, tuus aemulus, tuus hospes Cleomenes hoc dicit, sese in terram esse egressum ut Pachyno, e terrestri praesidio, milites colligeret quos in navibus collocaret. Quod certe non fecisset, si suum numerum naves haberent: ea est enim ratio instructarum ornatarumque navium, ut non modo plures perpetuo] Cod. Vat. has 'perpetuum.' If the reading is right, we must connect 'perpetuo' with 'sociis atque amicis,' 'uninterruptedly allies and friends,' which gives but a poor sense. Orelli writes from conjecture 'praepositum,' referring to c. 38: "qui a suis civitatibus illis navibus praepositi fuerant." He adds "totus autem error inde natus, quod notae P.P. significant et Praepositus et Perpetuus: (Vid. Indicem I. Inscip. mear. Lat. T. 2. p. 467)."

perfugium fortunae,] 'Perfugia fort.:' Orelli. The 'perfugium fortunae' means, the excuse which a man makes by alleging his ill luck, a thing which may befall any one.

praecidas licet, te quod] I have followed Orelli's text. Zumpt has 'praecidas licet, de his quod.' 'Te' seems to be wanting, and it is in Cod. Vat.—'feriri oportere:' Zumpt, from Cod. Vat.; 'feriri debere:' Orelli.

sed ne singuli quidem possint accedere. Dico praeterea, illos ipsos reliquos nautas fame atque inopia rerum omnium confectos fuisse ac perditos. Dico aut omnes extra culpam fuisse, aut, si uni attribuenda culpa sit, in eo maximam fuisse qui optimam navem, plurimos nautas haberet, summum imperium obtineret; aut, si omnes in culpa fuerint, non oportuisse Cleomenem constitui spectatorem illorum mortis atque cruciatus. Dico etiam in ipso supplicio mercedem lacrimarum, mercedem vulneris atque plagae, mercedem funeris ac sepulturae constitui nefas fuisse. Quapropter si mihi respondere voles, haec dicito: classem instructam atque ornatam fuisse, nullum propugnatorem abfuisse, nullum vacuum tractum esse remum, rem frumentariam esse suppeditatam, mentiri navarchos, mentiri tot et tam graves civitates, mentiri etiam Siciliam totam; proditum esse te a Cleomene qui se dixerit exisse in terram ut Pachyno deduceret milites: animum illis non copias defuisse: Cleomenem acerrime pugnantem ab his relictum esse atque desertum: nummum ob sepulturam datum nemini. Quae si dices, tenebere: sin alia dices, ea quae a me dicta sunt non refutabis.

LII. Hic tu etiam dicere audebis, 'Est in iudicibus ille familiaris meus, est paternus amicus ille?' non, ut quisque maxime est quicum tibi aliquid sit, ita te in hujusmodi crimine maxime ejus pudet? 'Paternus amicus est.' Ipse pater si judicaret, per deos immortales, quid facere posset, quum tibi haec diceret: Tu in provincia populi Romani praetor, quum tibi maritimum bellum esset administrandum, Mamertinis ex foedere quam deberent navem per triennium remisisti: tibi apud eosdem privata navis oneraria maxima publice est aedificata: tu a civitatibus pecunias classis nomine coëgisti: tu pretio remiges dimisisti: tu, navis quum esset ab legato et quaestore capta praedonum, archipiratam ab oculis omnium removisti: tu, qui cives Romani esse dicerentur, qui a multis

51. vacuum tractum esse] This is the reading of the MSS., rightly restored by Zumpt in place of the corruptions of conjecture. A 'vacuus remus' is one which has no man to work it; and it may be said to be 'tractus' when it is attached to its place and dragged, instead of being worked by the hand of the rower. Scheffer, an authority in such matters, so explains the text; and he refers to Ovid, Met. xi. 475:

"Obvertit lateri pendentes navita remos;"

and Statius, Theb. v. 422; Valerius Flaccus, Argon. iii. 34.

52. ita te... maxime ejus pudet?] Zumpt has established the old text here in place of the corrupt text. Madvig and Orelli approve of it. Verres is supposed to say, "There is among the 'judices' that intimate of mine; there is a friend of my father there." To which Cicero replies, "Just in proportion to your intimacy with any one, ought you not, when charged with an offence of this kind, to be filled with shame before him?" As to this use of 'pudet,' Madvig compares Cicero, Phil. ii. 25: "si te municipiorum non pudebat, ne veterani quidem exercitus?" And Orelli gives the instance of the German form: 'sich vor einem schämen.'

cognoscerentur, securi ferire potuisti: tu tuam domum piratas abducere, in iudicium archipiratam domo producere ausus es: tu in provincia tam splendida, apud socios fidelissimos, cives Romanos honestissimos, in metu periculoque provinciae, dies continuos complures in littore conviviisque jacuisti: te per eos dies nemo tuae domi convenire, nemo in foro videre potuit: tu sociorum atque amicorum ad ea convivia matresfamilias adhibuisti: tu inter ejusmodi mulieres praetextatum tuum filium, nepotem meum, collocavisti ut aetati maxime lubricae atque incertae exempla nequitiae parentis vita praeberet: tu praetor in provincia cum tunica pallioque purpureo visus es: tu propter amorem libidinemque tuam imperium navium legato populi Romani ademisti, Syracusano tradidisti: tui milites in provincia Sicilia frugibus frumentoque caruerunt: tua luxuria atque avaritia classis populi Romani a praedonibus capta et incensa est: post Syracusas conditas quem in portum nunquam hostis accesserat, in eo te praetore primum piratae navigaverunt: neque haec tot et tanta dedecora dissimulatione tua, neque oblivione hominum ac taciturnitate tegere voluisti, sed etiam navium praefectos sine ulla causa de complexu parentum suorum, hospitem tuorum, ad mortem cruciatumque rapuisti; neque te in parentum luctu atque lacrimis mei nominis commemoratio mitigavit: tibi hominum innocentium sanguis non modo voluptati sed etiam quaestui fuit.—Haec si tibi tuus parens diceret, posses ab eo veniam petere? posses ut tibi ignosceret postulare?

LIII. Satis est factum Siculis, satis officio ac necessitudini, judices, satis promisso nostro ac recepto. Reliqua est ea causa, judices, quae non jam recepta sed innata; neque delata ad me sed in animo sensuque meo penitus affixa atque insita est; quae non ad sociorum salutem, sed ad civium Romanorum, hoc est, ad uniuscujusque nostrum vitam et sanguinem pertinet. In qua nolite a me, quasi dubium sit aliquid, argumenta, judices, expectare: omnia quae dicam sic erunt illustra ut ad ea probanda totam Siciliam testem adhibere possem. Furor enim quidam, sceleris et audaciae comes, istius effrenatum animum importunamque naturam tanta oppressit amentia ut nunquam dubitaret in conventu palam supplicia, quae in convictos maleficii servos constituta sunt, ea in cives Romanos expromere. Virgis quam multos ceciderit, quid ego commemorem? Tantum brevissime, judices, dico: nullum fuit omnino civitatis isto praetore in hoc genere discrimen. Itaque jam consuetudine ad corpora civium Romanorum etiam sine istius nutu ferebatur manus ipsa lictoris.

LIV. Num potes hoc negare, Verres, in foro Lilybaei, maximo conventu, C. Servilium, civem Romanum e conventu Panhormitano, veterem negotiatorem, ad tribunal, ante pedes tuos, ad terram virgis et verberibus abjectum? Aude hoc primum negare, si potes: nemo Lilybaei fuit quin viderit; nemo in Sicilia quin audierit. Plagis confectum dico a lictoribus tuis civem Romanum ante oculos tuos concidisse. At quam ob causam, dii immortales! Tametsi injuriam facio communi causae et juri civitatis: quasi enim ulla possit esse causa cur hoc cuiquam civi Romano jure accidat, ita quaero quae in Servilio causa fuerit. Ignoscite in hoc uno, judices: in ceteris enim non magno opere causas requiram. Locutus erat liberius de istius improbitate atque nequitia. Quod isti simulac renuntiatum est, hominem jubet Lilybaeum vadimonium Venereo servo promittere. Promittit. Lilybaeum venit. Cogere eum coepit, quum ageret nemo, nemo postularet, sponsionem II millium nummum facere cum lictore suo, Ni furtis quaestum faceret. Recuperatores

54. At quam ob causam,] The common reading is 'quam ob causam,' but Zumpt added the 'at' on good authority. The 'at' could be omitted, but it is Cicero's fashion to use it in such a case. He says 'Plagis confectum,' &c.; and then, to give greater emphasis to what he has said, he adds, 'at quam ob causam,' 'and for what reason?' Thus in the beginning of c. 56: "At quae erat ista libido," &c.; and in the same chapter: "At quae causa tum subiciebatur," &c.

sponsionem . . . facere] Here 'sponsionem facere' is said of him who answers (spondet) and promises (promittit) to him 'qui sponsione lacessit,' as Keller shows, Semestrium ad M. Tullium Ciceronem, Libri Sex, i. p. 31. It has also this sense in the Pro Caecina, c. 28: "Aebutius . . . necesse est male fecerit sponsionem." In the Pro Quinctio, c. 8, 9, Quinctius 'qui rogat' is said 'sponsionem facere'; and in c. 14, Naevius 'qui spondet ac promittit' is also said 'sponsionem facere.' So in Lib. 1. c. 45, of these orations, 'sponsionem faceret,' and 'si possessor sponsionem non faciet,' are used the same way. To this may be added the Lex Galliae Cisalpinae, c. 20: "si is ibi de ea re in jure non responderit, neque de ea re sponsionem faciet, neque iudicio uti oportebit se defendet;" and in another passage, "qui se sponsione iudiciove uti oportebit non defenderit."

Instances where the 'stipulator' is said

'sponsionem facere,' occur in Lib. 3. c. 57, and in Cicero, Ad Fam. vii. 21. These remarks will serve as a supplement to what has been said before on this expression.

Ni furtis, &c.] In place of 'cum lictore suo,' Orelli has 'cum servo suo.'

Servilius, it must be supposed, had talked of the thefts of Verres; and Verres, in order to punish him, resolved to charge Servilius with theft. Nobody had any demand upon Servilius, and no charge to make against him (quum ageret nemo, nemo postularet). Verres compelled him to make a 'sponsio' with his own 'lictore,' the effect of which was to try the question whether Servilius was a thief or not; rather a singular way of dealing with a man's character, when there was no charge against him. The form of the 'sponsio,' in this case, as Rost explains it, would be this: "Servus or Lictor: Spondesne, Servili, HS duo millia, si tu (quod ego affirmo et tu negas) furtis quaestum facis? Servilius: Spondeo, si, &c. Tum Servilius, Tu vero, lictor, spondesne, ni, &c. Lictor: Spondeo, ni," &c. This explanation of Rost's is adopted by Orelli, but his adoption of it adds nothing to the authority.

It is generally said, and I have followed the opinion (note, p. 239), that the 'sponsio' might express the condition in the form 'si' or 'ni.' But there appears to be great doubt about this matter. We must distinguish between the direct form of the 'sponsio,' and the form in which it is quoted. In Gaius (iv. 93) we have an se de cohorte sua dicebat daturum. Servilius et recusare et deprecari, ne iniquis iudiciis, nullo adversario, iudicium capitis in se constitueretur. Haec quum maxime loqueretur, sex lictores circumstant valentissimi et ad pulsandos verberandosque homines exercitissimi: caedunt acerrime virgis: denique proximus lictor, de quo jam saepe dixi, Sextius converso baculo oculos misero tundere vehementissime coepit. Itaque ille, quum sanguis os oculosque complexisset, concidit; quum illi nihilo minus jacenti latera tunderentur ut aliquando spondere se diceret. Sic ille affectus illinc tum pro mortuo sublatus perbrevis postea est mortuus. Iste autem homo Venerius, et affluens omni lepore ac venustate, de bonis illius in aede Veneris argenteum Cupidinem posuit. Sic etiam fortunis hominum abutebatur ad nocturna vota cupiditatum suarum.

LV. Nam quid ego de ceteris civium Romanorum suppliciis singillatim potius quam generatim atque universe loquar? Carcer ille qui est a crudelissimo tyranno Dionysio factus Syracusis, quae example of the direct form: "provocamus adversarium tali sponsione: Si homo quo de agitur ex jure Quiritium meus est, sestertios xxv nummos dare spondes?" The answer would be 'Spondeo.' The corresponding direct form in the passage of Cicero would be this challenge to Servilius: "Si furtis quaestum facis, ii millia nummum dare spondes?" Servilius did not say 'Spondeo,' but Verres tried to compel him to answer (sponsionem facere). Now it appears that even in affirmative 'sponsiones,' when reported indirectly, the form 'ni' is always used, and not 'si.' The explanation of this use of 'ni' is not so easy; but I think it is now made clear that 'si' is the proper word of the direct 'sponsio,' and that 'ni' is used only in the indirect form. Huschke, quoted by Keller, explains this in his way; but I have no idea what he means. The words in legal formulae must not be measured by the rules of the ordinary Latin language. They are often antiquated modes of expression, which differ from the forms in daily use. I take 'ni' in this formula to mean what Keller suggests (ob nicht): and the simple translation of the text will be: "he compels him to make a 'sponsio' to the amount of, &c.—If he was not enriching himself by theft." The question raised was, If he was not a thief; or, Whether he was not a thief: just as if the form had been 'Furtisne quaestum faceret.' This explanation is equally applicable to the passage in Lib. 3. c. 59, where 'sponsionem facere' applies to the 'stipulator.' The 'sponsio' being made, it may be generally referred to as containing the matter, 'If so and so is not the case.' Thus Cicero says (c. 59): "Sponsio est, ni te," &c.: the 'sponsio,' that is, the question to which 'spondeo' had been answered, involved the question, "If Apronius did not say that you are his partner in the 'decumae?'"

This, I believe, is the true explanation of the formula 'ni,' for which I am indebted to Keller, whose work I had not by me till lately. These remarks will correct those on Lib. 3. c. 59, so far as they require correction. In p. 172 I have improperly limited the meaning of 'sponsionem facere;' but this note must be taken as supplementary to what is said there.

proximus lictor,] As the 'lictors' walked in a line before the 'magistratus,' the nearest 'lictor' would be 'proximus,' as the story in Livy (xxiv. 44) shows; and this appears to be the 'lictor' who was most about the 'magistratus' (Sallust. Jug. c. 12). The term occurs on two inscriptions cited by Orelli, but in the order 'Lictor proximus.' Zumpt refers to a passage in Valerius Maximus (ii. 2, 4): "ne quis se inter consulem et proximum lictorem . . . interponeret;" and Cicero, De Divin. i. 26. Cicero (Ad Q. Fr. 1. 1. c. 7) has the expression 'primus lictor,' which Lipsius (Op. vol. i. Elect. p. 727, ed. 1675) explains to mean the 'lictor' who walks first and clears the way, 'qui submovet.'

lautumiae vocantur, in istius imperio domicilium civium Romanorum fuit. Ut quisque istius animum aut oculos offenderat, in lautumias statim conjiciebatur. Indignum hoc video videri omnibus, iudices: et id jam priore actione quum haec testes dicerent intellexi. Retineri enim putatis oportere jura libertatis non modo hic, ubi tribuni plebis sunt, ubi ceteri magistratus, ubi forum plenum judiciorum, ubi senatus auctoritas, ubi existimatio populi Romani et frequentia; sed ubicumque terrarum et gentium violatum jus civium Romanorum sit, statuistis id pertinere ad communem causam libertatis et dignitatis. In externorum hominum maleficorum sceleratorumque, in praedonum hostiumque custodias tu tantum numerum civium Romanorum includere ausus es? Nunquamne tibi iudicii, nunquam contionis, nunquam hujus tantae frequentiae, quae nunc animo te iniquissimo infestissimoque intuetur, venit in mentem? nunquam tibi populi Romani absentis dignitas, nunquam species ipsa hujusce multitudinis in oculis animoque versata est? nunquam te in horum conspectum rediturum, nunquam in forum populi Romani venturum, nunquam sub legum et judiciorum potestatem casurum esse duxisti?

LVI. At quae erat ista libido crudelitatis exercendae, quae tot scelerum suscipiendorum causa? Nulla, iudices, praeter praedandi novam singularemque rationem. Nam ut illi, quos a poetis accepimus, qui sinus quosdam obsedisse maritimos aut aliqua promontoria aut praerupta saxa tenuisse dicuntur, ut eos qui essent appulsi navigiis interficere possent, sic iste in omnia maria infestus ex omnibus Siciliae partibus imminebat. Quaecumque navis ex Asia, quae ex Syria, quae Tyro, quae Alexandria venerat, statim certis indicibus et custodibus tenebatur: vectores omnes in lautumias conjiciebantur: onera atque merces in praetoriam domum deferebantur. Versabatur in Sicilia longo intervallo alter, non Dionysius ille, nec Phalaris, tulit enim illa quondam insula multos et crudeles tyrannos, sed quoddam novum monstrum ex vetere illa immanitate quae in iisdem locis versata esse dicitur. Non enim Charybdim tam infestam neque Scyllam nautis quam istum in eodem freto esse duxisti?] The MSS. 'melioris sectae,' as Zumpt says, have 'duxisti' for the vulgate 'putasti,' except Lag. 29, 'qui inter utramque classem fluctuat.' Orelli observes that the change into 'putasti' was made by non Dionysius ille,] Zumpt observes that this passage is quoted by Quintilian, Inst. Or. viii. 6, 72, as an instance of hyperbole, but it is quoted with some variations.

fuisse arbitror: hoc etiam iste infestior quod multo se pluribus et immanioribus canibus succinxerat. Cyclops alter multo importunior: hic enim totam insulam obsidebat; ille Aetnam solam et eam Siciliae partem tenuisse dicitur. At quae causa tum subiciebatur ab ipso, iudices, hujus tam nefariae crudelitatis? Eadem quae nunc in defensione commemorabitur. Quicumque accesserant ad Siciliam paulo pleniores, eos Sertorianos milites esse atque a Dianio fugere dicebat. Illi ad deprecandum periculum proferebant, alii purpuram Tyriam, tus alii atque odores vestemque linteam, gemmas alii et margaritas, vina nonnulli Graeca venalesque Asiaticos, ut intelligeretur ex mercibus quibus ex locis navigarent. Non providerant eas ipsas sibi causas esse periculi, quibus argumentis se ad salutem uti arbitrabantur. Iste enim haec eos ex piratarum societate adeptos esse dicebat: ipsos in lautumias abduci imperabat: naves eorum atque onera diligenter asservanda curabat.

LVII. His institutis quum completus jam mercatorum carcer esset, tum illa fiebant quae L. Suetium, equitem Romanum, lectissimum virum, dicere audistis, et quae ceteros audietis. Cervices in carcere frangebantur indignissime civium Romanorum ut jam illa vox et imploratio, Civis Romanus sum, quae saepe multis in ultimis terris opem inter barbaros et salutem tulit, ea mortem illis acerbiorum et supplicium maturius ferret. Quid est, Verres? quid ad haec cogitas respondere? num mentiri me, num fingere aliquid, num augere crimen, num quid horum dicere istis tuis defensoribus audes? Cedo mihi, quaeso, ex ipsius sinu literas Syracusanorum quas iste ad arbitrium suum confectas esse arbitratur: cedo rationem carceris quae diligentissime conficitur, quo quisque die datus in custodiam, quo mortuus, quo necatus sit. LITERAE SYRACUSANORUM. Videtis cives Romanos gregatim coniectos in lautumias: videtis indignissimo in loco coacervatam multitudinem vestrorum civium. Quaerite nunc vestigia quibus exitus eorum ex illo loco compareant. Nulla sunt.

canibus succinxerat.] The word properly applies, as Zumpt observes, to Scylla, who appeared surrounded by barking monsters, when the waves withdrew, and displayed the monster:

“Illa feris atram canibus succingitur alvum.”—Ovid. Met. xiii. 732.

The hounds of Verres have often been mentioned by Cicero.

istis tuis, &c.] ‘Sic Guelferbytani, et solent illa verba conjungi’ (Zumpt). Orelli follows the vulgate ‘istis defensoribus tuis audes.’ He observes that the other reading makes an hexameter ending, which Cicero studiously avoids ‘in clausularum fine.’ But there are examples in Cicero of this hexametral ending.

ipsius sinu] The ‘sinus’ of Verres. He had a copy of the prison rolls (ratio carceris) with him.

Omnesne mortui? Si ita posset defendere, tamen fides huic defensionis non haberetur. Sed scriptum extat in iisdem literis, quod iste homo barbarus ac dissolutus neque attendere unquam neque intelligere potuit: ΕΔΙΚΑΙΩΘΗΣΑΝ, inquit, hoc est, ut Siculi loquuntur, supplicio affecti ac necati sunt.

LVIII. Si qui rex, si qua civitas exterarum gentium, si qua natio fecisset aliquid in cives Romanos ejusmodi, nonne publice vindicaremus? non bello persequeremur? possemus hanc injuriam ignominiamque nominis Romani inultam impunitamque dimittere? Quot bella majores nostros et quanta suscepisse arbitramini, quod cives Romani injuria affecti, quod navicularii retenti, quod mercatores spoliati dicerentur? At ego jam retentos non queror; spoliatos ferendum puto: navibus, mancipiis, mercibus ademptis, in vincula mercatores esse conjectos, et in vinculis cives Romanos necatos esse arguo. Si haec apud Scythas dicerem, non hic in tanta multitudine civium Romanorum, non apud senatores, lectissimos civitatis, non in foro populi Romani, de tot et tam acerbis suppliciis civium Romanorum, tamen animos etiam barbarorum hominum permoverem. Tanta enim hujus imperii amplitudo, tanta nominis Romani dignitas est apud omnes nationes ut ista in nostros homines crudelitas nemini concessa esse videatur. Nunc tibi ego ullam salutem, ullum per-fugium putem, quum te implicatum severitate judicum, circumretitum frequentia populi Romani esse videam? Si mehercule, id quod fieri non posse intelligo, ex his te laqueis exueris ac te aliqua via ac ratione explicaris, in illas tibi majores plagas incidendum est in quibus te ab eodem me superiore ex loco confici et concidi necesse est. Cui si etiam id quod defendit velim concedere, tamen ipsa illa falsa defensio non minus esse ei perniciosa quam mea vera accusatio debeat. Quid enim defendit? Ex Hispania fugientes se excepisse et supplicio affecisse dicit. Quis tibi id permisit? quo jure fecisti?

attendere] See Lib. 3. c. 5.—ἐδικαιώθησαν: Cicero seems to say that this is a Sicilian use, not known to the other Greeks, who would use some other form of expression to convey the notion of capital punishment; or he may simply mean, this is the word that the Sicilians used, and Verres did not understand it. Hotmann refers to a use of ἐδικαίειν in Herodotus (i. 100), where the word, however, simply means 'he punished;' and so it may mean here, 'they were punished;' but usage had affixed a meaning to the word. See Suidas, δικαιοῦμενος: κολαζόμενος, δίκης τυγχάνων.

58. non bello] This is preferred by Zumpt and Orelli to the reading 'nonne bello,' for it appears to be Cicero's fashion, after using 'nonne' once, to use the simple 'non.' See Lib. 4. c. 56. p. 478.

superiore ex loco] 'E Rostris in quibus aedilis accusabo te de majestate' (P. Manutius). This is doubtless the right explanation, and must be added to the list of passages in refutation of Becker's opinion, that 'superior locus' always means the 'tribunal.' Orelli quotes Fronto, p. 148, ed. Rom.: "locuturum inde nobiscum de loco superiore; nec tantulo superiore quanto Rostra foro et comitio excelsiora sunt." Compare with this passage Lib. 1. c. 5.

quis idem fecit? qui tibi facere licuit? Forum plenum et basilicas istorum hominum videmus, et animo aequo videmus. Civilis enim dissensionis, et sive amentiae seu fati seu calamitatis non est iste molestus exitus, in quo reliquos saltem cives incolumes licet conservare. Verres, ille vetus proditor consulis, translator quaesturae, aversor pecuniae publicae, tantum sibi auctoritatis in re publica suscepit ut, quibus hominibus per senatum, per populum Romanum, per omnes magistratus, in foro, in suffragiis, in hac urbe, in re publica versari liceret, iis omnibus mortem acerbam crudelemque proponeret, si fortuna eos ad aliquam partem Siciliae detulisset. Ad Cn. Pompeium, clarissimum virum et fortissimum, occiso Perperna, permulti ex illo Sertoriano numero militum confugerunt. Quem non ille summo cum studio salvum incolumemque servavit? cui civi supplici non illa dextera invicta fidem porrexit et spem salutis ostendit? Itane vero quibus fuit portus apud eum quem contra arma tulerant, iis apud te cujus nullum in re publica momentum unquam fuit mors et cruciatus erat constitutus?

LIX. Vide quam commodam defensionem excogitaris. Malo mehercule id quod tu defendis his iudiciis populoque Romano istorum hominum] The public places of Rome were crowded with men who had been the partizans of Marius and Sertorius; but they were allowed to return home, and remain unmolested. Cicero adds: "For as to civil dissension, and madness, if you so choose to call it, or give it the name of fate or misfortune, that has befallen us, you cannot find fault with a termination which allows us to save at least the remnant of our citizens." He means to say that, after all the calamities of the civil wars, the Romans may be well satisfied that tranquillity is at last restored, and that those who have survived are allowed to remain unmolested. The impudent defence of Verres was, that those whom he put to death were men who had escaped from the Spanish war, partizans of Sertorius; but these very men were allowed to remain quiet at Rome. Besides, Verres had no authority for punishing them, if they fell into his hands. Orelli and Zumpt place ';' after 'exitus.' Orelli understands the passage right. Ernesti misunderstood it, and tried to correct it. What Zumpt means by the following note, I don't know: "Tu instituta cum Beckio paulo graviore interpunctione (the ';' after 'exitus'), qua hoc membrum a praegresso discernatur, subintellige 'sed is est.'" translator quaesturae,] These words have caused great difficulty to some of the commentators. Cicero describes Verres as a traitor to his consul Cn. Papirius Carbo (Lib. 1. c. 12, &c.). He was the 'quaestor' of Carbo, and in this capacity he deserted him: he transferred his 'quaestorship' to the other party, to Sulla. There seems nothing more strange in calling Verres 'translator quaesturae,' than 'aversor pecuniae publicae.'

in suffragiis,] Not access to the 'magistratus,' however, says P. Manutius, for a 'lex' which was passed after the victory of Sulla deprived the sons of the proscribed of the capacity of filling 'magistratus.'

Perperna,] M. Perperna, who belonged to the faction of M. Aemilius Lepidus, joined Sertorius in Spain, and afterwards assassinated him (Plutarch, Sertorius, c. 27). Cn. Pompeius, who was then conducting the war in Spain, caught Perperna, and put him to death (B.C. 72); but he burnt all the papers of Sertorius without reading them, or letting any one else read them; "and he immediately put Perperna to death, through fear that there might be defection and disturbance if the names were communicated to others" (Plutarch).—"permulti, occiso Perperna, ex illo:" Orelli.

cui civi supplici] R. G. Orelli. Zumpt has 'cui civi tum supplicanti.'—"Itane vero? quibus:" Zumpt, Orelli, as usual.

quam id quod ego insimulo probari: malo, inquam, te isti generi hominum quam mercatoribus et naviculariis inimicum atque infestum putari. Meum enim crimen avaritiae te nimiae coarguit: tua defensio furoris cujusdam, et immanitatis, et inauditae crudelitatis, et paene novae proscriptionis. Sed non licet me isto tanto bono, iudices, uti: non licet. Adsunt enim Puteoli toti: frequentissimi venerunt ad hoc iudicium mercatores, homines locupletes atque honesti, qui partim socios suos, partim libertos, ab isto spoliatos, in vincula coniectos, partim in vinculis necatos, partim securi percussos esse dicunt. Hic vide quam me sis usus aequo. Quum ego P. Granium testem produxero qui suos libertos abs te securi percussos esse dicat, qui abs te navem suam mercesque repetat, refellito, si poteris; meum testem deseram, tibi favebo: te, inquam, adjuvabo: ostendito illos cum Sertorio fuisse, a Dianio fugientes ad Siciliam esse delatos. Nihil est quod te mallem probare: nullum enim facinus quod maiore supplicio dignum sit reperiri neque proferri potest. Reducam iterum equitem Romanum, L. Flavium, si voles; quoniam priore actione, ut patroni tui dictitant, nova quadam sapientia, ut omnes intelligunt, conscientia tua atque auctoritate meorum testium, testem nullum interrogasti. Interrogetur Flavius, si voles, quinam fuerit T. Herennius, is quem ille argentariam Lepti

59. isto tanto bono,] The defence of Verres was, that he had caught and put to death the partizans of Sertorius. Cicero's charge is, that they were 'mercatores,' whom he had plundered. This was the 'crimen avaritiae.' Cicero would have had no objection, if Verres could have proved his case, that they were partizans of Sertorius whom he had punished; for Verres would then have proved that he almost made a new proscription. But Cicero goes on to say that he cannot avail himself of this advantage; he cannot have the opportunity of letting Verres prove himself to be a bloodthirsty villain, for the evidence of many persons established the fact that these were 'mercatores' whom he plundered of their goods. Zumpt has a note on this, which I don't understand.

Puteoli] This town, now Pozzuoli, was a great place of resort for merchants from Asia and Egypt; and Verres had intercepted many of those who were bound to this port, plundered them of their wares, and put them to death. The ancient navigation required more stoppages than ours, and these vessels had called at Syracuse, probably for water and other conveniences. When St. Paul left Malta after his shipwreck, he sailed in a vessel of Alexandria, which stayed three days at Syracuse. The vessel then came to Rhegium, and in one day more to Puteoli, where St. Paul landed (Acts, xxviii. 11—14). Madvig, quoted by Zumpt, refers to several passages, which show that Puteoli was a place of great trade at this time. Suetonius (Aug. c. 98) speaks of an Alexandrian ship saluting Augustus as he was sailing past the harbour of Puteoli. See also Strabo, p. 793, ed. Cas.

Cicero's allusion (De Fin. ii. 28) to the 'Puteolis granaria,' seems to show that it was a depot for corn.

After 'partim libertos,' Orelli adds 'partim collibertos,' from Codd. Reg. Leid. Steph.; but though it is difficult to see how such words have been foisted into the text, we may perhaps venture to exclude them.

quod te mallem] Zumpt, who is followed by Orelli, has printed 'mallem,' 'ex Guelf. ambobus et Havn. coll.:' and this seems to be the right tense, for Cicero means to say that Verres could not prove what he alleged, that the men whom he punished were a remnant of the Sertoriani.

argentariam] 'Argentariam facere,' 'naviculariam facere,' and the like, signify to fecisse dicit: qui cum amplius centum cives Romanos haberet ex conventu Syracusano qui eum non solum cognoscerent, sed etiam lacrimantes ac te implorantes defenderent, tamen inspectantibus omnibus Syracusanis securi percussus est. Hunc quoque testem meum refelli, et illum Herennium Sertorianum fuisse abs te demonstrari et probari volo.

LX. Quid de illa multitudine dicemus eorum qui, capitibus involutis, in piratarum captivorumque numero producebantur ut securi ferirentur? Quae ista nova diligentia, quam ob causam abs te excogitata? An te L. Flavii ceterorumque de T. Herennio vociferatio commovebat? an M. Annii, gravissimi atque honestissimi viri, summa auctoritas paulo diligentiore[m] timidior[em]que fecerat? qui nuper pro testimonio, non advenam nescio quem nec alienum, sed eum civem Romanum qui omnibus in illo conventu notus, qui Syracusis natus esset, abs te securi percussus esse dixit. Post hanc illorum vociferationem, post hanc communem famam atque querimoniam, non mitior in supplicio sed diligentior esse coepit. Capitibus involutis cives Romanos ad necem producere instituit: quos tamen idcirco necabat palam, quod homines in conventu, id quod antea dixi, nimium diligenter praedonum numerum requirebant. Haecine plebi Romanae te praetore est constituta conditio? haec negotii gerendi spes? hoc capitis vitaeque discrimen? Parumne multa mercatoribus sunt necessario pericula subeunda fortunae, nisi etiam hae formidines ab nostris magistratibus atque in nostris provinciis impendebunt? Ad eamne rem fuit haec suburbana ac fidelis carry on the business of an 'argentarius' or 'navicularius.' Herennius is called a 'negotiator' (Lib. 1. c. 5). He carried on his business at Leptis, in Africa, from which it was a short cut to Sicily, whither his affairs, we may suppose, occasionally took him. The business of an 'argentarius' was to exchange various kinds of money for merchants and others, as is now done by money-changers. He probably also received deposits, and advanced money on security, as we see in the case mentioned by Gaius (iv. 64), where accounts between the 'argentarius' and Titius are spoken of. Ernesti has a dissertation on the 'negotiatores.' They are easily distinguished from 'mercatores,' who are dealers in wares; and from 'aratores' and cattle-feeders (Verr. Lib. 2. c. 3). The general term 'negotiator' appears to include 'argentarius.' The Roman capitalists used to resort to the provinces, in order to turn their money to account. The least laborious way of making a capital profitable in a new settlement, or in a country where money is scarce, is to lend on security, and get a high rate of interest. It does not appear that a Roman 'negotiator' made any other venture in the provinces than that of placing out his money at interest; and he was not restrained by any rules of law as to the rate of interest that he could demand. If he employed his capital in any other way, he was not a 'negotiator,' except, as it seems, the 'negotiatores' sometimes made large purchases of grain, and probably other articles, for a venture to Rome; or, which is quite as likely, produce and other articles, on which they had made advances, would sometimes fall into their hands, from the inability of their debtors to pay what had been advanced.

60. haec suburbana] Compare Lib. 2. c. 3.

Sicilia, plena optimorum sociorum honestissimorumque civium, quae cives Romanos omnes suis ipsa sedibus libentissime semper accepit, ut, qui usque ex ultima Syria atque Aegypto navigarent, qui apud barbaros propter togae nomen in honore aliquo fuissent, qui ex praedonum insidiis, qui ex tempestatum periculis profugissent, in Sicilia securi ferirentur, quum se jam domum venisse arbitrarentur?

LXI. Nam quid ego de P. Gavio, Consano municipe, dicam, iudices? aut qua vi vocis, qua gravitate verborum, quo dolore animi dicam? tametsi dolor non deficit: ut cetera mihi in dicendo digna re, digna dolore meo suppetant, magis elaborandum est. Quod crimen ejusmodi est ut, quum primum ad me delatum est, usurum me illo non putarem; tametsi enim verissimum esse intelligebam, tamen credibile fore non arbitrabar. Coactus lacrimis omnium civium Romanorum qui in Sicilia negotiantur, adductus Valentinarum, hominum honestissimorum, omniumque Rheginorum testimoniis, multorumque equitum Romanorum qui casu tum Messanae fuerunt, dedi tantum priore actione testium res ut nemini dubia esse posset. Quid nunc agam? Quum jam tot horas de uno genere ac de istius nefaria crudelitate dicam; quum prope omnem vim verborum ejusmodi quae scelere istius digna sint aliis in rebus consumpserim, neque hoc providerim ut varietate criminum vos attentos tenerem, quemadmodum de tanta re dicam? Opinor, unus modus atque una ratio est. Rem in medio ponam: quae tantum habet ipsa gravitatis ut neque mea, quae nulla est, neque cujusquam ad inflammandos vestros animos eloquentia requiratur. Gavius hic, quem dico, Consanus, quum in illo numero civium Romanorum ab isto in vincula conjectus esset, et nescio qua ratione clam e lautumiis profugisset, Messanamque venisset, qui tam prope jam Italiam et moenia Rheginorum videret, et ex illo metu mortis ac tenebris quasi luce libertatis et odore aliquo legum recreatus revixisset, loqui Messanae et queri coepit, se civem Romanum in

61. Consano] There is the best authority for 'Consano,' but there is also authority for 'Cossano.' Cossa is an Etruscan town. Compsa, now Conza, is in the territory of the Hirpini, and is supposed to be the place that is meant. The form 'Consano,' from 'Compsa,' is certainly not what we should expect; but 'Compsanus' may have been corrupted into 'Consanus.' In Livy, xxiii. 1, there is 'Compsa' and 'Compsanus' in the editions. Orelli refers to c. 66, which seems to show, as he thinks, that the home of Gavius was in Southern Italy; but this is an absurd argument. He could see no more of one place than of the other; and of the two places, Cosa or Cossa, which is on the coast, is the place that one would prefer.—'dolor me non:' Orelli, who says 'dolor non nescio unde Z.' But Zumpt says that he omitted 'me' on the authority of the Guelf. MSS.

vincula conjectum, sibi recta iter esse Romam, Verri se praesto advenienti futurum.

LXII. Non intelligebat miser nihil interesse utrum haec Messanae an apud ipsum in praetorio loqueretur. Nam, ut antea vos docui, hanc sibi iste urbem delegerat quam haberet adjutricem scelerum, furtorum receptricem, flagitiorum omnium consciam. Itaque ad magistratum Mamertinum statim deducitur Gavius: eoque ipso die casu Messanam Verres venit. Res ad eum defertur: esse civem Romanum qui se Syracusis in lautumiis fuisse querebatur; quem jam ingredientem navem et Verri nimis atrociter minitantem a se retractum esse et asservatum, ut ipse in eum statueret quod videretur. Agit hominibus gratias, et eorum benivolentiam erga se diligentiamque collaudat. Ipse inflammatus scelere et furore in forum venit. Ardebant oculi: toto ex ore crudelitas eminebat. Expectabant omnes quo tandem progressurus aut quidnam acturus esset, quum repente hominem proripi, atque in foro medio nudari ac deligari, et virgas expediri jubet. Clamabat ille miser se civem esse Romanum, municipem Consanum: meruisse cum L. Precio, splendidissimo equite Romano, qui Panhormi negotiaretur, ex quo haec Verres scire posset. Tum iste se comperisse ait, eum speculandi causa in Siciliam ab ducibus fugitivorum esse missum; cujus rei neque index, neque vestigium aliquod, neque suspicio cuiquam esset ulla: deinde jubet undique hominem vehementissime verberari. Caedebatur virgis in medio foro Messanae civis Romanus, iudices; quum interea nullus gemitus, nulla vox alia illius miseri inter dolorem crepitumque plagarum audiebatur, nisi haec, Civis Romanus sum. Hac se commemoratione civitatis omnia verbera depulsurum, cruciatumque a corpore dejecturum arbitrabatur. Is non modo hoc non perfecit ut virgarum vim deprecaretur, sed quum imploraret saepius usurparetque nomen civitatis, crux, crux, inquam, infelici et aerumnoso, qui nunquam istam potestatem viderat, comparabatur.

eminebat.] This passage is cited by Gellius, x. 3, and by Quintilian, Inst. Or. ix. 2, 40, though some editions of Quintilian have 'emicabat.' But the true reading in Quintilian is 'eminebat' (Zumpt).

meruisse] He had served in the army in company with L. Precius: his comrade, therefore, would be able to testify who he was.

usurpare] This word has here the sense of continuous use of a thing, as in c. 64: 'usurpatione civitatis.'

potestatem] Zumpt has 'pestem,' and he is followed by Orelli. There appears to be no authority for 'pestem,' except Lag. 29, which we might accept if it removed the difficulty. Zumpt observes that Verres is frequently called 'pestis,' and other bad men like him; and we have, in Lib. 3. c. 54, 'importunissima pestis.' But if 'pestem' is Verres, there is no point in the remark, 'qui nunquam istam pestem viderat.' Be-

LXIII. O nomen dulce libertatis! O jus eximium nostrae civitatis! O lex Porcia legesque Semproniae! O graviter desiderata et aliquando reddita plebi Romanae tribunicia potestas! Hucine tandem omnia reciderunt ut civis Romanus in provincia populi Romani, in oppido foederatorum, ab eo qui beneficio populi Romani fasces et secures haberet deligatus in foro virgis caederetur? Quid quum ignes candentesque laminae ceterique cruciatus admovebantur, si te illius acerba imploratio et vox miserabilis non inhibebat, ne civium quidem Romanorum qui tum aderant fletu et gemitu maximo commovebare? In crucem tu agere ausus es quemquam qui se civem Romanum esse diceret? Nolui tam vehementer agere hoc prima actione, iudices: nolui. Vidistis enim ut animi multitudinis in istum dolore et odio et communis periculi metu concitarentur. Statui egomet mihi tum modum et orationi meae, et C. Numitorio, equiti Romano, primo homini, testi meo: et Glabrio-nem, id quod sapientissime fecit, facere laetatus sum ut repente consilio in medio testem dimitteret. Etenim verebatur ne sides, it is very unlikely that Gavius had never seen Verres. Manutius explains 'potestatem' thus: 'in crucem adigendi cives Romanos,' which may be the meaning. Zumpt observes upon 'potestas': "neque enim illa potestas fuit, sed minime ferendus potestatis abusus;" but there seems to me no weight in that. Of the two readings, 'potestatem' appears more capable of explanation; and the authority for 'pestem' is small.

63. lex Porcia, &c.] Livy (x. 9) speaks of a Porcia Lex: "Porcia tamen Lex sola pro tergo civium lata videtur, quae gravi poena si quis verberasset necassetve civem Romanum sanxit." Cicero (De Re Publica, ii. 31) speaks of three Leges Porciae: "Leges Porciae quae tres sunt trium Porciorum." It is supposed that the last 'lex' was one proposed by P. Porcius Laeca, B.C. 197, of whom there is extant a 'denarius,' with the inscription, P. LAECA. PROVOCO. Zumpt observes, that as there appears to have been nothing about the 'provocatio' or appeal in the Porcia Lex, it is probable that it was a 'lex' proposed by M. Porcius Cato, the censor, who, according to Festus, made a speech 'pro scapulis.' Festus says: "Pro scapulis cum dicit Cato, significat pro injuria verberum. Nam complures leges erant in cives rogatae, quibus sanciebatur poena verberum: his significat prohibuisse multos suos cives in ea oratione quae est contra M. Caelium." It is the opinion of most critics that P. Porcius Laeca proposed the 'lex,' and that M. Porcius Cato spoke in favour of it (suasit). The 'lex' seems to have given an appeal to a Roman citizen in the provinces against the governor, and Gavius accordingly is represented as making his appeal, by declaring that he was a Roman citizen (Meyer, Orat. Rom. Fragm. p. 21. 2nd ed.).

There appears to have been only one Lex Sempronia on this matter, a 'lex' of C. Sempronius Gracchus, B.C. 123. Cicero says (Pro Rabirio, c. 4): "C. Gracchus legem tulit ne de capite civium Romanorum injussu vestro judicaretur."

consilio in medio testem] This is the MSS. reading. There is no variation. Zumpt cannot explain it, and is driven to adopt Hotmann's conjecture, 'consilium in medio testimonio dimitteret.' Orelli follows Zumpt. Hotmann observes that every body knows that the 'praetor' might dismiss the 'consilium' or 'judices,' that is, adjourn the court, when he pleased. The MSS. reading makes Glabrio send away the witness. The difficulty is in the words 'consilio in medio,' which cannot mean when the judges 'missi sunt in consilium.' If the reading is right, it means in the midst of the proceedings, and I do not see why the sitting of the court could not be called 'consilium,' as well as the body of 'judices,' for they were certainly so called populus Romanus ab isto eas poenas vi repetisse videretur, quas veritus esset ne iste legibus et vestro iudicio non esset persoluturus. Nunc quoniam exploratum est omnibus quo loco causa tua sit et quid de te futurum sit, sic tecum agam. Gavium istum, quem repentinum speculatorem fuisse dicis, ostendam in lautumias Syracusis a te esse conjectum; neque id solum ex literis ostendam Syracusanorum, ne possis dicere, me quia sit aliquis in literis Gavius, hoc fingere et eligere nomen, ut hunc illum esse possim dicere; sed ad arbitrium tuum testes dabo qui istum ipsum Syracusis abs te in lautumias conjectum esse dicant. Producam etiam Consanos, municipales illius ac necessarios, qui te nunc sero doceant, iudices non sero, illum P. Gavium quem tu in crucem egisti, civem Romanum et municipem Consanum, non speculatorem fugitivorum fuisse.

LXIV. Quum haec omnia quae polliceor cumulate tuis proximis plana fecero, tum istuc ipsum tenebo quod abs te mihi datur: eo contentum me esse dicam. Quid enim nuper tu ipse, quum populi Romani clamore atque impetu perturbatus exiluisti, quid, inquam, locutus es? illum quod moram supplicio quaereret, ideo clamitasse se esse civem Romanum; sed speculatorem fuisse. Jam mei testes veri sunt. Quid enim dicit aliud C. Numitorius? quid M. et P. Cottii, nobilissimi homines, ex agro Tauromenitano? quid Q. Lucceius qui argentariam Rhegii maximam fecit? quid ceteri? Adhuc enim testes ex eo genere a me sunt dati, non qui novisse Gavium sed se vidisse dicerent, quum is qui se civem Romanum esse clamaret in crucem ageretur. Hoc tu, Verres, idem dicis: hoc tu confiteris illum clamitasse, se civem esse Romanum: apud te nomen civitatis ne tantum quidem valuisse ut dubitationem aliquam, ut crudelissimi taeterrimique supplicii aliquam parvam moram saltem posset afferre. Hoc teneo, hic haereo, iudices, hoc sum contentus uno: omitto ac negligo cetera: sua confessione induatur ac juguletur necesse est. Qui esset ignorabas: speculatorem esse suspicabare: non quaero qua suspicione; tua te accuso oratione: civem Romanum se esse dicebat. Si tu apud Persas aut in extrema India deprehensus, Verres, ad supplicium ducerere, quid aliud clamitares nisi te civem esse Romanum? et si tibi ignoto apud ignotos, from sitting together. I prefer a text for which there is authority, to a conjecture for which there is none, even if the text presents insuperable difficulties.

repentinum speculatorem] Who was all at once declared to be a spy, no suspicion of the kind having ever existed before, as Hotmann explains it.

64. tuis proximis] The advocates and friends of Verres. Comp. Lib. 2. c. 44. It is singular that any body should have found a difficulty here.

apud barbaros, apud homines in extremis atque ultimis gentibus positos, nobile et illustre apud omnes nomen tuae civitatis profuisset, ille quisquis erat quem tu in crucem rapiebas, qui tibi esset ignotus, quum civem se Romanum esse diceret, apud te praetorem, si non effugium, ne moram quidem mortis mentione atque usurpatione civitatis assequi potuit?

LXV. Homines tenues, obscuro loco nati, navigant; adeunt ad ea loca quae nunquam antea viderunt, ubi neque noti esse iis quo venerunt neque semper cum cognitoribus esse possunt. Hac una tamen fiducia civitatis non modo apud nostros magistratus qui et legum et existimationis periculo continentur, neque apud cives solum Romanos qui et sermonis et juris et multarum rerum societate juncti sunt, fore se tutos arbitrantur; sed quocunque venerint, hanc sibi rem praesidio sperant esse futuram. Tolle hanc spem, tolle hoc praesidium civibus Romanis; constitue nihil esse opis in hac voce, 'Civis Romanus sum;' posse impune praetorem aut alium quemlibet supplicium quod velit in eum constituere qui se civem Romanum esse dicat, quod quis ignoret; jam omnes provincias, jam omnia regna, jam omnes liberas civitates, jam omnem orbem terrarum qui semper nostris hominibus maxime patuit, civibus Romanis ista defensione praecluseris. Quid si L. Precium, equitem Romanum, qui tum in Sicilia erat, nominabat? etiamne id magnum esse futuram.] 'Futurum:' Orelli, on the authority of Gellius (i. 7), who quotes this passage: "Homines tenues . . sibi rem praesidio sperant futurum." In place of 'viderunt,' the text of Gellius has 'adierant.' Gellius prefaces the extract with this remark: "In oratione Ciceronis Quinta in Verrem, in libro spectatae fidei Tironiana cura atque disciplina facto, ita scriptum fuit." He observes that many people thought that 'futurum' was a blunder; but a friend of his, who was well versed in the old books, observed: "nullum esse in eo verbo neque mendum neque vitium: Cicero-nem probe ac venuste locutum; nam futurum, inquit, non refertur ad rem, sicut legentibus temere et incuriose videretur; neque pro participio positum est: sed verbum est indefinitum quod Graeci appellant ἀπαρέμφατον, neque numeris neque generibus praeserviens, sed liberum undique et impromiscuum est." Gellius cites other instances from C. Gracchus, Claudius Quad-rigarius, and other old writers, where 'dicturum,' 'facturum,' &c., are used in cases where 'dicturos,' 'facturos,' would be the later usage. Zumpt admits that this infinitive future was often so used by the old writers; but he asks how it happens that we have only this single instance cited from Cicero. It is not easy to answer this objection. Some MSS. have the reading 'futurum' here, and omit 'esse.' Orelli objects to 'esse futuram,' as at variance with the fundamental laws of oratorical number, which do not allow the use of the hexametral termination, not even at the end of a clause. It seems as if he established his rule by destroying all the instances that contradict it.

65. cognitoribus] This word is explained by the rest of the chapter. It means persons who knew them and could vouch for them.

quod quis ignoret;] Zumpt has 'quod eum quis ignoret,' from Lag. 29 only: 'sine qua sententia obscura, oratio abrupta est.' This is the Cod. which he once calls 'minime fidelis.'

qui tum in Sicilia, &c.] 'Qui tum in Sicilia negotiabatur, nominabat?' Orelli. Zumpt observes that all the MSS. whose collations we are acquainted with, except Lag. 29, have 'qui tum in Sicilia nomina-fuit, Panhormum literas mittere? Asservasses hominem, custodiis Mamertinorum tuorum vinctum, clausum habuisses, dum Panhormo Precius veniret. Cognosceret hominem; aliquid de summo supplicio remitteres: si ignoraret; tum si ita tibi videretur, hoc juris in omnes constitueres ut, qui neque tibi notus esset, neque cognitorem locupletem daret, quamvis civis Romanus esset, in crucem tolleretur.

LXVI. Sed quid ego plura de Gavio? quasi tu Gavio tum fueris infestus, ac non nomini, generi, juri civium hostis. Non illi, inquam, homini sed causae communi libertatis inimicus fuisti. Quid enim attinuit, quum Mamertini more atque instituto suo crucem fixissent post urbem in via Pompeia, te jubere in ea parte figere quae ad fretum spectaret; et hoc addere, quod negare nullo modo potes, quod omnibus audientibus dixisti palam, te idcirco illum locum deligere ut ille, quoniam se civem Romanum esse diceret, ex cruce Italiam cernere ac domum suam prospicere posset? Itaque illa crux sola, judices, post conditam Messanam illo in loco fixa est. Italiae conspectus ad eam rem ab isto delectus est ut ille in dolore cruciatuque moriens perangusto fretu divisa servitutis ac libertatis jura cognosceret; Italia autem alumnum suum servitutis extremo summoque supplicio affixum videret. Facinus est vincere civem Romanum; scelus verberare; prope parricidium necare: quid dicam in crucem tollere? verbo satis digno tam nefaria res appellari nullo batur.' But G., according to Orelli, has 'qui tum in Sicilia, nominabat.' Lag. 29 has the 'erat.' The reading of the passage is very doubtful.

Cognosceret hominem;] Lambinus prefixed 'si' to 'cognosceret,' as Zumpt observes, 'liberius quam decet;' but he might have said 'impudentissime.' What business has an editor to corrupt the text by his insertions and omissions? This use of the conditional without 'si' is common. P. Manutius proposed to omit the 'si' before 'ignoraret;' but it is in the MSS. Orelli can see a distinction between the clause 'cognosceret' and 'si ignoraret;' which I cannot.

66. more] All the MSS. have 'nomine,' says Zumpt; but Naugerius corrected it. The MS. abbreviation of 'nomine' is 'noie.' Whether 'more' is abbreviated, I don't know. Perhaps not. Here is a case where correction is permitted; for first we see how the blunder may have originated: next, we have the formula 'more atque instituto' to guide us. 'Nomine atque instituto' would have no meaning.

fretu] On the authority of Gellius (xiii. 20). But the MSS. of Cicero have 'fretu,' except Lag. 42. There is also the authority of the grammarian Charisius (p. 103, Putsch.) for 'fretu' in Cicero (Zumpt).

Cicero means to say that the straits, the boundary of Italy and Sicily, separated the freedom of Italy from the servitude of Sicily. If Gavius was a Roman citizen, he was equally entitled to protection against Verres in Italy and Sicily; but he happened to be in Sicily, which was a province, where there was a governor with no power on the spot to control him. See note, p. 562.

vincire . . verberare; . . necare: . . tollere?] It is singular that the MSS. should have the passive forms in the first three words, and keep the active 'tollere.' It seems clear that the active forms are required, and Quintilian cites the passage so (Inst. viii. 4. 4). Zumpt, if I understand him right, means to say that Lag. 29 has the active forms.

parricidium] That is 'murder.' It does modo potest. Non fuit his omnibus iste contentus. Spectet, inquit, patriam; in conspectu legum libertatisque moriatur. Non tu hoc loco Gavium, non unum hominem nescio quem, civem Romanum, sed communem libertatis et civitatis causam in illum cruciatum et crucem egisti. Jam vero videte hominis audaciam. Nonne eum graviter tulisse arbitramini quod illam civibus Romanis crucem non posset in foro, non in comitio, non in rostris defigere? Quod enim his locis in provincia sua, celebritate simillimum, regione proximum potuit, elegit: monumentum sceleris audaciaeque suae voluit esse in conspectu Italiae, vestibulo Siciliae, praetervectione omnium qui ultro citroque navigarent.

LXVII. Si haec non ad cives Romanos, non ad aliquos amicos nostrae civitatis, non ad eos qui populi Romani nomen audissent; denique, si non ad homines verum ad bestias; aut etiam, ut longius progrediar, si in aliqua desertissima solitudine ad saxa et ad scopulos haec conqueri ac deplorare vellem; tamen omnia muta atque inanimata tanta et tam indigna rerum atrocitate commoverentur. Nunc vero quum loquar apud senatores populi Romani, legum et judiciorum et juris auctores, timere non debeo ne non unus iste not appear that the Romans had any name for murder except 'parricidium'; for 'homicidium' seems not to have come into use before the imperial period. Cicero means murder in this passage. The common explanation of this word is, that it is equivalent to 'patricidium'; but it is difficult to see why the genuine form should not have been kept as in 'patrimonium.' It was the opinion of antiquity, that the word meant literally 'parricide,' or the killing of a father by a son. Plutarch (Romulus, c. 22) says that Romulus named all homicide πατροκτονία, a statement that has of course no historical value; but it shows how Plutarch understood the word 'parricidium.' Paulus Diaconus, v. Parrici Quaestores, p. 221, Müller, says: "Nam parricida non utique is qui parentem occidisset dicebatur, sed qualemunque hominem indemnatum. Ita fuisse indicat lex Numae Pompilii regis his composita verbis: Si qui hominem liberum dolo sciens morti duit, parricidas esto." This is explained to mean that all malicious homicide was to be treated as parricide, and tried before the same court.

Besides the derivation of 'parricidium' from 'patri' and 'cid' (caed-ere), it has been proposed to consider it as a shorter form of 'parenticidium'; and also, as formed of 'par' and 'cid,' the killing of one's equal. The latest and the worst attempt is that of E. Osenbrüggen (Das Alt-Römische Parricidium, Kiel, 1841), who derives it ultimately from the Sanscrit 'para,' signifying, as he explains it, 'cunning,' 'perverted'; and so he would explain 'parricidium' to be death caused by treachery or malice (dolo sciens), and it would signify what we call murder, and not the death of a father. From this original signification he supposes that murder in later times was distributed into various kinds, 'homicidium,' 'veneficium,' and 'parricidium' in the narrower sense. But the passages of Roman authors show that parricide in our sense is the original signification of 'parricidium,' and that is a sufficient answer to Osenbrüggen. This subject is one of considerable difficulty; but the explanation most consistent with the use of 'parricidium' by the Roman writers, is that it does properly signify 'parricide,' and that the name became generally applied to any atrocious murder. In this sense we can understand 'parricida patriae,' or 'rei publicae.' This subject is discussed at length in Osenbrüggen's essay, and in Rein, Das Criminal-recht der Römer, p. 401, 449, &c.

67. inanimata] 'Inanima:' Orelli. 'atrocitate:' 'acerbitate:' Zumpt in his larger edition.

ne non unus] F. C. Wolff proposed to civis Romanus illa cruce dignus, ceteri omnes simili periculo indignissimi judicentur. Paulo ante, judices, lacrimas in morte misera atque indigna navarchorum non tenebamus, et recte ac merito sociorum innocentium miseria commovebamur; quid nunc in nostro sanguine tandem facere debemus? Nam civium Romanorum omnium sanguis conjunctus existimandus est, quoniam et salutis omnium ratio et veritas postulat. Omnes hoc loco cives Romani, et qui adsunt et qui ubique sunt, vestram severitatem desiderant, vestram fidem implorant, vestrum auxilium requirunt: omnia sua jura, commoda, auxilia, totam denique libertatem in vestris sententiis versari arbitrantur. A me, tametsi satis habent, tamen, si res aliter acciderit, plus habebunt fortasse quam postulant. Nam si qua vis istum de vestra severitate eripuerit, id quod neque metuo, judices, neque ullo modo fieri posse video; sed si in hoc me ratio fefellerit, Siculi causam suam perisse querentur, et mecum pariter moleste ferent; populus quidem Romanus brevi, quoniam mihi potestatem apud se agendi dedit, jus suum me agente suis suffragiis ante Kalendas Februarias recuperabit. Ac si de mea gloria atque amplitudine quaeritis, judices, non est alienum meis rationibus, istum mihi ex hoc judicio ereptum ad illud populi Romani judicium reservari. Splendida est illa causa: probabilis mihi et facilis; populo grata atque jucunda. Denique si videor hic, quod ego non quaesivi, de uno isto voluisse crescere; isto absoluto, quod sine multorum scelere fieri non potest, de multis mihi crescere licebit.

LXVIII. Sed mehercule vestra reique publicae causa, judices, nolo in hoc delecto consilio tantum flagitium esse commissum: nolo eos judices quos ego probarim atque delegerim, sic in hac urbe notatos, isto absoluto, ambulare ut non cera sed coeno obliti esse videantur. Quamobrem te quoque, Hortensi, si qui monendi locus ex hoc loco est, moneo: videas etiam atque etiam et consideres, omit 'non,' and Madvig approves of the omission. It seems that they take 'iste civis' to be Gavius, whereas he is Verres. Zumpt and Orelli defend the 'non.' It is not a clear form of expression; but Cicero's meaning appears to be this: he says that when speaking before Roman senators, "I ought not to have any apprehension that this one citizen of yours will not be judged worthy of that punishment of the cross, and all the rest will be considered most undeserving of a like danger." The senators of course would consider the cross an unfit punishment for Roman citizens. But Cicero says, that when they form this judgment, they will not at the same time think that Verres does not deserve it.—'non tenebamus:' 'non' om. Zumpt in his larger edition; a misprint, I suppose.

Kalendas] Before he has been a month in office as Curule aedile. Compare Act. 1. c. 10, and Lib. 1. c. 42.

de uno . . crescere;] Rightly explained by Graevius, to get power, wealth, or the like, to the detriment of some other person.

68. cera] This is explained by Divin. c. 7; Act. 1. c. 6, and 13.

ex hoc loco] That is from the equal ground from which he now addresses the court. Cicero gives Hortensius a little adquid agas, quo progrediare, quem hominem et qua ratione defendas. Neque de illo tibi quidquam praefinio quo minus ingenio mecum atque omni dicendi facultate contendas; cetera si qua putas te occultius extra iudicium quae ad iudicium pertineant facere posse; si quid artificio, consilio, potentia, gratia, copiis istius moliri cogitas; magno opere censeo desistas, et illa quae temptata jam et coepta sunt ab isto, a me autem pervestigata et cognita, moneo ut extinguas et longius progredi non sinas. Magno tuo periculo peccabitur in hoc iudicio; majore quam putas. Quod enim te liberatum jam existimationis metu, defunctum honoribus, designatum consulem cogites, mihi crede, ornamenta ista et beneficia populi Romani non minore negotio retinentur quam comparantur. Tulit haec civitas, quoad potuit, quoad necesse fuit, regiam istam vestram dominationem in iudiciis et omni re publica; tulit: sed quo die populo Romano tribuni plebis restituti sunt, omnia ista vobis, si forte nondum intelligitis, adempta atque erepta sunt. Omnium nunc oculi conjecti sunt hoc ipso tempore in unumquemque nostrum, qua fide ego accusem, qua religione hi judicent, qua tu ratione defendas. De omnibus nobis, si quis tantulum de recta regione deflexerit, non illa tacita existimatio quam antea contemnere solebatis, sed vehemens ac liberum populi Romani iudicium consequetur. Nulla tibi, Quinte, cum isto cognatio est, nulla necessitudo; quibus excusationibus antea nimium in aliquo iudicio studium tuum defendere solebas, earum habere in hoc homine nullam potes. Quae iste in provincia palam dictitabat, quum ea quae faciebat tua se fiducia facere dicebat, ea ne vera putentur tibi maxime est providendum.

vice now, if he is wise enough to take it, before Cicero speaks in a different tone when he has entered on his office, and will address the people from a 'superior locus.'

Quod . . cogites,] Orelli, following Lambinus, has 'cogitas.' Cicero apparently does not mean to say that Hortensius 'cogitat.' He seems to express himself in this form: 'for as to the opinion that you may entertain, that you are now released from all fear about your character,' &c. Zumpt observes "sed quod cum alias facta non opiniones exprimat, h. l. fere si valet." It may be translated: "For if you consider," &c.

defunctum honoribus,] Hortensius being now 'designatus consul,' had attained the highest rank; he had run through the career of Roman 'honores,' for though he had not yet entered on the discharge of his

vestram dominationem] Cicero uses 'vestram' though he is only addressing Hortensius. He probably means Hortensius and his partizans. See p. 450.

recta regione] "Ant. Augustinus, eruditus olim Italus, pro regione scribendum censuit aut ratione aut religione." But Zumpt refers to 'recta regio' at the end of c. 70. It is also an expression of Lucretius (iv. 1268): "recta regione viaque." This learned prelate has been mentioned before in these notes. But he was a Spaniard.

in aliquo iudicio] Zumpt refers to Divin. c. 7. The word 'Quinte' shows intimacy between Cicero and Hortensius, or at least Cicero treats him as a friend to whom he is giving some good advice.

LXIX. Ego mei rationem jam officii confido esse omnibus iniquissimis meis persolutam: nam istum paucis horis primae actionis omnium mortalium sententiis condemnavi. Reliquum iudicium jam non de mea fide quae perspecta est, nec de istius vita quae damnata est, sed de iudicibus, et, vere ut dicam, de te futurum est. At quo tempore futurum est? nam id maxime providendum est, etenim quum omnibus in rebus, tum in re publica permagni momenti est ratio atque inclinatio temporum: nempe eo quum populus Romanus aliud genus hominum atque alium ordinem ad res iudicandas requirit; nempe lege de iudiciis iudicibusque novis promulgata. Quam non is promulgavit quo nomine proscriptam videtis, sed hic reus; hic, inquam, sua spe atque opinione quam de vobis habet, legem illam scribendam promulgandamque curavit. Itaque quum primo agere coepimus, lex non erat promulgata; quum iste, vestra severitate permotus, multa signa dederat quamobrem responsurus non videretur, mentio de lege nulla fiebat: posteaquam iste recreari et confirmari visus est, lex statim promulgata est. Cui legi quum vestra dignitas vehementer adversetur, istius spes falsa et insignis impudentia maxime suffragatur. Hic si quid erit commissum a quoquam vestrum quod reprehendatur, aut populus Romanus iudicabit de eo homine quem jam antea iudiciis indignum putavit, aut ii qui propter offensionem iudiciorum de veteribus iudicibus lege nova novi iudices erunt constituti.

69. rationem . . . officii] He means to say that he is confident that he has now paid the debt of his duty, even to those who are the most unreasonable of his creditors. He might have said 'officium' only, as in c. 71; but he uses a word (ratio) from common life, a word of reckoning and account.

quo nomine] The reading of all the good MSS. The vulgate 'cujus nomine' may be merely an explanation of 'quo nomine.' It is intelligible, though it seems rather a singular kind of expression. Madvig compares Lib. 4. c. 9: "hi te homines sublevant . . . quo in oppido." The text, he observes, is the same in sense as if it were 'non is, qui id nomen habet, quo,' &c. He also compares Lib. 1. c. 38: "his nominibus, quae res per eum gestae sunt," and he explains it thus: "id est, his nominibus rationum, quae ad eas res pertinent, quas," &c. I don't take this to be a good explanation, no more than the like explanation which he gives of the following passage of Caesar (Bell. Civ. i. 8): "reliquo sermone confecto, cuius rei causa venerat," which means, says Madvig, "de ea re cuius."

The 'lex' is the Aurelia of Cotta, which was now promulgated in the Roman sense, that is, put up in public, that the proposed 'lex' might be well known. Cicero says that the real promulgator is Verres, for the fear of Verres escaping was the immediate motive for the 'lex' being proposed.

de eo homine] Zumpt has 'de eodem homine.' It matters little which we take, Verres is meant. If Verres is not convicted, says Cicero, either the Roman people will pass judgment on him, whom already they have considered unworthy of a trial (c. 63), or those will pass judgment, who, on account of the misconduct of the courts, will be appointed by a new 'lex' new 'iudices' to sit in judgment on the former 'iudices.' Zumpt remarks that the parts of this sentence do not correspond, at least in position, for there is nothing to correspond to 'de eo.' He observes that, if the words were in this order, 'aut de veteribus iudicibus ii qui,' every thing would be in harmony. But this would hardly be an improvement, for 'de veteribus iudiciis' cannot well be separated from the words which follow.

LXX. Mihi porro, ut ego non dicam, quis omnium mortalium non intelligit quam longe progredi sit necesse? Potero silere, Hortensi, potero dissimulare, quum tantum res publica vulnus acceperit, ut expilatae provinciae, vexati socii, dii immortales spoliati, cives Romani cruciati et necati impune me actore esse videantur? potero ego hoc onus tantum aut in hoc iudicio deponere, aut tacitus sustinere? Non agitanda res erit? non in medium proferenda? non populi Romani fides imploranda? non omnes qui tanto se scelere obstrinxerint ut aut fidem suam corrumpi paterentur, aut iudicium corrumpere, in discrimen ac iudicium vocandi? Quaeret aliquis fortasse, Tantumne igitur laborem, tantas inimicitias tot hominum suscepturus es? Non studio hercule ullo, neque voluntate; sed non idem licet mihi, quod iis qui nobili genere nati sunt quibus omnia populi Romani beneficia dormientibus deferuntur; longe alia mihi lege in hac civitate et conditione vivendum est. Venit mihi in mentem M. Catonis, hominis sapientissimi et vigilantissimi, qui quum se virtute, non genere, populo Romano commendari putaret, quum ipse sui generis initium ac nominis ab se gigni et propagari vellet, hominum potentissimorum suscepit inimicitias et maximis in laboribus usque ad summam senectutem summa cum gloria vixit. Postea Q. Pompeius, humili atque obscuro loco natus, 70. longe progredi] This is correctly explained by P. Manutius. Every body knows that, if Verres is acquitted, I cannot remain quiet; I must prosecute this affair, and bring Verres before the Populus Romanus.

aut tacitus] Orelli has 'aut diutius tacitus.' But the best MSS. omit 'diutius,' and it seems better omitted. Orelli says that this is one of the kind of omissions which appear in the best MSS., or, as in this instance, is caused by the 'similes literarum ductus.' I suppose he means that 'diutius' and 'tacitus' have a certain resemblance in the forms of the letters. But it is as easy to suppose that the word 'diutius' has arisen from 'tacitus' being repeated.

discrimen ac iudicium] Zumpt has 'aut' for 'ac,' following 'Havn. Guelff.'—'non studio quidem hercule:' Orelli.

dormientibus] Cicero alludes to the difficulties which a man of mean origin had in attaining the honours of the state, the 'populi Romani beneficia,' compared with the facilities of those of noble family. Rome contained a compact and powerful aristocratic class, who, in spite of any rivalry among themselves, agreed to keep down their plebeian opponents and to secure to themselves all the high offices. So it is in every country in which such an aristocratic class exists. The members of it are thrust into places without an effort of their own; they may sleep and yawn, and still have their pockets filled with money and their pride gratified by distinction, while the laborious plebeian must work his way upwards without help and against opposition. A countryman of Cicero, C. Marius, a native of Arpinum, is represented by Sallust (Bell. Jug. c. 85, &c.), complaining in similar terms of the arrogance of the nobility, who attempted to engross all the honours of the state, and of the difficulty which the plebeian had in attaining them, whatever might be his merit: "queis nobilitas freta, ipsa dissimilis moribus, nos illorum aemulos contemnit; et omnes honores non ex merito sed quasi debitos a vobis repetit." Comp. Cic. Ad Attic. i. 2.

M. Catonis,] Cato the Censor, whom Cicero has immortalized in his treatise De Senectute. He was a native of the municipium Tusculum, and the first of his family who raised himself to the ranks of the Roman nobility.

Q. Pompeius,] Cicero proceeds to mention other Romans who raised themselves nonne plurimis inimiciis, maximisque suis periculis ac laboribus amplissimos honores est adeptus? Modo C. Fimbriam, C. Marium, C. Coelium vidimus non mediocribus inimiciis ac laboribus contendere ut ad istos honores pervenirent, ad quos vos per ludum et per negligentiam pervenistis. Haec eadem est nostrae rationis regio et via: horum nos hominum sectam atque instituta persequimur.

LXXI. Videmus quanta sit in invidia, quantoque in odio apud quosdam nobiles homines novorum hominum virtus et industria; si tantulum oculos dejecerimus, praesto esse insidias; si ullum locum aperuerimus suspicioni aut crimini, accipiendum statim vulnus esse; semper nobis vigilandum, semper laborandum videmus. Inimicitiae sunt. Subeantur. Labor. Suscipiatur. Etenim tacitae magis et occultae inimicitiae timendae sunt quam indictae atque apertae. Hominum nobilium non fere quisquam nostrae industriae favet: nullis nostris officiis benivolentiam illorum allicere possumus: quasi natura et genere disjuncti sint, ita dissident a nobis animo et voluntate. Quare quid habent eorum inimicitiae periculi, quorum animos jam ante habueris inimicos et invidos quam ullas inimicitias susceperis? Quamobrem mihi, iudices, optatum est illud, in hoc reo finem accusandi facere, quum et populo Romano satisfactum, et receptum officium Siculis necessariis meis erit persolutum: deliberatum est autem, si res opinionem meam quam de vobis habeo fefellerit, non modo eos persequi, ad quos maxime culpa corrupti iudicii, sed etiam illos ad quos conscientiae contagio pertinebit. Proinde si qui sunt qui in hoc reo aut potentes aut audaces aut artifices ad corrumpendum iudicium velint esse, ita sint parati ut, disceptante populo Romano, mecum sibi rem videant futuram: et, from a mean condition to the highest 'honores.' This Pompeius was consul B.C. 141, with Cn. Servilius Caepio. He is commemorated by Cicero as an orator of some distinction (Brutus, c. 25): "qui summos honores homo per se cognitus sine ulla commendatione majorum est adeptus."

Cicero next speaks of those whom he had seen himself. C. Flavius Fimbria, consul B.C. 104, with C. Marius, who was then consul for the fourth time. He is mentioned by Cicero (Brutus, c. 34) among the Roman orators as 'truculentus, asper, maledicus.'

This C. Caelius was C. Caelius Caldus, consul B.C. 94, the first of his family who attained this honour. He was also an orator, though of no great distinction. 'Caelius' and other words of the kind are variously written. The inferior MSS. have 'Celius.' The coins have 'Coelius' or 'Coilius.'

per ludum] Or, as Cicero elsewhere expresses it, 'quasi ludibundi.'

71. Inimicitiae sunt.] It is usual to place a note of interrogation after 'sunt' and 'Labor;' but it is better omitted. See p. 268.

corrupti iudicii.] The common reading is 'corrumpendi,' for which Zumpt has 'corrupti.' On 'corrumpendi' Madvig remarks: "est autem perpetua haec apud bonos scriptores ratio illius participii sive gerundivi, ut praesentis temporis sit, praeteriti vix unquam. Itaque in iis, qui iudicium corruerunt, corrupti iudicii culpa est, non corrumpendi."

disceptante] See Lib. 3. c. 72, as to the meaning of this word.

si me in hoc reo quem mihi inimicum Siculi dederunt, satis vehementem, satis perseverantem, satis vigilantem esse cognorunt, existiment in his hominibus, quorum ego inimicitias populi Romani salutis causa suscepero, multo graviores atque acriores futurum.

LXXII. Nunc te, Jupiter Optime Maxime, cujus iste donum regale, dignum tuo pulcherrimo templo, dignum Capitolio atque ista arce omnium nationum, dignum regio munere, tibi factum ab regibus, tibi dicatum atque promissum, per nefarium scelus de manibus regiis extorsit; cujusque sanctissimum et pulcherrimum simulacrum Syracusis sustulit: teque, Juno Regina, cujus duo fana duabus in insulis posita sociorum, Melitae et Sami, sanctissima et antiquissima, simili scelere idem iste omnibus donis ornamentisque nudavit: teque, Minerva, quam item iste duobus in clarissimis et religiosissimis templis expilavit, Athenis, quum auri grande pondus, Syracusis, quum omnia praeter tectum et parietes abstulit: teque, Latona, et Apollo, et Diana, quorum iste Deli non fanum, sed, ut hominum opinio et religio fert, sedem antiquam divinumque domicilium nocturno latrocinio atque impetu compilavit: etiam te, Apollo, quem iste Chio sustulit: teque etiam atque etiam, Diana, quam Pergae spoliavit, cujus simulacrum sanctissimum Segestae bis apud Segestanos consecratum, semel ipsorum religione, iterum P. 72. Juno Regina,] Zumpt refers to Livy, v. 22, 23, 31, 52, where it is said that Juno Regina was brought from Veii, and had a temple erected on the Aventine.

Segestae bis] It is usual to place a (,) after 'Segestae,' which is a mistake. If we make a pause after 'Segestae,' it should be tensarum] See Lib. 1. c. 59, and Lib. 3. c. 3. In the former of these two passages the word is printed 'thensae.' Zumpt says that it is a 'tendendo.' This may be so.

coetus ludorum initis, quorum iter iste ad suum quaestum, non ad religionum dignitatem, faciendum exigendumque curavit: teque, Ceres et Libera, quarum sacra, sicut opiniones hominum ac religiones ferunt, longe maximis atque occultissimis caerimoniis continentur, a quibus initia vitae atque victus, morum, legum, mansuetudinis, humanitatis hominibus et civitatibus data ac dispersita esse dicuntur; quarum sacra populus Romanus a Graecis ascita et accepta tanta religione et publice et privatim tuetur, non ut ab illis huc allata, sed ut ceteris hinc tradita esse videantur; quae ab uno isto sic polluta ac violata sunt ut simulacrum Cereris unum, quod a viro non modo tangi, sed ne aspici quidem fas fuit, e sacrario Catinae convellendum auferendumque curaverit, alterum autem Henna ex sua sede ac domo sustulerit; quod erat tale ut homines quum viderent, aut ipsam videre se Cererem, aut effigiem Cereris non humana manu factam sed de coelo lapsam, arbitrarentur: vos etiam atque etiam imploro et appello, sanctissimae deae, quae illos Hennenses lacus lucosque incolitis, cunctaeque Siciliae, quae mihi defendenda tradita est, praesidetis; a quibus inventis frugibus et in orbem terrarum distributis omnes gentes ac nationes vestri religione numinis continentur: ceteros item deos deasque omnes imploro et obtestor, quorum templis et religionibus iste, nefario quodam furore et audacia instinctus, bellum sacrilegum semper impiumque habuit indictum, ut si in hoc reo atque in hac causa omnia mea consilia ad salutem sociorum, dignitatem populi Romani, fidem meam spectaverunt, si nullam ad rem nisi ad officium et virtutem omnes meae curae, vigiliae, cogitationesque elaborarunt, quae mea mens in suscipienda causa fuit, fides in agenda, eadem vestra sit in judicanda: deinde uti C. Verrem, si ejus omnia sunt inaudita et singularia facinora sceleris, audaciae, perfidiae, libidinis, avaritiae, crudelitatis, dignus exitus ejusmodi vita atque factis vestro judicio consequatur; utique res publica meaue fides una hac accusatione mea contenta sit, mihiue posthac bonos potius defendere liceat, quam improbos accusare necesse sit.

de coelo, &c.] 'De coelo delapsam,' the common reading and Orelli.—'lucosque colitis:' Orelli, following Garatoni, who remarks that 'colere' is the ordinary word in such a case; and this appears to be so. But the better MSS. have 'incolitis.'

continentur: ceteros] Zumpt points it 'continentur. Ceteros, &c.; but, as Orelli remarks, this is a continuation of the long sentence which begins 'Nunc te, Jupiter,' &c.

Intus, Latinae conditionis Centuripini, Netini, Segestani. Stipendiarii Assorini, Aetnenses, Agryni, Acestaei, Acrenses, Bidini, Cetarini, Cacyrini, Drepanitani, Ergetini, Echetlienses, Erycini, Entellini, Etini, Enguini, Gelani, Galatini, Halesini, Hennenses, Hyblenses, Herbitenses, Herbessenses, Herbulenses, Halicyenses, Hadranitani, Imacarenses, Ichanenses, Ietenses, Mutustratini, Magellini, Murgentini, Mutycenses, Menanini, Naxii, Noaeni, Petrini, Paropini, Phtinthienses, Semellitani, Scherini, Selinuntii, Symaethii, Talarenses, Tissinenses, Triocalini, Tira-cienses, Zancaei Messeniorum in Siculo Freto.

Coloniae] The five coloniae are Tauromenium, Catina, Syracusae, Thermae, and Tyndaris. Diodorus (Excerpta, Lib. 23) says that there were sixty-eight cities in Sicily, which number agrees with that of the five colonies and sixty-three cities in this text of Pliny.

Messana] It was made a colonia of Roman citizens, but at what time it does not appear. It is stated that the coins struck under Augustus have the legend 'Messenion' in Roman characters, which indicates that the people were then Cives Romani.

Tauromenium] Naxos, the first Greek settlement in the island (Thucyd. vi. 3), was destroyed before Cicero's time, and Tauromenium took its place (Diodor. xvi. 7). It was made a Roman colony by Augustus, as it seems.

Asines] Harduin, in his note, assumes this to be the Assinarus of Thucydides (vii. 84), which is a mistake. The Asines, or whatever its true name may be, is placed by Pliny near Tauromenium; but the Assinarus was south of Syracuse. This Asines appears to be the Acesines of Thucydides (iv. 25), and apparently the same that Appian (Bell. Civ. v. 109) calls Onobalas.

Catina] This is said to be the reading of all the MSS. The Greek name is always Κατάνη, of which the Romans made Catina, as they made Massilia of Μασσαλία. The Roman colony sent to Catina is mentioned by Strabo (p. 268, ed. Cas.).

Megaris] The genuine name appears to be Megara, a town near the coast between the Terias and the Anapus. This Megara (Steph. Byz. v. Μέγαρα) was originally named Hybla. There were three cities in Sicily named Hybla. This was the Little Hybla, as Stephanus (v. Ὑβλα) calls it, and he names the people Ὑβλαῖοι Γαλιῶται Μεγαρεῖς.

Syracusae] This place received a Roman colony in the time of Augustus, as we learn from Strabo (p. 270) and Dion Cassius (Lib. 54. c. 7).

Elorum] This word was probably written both without the aspirate and with it, like Enna and Henna.

Gelas] The name occurs on an old coin <ΕΛΑΣ, which bears a human head bearded attached to the fore part of a bull. Gela was founded by Rhodian and Cretan colonists (Thucyd. vi. 4).

Thermae] This colonia appears to have been at the hot springs, near the coast, between Heraclea and Selinus, and at a place now called Sciacca.

Selinus] An old Greek coin has the legend ΣΕΛΙΝΟΣ, which is equivalent to Σελινοῦς.

Panhormum] So it stands in Harduin's text, with the 'h.' This, of course, was the Roman mode of writing. The Greek coins have the legend ΠΑΝΟΡΜΙΤΑΝ.

Solus] This word is in form like Selinus, and as the Romans said Hydruntum for Hydrus, so they sometimes said Soluntum.

Himera] This is the city and river mentioned by Cicero, Lib. 2. c. 35. There is a coin with the legend HIMERA, in Roman characters, for the R appears plain. The face, on which the legend is, contains the figure of a cock.

Cephaloedis] There is a Greek coin, apparently of this place, with ΚΕΦ or ΚΕΦΑ legible on it.

Aluntium] A Greek coin, of which I have a cast, has the name ΑΛ^oNTIN so far legible. Perhaps Haluntium was also the Roman fashion of writing this name.

Tyndaris] It does not appear, so far as I know, when Tyndaris became a colonia. There is a Greek coin of Tyndaris with the head of a horse on one of the faces.

Latinae conditionis] Pliny mentions Centuripa or Centuripae, Netum, and Segesta, as 'Latinae conditionis,' that is, as possessing the Jus Latinum or Jus Latium, which denoted a condition intermediate between that of Cives Romani and Peregrini. The nature of this political condition is explained by Savigny (Entstehung der Latinität, Vermischte Schriften, vol. 1). But Cicero (Ad Att. xiv. 12) states that the Jus Latium, or, as he terms it, Latinitas, was given to all the Sicilians by the Dictator Caesar. If, then, Pliny means to limit the Latinitas to these three towns, his statement is unintelligible. Cicero further remarks, that after Caesar's death M. Antonius set up (fixit) a Lex, as passed in Caesar's lifetime, which gave the Roman civitas to the Sicilians; but his words imply that it was a forgery. However, Diodorus (xiii. 35) speaks of all the Sicilians being made Roman citizens, for such is the meaning of his words: πάντες οἱ Σικελιώται τῆς Ῥωμαίων πολιτείας ἡξιώθησαν. How all this is to be reconciled, I don't see.

Centuripini] The legend on the Greek coins is KENTOPIHINΩN. Though the Greek name of Segesta is Ἐγέστα, the Greek coins have also ΣΕΓΕΣΤΑ.

Stipendiarii] The meaning of this term in Cicero has been explained. Its meaning in Pliny may be the same; but the condition of being Stipendiarii is inconsistent with having the Roman civitas. Further, if all these states had become Stipendiarii, their condition had been changed since Cicero's time (Lib. 3. c. 6, note).

Assorini] Harduin says that the legend on the coins of Assorus (apud Parutam) is ΑΣΟΡΥ. ΧΡΥΣΑΣ. The coin that I have already referred to has the Roman legend ASSORV and CRY SAS.

Agyrini] The Agyrinenses of Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 52). Pliny uses a Greek form. The coins appear to have ΑΓΥΡΙΝΑΙΩΝ.

Acestaei] The Acestenses of the present text of Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 36).

Cacyrini] The name Cacyrum appears in Ptolemaeus also.

Ergetini] The name Ergetium occurs in Stephanus, and he gives Ergetini as the Ethnic name. The name also occurs with the aspirate, Sergeantium, a common variation in the names of these Sicilian towns.

Echellienses] Echetla is mentioned by Polybius (i. 15) and by Diodorus (xx. 32).

Etini] 'MSS. Edini' (Harduin). He does not say why he does not follow the MSS.

Gelani] This Ethnic name does not agree either with Cicero's form Gelenses, nor with the Greek form Geloi. But Gelani may be a corrupted word.

Galatini] Supposed by Harduin to be the same as the Calactini of Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 43), in which he may be right. The Ethnic name Calactini occurs also in Diodorus (xii. 29).

Halesini] This is another of the words which was probably written both with the aspirate and without.

Hennenses] I have before remarked on the forms Enna and Henna. The Greeks seem to have sometimes prefixed the mark of aspiration, for a coin of Henna seems to have the legend HENNAION.

Herbulenses] The same probably as the Arbelaei of Stephanus (v. Ἀρβέλη).

Hadranitani] The coins are said to have ΑΔΡΑΝΙΤΑΝ without the aspirate, and so it appears to be on the cast of a Sicilian coin which I have, but the legend is hardly legible.

Ichanenses] The name occurs in Stephanus (v. Ἰχάνα), who gives the Ethnic name Ἰχανῖνος.

Ietenses] The name occurs in Stephanus (v. Ἰεταί), who gives the Ethnic name Ἰεταῖος. The Ethnic name is legibly IAITIN on a Greek coin. The remainder of the word, which is not legible on the specimen that I have, is probably ΩΝ. The reading Ietini appears then to be rightly restored in Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 43).

Mutustratini] This is doubtless the Amestratus of Stephanus and of Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 39, 43). A Greek coin has the first part of the legend AM quite clear; the rest not so legible.

Magellini] The name is Μάκελλα in Polybius (i. 24) and elsewhere.

Murgentini] The Greek orthography appears to be Morgantini. Harduin says 'in nummis MOPΓAN.' A Greek coin has the legend MOPΓANTINA very legible, and on the face of the coin an ear of corn, probably to denote that it was a wheat-growing place.

Mutycenses] The people of Mutyca, now Modica, as Harduin rightly says. See Cicero, Lib. 3. c. 43, 51. All the MSS. of Pliny are said to have Mutycenses. There seems to be no doubt that Mutyca is meant by Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 43, 51), and not Motya. There is a Greek coin of Motya, with the legend MOTYAION and the figure of a greyhound on it.

Menanini] 'In nummis apud Parutam MENANINΩN and MHNANINΩN' (Harduin). If this is so, the place was called Μέναινον (Diod. xi. 78). The Ethnic name in Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 43) is Menaeni, and so it is on a Greek coin legibly MENAINΩN.

Naxii] Naxos was destroyed by Dionysius B.C. 403, and in B.C. 358 the scattered inhabitants were collected by Andromachus, and settled on the neighbouring site of Tauromenium (Diodorus, xiv. 15; xvi. 7). Pliny has already mentioned Tauromenium as a colonia, and has incorrectly said that it was originally Naxos; but it was a different place. It is a sample of his inaccuracy to speak of the Naxii as a political community at the time when he wrote.

Noaeni] Νόαι is mentioned by Stephanus, who makes the Ethnic name Νοαῖος.

Paropini] Paropus (Πάρωπος) is mentioned by Polybius (i. 24) as in the neighbourhood of Thermae; and probably it was between Thermae and Panhormus.

Phinthienses] Probably Phintia is meant, or Phintias, as Diodorus calls it, near the mouth of the southern Himera. It was founded by Phintias, tyrant of Agrigentum (Diod. xxii. Exc.). There is a Greek coin with the legend ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΦΙΝΤΙΑ, and the figure of a wild boar running. On the other face is a fine head.

Semellitani] Probably a corrupt name.

Scherini] Schera is also mentioned by Ptolemaeus. The name Acherini in Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 43), though the reading of all the MSS. except one may be doubted. Probably it should be Scherini.

Symaethii] There was a river Symaethus, but no town of the name is mentioned.

Talarenses] Stephanus mentions Talaria as a Sicilian city, and the Ethnic name Talarini.

Tissinenes] As the name is Tissa or Tissae, Tissinenses is incorrect, and the true Roman name is Tissenses, as in Cicero. Stephanus calls it χωρίον, which agrees with Cicero's 'perparva et tenuis civitas' (Lib. 3. c. 38).

Triocalini] Tricalini in Stephanus. Cicero (Lib. 5. c. 4) has the same form as Pliny.

Tiracienses] Stephanus gives the name Τυρακῖναι, and Diodorus (xii. 29) Τυρακίη. Harduin says that the MSS. of Pliny have the reading Triraceinses.

Zanclaei] Here Pliny mentions Zanclaei Messeniorum as Stipendiarii, and a person might suppose that a different city is meant from that which he has already called Messana, and 'oppidum civium Romanorum.' So much carelessness and inaccuracy may be perhaps charged on our present text, rather than on the compiler. If the text is right, it is difficult to say what Pliny means by the 'Zanclaei Messeniorum in Siculo Freto,' for this is an appropriate description of the position of Messana, which he has already mentioned.

Neither Cicero nor Pliny mentions all the places in Sicily; nor do the texts of these two authors agree entirely. This is not the place for a memoir on the ancient geography of Sicily, nor have I the materials for it. The extract from Pliny, and the remarks on it, may not be altogether useless for the illustration of the text of Cicero. Those who seek information on the architectural remains of Sicily, and the medals of the towns, some of them among the best specimens preserved of the wreck of Grecian art, will have no difficulty in finding further illustration of some parts of these orations in various works which have been specially devoted to the ancient monuments of Sicily.

CIVITATES FOEDERATAE.—Messana, Netum, Tauromenium.

IMMUNES AC LIBERAE.—Centuripae, Halesa, Halicyae, Panhormus, Segesta.

DECUMANAE.—Abacaenum, Aetna, Agathyrnum, Agyrium, Amestratus, Apollonia, Assorus, Bidis, Calacte, Capitium, Catina, Cephaloedium, Cetaria, Enguium, Entella, Gela, Hadranum, Haluntium, Helorus, Henna, Heraclea, Herbessus, Herbita, Hybla, Hyccara, Ietae, Imachara, Ina, Leontini, Lipara, Menae, Murgentia, Mutyca, Mylae, Petra, Schera, Solus or Soluntum, Syracusae, Thermae, Thermae Selinuntiae, Tissa, Tyndaris.

CENSORIAE.—Acrae, Agrigentum, Camarina, Drepanum, Hybla Heraea, Lilybaeum, Macella, Mazara, Megaris, Motya, Phintia, Selinus, Triocala.

This list is drawn up from the names on the small map attached to Zumpt's edition. On this map he has indicated by marks the cities which belong to the four several classes above-mentioned. The map in this volume may be of some little use to refer to in reading these orations. It has no other pretensions.

IX.

SICILY A ROMAN PROVINCE.

I SHALL here attempt to explain briefly the condition of Sicily as a Roman province in the time of Cicero.

Hiero II., king of Syracuse, the friend and the ally of the Romans, died about B.C. 216, leaving that part of the island which was under his government well organized in its civil administration. He was succeeded by a youth, his grandson Hieronymus, who deserted the Roman for the Carthaginian alliance. Hieronymus was murdered in B.C. 215, and in the next year the Roman senate sent the consul M. Claudius Marcellus to Sicily, who laid siege to Syracuse, and took the city B.C. 212. Marcellus remained in Sicily until the following year; and though he did not terminate the war in the island, he did something towards the settlement of affairs. Scipio Africanus was in Sicily as consul B.C. 205, and as proconsul in B.C. 204; and it appears from Cicero that he had time to do something towards settling the island. He regulated for the Agrigentini the mode of filling up vacancies in their senate (Lib. 2. c. 50), as Rupilius afterwards did for Heraclia. Cicero speaks of these 'leges' of Scipio as 'antiquae;' and it appears from the chapter referred to, that he means the elder Africanus. He informs us in another place (Lib. 2. c. 2; Lib. 4. c. 33, &c.) that P. Africanus (the younger), after the destruction of Carthage B.C. 146, was in Sicily, and that he restored to the Sicilians all the works of art which the Carthaginians had carried off, and which fell into the hands of the Romans on the capture of Carthage. Though Sicily had for some time been a Roman province, the administration does not appear to have been finally settled until B.C. 131, when the proconsul P. Rupilius, after suppressing the revolt of the slaves, and with the assistance of ten commissioners appointed by the senate, made those regulations which subsisted at the time when Cicero delivered his orations against Verres (Lib. 2. c. 13). The regulations of Rupilius were called the Lex Rupilia.

The condition of Sicily and of its towns under the Roman government was not uniform, but the difference had mainly, though not entirely, reference to taxation. The Sicilian towns had a senate, and a commonalty or body of citizens, who had still some power; for Cicero, speaking of the order made by the Centuripini (Lib. 2. c. 67) for the demolition of the statues of Verres, says "Centuripinorum senatus decrevit populusque jussit." But even in Cicero's time it appears that the Sicilian towns applied to the Roman senate about their internal administration, if a great difficulty arose. In B.C. 95 the Halesini could not agree among themselves about the mode of filling up vacancies in their senate, and they addressed themselves to the senate at Rome. The senate empowered C. Claudius Pulcher to draw up for them a code of rules (leges dare, conscribere) as to the qualifications and the election of senators, which he did with the assistance of all the Marcelli, whom he invited to aid him in this matter (Lib. 2. c. 49). The Romans did not touch the constitution of the Sicilian towns, or, if they did make any alterations, such a practice was the exception and not the rule. The Sicilian towns retained their senate, their chief magistrate, one or more, the various public functionaries, and their priestly offices. The temples retained their property, as we see in the case of Eryx; and the high priesthood of the temple of Jupiter at Syracuse (Lib. 2. c. 51), an honourable, and probably a lucrative office, gave the citizens annually the excitement of an election, like the Roman 'comitia' (Lib. 2. c. 51, 52). Many of these Sicilian temples had large possessions, which were increased by the gifts of pious persons. They could also take gifts by testament, either directly or by virtue of a resolute condition (Lib. 2. c. 8), or a penalty. Several of the rich temples of Sicily are mentioned by Cicero.

In addition to the property which some at least of the Sicilian towns possessed, they must have required taxes to defray the expenses of the local administration. These taxes (tributa) were levied upon the rated value of property, and the assessment was made every fifth year. Each 'civitas' elected two 'censores' by popular vote, and the office, which we should consider somewhat an invidious one, was an object of great competition 'propter magnitudinem potestatis,' as Cicero says (Lib. 2. c. 53): but there was probably some pecuniary advantage derived from it, indirectly perhaps, or we can hardly understand why the candidates paid money to Verres for the office, when he illegally interfered in the elections. On this occasion at least, according to the orator, the censors abused the office which they had scandalously got; for they made an unfair rating, and threw the burden on the poorer sort. The number of 'civitates' which had censors during the administration of Verres was sixty-five, for the whole number of censors appointed by Verres was a hundred and thirty. The towns could also take property under a testament. The legal notion of an artificial person, as these town communities were for the purpose of holding property, which is indeed the only purpose for which this fiction exists, was fully developed in Sicily, as it was in the legal system of the Romans, and as it is in modern Europe.

The Lex Rupilia (Lib. 2. c. 13) made regulations for the constitution of the courts by which civil questions were to be tried. In the system of Greek colonization every city had its own constitution and laws: each was a perfect, independent community. The Greek towns of Sicily, which were of various origin, had a great diversity of customs, and most of these customs were retained under Roman dominion. Thus Cicero remarks of the Thermitani (Lib. 2. c. 37), that in consideration of their fidelity to the Romans, the senate and the Roman people restored to them their city, lands, and laws (leges). This favour was probably granted on the conquest of the island, and confirmed by the Lex Rupilia. Sthenius of Thermae was charged with falsifying the public records (de literis publicis corruptis), which was a criminal offence; and yet even in this case he maintained that the Roman praetor had no authority, and he claimed to be tried by the law of his own city. The 'procuratores' of Epicrates of Bidis, a small town, in the case of his title to a succession (hereditas) being disputed by the 'palaestritae' of Bidis, claimed to have the matter tried according to their own law (leges suae), or at any rate according to the Lex Rupilia. Cicero (Lib. 2. c. 13) has explained the general rules applicable to suits between Sicilians, and between Sicilians and Romans. He says that between two Sicilians of the same 'civitas' the matter was decided according to the law of the place; and a citizen of the place was 'judex' (Lib. 2. c. 27). If the parties to the suit were of different states, the praetor appointed (sortitus est) 'judices' pursuant to the Lex Rupilia. Cicero does not say more of this matter than his purpose required. The Lex Rupilia, as he informs us, fixed the constitution of the court which was to try a matter between citizens of different states; and it probably also contained some regulations as to the rules of law applicable to such cases; for as these states had their several laws, it would be necessary to determine in some general way at least what rules of law should prevail when there was a conflict between those of different states. Other cases, which are provided for, are mentioned by Cicero (Lib. 2. c. 13). All disputes between the 'aratores' or cultivators and the 'decumani' or Publicani, who farmed the 'decumae,' were to be settled according to the regulations of King Hiero II. (Lex Hieronica).

For the purposes of administration Sicily was divided into 'conventus' or districts, so called from the people of a given district meeting at a fixed place for the purpose of having their suits heard and determined, and for the transaction of other business which required the authority of the praetor. Sicily appears to have been divided into four 'conventus' at least (Lib. 2. c. 36; Lib. 5. c. 11), those of Syracuse, Lilybaeum, Pan-hormus, and Agrigentum. Pliny's remarks on the 'conventus' of the Spanish Peninsula (Lib. 3. c. 1) will explain this. Hispania Baetica was divided into four 'juridici conventus,' or circuits for the administration of justice. The province of Citerior Hispania was divided into seven 'conventus.' In speaking of the 'conventus Carthaginiensis,' Pliny uses the expression 'Carthaginem conveniunt populi LXV:' and in another place he speaks of certain Celtici as belonging to the 'Hispalensis conventus,' or circuit of Seville; and of the Turduli as those 'qui jura Cordubam petunt:' all which are only different modes of expressing the same thing. The governor made his circuits through the island, and he probably visited not only the chief place in each 'conventus,' but other towns also (Lib. 2. c. 70). Among the Comites, or those who formed the body of functionaries attached to the praetor, 'praefecti' are mentioned (Lib. 2. c. 10); and the 'praefecti' appear to have been employed in the administration of justice (Lib. 3. c. 32, and the note on 'praefecti nomine').

There were two quaestors for the island, one for the western part, or the district of Lilybaeum (is qui Erycum montem obtinebat: Lib. 2. c. 8); and one for the eastern division, or that of Syracuse. The functions of the quaestors were the same in Sicily as in other provinces. It is stated in one passage (Lib. 2. c. 8) that it was the practice of the quaestor of Lilybaeum to sue for any thing that became due to the temple of Eryx. (See also Divin. c. 17.)

Cicero's statement is, that the Sicilian towns (Lib. 3. c. 6) were subject to Rome on the same terms on which they had been governed before the island became a province. The statement may be correct so far as concerns the towns that were under Hiero's government, but it is rather deficient in precision, if we apply his language to all the towns of the island, for Hiero's kingdom comprised only a part of Sicily. However, as a general remark, the statement is intelligible enough. Seventeen cities are mentioned (Lib. 5. c. 47) as having been faithful to the Romans in all the Punic and Sicilian wars. One of these was Tyndaris, which however is not mentioned among either the Civitates Foederatae or the Immunes ac Liberae. The number of Sicilian cities, says Cicero, which were subdued by the Romans, was very small (Lib. 3. c. 6). The land of these cities became the property of the Roman people by conquest; but the lands were restored, subject to the payment of certain dues, which dues were let to farm by the censors at Rome (censoria locatio). Though restored, the lands were still called 'agri publici.' These are the Censoriae Civitates of Zumpt's list; but I do not vouch for the accuracy of the list. None of the cities of Sicily paid a fixed land-tax (vectigal stipendiarium), as was the case in Spain and with most of the Punic towns. Their payment was a variable duty, a tenth or other quota of produce. Three cities, Messana, Tauromenium, and Netum, had a Foedus with Rome, the effect of which is described by Cicero, when he is speaking of the Tauromenitani, in these words (Lib. 2. c. 66): "qui maxime ab injuriis nostrorum magistratuum remoti consuerant esse praesidio foederis." The terms of these 'foedera' were not the same; for the Tauromenitani were excused from supplying a ship of war for the defence of Sicily, and the Mamertini (Messenii) were bound by their Foedus to supply one (Lib. 5. c. 19; Lib. 4. c. 9). Verres is charged by Cicero with releasing the Mamertini from their obligation to supply and equip a vessel, and with requiring a vessel from the Tauromenitani. The 'decumae' of these foederate towns were not let, or sold, as Cicero expresses it; in other words, they paid no taxes (vectigal) to the Romans. Five towns, Centuripa, Halesa, Segesta, Halicyae, and Panhormus, were 'liberae ac immunes' (Lib. 3. c. 6). They paid no 'decumae.' In reply to the supposed argument of the advocates of Verres, that the 'aratores' were his enemies on account of the 'decumae,' Cicero says (Lib. 3. c. 69), "Well, those who cultivate lands which are 'immunes liberique,' why should they be your enemies? why should the Halesini, why the Centuripini, why the Segestani, why the Halicyenses?" A passage in Lib. 3. c. 40, appears to create a difficulty: "quid Halicyenses, quorum incolae decumas dant, ipsi agros immunes habent;" Cicero then mentions that the 'decumae' of Halicyae were sold to Turpio at 'C. Med.' The passage is explained by ascertaining the meaning of 'incolae,' which signifies persons domiciliated at Halicyae, not 'cives' of Halicyae. 'Quorum incolae' means those persons, not citizens of Halicyae, who were domiciliated at Halicyae, and cultivated lands in Halicyae¹. These lands were only tax-free when cultivated by 'cives.' One Diocles of Panhormus (Lib. 3. c. 40) was the lessee of lands in the territory of Segesta, for no person except a citizen could own land in this territory. Diocles was therefore obliged to hire it; and if he made Segesta his usual residence, he was an 'incola;' and it appears that he paid 'decumae' for the lands which he farmed in the territory of Segesta. (See also Lib. 3. c. 23, note.) All the rest of the cities of Sicily, except the three classes which have been mentioned, paid 'decumae,' or tenths, in respect of their lands; and all the land that was liable to payments to the Roman state was included under the general name of 'agri vectigales.' The 'decumae' were let publicly in Sicily, or, according to the more common Roman expression, were sold, at a fixed period, and pursuant to the terms of the Lex

Hieronica, which terms were so carefully drawn up, that the cultivator (arator) could not defraud the farmer of the 'decumae' (decumanus), nor could the 'decumanus' get more than his due (Lib. 3. c. 8). These 'decumae' were generally let to the Roman Publicani, but sometimes a 'civitas' would bid for the 'decumae' of its district. Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 42) mentions an instance of the Thermitani bidding for their 'decumae.' These 'decumae' consisted of a tenth of wheat and barley, the only two kinds of grain which Cicero mentions; and it seems that sometimes at least the tenths of wheat and barley were let separately (Lib. 3. c. 34). The 'decumae' also comprised the 'fruges minutae,' pulse and the like, and oil and wine (Lib. 3. c. 7, and c. 71, note; p. 266, note).

The price at which the 'decumae' were sold was not estimated in money, but by quantity (Lib. 3. c. 47, &c.). The probable amount of the 'decumae' was estimated upon the 'professio,' or declaration, by the cultivators, of the quantity of land which they cultivated (Lib. 3. c. 22. 47. 49). It seems that the inhabitants of a district were required to deliver their 'decumae' at the chief place of the district, and it was an irregular thing for Verres to require them to be delivered at another place (Lib. 3. c. 43). The order of Verres, that the 'aratores' should carry their corn down to the coast, where it could be embarked from Rome, only applied to the 'alterae decumae,' or it was at least an irregular order (Lib. 3. c. 14, note on 'ad aquam'). Dureau de la Malle concludes from this passage that the cultivators were obliged to carry their 'decumae' to the coast; but this conclusion is not necessary, and it is contradicted by another passage (Lib. 3. c. 43). He says in another passage, that "the lands which enjoyed immunity were compelled to sell and to take every year to Rome, and at their own cost, 800,000 modii of wheat, the price of which was four sesterii the modius." There is no authority for asserting that they were required to take it to Rome, and the thing is altogether improbable.

There were small proprietors and cultivators in Sicily, but there were also many large cultivators, both owners and lessees of land, who employed a large capital on it (Lib. 3. c. 21). The 'aratores' were both Sicilians and Romans, who found profitable employment for their capital in the fertile island of Sicily: it was to the rich men of Rome what a colony is to some British capitalists, or what Ireland perhaps may become to the agricultural capitalists of England, when the lands which are unprofitable in the hands of bankrupt owners have been transferred to those who can make better use of them: "quid illa, quae forsitan ne sentiamus quidem, iudices, quanta sunt! quod multis locupletioribus civibus utimur, quod habent propinquam, fidelem, fructuosamque provinciam, quo facile excurrant, ubi libenter negotium gerant; quos illa partim mercibus suppeditandis cum quaestu compendioque dimittit, partim retinet ut arare, ut pascere, ut negotiari libeat, ut denique sedes ac domicilium collocare" (Lib. 2. c. 3). Under these circumstances Sicily was probably the best cultivated country in Europe in the time of Cicero. The amount of produce raised on the fertile lands of Leontini has already been discussed (Excursus VI.).

Cicero says nothing of the 'pécuarii' in these orations beyond mentioning them as one of the industrious classes in Sicily. The pasture lands were probably nearly all Roman property; and the 'pécuarii' paid a sum of money (scriptura) for the pasturage of their flocks. The 'scriptura' in Italy and in the provinces was let by the censors at Rome. This cannot be considered as a tax, but as a rent, like the money paid in some of the Australian colonies of England for pasture licenses. The 'scriptura' was one of the oldest sources of Roman revenue. Sicily produced a great amount of wool and skins; and in the Italic or Marsic war it fed, clothed, and armed the troops of Rome (Lib. 2. c. 2). The 'scriptura' was farmed by Publicani, and in the time of Verres it happened that the same company (societas) farmed both the 'scriptura' and the 'portoria' (Lib. 2. c. 70). "The censors let also for pasture, forests, coppice, osier-beds, such as those of the Silva Scantia or Sila, the osier-beds of Minturnae; and the tooth of the flocks is the remote cause of the almost general denudation of the Apennines, which at the present day is so painful to look on, and which must have produced on the Italian peninsula hygrometric or thermometric changes which have been appreciable for a period of two thousand three hundred years" (Dureau de la Malle, ii. 445²).

The 'portorium' or charge upon articles exported was a 'vicesima' or twentieth, probably of their declared value. Cicero had no occasion to speak of import duties in Sicily; but perhaps we may assume that they were equal to those on exports. Verres defrauded the Publicani by exporting his plunder largely from Sicily (Lib. 2. c. 74, 75); among which there was honey, sofas for dining-rooms, and cloth of Malta, all which ought to have paid duty.

Besides the 'decumae' payable by the cultivators in the 'decumanae civitates,' and, as we have seen also, by the cultivators who were domiciliated within the limits of the states which were free from this charge, there were other demands made on the Sicilians. Cicero has summed them up thus: "quum unae decumae lege et conditione detrahantur, alterae novis institutis propter annonae rationem imperentur, ematur praeterea frumentum quotannis publice, postremo etiam in cellam magistratibus et legatis imperetur; quid aut quantum praeterea est quod aut liberum possit habere ille arator ac dominus in potestate suorum fructuum aut in ipsis fructibus solutum" (Lib. 3. c. 98).

The 'unae decumae' are the tenths of which we have already spoken. There were, says Cicero (Lib. 3. c. 70), two modes of purchasing corn when the necessities of Rome required a larger supply than the 'unae decumae.' A second tenth (alterae decumae) was bought from the Decumanae civitates. The price paid for the 'alterae decumae' was three sesterii the modius. This was 'frumentum emptum.' Corn was also required from the other 'civitates,' and the demand was imposed on all, in proportion to the produce of their territory, as we may suppose. This corn was paid for by the Roman state somewhat higher, three and a half sesterii the modius: this was the 'frumentum imperatum.' The amount of the 'emptum' was of course equal to that of the 'unae decumae' or regular tenths. The amount of the 'imperatum,' while Verres was praetor, was eight hundred thousand modii of wheat. The 'imperatum' was imposed on all the 'civitates,' as the words of Cicero show, and the example of Halesa (Lib. 3. c. 73), which was one of the 'immunes ac liberae.' Cicero makes it a charge against Verres, that he did not require from the Mamertini (Messana) the portion of 'frumentum imperatum,' which they were bound to supply. He adds, that corn had never been purchased in Sicily on the public account without the Mamertini being required to furnish their proportion, until Verres, from corrupt motives, relieved them of this comparatively light imposition (Lib. 5. c. 21). Messana was one of the Foederatae civitates.

Cicero's words, taken literally, mean that besides the 'alterae decumae' which were bought from the Decumanae civitates, these states were liable to the 'imperatum:' "emendi duo genera fuerunt; unum decumarum; alterum, quod praeterea civitatibus aequaliter esset distributum;" and I have understood the passage so (Lib. 5. c. 21, note); but I am not sure that this is Cicero's meaning.

This commission to purchase corn in Sicily became under the administration of Verres a means of gross oppression, which Cicero has explained (Lib. 3. c. 70—80).

The 'frumentum aestimatum' (Lib. 3. c. 81) was the corn, wheat and barley, which the governor was empowered to demand of the Sicilians for the use of his household (in cellam). The amount that he could demand was fixed; he was furnished by the Roman state with money to pay for it; and the price that he had to pay was fixed. Here Cicero informs us of a monstrous abuse which was established as a regular practice. A governor could require the grain for his use to be delivered at any place within the province that he named. If the cultivator had no corn to sell, or if he did not wish to sell his corn at the price that he would receive, or if he wished to avoid the expense of carrying it to the place named by the governor, he prayed as a favour that he might be allowed, instead of delivering the corn that was required of him, to pay a sum of money equal to its value (p. 373). This monstrous abuse is lightly touched by Cicero, for the 'judices' in the case of Verres were men who would have a fellow feeling with the accused. The charge against Verres was that he got more money out of the Sicilians under the head of 'frumentum aestimatum' than other governors; more than he would have got, if he had done as other governors did and were allowed to do. They were greedy. Verres was greedier. (Lib. 3. c. 81.)

The administration of Verres lasted three years, during which the island was ruined by his oppression. Cicero may have exaggerated the vices of Verres when he speaks of him in general terms, but it is hardly possible that the numerous charges against him, which he states with so much precision, can be far from the truth. Such a system of oppression for three years in a country within a few days' sail of Rome is a foul stain on the character of the Roman senate, who held the administration in their hands. Nothing but a consciousness that they were as guilty as Verres could have prevented the senate from visiting this scoundrel with speedy and well-merited punishment. The administration of Sicily under Verres gives us a just measure of the corruption of the Roman nobles, and prepares us for the advent of the imperial system, the only possible government if the empire was to subsist.

One of the many modes of raising money that Verres resorted to remains to be mentioned. He got money from the Sicilians under the pretext of applying it to the erection of statues of himself; and in fact there were statues of Verres, his son, and his father, erected in Sicily during his administration at the expense of the Sicilians; and statues of Verres even in Rome. But these statues were made a pretext for getting money, which Verres kept; and the law was so considerate, that it allowed a period of five years to elapse before a governor could be called to account for not appropriating the money to the purposes for which it was given or extorted (Lib. 2. c. 58). The practice of erecting statues, temples, and altars to Roman governors was the invention of the fears and of the gross adulation of the Greeks. Under the emperors it was carried still further. When Cicero was governor of Cilicia, he had the decency to forbid it. (Ad Attic. v. 21.)

When Verres landed in Sicily the island was probably in a more prosperous state than it ever was before, or ever has been since, unless perchance in the time of Augustus, or under the mild and prudent administration of the Antonines. Since the overthrow of the Carthaginian power and the suppression of the servile revolts, it had enjoyed many years of tranquillity, being united under one government, which allowed no tyrant but itself. Under the system of farming, which employed large capitals, the produce was greatly increased. It had an extensive commerce and various manufactures. Malta, a dependency of Sicily, was famed for its fine linen. The industrious Greeks of Sicily produced excellent household furniture, and numerous articles of domestic use of exquisite taste. Couches, candelabra, carpets, plate of excellent workmanship, carved work in ivory, bronzes, pictures, and statues were the evidence of the wealth, the taste, and the artistic skill of the population of the island.

Dureau de la Malle (Economie Politique des Romains), whose work I have already cited, has many useful remarks on the condition of Sicily in the time of Cicero; but he is chargeable with inexactness in some particulars. The following passage, for the complete accuracy of which I will not vouch, relates to the population of the island (Vol. ii. p. 379): "We have the means of estimating accurately the annual produce of wheat in that portion of Sicily which formed the ancient kingdom of Hiero, which payed in kind the 'decumae' of wheat, and the extent of which did not comprise the third part of the island; for Cicero informs us in the third Verrine, named Frumentaria (c. 70), that the value of the tenths of the wheat in one year, during the praetorship of Verres, was 9,000,000 sesterces, which at three sesterces the modius makes 3,000,000 modii. Consequently, multiplying 3,000,000 by 10, we get for the produce of wheat in this part of Sicily 30,000,000 modii = 405,000,000 livres, poids de marc. Now the mean of the weight of a modius of wheat being $13\frac{1}{2}$ livres, and the daily consumption of wheat by an individual being fixed at 2 livres, it is easy to deduce from it:

"1. The population of this portion of the island which formed the former kingdom of Hiero;

"2. The number of Roman citizens or inhabitants of Italy maintained by the exportation of the wheat of Sicily, which exportation was to the amount of 3,800,000 modii (51,300,000 livres), including in this amount the 800,000 modii of 'frumentum imperatum;' this number, I say, was in 681 of Rome, 50,340 persons. The population of this third of Sicily subjected to the payment of 'decumae' amounted to 396,864, and that of all Sicily to 1,190,592 persons." It is easy to make several objections to these conclusions. Premises are assumed which cannot be admitted. For instance, who can assume that Hiero's part of the island was exactly one-third of the whole island, or rather that it contained exactly one-third of the population? I have no doubt that the relative population of Hiero's part was greater than that of the rest of the island.

It remains to make a few remarks on the object of the Romans in collecting the 'decumae' of Sicily, and the 'frumentum emptum.' The corn was for the supply of Rome, the city only as it seems. It was an old Roman policy for the state to look after the supply of corn for Rome. We cannot suppose that private enterprise did not partly supply the city; but in times of scarcity at least, persons were appointed to buy on account of the state. Livy, on some authority we may presume, speaks of such purchases at an early period of Roman history (ii. 9, iv. 12); and in the second of these passages the creation of a 'praefectus annonae' is mentioned. On the occasion of a scarcity so early as the consulship of T. Geganius and P. Minucius (B.C. 492), Rome sent to seek for corn in Sicily (Liv. ii. 34). The possession of Sicily assured a large supply from the regular 'decumae,' and more could be had, if it was wanted, by a demand of the 'alterae decumae' and the 'frumentum imperatum.' The Lex Frumentaria of C. Gracchus (B.C. 123) substituted for the occasional and irregular distributions of corn at Rome, the sale of it at a low fixed price (Lib. 3. c. 70, note); and in this way the 'decumae' of Sicily seem to have been disposed of in B.C. 70, when Cicero prosecuted Verres. The gratuitous distribution of corn at Rome belongs to a later period in the life of Cicero, and not to the period of Verres, as Dureau de la Malle assumes. The discussion of the pauper system of Rome does not belong to this place.

“Non modo,” &c.

THE use of this form has been noticed several times in the commentary. It is one of the usual formulae of the Latin language. The common translation of ‘non modo’ is ‘not only,’ which will sometimes express the meaning of the Latin original, and sometimes it will not. ‘Not only,’ in English, implies that the thing of which a predication is made, in the clause which contains ‘not only,’ is not all; and that something further is going to be predicated. ‘Not only’ may sometimes¹ express ‘non modo’ in such forms as the following:—

Divin. c. 4.—“Hi sciunt hoc non modo a me petatum esse, sed ita saepe . . . petatum ut,” &c.

Act. i. c. 1.—“opinio . . . quae non modo Romae sed et apud exteras nationes . . . percrebuit,” &c.

Divin. c. 5.—“cujus legis non modo a populo Romano sed etiam ab ultimis nationibus jampridem severi custodes requiruntur.”

In these cases ‘sed’ is followed by ‘et,’ ‘etiam,’ or ‘ita,’ as in Divin. c. 4, and in Lib. 3. c. 88: “et id non modo fieri, sed ita fieri quasi liceat.”

‘Non modo,’ so placed, does not differ in use from ‘non solum,’ followed by ‘sed etiam’ or ‘verum etiam’:—

Divin. c. 13.—“non solum commoveor animo, sed etiam toto corpore perhorresco.”

Act. i. c. 16.—“eosque ambos non solum deseruerit, sed etiam prodiderit.”

Act. i. c. 18.—“ut homines miseri . . . non modo jus suum fortunasque . . . amittant, verum etiam deplorandi juris sui potestatem non habeant.”

In the following passage ‘sed’ is not followed by any emphatic word:—Act. i. c. 3.—“Intelligit me ita paratum . . . venire ut non modo in auribus vestris sed in oculis omnium sua furta atque flagitia defixurus sim.” No variation is noted in this passage by Zumpt, except that Guelf. 2 has ‘non ut modo,’ a variation from which nothing can be inferred. In the following passage (Divin. c. 14), also, ‘sed’ is not followed by ‘et’ or ‘etiam,’ but there is the emphatic word ‘ipso:’ “ne ille non modo verbis te obruat, sed gestu ipso ac motu corporis praestringat aciem ingenii tui,” &c. No variation is noted in this passage; and I doubt if ‘non modo’ can be translated ‘not only.’ There is a similar passage in Lib. 1. c. 46, where ‘non modo ceteros’ is followed by ‘sed te ipsum.’ There may be a few other examples where ‘non modo,’ followed by ‘sed’ only, is, or seems to be, equivalent to ‘non modo’ followed by ‘sed etiam;’ but if these are genuine instances, and not corrupt passages, they must be taken as irregularities, or, if we choose, as careless expressions of Cicero.

In the following passage (Lib. 4. c. 41) ‘non modo’ cannot be rendered by ‘not only,’ and it confirms what I have said as to ‘sed:’ “Tu ista stultitia, nequitia, inertia, non modo totius Siciliae sed unius tenuissimi Siculi clientelam tueri potes?”

In the following passages, also, ‘non modo’ cannot be translated ‘not only:’—

Divin. c. 18.—“quid habes quod possis dicere quamobrem non modo mihi sed cuiquam antepondere?”

Lib. 3. c. 31.—“An poterat non modo Apronius sed quisvis, si exercitui metiendum esset, improbare Siculum frumentum,” &c.

Divin. c. 8.—“quo tempore aut qua in re non modo specimen ceteris aliquid de te, sed tute tui periculum fecisti?”

The second instance, perhaps, shows most clearly how we must endeavour to express the ‘non modo’ in such cases as these: “I don’t ask if Apronius could, but if any one could refuse to accept Sicilian corn?”

We must seek in the primitive meaning of ‘modo’ a solution for the true meaning of these expressions. ‘Modo,’ like several other words in an ablative case, is used as an adverb; it is a word of measure, and therefore of limitation. Professor Key remarks (Latin Grammar, § 794) that ‘modo’ means literally ‘by measure,’ and “hence, with small quantities, mōdō, by measure, may be translated by only: on the other hand, with great quantities, admodum, up to the measure, is equivalent to full, quite.” So Cicero says (Lib. 3. c. 5): “id fuit mihi gratum admodum:” “that was agreeable to me, to the full, to the complete measure.” In Lib. 3. c. 97, he says “Atque utinam posset aliqua ratione hoc crimen quamvis falsa, modo humana atque usitata, defendere,” which means that Cicero would be glad if Verres could answer this charge in some way, as false as you like, within the limits of ‘humanitas’ and usage. So in Lib. 3. c. 87, there is “magnum praeclarumque vectigal, si modo salva provincia, si sine injuria sociorum percipere possumus.” Now here the ‘modo’ might be omitted, but it helps to express more clearly the condition or limitation, which limitation is the existence and integrity of the province. One more example may help to explain this. Lib. 3. c. 58: “hoc aut innocens homo perpeti potuisset, aut quamvis nocens, qui modo judicia Romae fore putaret, non aliqua simulatione existimationi se hominum venditasset?" Here the 'modo' might be omitted also, for 'qui . . . putaret,' an ordinary formula in Cicero, would express what is meant, but with somewhat less precision than 'qui modo,' which limits more exactly the 'guiltiest man' to one of the class who believed that there would be judicial investigation at Rome².

The notion contained in this word 'modo,' then, is that of 'limit;' and 'non modo' is a negation of the limit. In such an expression as 'tantum modo,' we have the meaning 'so much, and no more; or that is all.' Now the only difficulty lies in seeing how the notion contained in this 'non modo' is to be combined with the notion contained in the other words which it is intended to qualify. In the Divin. c. 4, 'hi sciunt hoc,' &c., the notion contained in 'a me petitem' is not the measure or limit: there was more than that. In Lib. 3. c. 31, 'an poterat non modo Apronius,' &c., Cicero's question of the possibility of rejecting this corn is not limited to Apronius, it extends to any body and every body.

If I should be asked what is the best translation in all these instances, I should answer that I do not know. I merely mean to say that 'not only,' which happens to fit some cases, will not fit all cases; and I would not quarrel with any translation of 'non modo' in any given case, if it expressed the meaning with precision. There are numerous expressions of common occurrence in modern languages, which we find as difficult to express in our language as many of those which occur in Roman writers, though we have the advantage of having the precise force of such modern expressions explained by a living teacher. Some of those words called adverbs and conjunctions, which are used very frequently, are perverted by usage in such a way that it is hard to seize their precise meaning, and trace it up to the original signification of the word.

There is another use of 'non modo,' followed by 'ne quidem,' which requires a few words. In such cases as the following, 'non modo' is said to be used for 'non modo non,' an explanation that may lead to misunderstanding:—

Act. i. c. 38.—"Non modo proditori, sed ne perfugae quidem locus in meis castris cuiquam fuit."

Lib. 3. c. 91.—"si hoc crimen non modo Marcelli facto sed ne Lepidi quidem potes defendere."

If we here translate 'non modo' by 'not only,' our idiom requires that we insert a negative which is not in the Latin, thus: "not only no traitor, but not even a deserter has ever found a place in my camp.” But I do not think that this is a good form of translation.

Professor Key (Grammar, § 1415) observes that the “negative in ‘ne . . . quidem,’ when followed by a common predicate, often extends its influence over a preceding clause beginning with ‘non modo.’” He gives the following instance and translation:—

“Assentatio non modo amico sed ne libero quidem digna est” (Cic.): “flattery is unworthy not merely of a friend, but even of a free man.”

He adds in a note: “It is in such passages as these that ‘non modo’ is said to be used for ‘non modo non.’” The predicate contained in ‘digna’ is placed at the end of the sentence, but it applies equally to both parts of it; and the ‘non modo’ expressed to a Roman clearly enough, that what was going to be predicated was not limited to friend, but, as the next words show, extended even to a free man.

‘Non solum’ is used in the same way, as in the following example from the same Grammar: “Senatui non solum juvare rem publicam, sed ne lugere quidem licuit:” “the senate were forbidden not merely to assist, but even to mourn over their country.”

In Lib. 3. c. 5, there is “ut eum facile non modo extra tectum, sed ne extra lectum quidem quisquam videret,” which is another of these supposed examples of ‘non modo’ for ‘non modo non;’ and there are many other examples in these orations. The supposition of another ‘non’ after the ‘non modo,’ and in the clause to which ‘non modo’ belongs, is contrary to the usage of the Latin language in such cases.

In the following instances, however, there is a double negative in the first clause, and yet there is ‘ne . . . quidem,’ with the general predicate, in the second clause:—

Lib. 3. c. 48.—“multis autem non modo granum nullum sed ne paleae quidem . . . relinquerentur.”

Lib. 4. c. 22.—“non modo oppidum nullum, sed ne domus quidem ulla paulo locupletior expers hujus injuriae reperietur.”

There are instances of the double negative, as it is called, the repetition of the negative, to give emphasis: “Not to speak of towns, of not a single town being exempt, I add, not even will a single house of the richer class be found to have escaped this wrong.” Compare Lib. 2. c. 46: “quod non modo Siculus nemo sed ne Sicilia quidem tota potuisset.”

The following case is different from those just given (Lib. 5. c. 18): “nunc non modo te hoc crimine non arguo, sed ne illa quidem communi vituperatione reprehendo.” Here each clause has its predicate, and if the ‘non’ before ‘arguo’ were omitted, the meaning would be so far just the opposite of what is intended.

If the predicate occurs in the first part of the sentence, and a nega-tion is intended, the 'non' is necessary, though 'ne . . . quidem' comes after (Lib. 3. c. 97): "non solum aestimandi frumenti modus non fuit sed ne imperandi quidem³."

There are many cases in which 'non modo non' occurs, but the reader must learn to distinguish them from the supposed case of 'non modo' being used for 'non modo non.' In Divin. c. 9, "M. Caecilium . . . non modo non adesse neque tecum tuas injurias persequi, sed esse cum Verre," where it is plain that the second 'non' qualifies 'adesse.' The assertion is not limited to a 'non adesse' at the trial, and a 'neque persequi' of Verres: it goes so far as to affirm an 'esse cum Verre.' In the following instance (Divin. c. 11), "facile omnes intelligent vobis inter vos non modo voluntatem fuisse conjunctam, sed ne praedam quidem adhuc esse divisam," a 'non' before 'conjunctam' would negative what Cicero affirms in that clause, "that there was union of will, and that was not all." In Lib. 1. c. 15, the true reading is "non modo non existit verum etiam opprimit antequam prospicere . . . potueris," which passage some of the critics would corrupt by omitting the 'non' before 'existit;' and thus they would make Cicero write nonsense.

In these notes some remarks have been made on the use of 'qui,' and I collected about two hundred examples from these orations, with the view of explaining what seems to be often ill understood. However, the labour of arranging these examples would not be worth the pains. There is really little difficulty in Cicero's use of 'qui,' 'quum,' 'quod,' 'quia,' in these orations. There is a sufficient number of undoubted, undisputed instances, from which we can learn his practice. I don't believe that even Cicero always strictly adhered to the principle or usage, which he generally follows; and this supposition will explain some few difficulties. But there is no real difficulty in Cicero's use of the indicative and subjunctive mood. The subjunctive is a very flexible and delicate instrument in his hands; and it is only necessary to read with due care, to discover and appreciate his tact in this matter. I recommend to those who would seek a good guide to the construction of the Latin language, the Syntax in Professor Key's Latin Grammar.
